WE Aſſan Baſsha Viceroy and lieutenant, and captaine of the iuriſdiction of Algier, giue and grant free ſafeconduct to Thomas Shingleton marchant, that with his ſhip and mariners, of what nation ſoeuer they be, & with his marchandize of what countrey ſoeuer, he may go and come, and trade & traffike freely in this city of Algier, and other places of our iuriſdiction, as well of the Weſt as of the Eaſt. And in like ſort we further command the captaine of the ſea of Algier, and other places of our iuriſdiction, the Reiz of veſſels & captaines of the Leuant, & other captaines of veſſels aſwell great as ſmall, whoſoeuer they be, we do command them, that finding the foreſayd Thomas Shingleton Engliſhman in the ſeas of Genua, France, Naples, Calabria, and Sardinia, with his ſhip and merchandize, and men of what nation ſoeuer they be, that they moleſt thē not, neither take nor touch any kind of thing of theirs, neither money nor any other kind of goods, vnder paine and peril of looſing of their liues and goods: and as you make account of the fauour of the Grand Signor our lord Sultan Murates Hottoman, ſo ſee you let him paſſe on his way without any maner of impediment. Dated at Alger in our kingly palace, ſigned with our princely Signet, and ſealed with our great ſeale, and written by our Secretarie of eſtate, the 23. of Ianuarie, 1583.

A letter written in Spaniſh by Sir Edward Oſborne, to the king of Alger, the 20. of Iuly, 1584. in the behalfe of certaine Engliſh captiues there detained.

Muy alto y poderoſo Rey,

Sea ſeruida voſtra alteza. Como la muy alta y potentiſſima mageſtad del Gran Senor tiene hecho articulos de priuilegios con la Sereniſſima Mageſtad de nueſtra Reyna d'Inglaterra, para los vaſſallos della poder libremente yr y boluer, y tratar por mar y tierra en los dominios de ſu potentiſſima Mageſtad, Como a la clara pareſce por los dichos articulos, de che embiamos el traſlado al Senor Iuan Tipton nueſtro commiſſario, para le mueſtrar a voſtra Alteza. Contra el tenor de los quales articulos por dos galerias de ſu ciudad de Alger ha ſido hechado al fondo en la mar vn de nueſtros nauios que venia de Patras, que es en la Morea, cargado de corintes y otras mercaderias, que allá ſe compraron, y las mas de la gente del la matados y abogados en la mar, y el reſto eſtan detenidos por eſclauos: coſa muy contraria a los dichos articulos y priuilegios. Que es occaſion, que por eſto ſupplicamos a voſtra Alteza muy humilmente, que pues que la potentiſſima mageſtad del Gran Sennor es ſeruida nos fauoreſcer por los dichos articulos, tambien ſea ſeruida voſtra Alteza aſſiſtirnos en ellos, otorgandonos por voſtra autoridad ſu aiuda y fauor, ſegun que eſperamos, para que puedan eſtar libres, y boluer para aca aquellos pobres hombres anſi hechos eſclauos, como dicho es. Y anſi meſmo, que mande voſtra Alteza dar orden a los capitanes, maeſtres y gente de las galeras, que nos dexen de aqui adelante hazer nueſtro trafico con ſeys naos cada anno para Turquia a los dominios del gran Sennor a paz y a ſaluo, por no cõtrariar a los dichos nueſtros priuilegios, Lleuando cada vna de nueſtras dichas naos por ſe conoſcer vn ſaluo conducto de ſu alta & potentiſſima mageſtad. Y con eſta voſtra tan ſenallada merced y fauor que en eſſo reciberemos, quedaremos noſotros con grandiſſima obligation a voſtra Alteza de ſeruirla por ello, ſegun que el dicho Sennor Iuan Tipton, a quien nos reportamos de todo lo demas, mejor informera a voſtra Alteza: Cuya ſereniſſima perſona y eſtado ſupplicamos y pidimos a Dios omnipotente proſpere y accreſceme con toda felicitad y honra. De la ciudad de Londres a los veynte dias de Iulio del mil y quinientos y ochenta y quatro annos.

Al ſeruicio de vueſtra Alteza por y en nombre de todos los tratantes en Turquia, Io el Mayor de Londres, Edward Oſborne.

The ſame in Engliſh.

Right high and mightie king,

May it pleaſe your highneſſe to vnderſtand, that the moſt high and moſt mightie maieſtie of the Grand Signor hath confirmed certaine articles of priuileges with the moſt excellent maieſtie of our Queene of England, that her ſubiects may freely go and come, and traffike by ſea and land in the dominions of his moſt mighty maieſty, as appeareth more at large by yͤ ſaid articles, whereof we haue ſent the copy vnto M. Ioh. Tipton our Commiſſarie, to ſhew the ſame vnto your highnes. Againſt the tenor of which articles, one of our ſhips which came from Patras which is in Morea, laden with corants and other merchandizes which were bought in thoſe parts, was ſunke by 2. gallies of your citie of Alger, and the greateſt number of the men thereof were ſlain and drowned in the ſea, the reſidue being detained as ſlaues: An acte very contrary to the meaning of the aforeſaid articles and priuileges: which is the occaſiō that by theſe preſents we beſeech your highneſſe very humbly, that ſince it hath pleaſed the moſt mightie maieſtie of the Grand Signor to fauour vs with the ſayd priuileges, it would pleaſe your Highneſſe in like maner to aſſiſt vs in the ſame, granting vs by your authoritie, your ayde and fauour, according as our hope is, that theſe poore men ſo detained in captiuitie, as is aforeſaid, may be ſet at libertie, & returne into their countrey. And likewiſe that your highneſſe would ſend to giue order to the captaines, maſters and people of your gallies, that from henceforth they would ſuffer vs to vſe our traffique with ſixe ſhips yerely into Turkie vnto the dominions of the Grand Signor in peace and ſafetie, that they do not withſtand thoſe our ſaid priuileges, euery one of our foreſaid ſhips carying with them a paſſeport of his moſt high and moſt mightie maieſtie to be knowen by. And for that your ſo ſingular fauour and curteſie which in ſo doing we ſhall receiue, we on our part with all bounden duetie vnto your highneſſe, will ſeeke to honour you in that behalfe, according as the ſayd maſter Iohn Tipton (to whom wee referre our ſelues touching all other circumſtances) ſhall more at large enforme your highneſſe, whoſe moſt excellent perſon and eſtate, we pray and beſeech almightie God to proſper and increaſe with all felicitie and honour. From the Citie of London, the 20. of Iuly, 1584.

An Engliſh ſhip ſunke by two gallies of Alger.

At the ſeruice of your highneſſe, for and in the name of our whole company trading into Turkie, I Maior of London, Edward Oſborne.

Notes concerning the trade of Alger.

The money of Alger.

THe money that is coined in Alger is a piece of gold called Aſiano, & Doublaes, and two Doublaes make an Aſiano, but the Doubla is moſt vſed, for all things be ſold by Doublaes, which Doubla is fiftie of their Aſpers there.

The Aſper there is not ſo good by halfe & more, as that in Conſtantinople: for the Chekin of gold of the Turkes made at Conſtantinople is at Alger worth an 150. Aſpers, and at Conſtantinople it is but 66. Aſpers.

The piſtolet and roials of plate are moſt currant there.

The ſaid piſtolet goeth for 130. Aſpers there: & the piece of 4. roials goeth for 40. Aſpers, but oftentimes is ſold for more, as men need them to cary vp into Turkie.

Their Aſianos and Doublaes are pieces of courſe gold, worth here but 40. s. the ounce, ſo the ſame is currant in no place of Turkie out of the kingdom of Alger, neither the Aſpers, for that they be leſſe then others be, for they coine them in Alger.

The cuſtome.

The cuſtome to the king is inward 10. per centum, to the Turke, to be paid of the commoditie it ſelfe, or as it ſhall be rated.

There is another cuſtome to the Ermine, of one & an halfe per centum, which is to the Iuſtice of the Chriſtians: the goods for this cuſtome are rated as they are for the kings cuſtome.

Hauing paid cuſtome inwards, you pay none outwards for any commoditie that you doe lade, more then a reward to the gate keepers.

The waights.

The waight there is called a Cantare for fine wares, as mettals refined, and ſpices, &c. which is here 120. li. ſubtil.

Mettall not refined, as lead, iron, and ſuch groſſe wares, are ſold by a great Cantare, which is halfe as big againe: ſo it is 180. li. ſubtil of ours here.

The meaſure.

The meaſure of corne is by a meaſure called a Tarcis, which is about 4. buſhels of our meaſure, and corne is plentiful there and good cheape, except when there hapneth a very dry yeere.

The ſureſt lodging for a Chriſtian.

The ſureſt lodging for a Chriſtian there is in a Iewes houſe: for if he haue any hurt, the Iew and his goods ſhall make it good, ſo the Iew taketh great care of the Chriſtian and his goods that lieth in his houſe, for feare of puniſhment.

An Engliſhman called Thomas Williams, which is M. Iohn Tiptons man, lieth about trade of merchandize in the ſtreete called The Soca of the Iewes.

Notes concerning the trade in Alexandria.

This is another officer.

ALexandria in Egypt is a free port, and when a man commeth within the caſtles, preſently the Ermyn ſends aboord to haue one come and ſpeake with him, to know what goods are aboord: and then hee will ſet guards aboord the ſhip to ſee all the goods diſcharged. And then from the Ermin you goe to the * Bye, onely for that he will inquire newes of you, and ſo from thence to the Conſuls houſe where you lie. The Venetians haue a Conſul themſelues. But all other nations goe to the French nations Conſul, who will giue you a chamber for your ſelues apart, if you will ſo haue it.

Other ſmal cuſtoms you pay beſides, which may be at two in the hũdred: and for Conſullage you pay two in the hundred.

The cuſtoms inward of all commodities are ten in the hundred, & the cuſtome is paid in wares alſo that you buy: for the ſame wares in barter you pay alſo ten in the hundred, at the lading of the wares. But if you ſell for mony, you pay no more cuſtome but the ten aforeſaid, and one and a halfe in the hundred, which is for the cuſtome of the goods you lade for the ſayd mony, for more cuſtome you pay not. But for all the money you bring thither, you pay nothing for the cuſtome of the ſame. And if you ſell your wares for mony, and with the ſame money buy wares, you pay but two in the hundred for the cuſtome thereof. And if you ſteale any cuſtome, if it be taken, you pay double cuſtome for that you ſteale.

The weight of Alexandria is called Pois Forforeine, which is a kintal in that place, which maketh at Marſeils 109. li. of Marſeils waight, at 15 ounces the pound, which is 163. li. of 16. ounces to the li. There is another waight called Pois Gerrin, which is 150. li. of Marſeils waight, by which are ſold all things to eate: but ſpice is ſold by the former waight.

From Alexandria to Cairo is three daies iourney, but you muſt take a Ianiſſarie with you: & to go vp thither by water it is 8. dayes iourney. Roials of Spaine are currant mony there, and are the beſt money you can cary. And 4. roials are worth 13. Medins, and 2. Medins, are 3. Aſpers. Piſtolets and crownes of France and Dollers will goe, but of all Roials are beſt.

Cairo thre daies iourney from Alexandria by land.

Rice is not permitted to goe out of the land, but is kept for a victuall. But with a preſent to the Bye and Ermine ſome may paſſe.

All ſortes of ſpices be garbled after the bargaine is made, and they be Moores which you deale withall, which be good people and not ill diſpoſed. And after you be ſearched & haue leaue to paſſe, you muſt preſently depart out of the port, and if you doe not, they will ſearch you againe. And you muſt depart in the day, for in the night the caſtles will not ſuffer you to depart. The duetie to the Conſul is 2. in the hundred, for his aide, and meate and drinke and all. And the port of Alexandria is good when one is within it with good ankers and cables. Siluer is better currant then gold in Alexandria, but both are good.

Commonly the Carauans come thither in October from Mecca to Cairo, and from thence to Alexandria, where the merchants be that buy the ſpices, and therfore the ſpices are brought moſt to Alexandria, where each Chriſtian nation remaineth at the Conſuls houſes. Yet oftentimes the chriſtians go vp to Cairo to buy drugs & other commodities there, as they ſee cauſe. And the commodities there vendible are all ſorts of kerſies, but the moſt part blewes, and of clothes all colours except mingled colours and blacks. Pepper is vſually ſold for 24. ducats the quintal, Ginger for 14. ducats. You muſt take canuas to make bags to put your commoditie in from Alexandria, for there is none. There is alſo fine flaxe, and good ſtore of Buffe hides.

A letter of the Engliſh ambaſſador to M. Edward Barton.

MAſter Barton I ſend you 3. commandements in Turkiſh, with a copy thereof in Engliſh, to the ende our ſhips might not come in danger of breach of league, if they ſhould ſhoote at the gallies of thoſe of Algier, Tunis, and Tripolis in the Weſt: which after you haue ſhewed the Baſſas, receiue againe into your hands, and ſee them regiſtred, and then deliuer one of them to our friend M. Tipton, & the like you are to do with the priuilege which you cary with you, and ſee them ioinctly regiſtred in the Cadies booke, deliuering the copy of the ſaid priuilege ſealed by the Cadi, alſo to the ſayd our friend M. Tipton, taking a note of his hand for the receipt thereof, and for deliuerie at all times to vs or our aſſignes. And require them in her maieſties and the grand Signors name, that they will haue our ſhips paſſing too and fro vnder licence and ſafeconduct for recommended in friendly maner. Touching your proceedings in Tripolis with Romadan, as I haue not receiued any aduiſe thereof, ſince your departure, ſo muſt I leaue you to God and my former directiō. The ſhip patroniſed of Haſſan Rayes, which you wrote to be ours, prooued to be a Catalonian. As for ours, by report of that Haſſan and other Iewes in his ſhip, it was affirmed to be ſold to the Malteſes, which with the reſt you are to receiue there. And hauing ended theſe affaires and regiſtred our priuilege, and theſe three commandements, in Tripolis, Tunis, and Alger, I pray you make ſpeedy returne, and for that which may be recouered, make ouer the ſame either to Richard Rowed for Patraſſo in Morea, or otherwiſe hither to Iohn Bate in the ſureſt maner you may, if the regiſtring of that your priuilege and theſe commandements will not ſuffer you in perſon to returne with the ſame. From my Manſion Rapamat in Pera this 24. of Iune 1584.

The commaundement obtained of the Grand Signior by her Maieſties ambaſſador M. Will. Hareborne, for the quiet paſſing of her ſubiects to and frō his dominions, ſent in An. 1584. to the Viceroyes of Algier, Tunis & Tripolis in Barbary.

To our Beglerbeg of Algier.

WE certifie thee by this our commandement, that the right honorable Will. Hareborne ambaſſador to the Queenes maieſtie of England hath ſignified vnto vs, that the ſhips of that countrey in their comming and returning to and from our Empire, on the one part of the Seas haue the Spaniards, Florentines, Sicilians and Malteſes, on the other part our countreis committed to your charge: which aboueſaid Chriſtians will not quietly ſuffer their egreſſe and regreſſe, into, and out of our dominions, but doe take and make the men captiues, times, and forfeit the ſhippes and goods, as the laſt yeere the Malteſes did one, which they tooke at Gerbi, and to that end do continually lie in wait for them to their deſtruction, whereupon they are conſtrained to ſtand to their defence at any ſuch time as they might meet with them. Wherefore conſidering by this means they muſt ſtand vpon their guard, when they ſhall ſee any gallie a-farre off, whereby if meeting with any of your gallies and not knowing them, in their defence they do ſhoot at them, and yet after when they doe certainly know them, do not ſhoote any more, but require to paſſe peaceably on their voiage, which you would deny, ſaying, the peace is brokē becauſe you haue ſhot at vs, and ſo make prize of them contrary to our priuileges, and againſt reaſon: for the preuenting of which inconuenience the ſaid ambaſſador hath required this our commaundement. We therefore command thee, that vpon ſight hereof thou doe not permit any ſuch matter in any ſort whatſoeuer, but ſuffer the ſayd Engliſhmen to paſſe in peace according to the tenour of our commandement giuen, without any diſturbance or let by any means vpon the way, although that meeting with thy gallies, and not knowing them afarre off, they taking them for enemies ſhould ſhoot at them, yet ſhall you not ſuffer them to hurt them therfore, but quietly to paſſe. Wherefore looke thou that they may haue right, according to our priuilege giuen them, & finding any that abſenteth himſelf, & wil not obey this our commandement, preſently certify vs to our porch, that we may giue order for his puniſhment, and with reuerence giue faithfull credite to this our commandement, which hauing read, thou ſhalt againe returne it vnto them that preſent it. From our palace in Conſtantinople, the 1. of Iune 1584.

A letter of the honorable M. Wil. Hareborne her maieſties ambaſſ. with the grand Signior to M. Tipton, appointing him Conſul of the Engliſh in Algier, Tunis, & Tripolis of Barbarie.

Maſter Tipton, I haue receiued among others, yours of the 10. of Nouember 1584. by Soliman Sorda, certifying the receipt of mine of the 24. of Iune 1584. with the 3. commandements, which not being regiſtred, let it now be done. Where you write the force of the priuilege to be broken by our ſhips in ſhooting, & therfore be lawfully taken, you are deceiued, for of thoſe taken in thē, hath the grand Signior now deliuered vs free, Wil. Moore, and Rob. Rawlings, & further promiſed the reſt in like caſe, whereſoeuer they be, & that hereafter no violence ſhalbe ſhewed, conſidering ours be merchāts ſhips which go peaceably in their voiage, & were ignorant of the orders of Algier, neither knew afar off whether they were friends or the Chriſtians gallies in league againſt vs, of whom they moſt doubted, who not ſuffring our ſhips to come into theſe parts, will make prize of the goods & captiue the mē, ſo as they are not to let them come nigh them: & ſince ours haue not done contrary to the articles of the ſame priuilege, wherein is no order for Algier preſcribed vs, as both by the originall now ſent vs, & alſo by the copy now ſent you frō London you may perceiue, they according to right are as aboueſaid to be ſet free, and their goods reſtored, which if it be not there accompliſhed as the grand Signior hath now cōmanded & moſt faithfully promiſed, neither yet in caſe of their denial, thoſe offenders puniſhed here, and our iniuries redreſſed, we are to demand our Congie, & command our merchants her maieſties ſubiects, to end their traffike here, which in our countrey commodities is prooued & found by the grand Signior to be ſo beneficial to his countries as we are aſſured ſo well thereof, as alſo for the honor which his anceſtors neuer had of friēdſhip w̄ ſo mighty a prince as is her maieſty, he wil not but maintaine ẏ faith promiſed her, & the intercourſe in due force. And where you ſay ẏ the grand Signor his letters, in the behalf of the French, were no more accepted there, then of a mean mā, nor tooke no place, that is not material to vs, our letters are after another ſort much more effectuall. For our caſe & theirs be found far different, in ẏ they be not onely now out of fauour with him, but alſo the commodities which they bring hither, as ſuger, paper, bracelets, ropes of baſt almonds, &c. all which may be here wel ſpared, & we contrarily ſo wel eſteemed, as he neuer denied vs any thing ſince our comming demanded, which neither their ambaſſador, nor the Venetian could haue here, & therfore we reſt perſwaded, knowing the wiſdom of the Beglerbeg, who is aduiſed by his frīds from hence, of this our credite w̄ his maſter, he wil ſo reſpect his cōmandements, as to accōpliſh ẏ tenor therof according to our deſire. And where you ſay ẏ the Ianizers rule all there, I know right wel ẏ if things be not done as the grand Signior commandeth, his lieutenant muſt anſwer it. And therefore I am fully perſwaded if he doe what he may they dare not reſiſt him, for if they ſhould, thoſe rebels ſhould not be vnpuniſhed of ẏ grand Signior. And though they ſpeake their pleaſures amōg themſelues there, yet they be not ſo brutiſh, but they wel conſider that their maſter ẏ grand Signior may not be gainſaid or mocked of any. For vpon his word dependeth the life or death euē of the chiefeſt, as I haue ſeene ſince my comming hither. So whatſoeuer theſe Ianizaries ſay, they will be better aduiſed in their deedes then to withſtand their Viceroy, if he himſelfe wil vſe his lawfull power, which if hee doe not, hee cannot purge himſelfe here of their euill proceedings againſt the grand Signiors friends: for the feet may not rule the bodie, but contrarywiſe, the head, the feete, and all the reſt of the members. And for that neither for feare, affection or otherwiſe you omit as a faithfull true ſubiect to her maieſtie to do your dutie, I do by my warrant going herewith charge you, & in her maieſties name, to the vttermoſt to vſe your good and faithful endeuour, as becommeth a true ſubiect, & in all things that may concerne her maieſties good ſeruice, aſſiſting the Chaus with the reſt of our meſſengers in counſel, trauel, & what els ſhall be thought requiſite for your good diſcharge of your dutie. And to yͤ end you may boldly proceed herein as alſo for the good opinion ſir Edward Oſborne & the company haue of you, and I no leſſe perſwaded of your wiſedom, vpright dealing, & good experience in thoſe parts, do ſend you herewith the grand Signiors & our patents for exerciſing the office of Conſul there, in Tripolis & Tunis: by vertue of which authoritie you may without feare proceed as the office doeth chalenge in defence of our priuilege, to redreſſe all iniuries offred our nation. Which if you cannot get reformed there of yͤ Beglerbies vpon your complaint, I thereof aduertiſed, ſhal doe it here, and to the vttermoſt maintaine you in al rightful cauſes whatſoeuer, doubt you not. And hereafter according to your aduiſe, I wil and do giue our ſhips order not to fight with any gallies of Alger, but to hoiſe out their ſkiffe and and go aboord to ſhew them their ſafeconduct, & to preſent the captain with a garment, & you there in ſuch like caſe are to take order that they do not forceably take any thing from them. Nothing doubting but the Viceroy (whoſe friendſhip in her maieſties behalfe I deſire) will not onely performe the ſame your iuſt requeſt, & according to right, reſtore to libertie our mē ſince the priuilege taken, but alſo cauſe thoſe yͭ tooke & ſunke our ſhips to anſwere the value, which I haue ſet downe truly, and rather with the leaſt in the Inuentorie tranſlated into Turkiſh, whereof the incloſed is the copy in Engliſh, which I ſend to the end you may be the better informed of my demand by this our Chaus Mahomet, with whom in all things you are to conferre of matters expedient, for the honor of her maieſties country, & the commoditie, and libertie of poore captiues, which if the Viceroy do wel conſider, according to his wiſedom, as the grand Signior doeth thereof, he ſhal wel perceiue it not onely a great honour to his maſter as aforeſaid, to continue this amitie with her maieſtie, but chiefly to the whole eſtate of his kingdom exceeding profitable, which by this means ſhall be abundantly ſerued with the chiefeſt commodities they want, with many other things of more importance to the grand Signior his contentation, not herein to be mentioned. For I know the Viceroies experienced wiſdom can wel conſider thereof, in ſuch ſort as he wil not deny to accompliſh his maſters commandement, & our earneſt requeſt in ſo ſmal a matter as this we require, whereof I expect no refuſall: for thereby he ſhall increaſe his honor with the grand Signior, be in credite with her maieſtie, be void of trouble which hereafter by future ſuite againſt him may happen, and his gallies free of ſuch doubtful iſſue as doeth chance, fighting with our ſhips. Which, as it is well knowen to all the world, haue ſo great hearts as neuer cowardly to yeeld to their enemies. And that therefore in that reſpect (after the prouerbe, like eſteeme of their like) they are the more of ſuch a valiant prince as is their Viceroy and his couragious ſouldiers to be in all friendſhip cheriſhed and better eſteemed. If the captaine Baſſa had bene returned from Capha, I would in like maner haue procured his letters, which for that he is not, I doubt nothing but that the grand Signiors will ſuffiſe. Thus commending your ſelfe and theſe proceedings to the almighty his merciful direction, I bid you moſt heartily wel to fare. From my manſion Rapamat nigh Pera, this 30. of March 1585.

To Aſſan Aga, Eunuch & Treaſurer to Haſſan Baſſa king of Alger, which Aſſan Aga was the ſonne of Fran.Rowlie of Briſtow merchant, taken in the Swalow.

I Receiued your letters of Will.Hamor gentleman, my ſeruant very thankfully, aſwel for the feruent faith that by his report I heare you haue in our lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whoſe onely merits and bloodſhedding, you together with vs and all other good Chriſtians ſo truly beleeuing, ſhalbe ſaued, as alſo for your faithfull obedience like a true ſubiect to her Maieſtie, naturally louing your countrey & countreymen, declared in your fauourable furtherance of the ſaid Wil.Hamore, procuring their redemption. Of which your good & vertuous actions, as I reioice to vnderſtand, ſo wil I impart the ſame to your ſinguler cōmendation, both to our miſtreſſe her Maieſtie, & her moſt honorable counſellers the nobilitie of England, to whom aſſure your ſelfe the report ſhalbe very welcome. And now this ſecond time I am inforced by duetie to God & her maieſty, as alſo by the ſmal regard your maſter had of the Grand Signors former commandements, to complaine vnto him, though not ſo vehemently as I had occaſion by his moſt vnworthy anſwer. But I hope, & the rather by your means, he will not contrary this ſecond commandement, threatning him, not obſeruing the ſame, loſſe of office & life. The due execution whereof by your vertuous & careful induſtry procured, wil manifeſt to all the world, eſpecially to her maieſty, & me her ambaſſador, your true chriſtian mind & Engliſh heart, intentiuely bent to Gods honor, & the libertie of the poore men, for which I truſt you be ordained another Ioſeph, to folow his example in true pietie, in ſuch ſort that notwithſtãding your body be ſubiect to Turkiſh thraldom, yet your vertuous mind free frō thoſe vices, next vnder God addict to ẏ good ſeruice of your liege Lady & ſoueraigne princes, her moſt excellent maieſty, wil continually ſeeke by all good means to manifeſt ẏ ſame in this & the like faithful ſeruice to your ſinguler cōmendation, whereby both my ſelfe & others in that place hauing found you in all good offices faithfully affectionated, may in like caſe performe the like towards you, when & where you may haue occaſion to vſe me: which as I for my part do aſſuredly promiſe, & wil no leſſe faithfully performe; ſo accordingly I expect herein, and hereafter the like of you, whom moſt heartily ſaluted I commend to the diuine tuition and holy direction. From my houſe Rapamat, this 28. of June 1586.

Your louing and good friend her Maieſties Ambaſſador with the Grand Signor, Will.Harborne.

A petition

A petition exhibited to the Viceroy for reformation of ſundry iniuries offered our nation in Morea, as alſo for ſundry demaundes needefull for the eſtabliſhing of the traffike in thoſe parts.

1 FIrſt that our people may be freed of ſuch wonted moleſtation, as the Ianiſſers of Patraſſo haue alwayes from time to time offered them, not regarding the kings commandements to the contrary. That they be remoued and called away from thence, and none other remaine in their place.

2 That where heretofore the kings commandements haue beene graunted to ours, that no perſon whatſoeuer ſhall forceably take from them any of their commodities, otherwiſe then paying them before the deliuerie thereof, for the ſame in readie money, at ſuch price as they themſelues will, and ſell ordinarily to others, as alſo that no officer whatſoeuer, of the kings or any other, ſhall force them to buy any commodities of that countrey, otherwiſe then the needfull, at their owne will and pleaſure, that the ſaid commandements not heretofore obeyed may be renued with ſuch ſtraight charge for the execution of the ſame, as is requiſite for their due effect.

3 That whereas ſundry exactions and oppreſſions be offered ours by ſuch Byes, Sanjacbies, iuſtices and Cadies, Ianizaries, Capagies, and others, officers of the kings comming downe into thoſe parts, who finding there reſident no other nation but only ours, will vnder the name of preſents forceable take from them what they pleaſe: We do require to obuent theſe harmes, it may be ſpecified by a commandement from the king to which of ſuch his officers, preſents may be giuen, and their ſundry values, whereby both they and ours may reſt contented, ſeuerely prohibiting in the ſaid commandement, that they take no more then that appointed them, and that no other officers but thoſe onely ſpecified in that commaundement, doe forcibly require of them any thing whatſoeuer.

4 That the Nadir and Cuſtomer of the port, hauing permitted our ſhip to lade, doe not after demand of the marchants any other then the outward cuſtome due to the king for the ſame goods. And being ſo laden, may by them and the Cadie with other their inferiour officers be viſited, requiring for the viſiting no more then formerly they were accuſtomed to pay at their firſt comming. After which the ſaid ſhip to depart at the Conſuls pleaſure, without any moleſtation of them, or any other officer whatſoeuer.

5 That Mahomet Chaus, ſometime Nadir of Lepanto, and Azon Agon his ſubſtitute being with him may be ſeuerely puniſhed to the example of others, for often and vniuſtly moleſting our nation, contrarie to the kings commandement, which they diſdainefully contemned, as alſo that the ſaid Mahomet reſtore and pay vnto ours thirtie for 300 ſackes of currants nowe taken forcibly out of a barke, comming thither from the hither partes of Morea, to pay the king his cuſtome, and that from hence forth, neither the ſaid Mahomet, Azon Agon, nor any other officer or perſon whatſoeuer doe hinder or trouble any of ours going thither or to any other place about ther affaires.

6 That whereas certaine Iewes of Lepanto owing money to our marchants for commodities ſolde them, haue not hitherto ſatiſfied them, notwithſtanding ours had from the king a commandement for the recouery of the ſame debts, but fled and abſented themſelues out of the Towne at the comming of the ſame, another more forcible commaundement may be graunted ours, that for nonpaiment, whatſoeuer may be found of theirs in goods, houſes, vineyards, or any other thing, may be ſold, and ours ſatiſfied of their ſaid debt, according to equitie and reaſon.

A commandement to Patraſſo in Morea.

WHen this commandement ſhall come vnto you, know you, that the Conſull of the Engliſh Nation in our port of Patraſſo, hath giuen vs to vnderſtand, that formerly we granted him a commandement that hauing paied once cuſtome for the currants bought to lade in their ſhips, they ſhall not pay it againe: according to which they bringing it to the port of Petraſſo, informing thereof Mahomet the Nadir of Lepanto, he contrary to the tenor thereof and former order, doth againe take another cuſtome of him, and requiring him to know why he ſo did contrary to our commandement, he anſwered vs, he tooke it not for cuſtome, but for a preſent. Moreouer the ſayd Conſull certified vs how that the ſaid Nadir contrary to to ancient cuſtome doth not take for the kings right as he ought currents, but will haue of the poore men money at his pleaſure, and therewith buyeth currents at a very low price, which after he doth forcibly ſell to vs at a much higher price, ſaying it is remainder of the goods of the king, and by this meanes doth hurt the poore men and do them wrong. Wherefore I command you by this my commandement, that you looke to this matter betweene this Conſull, the Nadir, and this people, and do therein equally according to right. And ſee that our cōmandement in this matter be obſerued in ſuch ſort, as they hauing once in the port paied full cuſtome, do not pay it againe, neither that this Nadir do take any more money of them by the way of preſent, for that therein it is moſt certaine he doth them iniurie contrary to the Canon. And if with you ſhall be found to the value of one Aſper taken heretofore wrongfully of them, ſee it preſently reſtored to them, without any default. And from henceforth ſee that he doe neither him nor his people wrong, but that he deale with them in all things according to our Canon, that the Conſull and his hereafter haue no occaſion any more to complaine here in our Court, and that the Nadir proceed in gathering corants of the people after the old order and not otherwiſe. This know you for certaine, and giue credit to this my commaundement, which hauing read deliuer againe into the Conſuls handes. From Conſtantinople the yeere of Mahomet 993.

A commandement for Chio.

VObis, Beg & Cadi & Ermini, qui eſtis in Chio, ſignificamus: quod sereniſſimæ Reginæ Maieſtatis Angliæ orator, qui eſt in excelſa porta per literas ſignificauit nobis, quod ex nauibus Anglicis vna nauis veniſſet ad portum Chio, & illinc Conſtantinopolim recto curſu voluiſſet venire, & contra priuilegium detinuiſtis, & non ſiuiſtis venire. Hęc prædictus orator ſignificauit nobis: & petiuit a nobis in hoc negocio hoc mandatum, vt naues Anglicæ veniant & redeant in noſtras ditiones Cæſareas, Priuilegium datum & conceſſum eſt ex parte Serenitatis Cæſareæ noſtræ: & huius priuilegij copia data eſt ſub inſigni noſtro. Et contra noſtrum priuilegium Cæſareum quod ita agitur, quæ eſt cauſa? Quando cum hoc mandato noſtro homines illorum ad vos venerint ex prædicta Anglia, ſi nauis venerit ad portum veſtrum, & ſi res & merces ex naue exemerint, & vendiderint, & triceſſimam ſecundam partem reddiderint, & res quæ manſerint Conſtantinopolim auferre velint, patiantur: Et ſi aliquis contra priuilegium & articulos eius aliquid ageret, non ſinatis, nec vos facite: & impediri non ſinatis eos, vt rectà Conſtantinopolim venientes in ſuis negotiationibus ſine moleſtia eſſe poſſint. Et quicunque contra hoc mandatum & priuilegium noſtrum aliquid fecerit, nobis ſignificate. Huic mandato noſtro & inſigni fidem adhibete. In principio menſis Decembris.

A commandement for Baliabadram.

SEreniſſimæ Reginæ Angliæ orator literis ſupplicatorijs in porta noſtra fulgida ſignificauit, quod Baliabadram venientes mercatores, naues & homines eorum, contra priuilegium impedirentur & moleſtarentur. Inter nos enim & Reginam cum fœdus ſit, vt mercatores, homines & naues eorum contra priuilegium impediantur aut moleſtentur, nullo vnquam pacto concedimus. Mandamus igitur, vt literæ noſtræ Cæſareæ, quàm primum tibi exhibitæ fuerint, has in perſona propria cures, ſecundum quod conuenit, videaſq; ex Anglia Baliabadram cum mercibus venientibus mercatoribus, & alias ob cauſas venientibus hominibus, in ſumma Anglienſibus & nauibus eorum, & in nauibus exiſtentibus mercibus & rebus contra fœdus & priuilegium, iniuria, vis aut damnum non inferatur: ſed, vt conuenit, defendas, vt naues, mercatores, & homines, noſtri velut proprij ſubditi, liberi ab omni vi & iniuria permaneant, & negotijs ſuis incumbant. Et quod illius loci Ianiſſeri illos impedirent, ſignificatum eſt: vt illi illis nocumento ſint nullo modo concedimus. Iuxta tenorem mandati huius illos commonefacias, vt nihil quicquam contra fœdus faciant, ita vt nunquam huiuſmodi querela huc veniat, quia quicquid acciderit, a te expoſtulabimus. Negligentiam poſtponito, & inſigni Cęſareo fidem adhibeto.

A commaundement for Egypt.

SCito, quod orator Reginæ Angliæ in porta mea exiſtens libellum ſupplicem ad portam noſtram mittens ſignificauit, quod cum ex Ægypto Conſul eorum abeſſet, Conſul illic Gallicus exiſtens, Vento nuncupatus, quamuis ante hæc tempora ne manus in Anglos mitteret mandatum noſtrum fuerit datum, Angli ſub vexillo & tutela noſtra ſunt inquiens, mandatum Cæſareum vili exiſtimans, non ceſſauit perturbare Anglos. Quare ſcito quod Reginæ Angliæ priuilegium noſtrum eſt datum. Iuxta illud priuilegium Anglis nulla ratione Conſul Gallicus Conſulatum agat, neue manus immittat, mandatum noſtrum poſtulauit eius legatus. Quare mando, vt contra priuilegium noſtrum Conſul Gallicus Anglis iniuriam non inferat, neue Conſulatum agat. Iudici Ægypti literæ noſtræ ſunt datæ: hanc ob cauſam mando tibi quoque, vt iuxta illud mandatum noſtrum, contra priuilegium noſtrum Anglis Gallum Conſulatum agere nunquam patiare. Sic ſcito, & inſigni meo fidem adhibeto.

A commaundement of the Grand Signior to the Cadie or Iudge of Alexandria.

THe Embaſſadour for the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie of England certified vs howe that at the death of one of their marchants in Alexandria called Edward Chamberlaine, the French Conſul Vento ſealing vp his fondego and chamber, tooke vnder his ſeale al his goods and marchandiſe into his power, and required our commandement that all the goods might be reſtored againe according to iuſtice vnto the Engliſhmen: wherefore we commaund you that hauing receiued this our commandement, you aſſemble thoſe of the one part and of the other together, and if it be not paſſed fiue yeeres, if you haue not looked to it heretofore, now carefully looke to it, & if it be according to their Arz or certificate preſented vnto vs, that the foreſaid French Conſull Vento hath wrongfully taken into his power the goods of the deceaſed Engliſh marchant vnder his ſeale, that then you cauſe him to reſtore all the ſaid goods and marchandiſe ſealed by him, and make good that which is thereof wanting vnto the Engliſh marchants: doe in this matter according to iuſtice, and credite this our ſeale.

A commandement to the Baſſa of Alexandria.

THe Embaſſadour for the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſty of England by ſupplication certified vs, how that notwithſtanding our priuilege granted them to make Conſuls in al parts of our dominions to gouerne their nation according to their owne cuſtome & law, to defend them againſt all wrongs and iniuries whatſoeuer; yet that the French Conſull affirming to thee that art Baſſa, that they were vnder his banner, and that he ſhould gouerne them, and ouerſee their buſineſſe, and hauing got a new priuilege, mentioning therein the Engliſh men to be vnder his banner, did by all meanes moleſt & trouble them, inſomuch that their Conſull oppreſſed with many iniuries fled away, and that thou which art Beglerbie didſt maintaine the French Conſul herein; whereupon the Embaſſadour required our commandement, that they might haue iuſtice for theſe iniuries: wherefore we command thee that hauing receiued this our commandement, you examine diligently that his priuilege, and ſend the copie thereof hither, and if it be found that the French Conſull Vento hath by ſubtiltie got the aforeſaid priuilege written, that you then ſee him puniſhed, and ſuffer not hereafter the French or Venetian Conſuls to intermeddle with their buſineſſe. Obey this our commaundement, and giue credite to the ſeale.

A commaundement to the Byes, and Cadies of Metelin and Rhodes, and to all the Cadies and Byes in the way to Conſtantinople.

TO the Saniakbies of Rhodes and Metelin, to the Saniacbies bordering on the ſea-coaſt, and to the Cadies in Rhodes and Metelin, and to the Ermins in the other ports and coaſtes. This commaundement comming to you, know that the Embaſſadour of England required of vs our commaundement that their ſhips comming to Chio, & from thence to Conſtantinople, no man ſhould hurt them or offer any violence, either in the way on the ſea or on the land, or in the portes. I haue commaunded, that their ſhips comming to any of the ſaid places or ports with marchandiſe, if they themſelues will, they may ſell their commodities, & as much, and as litle as they will, and if it be in a place where cuſtome was not woont to be taken, hauing taken the cuſtome due by the olde Canon you ſuffer them not to bee iniuried, either in the way, portes, or other places, but that they may come in quietneſſe to Conſtantinople, and certifie vs of thoſe that be diſobedient to our commaundement, and giue credite to our ſeale. And hauing read this our commaundement, giue it to them againe.

A commaundement for Aleppo.

WHen my letters ſhal come vnto you, know that the Queene of England her Embaſſador by ſupplication certified how that before this time we had giuen our cōmandement that the ſumme of 70 ducats, & other marchandize belonging to one William Barret in Aleppo, now dead, ſaying he was a Venetian, ſhould be giuen to the Venetians. And if they did find that he was not a Venetian, my will was that they ſhould ſend all his goods and marchandize to our port into my treaſurie. But becauſe that man was an Engliſhman, the Embaſſadour required that the ſayde goods might not be diminiſhed, but that they might be reſtored to one of their Engliſhmen. This buſineſſe was ſignified vnto vs in the nine hundred ninety & fourth yere of Mahomet, and in the moneth of May the 10 day. This buſineſſe pertaineth to the Engliſhmen, who haue in their handes our priuilege, according to which priuilege being in their hands let this matter be done. Againſt this priuilege do nothing, aſke nothing of them, but reſtore to euery one his goods. And I command that when my cōmandement ſhall come vnto you, you doe according to it. And if it be according as the Ambaſſadour certified, and that they haue the priuilege, peruſe the ſame, looke that nothing be committed againſt it and our league, and let none trouble them contrarie to it, reſtore them their goods according to iuſtice, and take heede diligently in this buſineſſe: if another ſtrange marchant be dead, and his goods and marchandize be taken, if he be neither Venetian, nor Engliſhman, let not his goods periſh among you. Before this time one of our Chauſes called Cerkes Mahomet chaus was ſent with our commaundement to ſende the money and marchandize of a dead marchant to our port, and hitherto no letters or newes is come of this matter, for which you ſhall be puniſhed. Wherefore beware, and if he that is dead be neither Venetian nor Engliſhman in veritie, doe not looſe the goods of the ſaid dead marchant vnder the name of a Venetian or Engliſhman, doe not to the diſcommoditie of my treaſurie, for after it will be hard to recouer it.

The voyage made to Tripolis in Barbarie, in the yeere 1583. with a ſhip called the Ieſus, wherein the aduentures and diſtreſſes of ſome Engliſhmen are truely reported, and other neceſſary circumſtances obſerued. Written by Thomas Sanders.

This voyage was ſet forth by the right worſhipfull ſir Edward Osborne knight, chiefe merchant of all the Turkiſh company, and one maſter Richard Staper, the ſhip being of the burden of one hundred tunnes, called the Ieſus, ſhe was builded at Farmne a riuer by Portſmouth. The owners were maſter Thomas Thomſon, Nicholas Carnaby, and Iohn Gilman. The maſter was one Aches Hellier of Black-wall, and his Mate was one Richard Morris of that place: their Pilot was one Anthonie Ierado a Frenchman, of the prouince of Marſeils: the purſer was one William Thomſon our owners ſonne: the merchants factors were Romane Sonnings a Frenchman, and Richard Skegs ſeruant vnto the ſaid maſter Staper. The owners were bound vnto the merchants by charter partie thereupon, in one thouſand markes, that the ſaid ſhip by Gods permiſſion ſhould goe for Tripolis in Barbarie, that is to ſay, firſt from Portſmouth to Newhauen in Normandie, from thence to S. Lucar, otherwiſe called Saint Lucas in Andeluzia, and from thence to Tripolie, which is in the Eaſt part of Africa, and ſo to returne vnto London. But here ought euery man to note and conſider the workes of our God, that many times what man doth determine God doth diſappoint. The ſaid maſter hauing ſome occaſion to goe to Farmne, tooke with him the Pilot and the Purſer, and returning againe by meanes of a perrie of winde, the boat wherein they were, was drowned, with the ſaid maſter, the purſer, and all the company: onely the ſaid Pilot by experience in ſwimming ſaued himſelfe: theſe were the beginnings of our ſorrowes. After which the ſaid maſters mate would not proceed in that voiage, and the owner hearing of this miſfortune, and the vnwillingneſſe of the maſters mate, did ſend downe one Richard Deimond, and ſhipped him for maſter, who did chuſe for his Mate one Andrew Dier, and ſo the ſaid ſhip departed on her voiage accordingly: that is to ſay, about the 16 of October, in An. 1583. ſhe made ſaile from Portſmouth, and the 18 day then next following ſhe arriued at Newhauen, where our ſaide laſt maſter Deimond by a ſurfeit died. The factors then appointed the ſaid Andrew Dier, being then maſters mate, to be their maſter for that voiage, who did chuſe to be his Mates the two quarter maſters of the ſame ſhip, to wit, Peter Auſtine, and Shillabey, and for Purſer was ſhipped one Richard Burges. Afterward about the 8 day of Nouember we made ſaile forthward, and by force of weather we were driuen backe againe into Porteſmouth, where we renued our victuals and other neceſſaries, and then the winde came faire. About the 29 day then next following we departed thence, and the firſt day of December by meanes of a contrarie winde, wee were driuen to Plimmouth. The 18 day then next following, we made foorthward againe, & by force of weather we were driuen to Falmouth, where we remained vntill the firſt day of Ianuary: at which time the winde comming faire, we departed thence, and about the 20 day of the ſaid moneth we arriued ſafely at S. Lucar. And about the 9 day of March next following, we made ſaile from thence, and about the 18 day of the ſame moneth we came to Tripolis in Barbarie, where we were verie well intertained by the king of that countrey, and alſo of the commons. The commodities of that place are ſweete oiles: the king there is a merchant, and the rather (willing to preferre himſelfe before his commons) requeſted our ſaid factors to traffique with him, and promiſed them that if they would

Man doth purpoſe, and God doth diſpoſe.

A new maſter choſen.

The new maſter died.

The Ieſus arriued in Tripolis.

would take his oiles at his owne price, they ſhould pay no maner of cuſtome, and they tooke of him certaine tunnes of oile: and afterwarde perceiuing that they might haue farre better cheape notwithſtanding the cuſtome free, they deſired the king to licence them to take the oiles at the pleaſure of his commons, for that his price did exceede theirs: whereunto the king would not agree, but was rather contented to abate his price, inſomuch that the factors bought all their oyles of the king cuſtome free, and ſo laded the ſame aboord.

Another ſhip of Briſtow came to Tripolis.

In the meane time there came to that place one Miles Dickenſon in a ſhip of Briſtow, who together with our ſaid Factors tooke a houſe to themſelues there. Our French Factor Romane Sonnings deſired to buy a commoditie in the market, and wanting money, deſired the ſaide Miles Dickenſon to lend him an hundred Chikinoes vntill he came to his lodging, which he did, and afterward the ſame Sonnings mette with Miles Dickenſon in the ſtreete, and deliuered him money bound vp in a napkin: ſaying, maſter Dickenſon there is the money that I borowed of you, and ſo thanked him for the ſame: hee doubted nothing leſſe then falſhoode, which is ſeldome knowne among marchants, and ſpecially being together in one houſe, and is the more deteſtable betweene Chriſtians, they being in Turkie among the heathen. The ſaid Dickenſon did not tell the money preſently, vntill he came to his lodging, and then finding nine Chikinoes lacking of his hundred, which was about three pounds, for that euery Chikino is woorth ſeuen ſhillings of Engliſh money, he came to the ſayde Romane Sonnings and deliuered him his handkerchiefe, and aſked him howe many Chikinoes hee had deliuered him? Sonnings anſwered, an hundred: Dickenſon ſaid no: and ſo they proteſted and ſwore on both parts. But in the end the ſayd Romane Sonnings did ſweare deepely with deteſtable othes and curſes, and prayed God that hee might ſhewe his workes on him, that other might take enſample thereby, and that he might be hanged like a dogge, and neuer come into England againe, if he did not deliuer vnto the ſayde Dickenſon an hundred Chikinoes. And here beholde a notable example of all blaſphemers, curſers and ſwearers, how God rewarded him accordingly: for many times it commeth to paſſe, that God ſheweth his miracles vpon ſuch monſtrous blaſphemers, to the enſample of others, as nowe hereafter you ſhall heare what befell to this Romane Sonnings.

There was a man in the ſaid towne a pledge, whoſe name was Patrone Norado, who the yere before had done this Sonnings ſome pleaſure there. The foreſaid Patrone Norado was indebted vnto a Turke of that towne, in the ſumme of foure hundred and fiftie crownes, for certain goods ſent by him into Chriſtendome in a ſhip of his owne, and by his owne brother, and himſelfe remained in Tripolis as pledge vntill his ſaid brothers returne: and, as the report went there, after his brothers arriuall into Chriſtendome, he came among lewde companie, and loſt his brothers ſaid ſhip and goods at dice, and neuer returned vnto him againe.

A conſpiracie practiſed by the French Factor, to deceiue a Turkiſh marchant of 450 crownes

The ſaid Patrone Norado being voyde of all hope, and finding now opportunitie, conſulted with the ſaid Sonnings for to ſwimme a ſeaboorde the Iſlands, and the ſhip being then out of danger, ſhould take him in (as after was confeſſed) and ſo to goe to Tolon in the prouince of Marſeills with this Patrone Norado, and there to take in his lading.

The ſhippe being readie the firſt day of May, and hauing her ſayles all aboorde, our ſayde Factors did take their leaue of the king, who very courteouſly bade them farwell, and when they came aboorde, they commaunded the Maſter and the companie haſtily to get out the ſhip: the Maſter anſwered that it was vnpoſſible, for that the winde was contrary and ouerblowed. And he required vs vpon forfeiture of our bandes, that we ſhould doe our indeuour to get her foorth. Then went wee to warpe out the ſhippe, and preſently the king ſent a boate aboord of vs, with three men in her, commaunding the ſaide Sonnings to come a ſhoare: at whoſe comming, the king demaunded of him cuſtome for the oyles: Sonnings anſwered him that his highneſſe had promiſed to deliuer them cuſtome free. But notwithſtanding the king weighed not his ſaid promiſe, and as an infidell that hath not the feare of God before his eyes, nor regarde of his worde, albeit hee was a king, hee cauſed the ſayde Sonnings to pay the cuſtome to the vttermoſt penie. And afterwarde willed him to make haſte away, ſaying, that the Ianizaries would haue the oyle aſhoare againe.

The beginning of their troubles, and occaſion of all their miſerie.

Theſe Ianizaries are ſouldiers there vnder the great Turke, and their power is aboue the Kings. And ſo the ſaide Factor departed from the king, and came to the waterſide, and called for a boate to come aboorde, and he brought with him the foreſaid Patrone Norado. The companie inquiſitiue to know what man that was, Sonnings anſwered, that he was his countreyman, a paſſenger: I pray God ſaid the companie, that we come not into trouble by this man. Then ſaid Sonnings angerly, what haue you to do with any matters of mine? if any thing chance otherwiſe then well, I muſt anſwere for all.

Nowe the Turke vnto whom this Patrone Norado was indebted, miſſing him (ſuppoſed him to be aboorde of our ſhippe) preſently went vnto the King, and tolde him that hee thought that his pledge Patrone Norado was aboord of the Engliſh ſhip, whereupon the King preſently ſent a boat aboord of vs, with three men in her, commanding the ſaid Sonnings to come a ſhoare, and not ſpeaking any thing as touching the man, he ſaide that hee would come preſently in his owne boate, but aſſoone as they were gone, he willed vs to warpe foorth the ſhip, and ſaide that he would ſee the knaues hanged before he would goe a ſhoare. And when the king ſawe that he came not a ſhoare, but ſtill continued warping away the ſhippe, he ſtraight commaunded the gunner of the bulwarke next vnto vs, to ſhoote three ſhootes without ball. Then we came all to the ſaid Sonnings, and aſked of him what the matter was that we were ſhot at, he ſaid that it was the Ianizaries who would haue the oyle a ſhoare againe, and willed vs to make haſte away, and after that he had diſcharged three ſhots without ball, he commaunded all the gunners in the towne to doe their indeuour to ſinke vs, but the Turkiſh gunners could not once ſtrike vs, wherefore the king ſent preſently to the Banio: (this Banio is the priſon wheras all the captiues lay at night) and promiſed if that there were any that could either ſinke vs, or elſe cauſe vs to come in againe, he ſhould haue a hundred crownes, and his libertie. With that came foorth a Spaniard called Sebaſtian, which had bene an old ſeruitour in Flanders, and he ſaid, that vpon the performance of that promiſe, hee would vndertake either to ſinke vs, or to cauſe vs to come in againe, and thereto he would gage his life, and at the firſt ſhotte he ſplit our rudders head in pieces, and the ſecond ſhotte he ſtrake vs vnder the water, and the third ſhotte he ſhotte vs through our foremaſt with a Colvering ſhot, and thus he hauing rent both our rudder and maſte, and ſhot vs vnder water, we were inforced to goe in againe.

This Sebaſtian for all his diligence herein, had neither his liberty, nor an hundred crownes, ſo promiſed by the ſaid king, but after his ſeruice done was committed againe to priſon, whereby may appeare the regard that the Turke or infidell hath of his worde, although he be able to performe it, yea more, though he be a king.

Then our merchants ſeeing no remedie, they together with fiue of our companie went a ſhoare, and then they ceaſed ſhooting: they ſhot vnto vs in the whole, nine and thirtie ſhootes, without the hurt of any man.

And when our marchants came a ſhoare, the King commaunded preſently that they with the reſt of our companie that were with them, ſhould be cheined foure & foure, to a hundred waight of yron, and when we came in with the ſhip, there came preſently aboue an hundred Turks aboord of vs, and they ſearched vs, and ſtript our very clothes from our backes, & brake open our cheſts, and made a ſpoyle of all that we had: and the Chriſtian caitifes likewiſe that came a boord of vs made ſpoyle of our goods, and vſed vs as ill as the Turkes did. And our maſters mate hauing a Geneua Bible in his hand, there came the kings chiefe gunner, and tooke it out from him, who ſhewed me of it, and I hauing the language, went preſently to the kings treaſurer, and tolde him of it, ſaying, that ſith it was the will of God that we ſhould fall into their handes, yet that they ſhould grant vs to vſe our conſciences to our owne diſcretion, as they ſuffered the Spaniards and other nations to vſe theirs, and he granted vs: then I told him that the maiſter gunner had taken away a Bible from one of our men: the Treaſurer went preſently and commaunded him to deliuer vp the Bible againe, which he did: & within a litle after he tooke it from the man againe, and I ſhewed the Treaſurer of it, and preſently he commaunded him to deliuer it againe: ſaying, thou villaine, wilt thou turne to Chriſtianitie againe? for he was a Renegado, which is one that firſt was a Chriſtian, and afterwards becommeth a Turke, and ſo he deliuered me the Bible the ſecond time. And then I hauing it in my hand, the gunner came to me, and ſpake theſe wordes, ſaying, thou dogge, I wil haue the booke in deſpight of thee, and tooke it from me, ſaying: If thou tell the kings treaſurer of it any more, by Mahomet I will be reuenged of thee. Notwithſtanding I went the third time vnto the kings Treaſurer, and tolde him of it, and he came with me, ſaying thus vnto the gunner: by the head of the great Turke, if thou take it from him againe, thou ſhalt haue an hundred baſtonadoes. And foorthwith he deliuered me the booke, ſaying, he had not the value of a pin of the ſpoyle of the ſhip, which was the better for him, as hereafter you ſhall heare: for there was none, neither Chriſtian nor Turke that tooke the value of a peniworth of our goods from vs, but periſhed both bodie and goods within ſeuenteene moneths following, as hereafter ſhall plainely appeare.

Then came the Guardian Baſha, which is the keeper of the kings captiues, to fetch vs all a ſhoare, and then I remembring the miſerable eſtate of poore diſtreſſed captiues, in the time of their bondage to thoſe infidels, went to mine owne cheſt, and tooke out thereof a iarre of oyle, and filled a baſket full of white Ruſke to carie a ſhoare with me, but before I came to the Banio, the Turkiſh boyes had taken away almoſt all my bread, and the keeper ſaide, deliuer me the iarre of oyle, and when thou commeſt to the Banio thou ſhalt haue it againe, but I neuer had it of him any more.

But when I came to the Banio, and ſawe our Marchants and all the reſt of our company in chaines, and we all ready to receiue the ſame reward, what heart in the world is there ſo hard, but would haue pitied our cauſe, hearing or ſeeing the lamentable greeting there was betwixt vs: all this happened the firſt of May, 1584.

And the ſecond day of the ſame moneth, the King with all his counſell ſate in iudgement vpon vs. The firſt that were had forth to be arraigned, were the Factors, and the Maſters, and the King asked them wherefore they came not a ſhoare when he ſent for them. And Romaine Sonnings anſwered, that though he were king on ſhoare, and might commaunde there, ſo was hee as touching thoſe that were vnder him: and therefore ſaid, if any offence be, the fault is wholy in my ſelfe, and in no other. Then foorthwith the king gaue iudgement, that the ſaide Romaine Sonnings ſhould be hanged ouer the Northeaſt bulwarke, from whence he conueyed the forenamed Patrone Norado, and then he called for our Maſter Andrew Dier, and vſed fewe wordes to him, and ſo condemned him to be hanged ouer the walles of the Weſternmoſt bulwarke.

The Engliſhmen araigned.

Then fell our other Factor (named Richard Skegs) vpon his knees before the king, and ſaid, I beſeech your highneſſe either to pardon our Maſter, or elſe ſuffer me to die for him, for he is ignorant of this cauſe. And then the people of that countrey fauouring the ſaid Richard Skegs beſought the king to pardon them both. So then the king ſpake theſe wordes: Beholde, for thy ſake, I pardon the Maſter. Then preſently the Turkes ſhouted, and cried, ſaying: Away with the Maſter from the preſence of the king. And then he came into the Banio whereas we were, and tolde vs what had happened, and we all reioyced at the good hap of maſter Skegs, that hee was ſaued, and our Maſter for his ſake.

But afterward our ioy was turned to double ſorrow, for in the meane time the kings minde was altered: for that one of his counſell had aduiſed him, that vnleſſe the Maſter died alſo, by the lawe they could not confiſcate the ship nor goods, neither captiue any of the men: whereupon the king ſent for our Maſter againe, and gaue him another iudgement after his pardon for one cauſe, which was that hee ſhould be hanged. Here all true Chriſtians may ſee what truſt a Chriſtian man may put in an infidels promiſe, who being a King, pardoned a man nowe, as you haue heard, and within an houre after hanged him for the ſame cauſe before a whole multitude: and alſo promiſed our Factors their oyles cuſtome free, and at their going away made them pay the vttermoſt penie for the cuſtome thereof.

Maſter Dier condemned to be hanged ouer a bulwarke.

And when that Romaine Sonnings ſaw no remedy but that he ſhould die, he proteſted to turne Turke, hoping thereby to haue ſaued his life. Then ſaide the Turke, If thou wilt turne Turke, ſpeake the words that thereunto belong: and he did ſo. Then ſaide they vnto him, Now thou ſhalt die in the faith of a Turke, and ſo hee did, as the Turkes reported that were at his execution. And the forenamed Patrone Norado, whereas before he had libertie and did nothing, he then was condemned ſlaue perpetuall, except there were paiment made of the foreſaid ſumme of money.

A Frenchman turned Turke, in hope of his life, and afterward was hanged.

Then the king condemned all vs, who were in number ſixe and twentie, of the which, two were hanged (as you haue heard) and one died the firſt day wee came on ſhoare, by the viſitation of Almightie God: and the other three and twentie he condemned ſlaues perpetually vnto the great Turke, and the ſhip and goods were confiſcated to the vſe of the great Turke: and then we all fell downe vpon our knees, giuing God thankes for this ſorrowfull viſitation, and giuing our ſelues wholy to the Almightie power of God, vnto whom all ſecrets are knowen, that he of his goodneſſe would vouchſafe to looke vpon vs.

Here may all true Chriſtian hearts ſee the wonderfull workes of God ſhewed vpon ſuch infidels, blaſphemers, whoremaſters, and renegate Chriſtians, and ſo you ſhall reade in the ende of this booke, of the like vpon the vnfaithfull king and all his children, and of as many as tooke any portion of the ſaid goods.

But firſt to ſhewe our miſerable bondage and ſlauerie, and vnto what ſmall pittance and allowance wee were tied, for euery fiue men had allowance but fiue aſpers of bread in a day, which is but two pence Engliſh: and our lodging was to lye on the bare boords, with a very ſimple cape to couer vs, wee were alſo forceably and moſt violently ſhauen, head and beard, and within three dayes after, I and ſixe more of my fellowes, together with fourescore Italians and Spaniards were ſent foorth in a Galeot to take a Greekiſh Carmoſell, which came into Africa to ſteale Negroes, and went out of Tripolis vnto that place, which was two hundred and fourtie leagues thence, but wee were chained three and three to an oare, and wee rowed naked aboue the girdle, and the Boteſwaine of the Galley walked abaft the maſte, and his Mate afore the maſte, and eche of them a bulls piſſell dried in their handes, and when their diueliſh choller roſe, they would ſtrike the Chriſtians for no cauſe: And they allowed vs but halfe a pound of bread a man in a day without any other kinde of ſuſtenance, water excepted. And when we came to the place whereas wee ſaw the Carmoſell, we were not ſuffered to haue neither needle, bodkin, knife, or any other weapon about vs, nor at any other time in the night, vpon paine of one hundred baſtonadoes: wee were then alſo cruelly manackled in ſuch ſort, that we could not put our handes the length of one foote aſunder the one from the other, and euery night they ſearched our chaines three times, to ſee if they were faſt riueted: Wee continued fight with the Carmoſell three houres, and then wee tooke it, and loſt but two of our men in that fight, but there were ſlaine of the Greekes fiue, and foureteene were cruelly hurt, and they that were ſound, were preſently made ſlaues, and chained to the oares: and within fifteene dayes after we returned againe into Tripolis, and then wee were put to all maner of ſlauerie. I was put to hewe ſtones, and other to cary ſtones, and ſome to draw the Cart with earth, and ſome to make morter, and ſome to draw ſtones, (for at that time the Turkes builded a church:) And thus we were put to all kinde of ſlauerie that was to be done. And in the time of our being there, the Moores that are the huſbandmen of the countrey, rebelled againſt the king, becauſe he would haue conſtrained them to pay greater tribute then heretofore they had done, ſo that the Souldiours of Tripolis marched foorth of the towne to haue ioyned battell againſt the Moores for their rebellion, and the King ſent with them foure pieces of Ordinance, which were drawen by the captiues twentie miles into the Countrey after them, and at the ſight thereof the Moores fled, and then the Captaines returned backe againe. Then I and certaine Chriſtians more were ſent twelue miles into the countrey with a Cart to lode timber, and we returned againe the ſame day.

The Turkes builded a church.

Nowe the king had 18. captiues, which three times a weeke went to fetch wood thirtie miles from the towne: and on a time he appointed me for one of the 18. and wee departed at eight of the clocke in the night, and vpon the way as wee rode vpon the camels, I demaunded of one of our company, who did direct vs the way: he ſayd, that there was a Moore in our company which was our guide: and I demaunded of them how Tripolis and the wood bare one off the other: and hee ſaid, Eaſt Northeaſt, and Weſt Southweſt. And at midnight or neere thereabouts, as I was riding vpon my camel, I fell aſleepe, and the guide and all the reſt rode away from me, not thinking but I had bene among them. When I awooke, and finding my ſelfe alone durſt not call nor hallow, for feare leaſt the wilde Moores ſhould heare me, becauſe they holde this opinion, that in killing a Chriſtian they do God good ſeruice: and muſing with my ſelfe what were beſt for me to do, if I ſhould goe foorth, and the wilde Moores ſhould hap to meete with mee, they would kill mee: and on the other ſide, if I ſhould returne backe to Tripolis without any wood or company, I ſhould be moſt miſerably vſed: therefore of two euils, rather I had to goe foorth to the looſing of my life, then to turne backe and truſt to their mercie, fearing to bee vſed as before I had ſeene others: for vnderſtanding by ſome of my company before, howe Tripolis and the ſaide wood did lie one off another, by the North ſtarre I went forth at aduenture, and as God would haue it, I came right to the place where they were, euen about an houre before day: there altogether wee reſted and gaue our camels prouender, and aſſoone as the day appeared, we rode all into the wood: and I ſeeing no wood there, but a ſticke here and a ſticke there, about the bigneſſe of a mans arme growing in the ſand, it cauſed mee to marueile how ſo many camels ſhould be loden in that place. The wood was Iuniper, we needed no axe nor edge toole to cut it, but pluckt it vp by ſtrength of hands rootes and all, which a man might eaſily do, and ſo gathered it together, a little at one place and ſo at another, and laded our camels, and came home about ſeuen of the clocke that night folowing: becauſe I fell lame, and my camel was tired, I left my wood in the way.

The Chriſtians ſent 3. times a weeke 30. miles to fetch wood.

There was in Tripolis that time a Venetian, whoſe name was Benedetto Venetiano, and ſeuenteene captiues more of his company, which ranne away from Tripolis in a boate, and came in ſight of an Iſland called Malta, which lieth fourtie leagues from Tripolis right North, and being within a mile of the ſhoare, & very faire weather, one of their company ſaid, In diſpetto de dio adeſſo venio a pilliar terra, which is as much to ſay: In the deſpite of God I ſhall now fetch the ſhoare, and preſently there aroſe a mighty ſtorme, with thunder and raine, and the wind at North, their boate being very ſmall, ſo that they were inforced to beare vp roome, and to ſteare right afore the winde ouer againſt the coaſt of Barbarie from whence they came, and rowing vp and downe the coaſt, their victuals being ſpent, the 21. day after their departure they were inforced through the want of food to come aſhoare, thinking to haue ſtolne ſome ſheepe: but the Moores of the countrey very craftily perceiuing their intent, gathered together a threeſcore horſemen, and hid themſelues behinde a ſandie hill, and when the Chriſtians were come all a ſhoare, and paſt vp halfe a mile into the countrey, the Moores rode betwixt them and their boate, and ſome of them purſued the Chriſtians, and ſo they were all taken and brought to Tripolis, from whence they had had before eſcaped: and preſently the king commaunded that the foreſaide Benedetto with one more of his company ſhould loſe their eares, and the reſt ſhould be moſt cruelly beaten, which was preſently done. This king had a ſonne which was a ruler in an Iſland called Gerbi, whereunto arriued an Engliſh ſhippe called the Greene Dragon, of the which was Maſter one M. Blonket, who hauing a very vnhappy boy in that ſhippe, and vnderſtanding that whoſoeuer would turne Turke ſhould be well enterteined of the kings ſonne, this boy did runne a ſhoare, and voluntarily turned Turke. Shortly after the kings ſonne came to Tripolis to viſite his father, and ſeeing our company, hee greatly fancied Richard Burges our Purſer, and Iames Smith: they were both yong men, therefore he was very deſirous to haue them to turne Turkes, but they would not yeeld to his deſire, ſaying: We are your fathers ſlaues, and as ſlaues wee will ſerue him. Then his father the king ſent for them, and aſked them if they would turne Turkes? And they ſaide: If it pleaſe your highneſſe, Chriſtians we were borne, and ſo we will remaine, and beſeeched the king that they might not bee inforced thereunto. The king had there before in his houſe a ſonne of a yeoman of our Queenes guard, whom the kings ſonne had inforced to turne Turke, his name was Iohn Nelſon: him the king cauſed to be brought to theſe yong men, and then ſaid vnto them: Wil not you beare this your countreyman company, and be Turke as hee is? And they ſaide, that they would not yeeld thereunto during life. But it fell out, that within a moneth after, the kings ſonne went home to Gerbi againe, being ſixe ſcore miles from Tripolis, and caried our two foreſaid yong men with him, which were Richard Burges, and Iames Smith: and after their departure from vs, they ſent vs a letter, ſignifying that there was no violence ſhewed vnto them as yet, but within three dayes after they were violently vſed, for that the kings ſonne demaunded of them againe, if that they would turne Turke? Then anſwered Richard Burges, a Chriſtian I am, and ſo I will remaine. Then the kings ſonne very angerly ſaid vnto him: By Mahomet thou ſhalt preſently be made Turke. Then called he for his men, and commanded them to make him Turke, and they did ſo, and circumciſed him, and would haue had him ſpeake the wordes that thereunto belonged, but he anſwered them ſtoutly that he would not: and although they had put on him the habite of a Turke, yet ſayd he, A Chriſtian I was borne, and ſo I will remaine, though you force me to doe otherwiſe.

The Greene Dragon.

The kings ſonne, had a captiue that was ſonne to one of the Queenes Maieſties guard, that was forced to turne Turke.

And then he called for the other, and commaunded him to be made Turke perforce alſo: but he was very ſtrong, for it was ſo much as eight of the kings ſonnes men could doe to holde him, ſo in the ende they circumciſed him, and made him Turke. Now to paſſe ouer a litle, and ſo to ſhewe the maner of our deliuerance out of that miſerable captiuitie.

In May aforeſaid, ſhortly after our apprehenſion, I wrote a letter into England vnto my father dwelling in Tauiſtoke in Deuonſhire, ſignifying vnto him the whole eſtate of our calamities: and I wrote alſo to Conſtantinople to the Engliſh Embaſſadour, both which letters were faithfully deliuered. But when my father had receiued my letter, and vnderſtood the trueth of our miſhap, and the occaſion thereof, and what had happened to the offenders, he certified the right honourable the earle of Bedford thereof, who in ſhort ſpace acquainted her highneſſe with the whole cauſe thereof, and her Maieſtie like a moſt mercifull princeſſe tendering her Subiects, preſently tooke order for our deliuerance. Whereupon the right worſhipful ſir Edward Osborne knight directed his letters with all ſpeed to the Engliſh Embaſſadour in Conſtantinople, to procure our deliuery: and he obteined the great Turkes Commiſſion, and ſent it foorthwith to Tripolis, by one Maſter Edward Barton, together with a Iuſtice of the great Turkes, and one ſouldiour, and another Turke, and a Greeke which was his interpretour, which could ſpeake beſides Greeke, Turkiſh, Italian, Spaniſh and Engliſh. And when they came to Tripolis, they were well interteined. And the firſt night they did lie in a Captaines houſe in the towne: all our company that were in Tripolis came that night for ioy to Maſter Barton and the other Commiſſioners to ſee them. Then maſter Barton ſaid vnto vs, welcome my good countreymen, and louingly interteined vs, and at our departure from him, he gaue vs two ſhillings, and ſaid, Serue God, for to morrow I hope you ſhall be as free as euer you were; We all gaue him thankes and ſo departed.

The firſt motion for thoſe Engliſhmens deliuerie.

The next day in the morning very early, the King hauing intelligence of their comming, ſent word to the keeper, that none of the Engliſhmen (meaning our company) ſhould goe to worke. Then he ſent for Maſter Barton and the other Commiſſioners, and demaunded of the ſaide Maſter Barton his meſſage: the Iuſtice anſwered, that the great Turke his Soueraigne had ſent them vnto him, ſignifying that he was informed that a certaine Engliſh ſhippe, called the Ieſus, was by him the ſaide king confiſcated, about twelue moneths ſince, and nowe my ſaide Soueraigne hath here ſent his eſpeciall commiſſion by vs vnto you, for the deliuerance of the ſaide ſhippe and goods, and alſo the free libertie and deliuerance of the Engliſhmen of the ſame ſhippe, whom you haue taken and kept in captiuitie. And further the ſame Iuſtice ſaide, I am authorized by my

ſaid ſoueraigne the great Turke to ſee it done: And therefore I commaund you by vertue of this commiſſion, preſently to make reſtitution of the premiſſes or the value thereof: and ſo did the Iuſtices deliuer vnto the King the great Turkes commiſſion to the effect aforeſaide, which commiſſion the king with all obedience receiued: and after the peruſing of the ſame, he foorthwith commanded all the Engliſh captiues to be brought before him, and then willed the keeper to ſtrike off all our yrons, which done, the king ſaid, You Engliſhmen, for that you did offend the lawes of this place, by the ſame lawes therefore ſome of your company were condemned to die as you knowe, and you to bee perpetuall captiues during your liues: notwithſtanding, ſeeing it hath pleaſed my ſoueraigne lord the great Turke to pardon your ſaid offences, and to giue you your freedome and libertie, beholde, here I make deliuery of you to this Engliſh Gentleman: ſo hee deliuered vs all that were there, being thirteene in number, to Maſter Barton, who required alſo thoſe two yong men which the Kings ſonne had taken with him. Then the king anſwered that it was againſt their lawe to deliuer them, for that they were turned Turkes: and touching the ſhip and goods, the king ſaid, that he had ſolde her, but would make reſtitution of the value, and as much of the goods as came vnto his hands, and ſo the king aroſe and went to dinner, and commaunded a Iew to goe with Maſter Barton and the other commiſſioners, to ſhew them their lodging, which was a houſe prouided and appointed them by the ſaid king. And becauſe I had the Italian & Spaniſh tongues, by which their moſt trafique in that countrey is, Maſter Barton made me his Cater to buy his victuals for him and his company, and deliuered me money needfull for the ſame. Thus were wee ſet at libertie the 28. day of April, 1585.

The plagues and puniſhments that happened to the King and his people.

Nowe to returne to the kings plagues and puniſhments, which Almighty God at his will and pleaſure ſendeth vpon men in the ſight of the worlde, and likewiſe of the plagues that befell his children and others aforeſaide. Firſt when wee were made bondmen, being the ſecond day of May 1584. the king had 300. captiues, and before the moneth was expired, there died of them of the plague 150. And whereas there were 26. men of our company, of whom two were hanged, and one died the ſame day that wee were made bondſlaues: that preſent moneth there died nine more of our company of the plague, and other two were forced to turne Turkes as before is rehearſed: and on the fourth day of Iune next following the king loſt 150. camels, which were taken from him by the wilde Moores: and on the 28. day of the ſaide moneth of Iune, one Geffrey Malteſe, a renegado of Malta, ranne away to his countrey, and ſtole a Brigandine which the king had builded for to take the Chriſtians withall, and caried with him twelue Chriſtians more which were the kings captiues. Afterward about the tenth day of Iuly next following, the king road foorth vpon the greateſt and faireſt mare that might be ſeene, as white as any ſwanne: hee had not ridden fourtie paces from his houſe, but on a ſudden the ſame mare fell downe vnder him ſtarke dead, and I with ſixe more were commaunded to burie her, ſkinne, ſhoes and all, which we did. And about three moneths after our deliuerie, Maſter Barton, with all the reſidue of his company, departed from Tripolie to Zante, in a veſſell, called a Settea, of one Marcus Segoorus, who dwelt in Zante, and after our arriuall at Zante wee remained fifteene dayes there aboorde our veſſell, before wee coulde haue Platego (that is, leaue to come a ſhoare) becauſe the plague was in that place, from whence wee came: and about three dayes after we came a ſhoare, thither came another Settea of Marſeils bound for Conſtantinople. Then did Maſter Barton, and his company, with two more of our company, ſhippe themſelues as paſſengers in the ſame Settea, and went to Conſtantinople. But the other nine of vs that remained in Zante, about three moneths after, ſhipt our ſelues in a ſhippe of the ſaid Marcus Segoorus, which came to Zante, and was bound for England. In which three moneths, the ſouldiers of Tripolie killed the ſaid king. And then the Kings ſonne, according to the cuſtome there, went to Conſtantinople, to ſurrender vp all his fathers treaſure, goods, captiues, and concubines, vnto the great Turke, and tooke with him our ſaide Purſer Richard Burges, and Iames Smith, and alſo the other two Engliſhmen, which he the ſaid kings ſonne had inforced to become Turkes, as is aforeſayd. And they the ſaid Engliſhmen finding now ſome opportunitie, concluded with the Chriſtian captiues which were going with them vnto Conſtantinople, being in number about one hundred and fiftie, to kill the kings ſonne, and all the Turkes which were aboorde of the Galley, and priuily the ſaide Engliſhmen conueyed vnto the ſaide Chriſtian captiues, weapons for that purpoſe. And when they came into the maine Sea, towarde Conſtantinople (vpon the faithfull promiſe of the ſayde Chriſtian captiues) theſe foure Engliſhmen lept ſuddenly into the Croſſia, that is, into the middeſt of the Galley, where the canon lieth, and with their ſwordes drawne, did fight againſt all the foreſaid Turkes, and for want of helpe of the ſaide Chriſtian captiues, who falſly brake their promiſes, the ſaid Maſter Blonkets boy was killed, and the ſayde Iames Smith, and our Purſer Richard Burges, and the other Engliſhman, were taken and bound into chaines, to be hanged at their arriuall in Conſtantinople: and as the Lords will was, about two dayes after, paſſing through the gulfe of Venice, at an Iſland called Cephalonia, they met with two of the Duke of Venice his Gallies, which tooke that Galley, and killed the kings ſonne, and his mother, and all the Turkes that were there, in number 150. and they ſaued the Chriſtian captiues, and would haue killed the two Engliſhmen becauſe they were circumciſed, and become Turkes, had not the other Chriſtian captiues excuſed them, ſaying, that they were inforced to be Turkes, by the kings ſonne, and ſhewed the Venetians alſo, how they did enterpriſe at ſea to fight againſt all the Turks, and that their two fellowes were ſlaine in that fight. Then the Venetians ſaued them, and they, with all the reſidue of the ſaid captiues, had their liberties, which were in number 150. or thereabouts, and the ſaide Gallie, and all the Turkes treaſure was confiſcated to the vſe of the ſtate of Venice. And from thence our two Engliſhmen trauelled homeward by land, and in this meane time we had one more of our company, which died in Zante, and afterward the other eight ſhipped themſelues at Zante, in a ſhippe of the ſaid Marcus Segorus, which was bound for England: and before we departed thence, there arriued the Aſſenſion, and the George Bonauenture of London in Cephalonia, in a harbour there, called Arrogoſtoria, whoſe Merchants agreed with the Marchants of our ſhippe and ſo laden al the merchandiſe of our ſhippe into the ſaid ſhippe of London, who tooke vs eight in as paſſengers, and ſo we came home, and within two moneths after our arriuall at London, our ſaid Purſer Richard Burges, and his fellow came home alſo: for the which we are bound to praiſe Almightie God, during our liues, and as duetie bindeth vs, to pray for the preſeruation of our moſt gracious Queene, for the great care her Maieſtie had ouer vs, her poore Subiects, in ſeeking and procuring of our deliuerance aforeſaide: and alſo for her honourable priuie Counſell, and I eſpeciall for the proſperitie and good eſtate of the houſe of the late deceaſed, the right honourable the Earle of Bedford, whoſe honour I muſt confeſſe, moſt diligently at the ſuite of my father now departed, trauelled herein: for the which I reſt continually bounden to him, whoſe ſoule I doubt not, but is already in the heauens in ioy, with the Almightie, vnto which place he vouchſafe to bring vs all, that for our ſinnes ſuffered moſt vile and ſhamefull death vpon the Croſſe, there to liue perpetually world without ende, Amen.

Two Gallies of Venice tooke the king of Tripolie his galley, and killed the kings ſonne, and all the Turkes in it, and releaſed all the Chriſtians being in number 150.

Auguſtiſſime & potentiſſime Imperator, biennio iam peracto, ad Cæſaream veſtram Maieſtatem ſcripſimus, vt dilectus noſter famulus Guilielmus Harebornus, vir ornatiſſimus pro legato noſtro Conſtantinopoli, alijſque Muſulmanici imperij ditionibus, ſublimi veſtra authoritate reciperetur: ſimul etiam Angli ſubditi noſtri commercium & mercaturam, in omnibus illis prouincijs exerceant, non minus liberè, quàm Galli, Poloni, Veneti, Germani, cæterique veſtri confœderati, qui varias Orientis partes peragrant, operam nauantes, vt mutuis commercijs coniungatur Oriens cum Occidente.

Quæ priuilegia, cum noſtris ſubditis Anglis inuictiſſima veſtra Maieſtas literis & diplomate ſuo liberaliſſimè indulſerit, facere non potuimus, quin quas maximas animus noſter capere poteſt gratias, eo nomine ageremus: ſperantes fore, vt hæc inſtituta commerciorum ratio maximas vtilitates, & commoda vtrinque, tam in imperij veſtri ditiones, quàm regni noſtri prouincias ſecum adferat.

Id vt planè fiat, cùm nuper ſubditi noſtri nonnulli Tripoli in Barbaria & Argellæ ab eius loci incolis voluntatem veſtram fortè neſcientibus malè habiti fuerint, & immaniter diuexati, Cæſaream veſtram Maieſtatem beneuolè rogamus, vt per Legatum noſtrum eorum cauſam cognoſcas, & poſtremò earum prouinciarum proregibus ac præfectis imperes, vt noſtri liberè in illis locis, ſine vi aut iniuria deinceps verſari, & negotia gerere poſſint.

Et nos omni opera viciſſim ſtudebimus ea omnia præſtare, quæ Imperatoriæ veſtræ Maieſtati vllo pacto grata fore intelligemus: quam Deus vnicus mundi conditor optimus maximus diutiſſimè incolumem & florentem ſeruet. Datæ in palatio noſtro Londini, quinto die Menſis Septembris: anno IESV CHRISTI Seruatoris noſtri, 1584. Regni verò noſtri viceſſimo ſexto.

The ſame in Engliſh.

ELizabeth, by the grace of the moſt high God, and onely maker of heauen and earth, of England, France and Ireland Queene, and of the Chriſtian faith, againſt all the Idolaters and falſe profeſſors of the Name of CHRIST dwelling among the Chriſtians, moſt inuincible and puiſſant defender: to the moſt valiant and inuincible Prince, Zultan Murad Can, the moſt mightie ruler of the kingdome of Muſulman, and of the Eaſt Empire the onely and higheſt Monarch aboue all, health, and many happy and fortunate yeres, with great aboundance of the beſt things.

Moſt noble and puiſſant Emperour, about two yeeres nowe paſſed, wee wrote vnto your Imperiall Maieſtie, that our welbeloued ſeruant, William Hareborne, a man of great reputation and honour, might be receiued vnder your high authoritie, for our Ambaſſadour in Conſtantinople, and other places, vnder the obedience of your Empire of Muſulman: And alſo that the Engliſhmen, being our Subiects, might exerciſe entercourſe and marchandize in all thoſe Prouinces, no leſſe freely then the French, Polonians, Venetians, Germanes, and other your confederats, which trauelle through diuers of the Eaſt parts: endeuouring that by mutuall trafique, the Eaſt may be ioyned and knit to the Weſt.

Which priuileges, when as your moſt puiſſant Maieſtie, by your letters and vnder your diſpenſation moſt liberally and fauourably granted to our Subiects of England, wee could no leſſe doe, but in that reſpect giue you as great thankes, as our heart could conceiue, truſting that it will come to paſſe, that this order of trafique, ſo well ordeined, will bring with it ſelfe moſt great profits and commodities to both ſides, as well to the parties ſubiect to your Empire, as to the Prouinces of our kingdome. Which thing that it may be done in plaine and effectuall maner, whereas ſome of our Subiects of late at Tripolis in Barbarie, and at Argier, were by the inhabitants of thoſe places (being perhaps ignorant of your pleaſure) euill intreated and grieuouſly vexed, wee doe friendly and louingly deſire your Imperiall Maieſtie, that you will vnderſtand their cauſes by our Ambaſſadour, and afterward giue commaundement to the Lieutenants and Preſidents of thoſe Prouinces, that our people may henceforth freely, without any violence, or iniurie, trauelle, and do their buſineſſe in thoſe places.

And we againe with all endeuour, ſhall ſtudie to performe all thoſe things, which we ſhall in any wiſe vnderſtand to be acceptable to your Imperiall Maieſtie, which God, the onely maker of the world, moſt beſt and moſt great, long keepe in health, and flouriſhing. Giuen in our pallace at London, the fiſt day of the moneth of September, in the yeere of IESVS CHRIST our Sauiour, 1584. And of our raigne, the 26.

The Turkes letter to the King of Tripolis in Barbarie, commanding the reſtitution of an Engliſh ſhip, called the Ieſus, with the men, and goods, ſent from Conſtantinople, by Mahomet Beg, a Iuſtice of the Great Turkes, and an Engliſh Gentleman, called Maſter Edward Barton. Anno 1584.

HOnourable, and worthy Baſſa Romadan Beglerbeg, moſt wiſe and prudent Iudge of the Weſt Tripolis, wee wiſh the ende of all thy enterpriſes happie, and proſperous. By theſe our highneſſe letters, wee certifie thee, that the right honourable, William Hareborne, Ambaſſadour in our moſt famous Porch, for the moſt excellent Queenes Maieſtie of England, in perſon, and by letters hath certified our highneſſe, that a certaine ſhippe, with all her furniture, and artillerie, worth two thouſand duckets, arriuing in the port of Tripolis, and diſcharged of her lading and marchandize, paide our cuſtome according to order, and againe, the marchants laded their ſhippe with oyle, which by conſtraint they were inforced to buy of you, & hauing anſwered in like maner the cuſtome for the ſame, determined to depart: a Frenchman aſſiſtant to the Marchant, vnknowen to the Engliſhmen, caried away with him another Frenchman indebted to a certaine Moore in foure hundred duckets, and by force cauſed the Engliſhmen, and ſhippe to depart: who neither ſuſpecting fraude, nor deceite, hoiſed ſailes. In the meane time, this man, whoſe debter the Frenchman had ſtollen away, went to the Baſſa with the ſupplication, by whoſe meanes, and force of the Caſtle, the Engliſhmen were conſtrained to returne into the port, where the Frenchman, author of the euill, with the Maſter of the ſhip an Engliſhman, liſhman, innocent of the crime were hanged, and ſixe and twentie Engliſhmen caſt into priſon, of whom through famine, thirſt, and ſtinke of the priſon, eleuen died, and the reſt like to die. Further, it was ſignified to our Maieſtie alſo, that the marchandiſe and other goods, with the ſhippe, were worth 7600. duckets: which things if they be ſo, this is our commandement, which was granted and giuen by our Maieſtie, that the Engliſh ſhippe, and all the marchandize, and whatſoeuer elſe taken away bee wholy reſtored, and that the Engliſhmen be let goe free, and ſuffered to returne into their Countrey. Wherefore when this our commaundement ſhall come vnto thee, wee ſtraightly commaund, that the foreſaid buſineſſe be diligently looked vnto, and diſcharged. And if it be ſo, that a Frenchman, and no Engliſhman hath done this craft, and wickedneſſe vnknowen to the Engliſhmen, and as authour of the wickedneſſe is puniſhed, and that the Engliſhmen committed nothing againſt the peace and league, or their articles: alſo if they payd cuſtome according to order, it is againſt law, cuſtome of Countreys, and their priuilege, to hinder or hurt them. Neither is it meete, their ſhippe, marchandiſe, and all their goods taken, ſhould be withholden. Wee will therefore, that the Engliſh ſhippe, marchandize, and all other their goods, without exception, be reſtored to the Engliſhmen: alſo that the men bee let goe free, and if they will, let none hinder them, to returne peaceably into their Countrey: do not commit, that they another time complaine of this matter, and how this buſineſſe is diſpatched, certifie vs at our moſt famous porche.

A letter of Maſter VVilliam Hareborne, the Engliſh Ambaſſadour, Ligier in Conſtantinople, to the Baſſa Romadan, the Beglerbeg of Tripolis in Barbarie, for the reſtoring of an Engliſh ſhippe called the Ieſus, with the goods, and men, detained as ſlaues, Anno 1585.

MOlto magnifico Signor,

Noi ha ſtato ſignificato per diuerſe lettere di quanto ha paſſato circa di vna naue noſtra chiamata Ieſus, ſopra il quale in aginto di Ricciardo Skegs, vno de gli noſtri mercanti di eſſa gia morto, venina vn certo Franceſe per ſopra cargo, chiamato Romano Sonings, il quale per non eſſer ben portato ſecondo che doueua, volendo importar ſeco vn altro Franceſe debitore a certi voſtri ſenſa pagarcene, per giuſticia era appiccato col patron Ingleſe Andre Dier, che come ſimplice credendo al detto Franceſe, ſenza auedercene de la ſua ria malitia, non retornaua, quando da voſtra magnifica Signoria gli era mandato. La morte del detto triſto Franceſe approuiamo como coſa benfatta. Ma al contrario, doue lei ha confiſcato la detta naue e mercantia en eſſa, & fatto ſciaui li marinari, como coſa molto contraria a li priuilegij dal Gran Signor quattro anni paſſati conceſſi, & da noi confirmati di parte de la Sereniſſima Mageſta d'Ingilterra noſtra patrona, e molto contraria a la liga del detto Gran Signor, il quale eſſendo dal ſopra detto a pieno informato, noi ha conceduto il ſuo regale mandamento di reſtitutione, la qual mandiamo a voſtra magnifica Signoria col preſente portator Edoardo Barton, noſtro Secretario, & Mahumed Beg, droguemano di ſua porta excelſa, con altre lettere del excellentiſſimo Vizir, & inuictiſſimo capitan di mar: chiedendo, tanto di parte del Gran Signor, quanto di ſua Sereniſſima Mageſta di V. S. M. che gli huomini, oglij, naue col fornimento, danari, & tutti altri beni qualconque, da lei & per veſtro ordine da gli noſtri tolti ſiano reſi à queſto mio Secretario liberamente ſenza empacho alcuno, como il Gran Signor da ſua gratia noi ha conceduto, ſpecialmente per eſſer detti oglij comprati per ordine di ſua Sereniſſima Mageſtà, per prouiſione della Corte ſua. Il qual non facendo, proteſtiamo per queſta noſtra al incontra di eſſo tutti futuri danni che puono ſuccedere per queſta cagione, como authore di quelli, contrario à la Santa liga giurata de li duoi Rei, patroni noſtri, como per li priuilegij, che lei moſtrerà il noſtro, conſta: per obſeruatione de gli quali noi ſtiamo di fermo en queſta excelſa Porta. Et coſi reſponderete nel altro mondo al ſolo Iddio, & quà al Gran Signor queſto maſſimo peccato commeſſo da lei al incontra di tanti poueracchi, che per queſta crudeltà ſono in parte morti, in parte retenuti da eſſo en duro cattiuerio. Al contrario, piacendo lei euitar queſto incommodo & reſtarcene en gratia del Signor Iddio, & li noſtri patroni, amicheuolmente, (como conuien à par voſtro di moſtrarſi prudente gouernatore, & fidel ſeruitor al patrono) adimpirete queſta noſtra giuſtiſſima domanda, per poter reſultarni à grand honore & commodo per la tratta di marchantia, che faronno a laduenire li noſtri in quella voſtra prouincia. Li quali generalmente, tanto quelli, como tutti altri che nel mar riſcontrarete, ſiano, ſecondo che manda il Grand Signor, de voſtra Signoria magnifica amicheuolmente recolti & receuuti: Et noi non mancharemo al debito di ottimo amico en qualconche occurrenza voſtra, piacendo lei amicitia noſtra, como deſideramo. Il

Edoardo Barton & Mahumed Beg.

Signor Iddio lei conceda (adimpiendo queſta noſtra giuſta rechieſta, per cauar noi di piu futura fatica in queſto negocio, & lei di diſgratia) ogni vera felicitá, & ſupremo honore. Data in palazzo noſtro che fu da Rapamat appreſſo Pera di 15. di Genero 1585.

Il Ambaſſiatore de la Majeſta Sereniſſima d'Ingilterra, amico de voſtra Signoria magnifica, piacendo lei.

The ſame in Engliſh.

Right honourable Lord, it hath bene ſignified vnto vs by diuers letters, what hath fallen out, concerning a certaine ſhippe of ours, called the Ieſus, into which, for the helpe of Richard Skegs, one of our Marchants in the ſame, nowe deceaſed, there was admitted a certaine Frenchman called Romaine Sonnings, which for his ill behauiour, according to his deſerts, ſeeking to cary away with him another Frenchman, which was indebted to certaine of your people, without paying his creditours, was hanged by ſentence of iuſtice, together with Andrew Dier, the Maſter of the ſaid ſhip, who ſimply and without fraude, giuing credite to the ſaid Frenchman, without any knowledge of his euil fact, did not returne when hee was commaunded, by your honourable Lordſhip. The death of the ſaid lewde Frenchman we approoue as a thing well done, but contrarywiſe, whereas your Lordſhip hath confiſcated the ſaid ſhip with the goods therein, and hath made ſlaues of the Mariners, as a thing altogether contrary to the priuileges of the Grand Signior, granted foure yeeres ſince, and confirmed by vs on the behalfe of the moſt excellent the Queenes Maieſtie of England our Myſtreſſe, and altogether contrary to the league of the ſaide Grand Signior, who being fully informed of the aforeſaid cauſe, hath granted vnto vs his royall commandement of reſtitution, which we ſend vnto your honourable Lordſhip, by the preſent bearer Edward Barton our Secretarie, and Mahomet Beg, one of the Iuſtices of his ſtately Court, with other letters of the moſt excellent Admirall, and moſt valiant Captaine of the Sea, requiring your honourable Lordſhip, as well on the behalfe of the Grand Signior, as of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie my Myſtreſſe, that the men, oyles, ſhippe, furniture, money, and all other goods whatſoeuer, by your Lordſhip, and your order taken from our men, be reſtored vnto this my Secretary freely, without delay, as the Grand Signior of his goodneſſe hath graunted vnto vs, eſpecially in regard that the ſame oyles were bought by the commaundement of our Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, for the prouiſion of her Court. Which if you performe not, wee proteſt by theſe our leters againſt you, that you are the cauſe of all the inconueniences which may enſue vpon this occaſion, as the authour thereof, contrary to the holy league ſworne by both our Princes, as by the priuileges, which this our ſeruant will ſhewe you, may appeare. For the ſeeing of which league performed, wee remaine here as Ligier in this ſtately Court. And by this meanes you ſhall anſwere in another world vnto God alone, and in this world vnto the Grand Signior, for this hainous ſinne committed by you againſt ſo many poore ſoules, which by this your cruelty are in part dead, and in part detained by you in moſt miſerable captiuitie. Contrarywiſe, if it ſhall pleaſe you to auoyd this miſchiefe, and to remaine in the fauour of Almighty God, and of our Princes, you ſhall friendly fulfill this our iuſt demaund (as it behoueth you to ſhew your ſelfe a prudent Gouernour, and faithfull ſeruant vnto your Lord) and the ſame may turne to your great honour, and profite, by the trade of marchandize, which our men in time to come, may vſe in that gouernment of yours: which generally, as well thoſe poore men, as all others, which you ſhall meete at the ſea, ought to be according to the commandement of the Grand Signior, friendly entertained and receiued of your honourable Lordſhip, and we will not faile in the dueties of a ſpeciall friend, whenſoeuer you ſhal haue occaſion to vſe vs, as we deſire. Almighty God grant vnto your Lordſhip (in the fulfilling of this our iuſt requeſt, whereby wee may be deliuered from further trouble in this matter, and your ſelfe from further diſpleaſure) all true felicitie, and increaſe of honour.

The voyage of Maſter Henry Auſtell by Venice and thence to Raguſa ouer land, and ſo to Conſtantinople: and from thence by Moldauia, Polonia, Sileſia and Germanie to Hamburg, &c.

The 9. of Iune we tooke ſhipping at Harewich and the next day landed at the Ramekins in the Iſle of Walcheren with very ſtormy weather, and that night went to Middleburch in the ſame Iſland.

The twelft we tooke ſhipping for Holland, and the 13. we landed at Schiedam: and the ſame day went to Delft by boat, and ſo that night to the Hage.

The 17. we tooke ſhipping at Amſterdam, and the 18. we landed at Enckhuyſen.

The 19. we tooke ſhipping and by the Zuyderſee we paſſed that day the Vlie, and ſo into the maine ſea; And the next day we entred into the riuer of Hamburg called the Elbe.

The 21. we came to anker in the ſame riuer before a towne of the biſhop of Breme called Staden, where they pay a certaine toll, and ſpecially for wine, and ſo that night wee landed at Hamburg, where we ſtayde three dayes.

Hamburg.

The 24. wee departed from Hamburg in the company of Edward Pariſh Marchant, and that day wee baited at Wyntſon, and ſo ouer the heathes we left Lunenburg on the left hand, and trauailed all that night.

The 25. we met with Maſter Sanders vpon the heathes, and paſſed by a towne of the duke of Lunenborg called Geffherne, and from thence through many waters, wee lay that night within an Engliſh mile of Brunſwig.

Brunſwig.

The 27. we lay at Halberſtat, which is a great towne ſubiect to the biſhop of that towne.

Halberſtat.

The 28. we baited at Erinſleiben: and there wee entred into the duke of Saxon his countrey: and the ſame night we lay at a towne called Eiſleben, where Martine Luther was borne.

Eiſleben.

The 29. we paſſed by Mansfield, where there are many Copper mines: and ſo that night went to Neuburg vpon the riuer of Sala; and at that time there was a great faire.

Copper Mines.

The 30. we baited at a proper towne called Iena vpon the ſame riuer, and the ſame night wee lay at Cone vpon that riuer.

Iena.

The firſt of Iuly we baited at Salfeld: and the ſame day we entred firſt into the great woods of firre trees, and that night to Greuandal; The ſecond to dinner to Neuſtat.

Great woods of firre trees.

The 3. day to dinner at Bamberg: and before wee came to the towne wee paſſed the riuer of Mayne that runneth towards Arnfurt, and that night to Forchaim.

Bamberg.

The 4. we came to Nurenberg, and there ſtayed two dayes. The 6. to bed to Blayfield.

Nurenberg.

The 7. we paſſed without Weiſſenburg to dinner at Monhaim, and that night we paſſed the riuer of Danubius at Tonewertd, and ſo to bed to Nurendof.

The 8. we came to Augſpurg, otherwiſe called Auguſta, vpon the riuer of Lech.

Augſpurg.

The 9. we lay at Landsberg vpon the ſaid riuer, in the duke of Bauars countrey.

The 10. to dinner at Suanego, and that night to Hamber againſt the mountaines, where the ſmall copes be made.

The 11. to dinner to Parcberk,, & that night to Sefelt in the Archduke of Auſtria his countrey.

The 12. to dinner at Inſpruck, & that night to bed at Landeck, where there is a toll, and it is the place where Charles the fift and his brother Ferdinand did meet. And there is a table of braſſe with Latine letters in memorie thereof.

The 13. we paſſed by Stizen, and dined at Priſena, and ſo that night to Cluſen,

The 14. to dinner at Bolſan and to bed at Neumark, and by the way we paſſed the dangerous place, where ſo many murthers haue bene committed.

The 15. to dinner at Trent: That day we entred the borders of Italy, that night to Lenigo.

The borders of Italy.

The 16. to dinner at Grigno, where the laſt toll of the Emperour is: and ſo we came by Churſa, which is a ſtreight paſſage. And the keeper thereof is drawne vp by a cord into his holde. And that night we went to Capana to bed in the countrey of the Venetians.

The 17. to dinner at caſtle Franco: by the way we ſtayed at Taruiſo, and there tooke coche, and that night came to Meſtre to bed.

The 18. in the morning we came to Venice, and there we ſtayed 15. dayes. In which time the duke of Venice called Nicolas de Ponte died, and we ſaw his burial. The Senators were continually ſhut vp together, as the maner is, to chuſe a newe duke, which was not yet choſen when we departed from thence.

Venice.

The 2. of Auguſt at night wee did embarke our ſelues vpon the Frigate of Cattaro, an hauen neere Raguſa. The 3. we came to a towne in Iſtria called Citta noua.

The 4. we came to Parenzo, and ſo that night to Forcera of the biſhop.

The 5. we paſſed by Rouignio: and a litle beyond we met with 3. Galies of the Venetians: we paſſed in the ſight of Pola; and the ſame day paſſed the gulfe that parteth Iſtria from Dalmatia.

The 6. of Auguſt we came to Zara in Dalmatia, a ſtrong towne of the Venetians; and ſo that night to Sebenico, which ſtandeth in a maruellous goodly hauen, with a ſtrong caſtle at the entrie thereof.

The 7. we came to Lezina, and went not on ſhore, but trauelled all night.

The 8. we paſſed by a very wel ſeated town called Curzola, which ſtandeth in an iſland of that name. The 9. in the morning betimes we landed at Raguſa, and there ſtayed three daies, where we found many friendly gentlemen.

Raguſa.

The 11. being prouided of a Ianizarie we departed from Raguſa in the company of halfe a dozen Marchants of that towne: and within 6. miles we entred into the countrey of Seruia. So Seruia.

Chierniſa.

trauelling in barren and craggie mountaines for the ſpace of foure dayes, wee came by a ſmall Towne of the Turkes called Chierniſa, being the 14. of the moneth; and there wee parted from the Marchants.

Or, *Fochia.

The 16. we dined in a Cauarſara in a Towne called Focea, being then greatly infected with the plague.

The 17. we lay by a Towne called Taſlizea.

Nouibazar.

The 20. we came to Nouibazar.

The 21. we parted frõ thence, trauailing ſtil in a countrey very ill inhabited, & lying in yͤ fields.

Or, Niſſa.

The 22. we paſſed within ſight of Nicea.

The 23. we paſſed in ſight of another towne called Circui: and about thoſe places wee began to leaue the mountaines, and to enter into a very faire and fertile countrey, but as euill inhabited as the other, or worſe.

Sophia.

The 27. we came to Sophia, where wee ſtayed three dayes, being our Ianizaries home: and by good chance we lay in a Marchants houſe of Raguſa, that came in company with vs from Nouibazar; and alſo wee had in company, euer ſince wee came from Focea, a Turke which was a very good fellow, and he kept company with vs till we came very neere Conſtantinople.

Philippopoli.

The firſt of September we came to Philippopoli, which ſeemeth to be an ancient towne, and ſtandeth vpon the riuer of Stanuch.

Andrinopolis.

The 4. we came to Andrinopoli, a very great and ancient towne, which ſtandeth in a very large and champion countrey, and there the great Turks mother doth lye, being a place, where the Emperours of the Turkes were wont to lye very much.

The 5. we lay in one of the great Cauarzaras, that were built by Mahomet Baſſha with ſo many goodly commodities.

The 6. we lay in another of them.

Siliueri.

The 8. we came to Siliueri, which by report was the laſt towne that remained Chriſtian.

Conſtantinople.

The 9. of September wee arriued at the great and moſt ſtately Citie of Conſtantinople, which for the ſituation and proude ſeate thereof, for the beautifull and commodious hauens, and for the great and ſumptuous buildings of their Temples, which they call Moſchea, is to be preferred before all the Cities of Europe. And there the Emperour of the Turkes then liuing, whoſe name was Amurat, kept his Court and reſidence, in a marueilous goodly place, with diuers gardens and houſes of pleaſure, which is at the leaſt two Engliſh miles in compaſſe, and the three parts thereof ioyne vpon the ſea: and on the Northeaſt part of the Citie on the other ſide of the water ouer againſt the Citie is the Towne of Pera, where the moſt part of the Chriſtians do lye. And there alſo wee did lye. And on the North part of the ſaide Towne is the Arſenal, where the Galies are built and doe remaine: And on the Southſide is all the Ordinance, artilerie, and houſes of munition. Note that by the way as wee came from Raguſa to Conſtantinople, wee left on our right hand the Countreys of Albania, and Macedonia, and on the left hande the countreys of Boſnia, Bulgaria, and the riuer of Danubius.

The 14. of September was the Turkes Beyram, that is, one of their chiefeſt feaſtes.

Pompeys piller.

The 15. we went to the blacke Sea called Pontus Euxinus, and there vpon a rocke we ſawe a piller of white Marble that was ſet vp by Pompeius: and from thence wee paſſed to the other ſide of the water, vpon the ſhore of Aſia and there we dined.

The 25. we departed from Conſtantinople.

The 29. we came to an ancient Towne called Cherchiſea, that is to ſay, fourtie Churches, which in the olde time was a very great City, now full of ſcattered buildings.

Prouaz.
Varna.

The 5. of October wee came to Prouaz, one dayes iourney diſtant from Varna vpon the Blacke Sea.

The 9. we came to Saxi vpon the riuer of Danubius.

Or, Moldania.
Palſin vpon the riuer of Prut.
Yas.

The 10. we paſſed the ſaid riuer which in that place is about a mile ouer, and then we entred into the countrey of *Bogdania: they are Chriſtians but ſubiects to the Turke.

The 12. we came to Palſin vpon the riuer Prut.

The 14. wee came to Yas the principall Towne of Bogdania, where Peter the Vayuoda prince of that Countrey keepeth his reſidence, of whom wee receiued great courteſie, and of the gentlemen of his Court: And he cauſed vs to be ſafe conducted through his ſaid Countrey, and conueyed without coſte.

The 17. we came to Stepanitze.

Sotſchen.

The 19. we came to Zotſchen, which is the laſt towne of Bogdania vpon the riuer of Nieſter, that parteth the ſaid countrey from Podolia.

Nyeſter a riuer.
Camyenets.

The 20. we paſſed the riuer of Nyeſter and came to Camyenetz in the countrey of Podolia, ſubiect to the king of Poland: this is one of the ſtrongeſt Townes by nature and ſituation that can be ſeene.

The 21. we came to Skala.

Skala.

The 22. to Slothone, or Sloczow.

The 24. to Leopolis which is in Ruſſia alba, and ſo is the moſt part of the countrey betwixt Camyenetz and it. And it is a towne very well built, well gouerned, full of traſique and plentifull: and there we ſtayed fiue dayes.

Leopolis, or Leunpurg.

The 30. we baited at Grodecz, and that night at Vilna.

Grodecz. Vilna.

The 31. we dined at Moſtiska, and that night at Rodmena.

The firſt of Nouember in the morning before day wee paſſed without the Towne of Iaroslaw, where they ſay is one of the greateſt faires in all Poland, and chiefly of horſes, and that night to Roſdnoska.

Iaroslaw.

The ſecond to dinner at Lanczut, at night to Retsbou.

Lanczut.

The thirde to Sendxizow, at night to Tarnow, and that night wee mette with the Palatine Laski.

The fourth to Vonuez, and that night to Brytska.

The fifth to Kuhena.

The 6. to Cracouia the principall Citie of all Poland: at which time the King was gone to Lituania: for he doeth make his reſidence one yeere in Poland, and the other in Lituania. Cracouia ſtandeth on the riuer of Viſtula.

Cracouia.

The 9. wee departed from Cracouia, and that night wee came to a village hard by a Towne called Ilkuſch, where the leade Mines are.

Leade Mines.

The 10. wee paſſed by a Towne called Slawkow: where there are alſo leade Mines, and baited that day at Bendzin, which is the laſt towne of Poland towards Sileſia; and there is a toll.

Bendzin.

Note that all the Countreys of Poland, Ruſſia alba, Podolia, Bogdania, and diuers other Countreys adioyning vnto them, doe conſume no other ſalt but ſuch as is digged in Sorſtyn mountaine neere to Cracouia which is as hard as any ſtone; it is very good, and goeth further then any other ſalt. That night we lay at Bitom, which is the firſt Towne of Sileſia.

Salt digged out of mountaines in Poland.
Bitom.

The 12. we paſſed by a great towne called Strelitz, and that night we lay at Oppelen vpon the riuer of Odera.

Oppelen.

The 13. we paſſed by Schurgaſſe, and that night wee lay without the towne of Brigk: for wee could not bee ſuffered to come in by reaſon of the plague which was in thoſe partes in diuers Townes.

Schurgaſſe.
Brigk.

The 14. wee paſſed by Olaw, and that night wee came to the Citie of Breſlaw, which is a faire towne, great, well built and well ſeated vpon the riuer of Odera.

Breſlaw.

The 16. we baited at Neumargt.

The 17. wee paſſed by Lignizt and by Hayn, and that night to Buntzel.

The 18. wee paſſed by Naumburg through Gorlitz vpon the riuer of Neiſſ, and that night lay without Reichenbach.

The 19. we paſſed by Baudzen and Camnitz, and that night to Renſperg.

The 20. we paſſed by Hayn, by Strelen, where we ſhould haue paſſed the riuer of Elbe, but the boate was not there, ſo that night we lay at a towne called Mulberg.

The 21. we paſſed the ſaid riuer, wee went by Belgern, by Torga, by Dumitch; and at night to Bretſch.

The 22. wee paſſed the Elbe againe at Wittenberg, which is a very ſtrong towne, with a good Vniuerſitie: and that day we paſſed by Coſwig.

The 23. wee paſſed through Zerbſt in the morning, and that night to Magdeburg, a very ſtrong Towne, and well gouerned as wee did heare. The moſt part of the Countrey, after wee were come one dayes iourney on this ſide Breſlawe to this place, belongeth to the Duke of Saxon.

Magdeburg.

The 24. wee paſſed by a caſtle of the Marques of Brandenburg called Wolmerſtat, and that night we lay at Garleben.

The 25. wee lay at Soltwedel.

The 26. at Berg.

The 27. we baited at Lunenborg, that night we lay at Winſon.

Lunenburg.

The 28. we came to Hamborg, and there ſtayed one weeke.

Hamborg.

The 5. of December wee departed from Hamborg, and paſſed the Elbe by boate being much froſen, and from the riuer went on foote to Boxtehoede, being a long Dutch mile off, and there we lay; and from thence paſſed ouer land to Emden.

Chierniſa.

trauelling in barren and craggie mountaines for the ſpace of foure dayes, wee came by a ſmall Towne of the Turkes called Chierniſa, being the 14. of the moneth; and there wee parted from the Marchants.

Or, *Fochia.

The 16. we dined in a Cauarſara in a Towne called Focea, being then greatly infected with the plague.

The 17. we lay by a Towne called Taſlizea.

Nouibazar.

The 20. we came to Nouibazar.

The 21. we parted frō thence, trauailing ſtil in a countrey very ill inhabited, & lying in yͤ fields.

Or, Niſſa.

The 22. we paſſed within ſight of Nicea.

The 23. we paſſed in ſight of another towne called Circui: and about thoſe places wee began to leaue the mountaines, and to enter into a very faire and fertile countrey, but as euill inhabited as the other, or worſe.

Sophia.

The 27. we came to Sophia, where wee ſtayed three dayes, being our Ianizaries home: and by good chance we lay in a Marchants houſe of Raguſa, that came in company with vs from Nouibazar; and alſo wee had in company, euer ſince wee came from Focea, a Turke which was a very good fellow, and he kept company with vs till we came very neere Conſtantinople.

Philippopoli.

The firſt of September we came to Philippopoli, which ſeemeth to be an ancient towne, and ſtandeth vpon the riuer of Stanuch.

Andrinopolis.

The 4. we came to Andrinopoli, a very great and ancient towne, which ſtandeth in a very large and champion countrey, and there the great Turks mother doth lye, being a place, where the Emperours of the Turkes were wont to lye very much.

The 5. we lay in one of the great Cauarzaras, that were built by Mahomet Baſſha with ſo many goodly commodities.

The 6. we lay in another of them.

Siliueri.

The 8. we came to Siliueri, which by report was the laſt towne that remained Chriſtian.

Conſtantinople.

The 9. of September wee arriued at the great and moſt ſtately Citie of Conſtantinople, which for the ſituation and proude ſeate thereof, for the beautifull and commodious hauens, and for the great and ſumptuous buildings of their Temples, which they call Moſchea, is to be preferred before all the Cities of Europe. And there the Emperour of the Turkes then liuing, whoſe name was Amurat, kept his Court and reſidence, in a maruellous goodly place, with diuers gardens and houſes of pleaſure, which is at the leaſt two Engliſh miles in compaſſe, and the three parts thereof ioyne vpon the ſea: and on the Northeaſt part of the Citie on the other ſide of the water ouer againſt the Citie is the Towne of Pera, where the moſt part of the Chriſtians do lye. And there alſo wee did lye. And on the North part of the ſaide Towne is the Arſenal, where the Galies are built and doe remaine: And on the Southſide is all the Ordinance, artilerie, and houſes of munition. Note that by the way as wee came from Raguſa to Conſtantinople, wee left on our right hand the Countreys of Albania, and Macedonia, and on the left hande the countreys of Boſnia, Bulgaria, and the riuer of Danubius.

The 14. of September was the Turkes Beyram, that is, one of their chiefeſt feaſtes.

Pompeys piller.

The 15. we went to the blacke Sea called Pontus Euxinus, and there vpon a rocke we ſawe a piller of white Marble that was ſet vp by Pompeius: and from thence wee paſſed to the other ſide of the water, vpon the ſhore of Aſia and there we dined.

The 25. we departed from Conſtantinople.

The 29. we came to an ancient Towne called Cherchiſes, that is to ſay, fourtie Churches, which in the olde time was a very great City, now full of ſcattered buildings.

Prouaz.
Varna.

The 5. of October wee came to Prouaz, one dayes iourney diſtant from Varna vpon the Blacke Sea.

The 9. we came to Saxi vpon the riuer of Danubius.

Or, Moldania.
Palſin vpon the riuer of Prut.
Yas.

The 10. we paſſed the ſaid riuer which in that place is about a mile ouer, and then we entred into the countrey of *Bogdania: they are Chriſtians but ſubiects to the Turke.

The 12. we came to Palſin vpon the riuer Prut.

The 14. wee came to Yas the principall Towne of Bogdania, where Peter the Vayuoda prince of that Countrey keepeth his reſidence, of whom wee receiued great courteſie, and of the gentlemen of his Court: And he cauſed vs to be ſafe conducted through his ſaid Countrey, and conueyed without coſte.

The 17. we came to Stepanitze.

Zotſchen.

The 19. we came to Zotſchen, which is the laſt towne of Bogdania vpon the riuer of Nieſter, that parteth the ſaid countrey from Podolia.

Nyeſter a riuer.
Camyenets.

The 20. we paſſed the riuer of Nyeſter and came to Camyenets in the countrey of Podolia, ſubiect to the king of Poland: this is one of the ſtrongeſt Townes by nature and ſituation that can be ſeene.

The 21. we came to Skala.

Skala.

The 22. to Slothone, or Sloczow.

The 24. to Leopolis which is in Ruſſia alba, and ſo is the moſt part of the countrey betwixt Camyenetz and it. And it is a towne very well built, well gouerned, full of traſique and plentifull: and there we ſtayed fiue dayes.

Leopolis, or Leunpurg.

The 30. we baited at Grodecz, and that night at Vilna.

Grodecz. Vilna.

The 31. we dined at Moſtiska, and that night at Rodmena.

The firſt of Nouember in the morning before day wee paſſed without the Towne of Iaroſlaw, where they ſay is one of the greateſt faires in all Poland, and chiefly of horſes, and that night to Roſdnoska.

Iaroſlaw.

The ſecond to dinner at Lanczut, at night to Retsbou.

Lanczut.

The thirde to Sendxizow, at night to Tarnow, and that night wee mette with the Palatine Laski.

The fourth to Vonuez, and that night to Brytska.

The fifth to Kuhena.

The 6. to Cracouia the principall Citie of all Poland: at which time the King was gone to Lituania: for he doeth make his reſidence one yeere in Poland, and the other in Lituania. Cracouia ſtandeth on the riuer of Viſtula.

Gracouia.

The 9. wee departed from Cracouia, and that night wee came to a village hard by a Towne called Ilkuſch, where the leade Mines are.

Leade Mines.

The 10. wee paſſed by a Towne called Slawkow: where there are alſo leade Mines, and baited that day at Bendzin, which is the laſt towne of Poland towards Sileſia; and there is a toll.

Bendzin.

Note that all the Countreys of Poland, Ruſſia alba, Podolia, Bogdania, and diuers other Countreys adioyning vnto them, doe conſume no other ſalt but ſuch as is digged in Sorſtyn mountaine neere to Cracouia which is as hard as any ſtone; it is very good, and goeth further then any other ſalt. That night we lay at Bitom, which is the firſt Towne of Sileſia.

Salt digged out of mountaines in Poland.

Bitom.

The 12. we paſſed by a great towne called Strelitz, and that night we lay at Oppelen vpon the riuer of Odera.

Oppelen.

The 13. we paſſed by Schurgaſſe, and that night wee lay without the towne of Brigk: for wee could not bee ſuffered to come in by reaſon of the plague which was in thoſe partes in diuers Townes.

Schurgaſſe. Brigk.

The 14. wee paſſed by Olaw, and that night wee came to the Citie of Breſlaw, which is a faire towne, great, well built and well ſeated vpon the riuer of Odera.

Breſlaw.

The 16. we baited at Neumargt.

The 17. wee paſſed by Lignitz and by Hayn, and that night to Buntzel.

The 18. wee paſſed by Naumburg through Gorlitz vpon the riuer of Neiſſ, and that night lay without Reichenbach.

The 19. we paſſed by Baudzen and Cannitz, and that night to Renſperg.

The 20. we paſſed by Hayn, by Strelen, where we ſhould haue paſſed the riuer of Elbe, but the boate was not there, ſo that night we lay at a towne called Mulberg.

The 21. we paſſed the ſaid riuer, wee went by Belgern, by Torga, by Dumitch; and at night to Bretſch.

The 22. wee paſſed the Elbe againe at Wittenberg, which is a very ſtrong towne, with a good Vniuerſitie: and that day we paſſed by Coſwig.

The 23. wee paſſed through Zerbſt in the morning, and that night to Magdeburg, a very ſtrong Towne, and well gouerned as wee did heare. The moſt part of the Countrey, after wee were come one dayes iourney on this ſide Breſlawe to this place, belongeth to the Duke of Saxon.

Magdeburg.

The 24. wee paſſed by a caſtle of the Marques of Brandenburg called Wolmerſtat, and that night we lay at Garleben.

The 25. wee lay at Soltwedel.

The 26. at Berg.

The 27. we baited at Lunenborg, that night we lay at Winſon.

Lunenburg.

The 28. we came to Hamborg, and there ſtayed one weeke.

Hamburg.

The 5. of December wee departed from Hamborg, and paſſed the Elbe by boate being much froſen, and from the riuer went on foote to Boxtehoede, being a long Dutch mile off, and there we lay; and from thence paſſed ouer land to Emden.

Thence hauing paſſed through Friſeland and Holland, the 25. being Chriſtmas day in the morning we came to Delft: where wee found the right honourable the Earle of Leiceſter with a goodly company of Lords, knights, gentlemen, and ſouldiers.

The 28. at night to Roterodam.

The 29. to the Briel, and there ſtayed eight dayes for paſſage.

The fifth of Ianuary we tooke ſhipping.

The 7. we landed at Graueſend, and ſo that night at London with the helpe of almightie God.

The Turkes paſſeport or ſafeconduct for Captaine Auſtell, and Iacomo Manuchio.

KNow thou which art Voyuoda of Bogdania, & Valachia, & other our officers abiding and dwelling on the way by which men commonly paſſe into Bogdania, and Valachia, that the Embaſſador of England hauing two Engliſh gentlemen deſirous to depart for England, the one named Henry Auſtel, and the other Iacomo de Manuchio, requeſted our highneſſe letters of Safeconduct to paſſe through our dominions with one ſeruant to attende on them. Wherefore wee ſtraightly charge you and all other our ſeruants by whom they ſhall paſſe, that hauing receiued this our commandement, you haue diligent care and regard that they may haue prouided for them in this their iourney (for their money) all ſuch neceſſary prouiſion as ſhalbe neceſſary for themſelues and their horſes, in ſuch ſort as they may haue no cauſe hereafter to complaine of you. And if by chaunce they come vnto any place, where they ſhal ſtand in feare either of their perſons or goods, that then you carefully cauſe them to bee guarded with your men, and to be conducted through all ſuſpected places, with ſufficient company; But haue great regard that they conuey not out of our countrey any of our ſeruiceable horſes. Obey our commandement, and giue credite to this our Seale.

A Paſſeport of the Earle of Leiceſter for Thomas Forſter gentleman trauailing to Conſtantinople.

Cùm lator præſentium Thomas Forſter nobilis Anglus neceſſarijs de cauſis hinc Conſtantinopolim profecturus ſit, & inde ad nos quanta poteſt celeritate reuerſurus: petimus ab omnibus & ſingulis Regibus, principibus, nobilibus, magiſtratibus, & alijs, mandent & permittant dicto Thomæ cum duobus famulis liberum tranſitum per eorum ditiones & territoria ſine detentione aut impedimento iniuſto, & prouideri ſibi de neceſſarijs iuſtum precium reddenti, ac aliter conuenienter & humaniter tractari, vt occaſiones eius eundi & redeundi requirent: Sicut nos Maieſtates, Serenitates, Celſitudines, & dominationes veſtræ paratos inuenietis, vt veſtratibus in ſimilibus caſibus gratum ſimiliter faciamus.

Datum in caſtris noſtris Duisburgi, decimo die Septembris, anno 1586. ſtylo veteri.

A deſcription of the yeerely voyage or pilgrimage of the Mahumitans, Turkes and Moores vnto Mecca in Arabia.

Of the Citie of Alexandria.

ALexandria the moſt ancient citie in Africa ſituated by the ſeaſide containeth ſeuen miles in circuite, and is enuironed with two walles one neere to the other with high towers, but the walles within be farre higher then thoſe without, with a great ditch round about the ſame: yet is not this Citie very ſtrong by reaſon of the great antiquitie, being almoſt halfe deſtroyed and ruinated. The greatneſſe of this Citie is ſuch, that if it were of double habitation, as it is compaſſed with a double wall, it might be truely ſaid, that there were two Alexandrias one builded vpon another, becauſe vnder the foundations of the ſaide City are great habitations, and incredible huge pillers. True it is, that this part underneath remaineth at this day inhabitable, becauſe of the corrupt aire, as alſo for that by time, which conſumeth all things, it is greatly ruinated. It might well be ſayd, that the founder hereof, as he was worthy in all his enterpriſes, ſo likewiſe in building hereof he did a worke worthy of himſelfe, naming it after his owne name. This Citie hath one defect, for it is ſubiect to an euill ayre, which onely proceedeth of that hollowneſſe vnderneath, out of the which iſſueth infinite moiſture: and that this is true the ayre without doth euidently teſtifie, which is more ſubtile and holeſome then that beneath. The waters hereof be ſalt, by reaſon that the ſoile of it ſelfe is likewiſe ſo. And therefore the inhabitants, at ſuch time as the riuer Nilus floweth, are accuſtomed to open a great ditch, the head whereof extendeth into the ſaid riuer, and from thence they conueigh the ſame within halfe a mile of Alexandria, and ſo conſequently by meanes of conduct-pipes the water commeth vnto the ceſternes of Alexandria, which being full ſerue the citie from one inundation to another. Within the citie is a Pyramide mentioned of in Hiſtories, but not of great importance. Without the citie is La colonna di Pompeio, or the pillar of Pompey, being of ſuch heighe and thickneſſe, that it is ſuppoſed there is not the like in the whole world beſides. Within the citie there is nothing of importance ſaue a litle caſtle which is guarded with 60 Ianizaries. Alexandria hath three portes, one towardes Roſſetto, another to the land ward, & the third to the ſea ward, which is called Babelbar, without which appeareth a broad Iland called Gheſira in the Moores tongue, which is not wholy an Iland, becauſe a litle point or corner thereof toucheth the firme lande, and therefore may be called Peninſula, that is to ſay, almoſt an Iland. Hereupon are builded many houſes of the Iewes, in reſpect of the aire. This Peninſula is ſituate betweene two very good ports, one of them being much more ſafe then the other, called The old port, into the which only the veſſels of Barbarie, and the ſixe Gallies of the Grand Signior deputed for the guard of Alexandria doe enter. And this port hath vpon the right hand at the mouth or enterance thereof a caſtle of ſmall importance, and guarded but with fifteene men or thereabouts. On the other ſide of this Iland is the other called The new port, which name is not vnfitly giuen vnto it, for that in all mens iudgement in times paſt there hath not beene water there, becauſe in the midſt of this port, where the water is very deepe, there are diſcouered and found great ſepulchres and other buildings, out of the which are dayly digged with engines Iaſpar and Porphyrie ſtones of great value, of the which great ſtore are ſent to Conſtantinople for the ornament of the Meſquitas or Turkiſh Temples, and of other buildings of the Grand Signior. Into this port enter all ſuch veſſels as traffique to this place. This port hath on ech ſide a caſtle, whereof that vpon the Peninſula is called Faraone, vpon the toppe whereof euery night there is a light ſet in a great lanterne for direction of the ſhips, and for the guard thereof are appointed 200 Ianizaries: the other on the other ſide is but a litle caſtle kept by 18 men. It is certaine, that this hauen of Alexandria is one of the chiefeſt hauens in the world: for hither come to traffique people of euery Nation, and all ſorts of veſſels which goe round about the citie. It is more inhabited by ſtrangers, marchants, and Chriſtians, then by men of the countrey which are but a few in number. Within the citie are fiue Fontechi, that is to ſay, one of the Frenchmen, where the Conſul is reſident, & this is the faireſt and moſt commodious of all the reſt. Of the other foure, two belong to the Venetians, one to the Raguſeans, and the fourth to the Genoueſes. And all ſtrangers which come to traffique there, except the Venetians, are vnder the French Conſull. It is alſo to be vnderſtood, that all the Chriſtians dwell within their Fontechi, and euery euening at the going downe of the ſunne, they which are appointed for that office goe about and ſhut all the gates of the ſaide Fontechi outward, and the Chriſtians ſhut the ſame within: and ſo likewiſe they doe on the Friday (which is the Moores and the Turkes Sabboth) till their deuotions be expired. And by this meanes all parties are ſecure and voide of feare: for in ſo doing the Chriſtians may ſleepe quietly and not feare robbing, and the Moores neede not doubt whiles they ſleepe or pray, that the Chriſtians ſhould make any tumult, as in times paſt hath happened.

Fontecho ſignifieth an houſe of trafique, as the Stilyard.

Of the coaſt of Alexandria.

ON the ſide towardes Barbarie along the ſea-coaſt for a great ſpace there is founde neither hold, nor any thing worthy of mention: but on the other ſide towards Syria 13 miles from Alexandria ſtandeth a litle caſtle called Bichier kept by fiftie Turkes, which caſtle is very olde and weake, and hath a port which in times paſt was good, but at this preſent is vtterly decayed and full of ſand, ſo that the veſſels which come thither dare not come neere the ſhoare, but ride far off into the ſea. Fortie miles further is Roſſetto, which is a litle towne without walles, and is ſituate vpon the banke of Nilus three miles from the ſea, at which place many times they build ſhips and other veſſels, for gouernement whereof is appointed a Saniacbey, without any other guard:

Bichier.

guard: it is a place of traffique, and the inhabitants are very rich, but naughtie varlets and traytours. Further downe along the ſea-ſide and the riuer banke is another litle caſtle like vnto the aboueſayde, and becauſe the Moores beleeue, that Mecca will in ſhort time be conquered by the Chriſtians, they holde opinion, that the ſame being loſt ſhall be renued in this place of Roſſetto, namely, that all their prayers, vowes, and pilgrimages ſhall be tranſported to Roſſetto, as the religious order of Saint Iohn of the Rhodes is tranſlated thence to Malta. Further forwarde thirtie miles ſtandes another caſtle of ſmall importance called Brulles, kept continually by fourtie Turkes, which hath a good and ſecure port, in forme like to a very great lake or ponde, wherein is taken great quantitie of fiſh, which they ſale, and the marchants of Candie and Cyprus come thither to lade the ſame, and it is greatly eſteemed, eſpecially of the Candiots, who hauing great abundance of wine aduenture abroad to ſeeke meate fitte for the taſte of the ſayd wine. Diſtant from Brulles fiue and thirtie miles there is another caſtle like vnto the aboueſayd kept by an Aga with fourtie men or thereabout. More within the lande by the riuers ſide is Damiata an auncient citie enuironed with walles contayning fiue miles in circuit, and but of ſmall ſtrength. For the gouernement of this place is a Sanjaco with all his houſholde and no other companie. This citie is very large, delightfull, and pleaſant, abounding with gardens and faire fountaines. Other fortie miles further is Larma, a caſtle of very ſmall importance, and kept as other with fortie Turkes vnder an Aga. In this place is no port, but a roade very daungerous, and without other habitation. Paſſing this place we enter Iudęa. But becauſe our intent is to reaſon ſimply of the voyage to Mecca, we will proceede no further this way, but returning to our firſt way, let it ſuffice to ſay, that from Alexandria to Cairo are two hundred miles, in which way I finde nothing worthie of memorie.

Of the mightie Citie of Cairo.

Cairo containeth in circuit eighteene miles, being ſo inhabited and repleniſhed with people, that almoſt it cannot receiue more; and therefore they haue begunne to builde newe houſes without the citie and about the walles. In Cairo are people of all Nations, as Chriſtians, Armenians, Abexins, Turkes, Moores, Iewes, Indians, Medians, Perſians, Arabians, and other ſortes of people, which reſort thither by reaſon of the great traffique. This citie is gouerned by a Baſha, which miniſtreth iuſtice, together with the Cadie throughout the whole kingdome. Alſo there are two and twentie Saniackes, whoſe office is onely to ouerſee and guarde the kingdome for euery good reſpect. There are alſo ſeuen thouſand Turkes in pay, to wit, three thouſand Ianizaries, and foure thouſand horſemen: The reſt of the people in Cairo are for the moſt part marchants which goe and come; and the remnant are Moores and other baſe people. About two miles from Cairo there is another little Cairo called The olde Cairo, which containeth in circuit litle more then tenne miles, and the better halfe is not inhabited, but deſtroyed, whereof I neede not make any other mention. The new Cairo anſwereth euery yeere in tribute to the grand Signior, 600000 ducates of golde, neat and free of all charges growing on the ſame, which mony is ſent to Conſtantinople, about the fine of September, by the way of Aleppo, alwayes by lande, vnder the cuſtodie of three hundred horſemen, and two hundred Ianizaries footmen. The citie of Cairo is adorned with many faire Meſquitas rich, great, and of goodly and gorgeous building, among which are fiue principall. The firſt is called Moraſtane, that is to ſay, The hoſpitall, which hath of rent fiue hundred ducats of golde euery day left vnto it by a king of Damaſco from auncient times; which king hauing conquered Cairo, for the ſpace of fiue dayes continually put the people thereof to the ſword, and in the end repenting him of ſo great manſlaughter, cauſed this crueltie to ceaſe, and to obtaine remiſſion for his ſinne committed, cauſed this hoſpitall to be built, enriching it as is aboueſaid. The ſecond famous monument of Cairo is called Neffiſa, of one Neffiſa buried there, who was a Dame of honour, and mooued by luſt, yeelded her body voluntarily without rewarde, to any that required the ſame, and ſayde ſhe beſtowed this almes for the loue of her Prophet Mahomet, and therefore at this day they adore her, reuerence her, and finally haue canonized her for a Saint, affirming that ſhee did many miracles. The third is called Zauia della Innachari, who was one of the foure Doctors in the law. The fourth is called Imamſciafij, where is buried Sciafij the ſecond Doctor of this law. Of the other two Doctors one is buried in Damaſco, the other in Aleppo. The fift & laſt famous monument is Giamalazar, that is, the houſe of Lazarus: and this 1566. is the generall Uniuerſity of the whole kingome of Egypt. In this place Anno 1566 in the moneth of Ianuary by miſfortune of fire were burned nine thouſand bookes of great value, as well for that they were written by hand, as alſo wrought ſo richly with golde, that they were worth 300 and 400 ducats a piece, one with another. And becauſe it could neuer be knowen yet how this fire beganne, they haue and doe holde the ſame for a moſt ſiniſter augurie, and an euident and manifeſt ſigne of their vtter ruine. The houſes of Cairo without are very faire, & within the greater number richly adorned with hangings wrought with golde. Euery perſon which reſorteth to this place for traffiques ſake, is bound to pay halfe a duckat, except the gentlemen Venetians, Siotes, and Rhaguſeans, becauſe they are tributarie to the Grand Signior. Cairo is diſtant from the riuer Nilus a mile and more, being ſituate on a plaine, ſaue that on the one ſide it hath a faire little hill, on the toppe whereof ſtands a faire caſtle, but not ſtrong, for that it may be battered on euery ſide, but very rich & large, compaſſed about with faire gardens into the which they conueigh water for their neceſſitie out of Nilus, with certaine wheeles & other like engines. This magnificent citie is adorned with very fruitfull gardens both pleaſant and commodious, with great plenty of pondes to water the ſame. Notwithſtanding the great pleaſures of Cairo are in the moneth of Auguſt, when by meanes of the great raine in Ethiopia the riuer Nilus ouerfloweth and watereth all the countrey, and then they open the mouth of a great ditch, which extendeth into the riuer, and paſſeth through the midſt of the citie, and entring there are innumerable barkes rowing too and fro laden with gallant girles and beautifull dames, which with ſinging, eating, drinking and feaſting, take their ſolace. The women of this countrey are moſt beautifull, and goe in rich attire bedecked with gold, pretious ſtones, and iewels of great value, but chiefely perfumed with odours, and are very libidinous, and the men likewiſe, but foule and hard fauoured. The ſoile is very fertile and abundant, the fleſh fat which they ſell without bones, their candles they make of the marowe of cattell, becauſe the Moores eate the tallow. They vſe alſo certaine litle furnaces made of purpoſe, vnder the which they make fire, putting into the furnace foure or fiue hundred egges, and the ſaid fire they nouriſh by litle and litle, vntill the chickens be hatched, which after they be hatched, and become ſomewhat bigger, they ſell them by meaſure in ſuch ſort, as we ſell and meaſure nuts and cheſtnuts and ſuch like.

The deſcription of Cairo.

Of certaine notable monuments without the citie of Cairo.

WIthout the Citie, ſixe miles higher into the land, are to be ſeene neere vnto the riuer diuerſe Piramides, among which are three maruellous great, and very artificially wrought. Out of one of theſe are dayly digged the bodies of auncient men, not rotten but all whole, the cauſe whereof is the qualitie of the Egyptian ſoile, which will not conſume the fleſh of man, but rather dry and harden the ſame, and ſo alwayes conſerueth it. And theſe dead bodies are the Mummie which the Phiſicians and Apothecaries doe againſt our willes make vs to ſwallow. Alſo by digging in theſe Pyramides oftentimes are found certaine Idoles or Images of golde, ſiluer, and other mettall, but vnder the other piramides the bodies are not taken vp ſo whole as in this, but there are found legges and armes comparable to the limmes of giants. Neare to theſe piramides appeareth out of the ſand a great head of ſtone ſomewhat like marble, which is diſcouered ſo farre as the necke ioyneth with the ſhoulders, being all whole, ſauing that it wanteth a little tippe of the noſe. The necke of this head contayneth in circuit about ſixe and thirty foot, ſo that it may be according to the necke conſidered, what greatneſſe the head is of. The riuer Nilus is a mile broad, wherein are very many great Croccodiles from Cairo vpward, but lower then Cairo paſſeth no ſuch creature: and this, they ſay, is by reaſon of an inchantment made long ſince which hindereth their paſſage for comming any lower then Cairo. Moreouer of theſe creatures there are ſometimes found ſome of an incredible bigneſſe, that is to ſay, of fourtie foot about. The males haue their members like to a man, and the females like to a woman. Theſe monſters oftentimes iſſue out of the water to feede, and finding any ſmall beaſts, as ſheepe, lambes, goates, or other like, doe great harme. And whiles they are forth of the water, if they happen at vnwares vpon any man, woman or childe, whom they can ouercome, they ſpare not their liues. In the yeere of our Lorde one thouſand fiue hundred and fiftie it happened, that certaine poore Chriſtians trauelling by Cairo towardes the countrey of Prete Ianni to reſcue certaine ſlaues, were guided by a Chaus, and iourneyed alongſt the banke of the ſaid riuer. The Chaus remained lingering alone behinde to make his prayers (as their cuſtome is) at a place called Tana, whom being buſie in his double deuotion one of theſe Crocodiles ceazed by the ſhoulders, and drew him vnder water, ſo that he was neuer after ſeene. And for this cauſe they haue made in ſundry places certaine hedges as bankes within the water, ſo that betwixt the hedge and banke of the riuer there remaineth ſo much water, that the women waſhing may take water without danger at their pleaſure. This countrey is ſo fruitfull, that it cauſeth the women as alſo other creatures to bring foorth one, two, and oft-times three at a birth. Fiue miles ſouthwarde of Cairo is a place called Matarea, where the balme is refined: and therefore ſome will ſay, that the trees which beare the balme growe in the ſaid place, wherein they are deceiued: for the ſayde trees growe two dayes iourney from Mecca, in a place called Bedrihone, which yeeldeth balme in great plenty, but ſaluage, wilde, and without vertue, and therefore the Moores carying the ſame within litle cheſts from Bedrihone to Matarea, where the trees being replanted (be it by vertue of the ſoyle, or the water, aire, or any other thing whatſoeuer) it ſufficeth that here they beare the true balme and licour ſo much in theſe dayes eſteemed of. In this place of Matarea there are certaine little houſes, with moſt goodly gardens, and a chappell of antiquity, where the very Moores themſelues affirme, that the mother of the bleſſed Chriſt fleeing from the fury of wicked Herode there ſaued her ſelfe with the childe, wherein that ſaying of the Prophet was fulfilled, Ex Ægypto vocaui filium meum. The which Chappell in the yeare of our Lorde one thouſand fiue hundred and foure, the Magnifico Daniel Barbaro firſt Conſull of that place went to viſite, and cauſed it to be renued and reedified, ſo that in theſe dayes there reſort thither many Chriſtians, who oftentimes bring with them a Prieſt, to ſay maſſe there. Alſo about an Harquebuz-ſhotte from Matarea is a ſpire of great height like to that at Rome, and more beautifull to beholde. Neere vnto the olde Cairo are yet twelue ſtorehouſes of great antiquitie, but now very much decayed, and theſe till late dayes ſerued to keepe corns for behoofe of the kingdome, concerning which many are of opinion, that the founder hereof was Ioſeph the ſonne of Iacob, for conſideration of the ſeuen deare yeeres. Alſo paſſing higher vp by the banke of Nilus, there is to bee ſeene a fayre Citie ouerflowed with water, the which at ſuch time as Nilus floweth lyeth vnder water, but when the water returneth to the marke, there plainely appeare princely palaces, and ſtately pillars, being of ſome called Thebes, where they ſay that Pharao was reſident. Moreouer three dayes iourney higher vp are two great images of ſpeckled marble, all whole, and ſomewhat ſunke into the earth, being things wonderfull to conſider of, for the noſe of either is two ſpannes and an halfe long, and the ſpace from one eare to the other conteineth tenne ſpannes, the bodies being correſpondent to their heads, and grauen in excellent proportion, ſo that they are ſhapes of maruellous hugeneſſe, and theſe they call The wife, and The daughter of Pharao.

Olde Thebes.

Of the patriarke of Greece.

IN Cairo are two Patriarkes, one of the Greekes, and another of the Iacobites. The Greeke Patriarke called Gioechni, being about the age of one hundred and thirteene yeeres, was a very good and holy man. They ſay, that when Soldan Gauri of Egypt reigned, there was done this miracle following: this good patriarke being enuied at by the Iewes of the countrey, for none other cauſe, but for his good workes, and holy life, it happened (I ſay) that being in diſputation with certaine of the Hebrewes in preſence of the Sultan, and reaſoning of their lawe and faith, it was ſayd vnto him by one of theſe Miſcreants: ſith thou beleeueſt in the faith of Chriſt, take and drinke this potion which I will giue thee; and if thy Chriſt be true Meſſias and true God, he will (ſayd he) deliuer thee from daunger. To whom the auncient patriarke anſwered, that he was content: whereupon that curſed Iewe brought him a cuppe of the moſt venemous and deadly poyſon that could be found, which the holy Patriarke hauing perceiued, ſaid: In the name of the father, of the ſonne, and of the holy Ghoſt: and hauing ſo ſayde he dranke it quite vp; which done, he tooke a droppe of pure water, putting it into that very cup, and gaue it vnto the Iewe, ſaying vnto him. I in the name of my Chriſt haue drunke thy poyſon, and therefore in the name of thy expected Meſſias drinke this water of mine within thine owne cuppe. Whereupon the Iewe tooke the cup out of the hand of the Patriarke, and hauing drunke the water, within halfe an houre burſt a ſunder. And the Patriarke had none other hurt, ſaue that he became ſomewhat pale in ſight, and ſo remained euer after. And this miracle (which meriteth to be called no leſſe) was done to the great commendation of the holy Patriarke in the preſence of a thouſand perſons, and namely of the Soldan of Egypt: who ſeeing the deſpight of the Iewes, vnto their owne coſt and confuſion compelled them to make the conduct, which with ſo many engines commeth into the caſtle from Nilus aboue mentioned. And this triumphant Patriarke not long ſince was aliue, and in perfect health, which God continue long time.

Of the preparation of the Carouan to goe to Mecca.

AS touching the Carouan which goeth to Mecca, it is to be vnderſtoode, that the Mahumetans obſerue a kinde of lent continuing one whole moone, and being a moueable ceremonie, which ſometimes falleth high, ſometimes lowe in the yeere called in their tongue Ramazan, and their feaſt is called Bairam. During this time of lent all they which intende to goe vnto Mecca reſort vnto Cairo, becauſe that twentie dayes after the feaſt the Carouan is readie to depart on the voyage: and thither reſort a great multitude of people from Aſia, Grecia, and Barbaria to goe on this voyage, ſome mooued by deuotion, and ſome for traffiques ſake, and ſome to paſſe away the time. Nowe within fewe dayes after the feaſt they which goe on the voyage depart out of the citie two leagues vnto a place called Birca, where they expect the Captaine of the Carouan. This place hath a great pond cauſed by the inundation of Nilus, and ſo made, that the camels and other beaſtes may drinke therein: whereof, namely, of Mules, Camels, and Dromedaries there are at leaſt fortie thouſand, and the perſons which followe the Carouan euerie yeere are about fiftie thouſand, fewe more or leſſe, according to the times. Moreouer euery three yeeres they renue the Captaine of the Carouan, called in the Arabian tongue Amarilla Haggi, that is, the Captaine of the Pilgrimes, to whom the Grand Signior giueth euery voiage eighteene purſes, conteyning each of them ſixe hundred twentie and fiue ducates of golde, and theſe be for the behoofe of the Carouan, and alſo to doe almes vnto the needfull pilgrimes. This Captaine, beſides other ſeruingmen which follow him, hath alſo fonre Chauſi to ſerue him. Likewiſe he hath with him for the ſecuritie of the Carouan foure hundred ſouldiers, to wit, two hundred Spachi or horſemen mounted on Dromedaries, and two hundred Ianizaries riding vpon Camels. The Chauſi and the Spachi are at the charge of the Captaine, but the Ianizaries not ſo, for their prouiſion is made them from Cairo. The Spachi weare caps or bonnets like to the caps of Sergeants, but the Ianizaries after another ſort, with a lappe falling downe behinde like a French-hoode, and hauing before a great piece of wrought ſiluer on their heads. The charge of theſe is to cauſe the Carouan to march in good array when neede requireth; theſe are not at the commaundement of any but of the Captaine of the Carouan. Moreouer the Captaine hath for his guide eight pilots, the office of whom is alwayes ſtable and firme from heire to heire, and theſe goe before guiding the Carouan, and ſhewing the way, as being well experienced in the place, and in the night they gouerne them as the mariners, by the ſtarre. Theſe alſo vſe to ſende before foure or fiue men carrying pieces of dry wood which giue light, becauſe they ſhould not goe out of the way, and if at any time through their ill hap they wander aſtray out of the way, they are caſt downe and beaten with ſo many baſtonadoes vpon the ſoles of their feete, as ſerue them for a perpetuall remembrance. The Captaine of the Carouan hath his Lieutenant accompanied continually with fifteene Spachi, and he hath the charge to ſet the Carouan in order, and to cauſe them to depart on their iourney when neede requireth: and during the voyage their office is ſome whiles to goe before with the forewarde, ſometimes to come behinde with the rereward, ſometimes to march on the one ſide, and ſometimes on the other, to ſpy, that the coaſt be cleare. The Carouan carrieth with it ſixe pieces of ordinance drawen by 12 camels, which ſerue to terrifie the Arabians, as alſo to make triumph at Mecca, and other places. The marchants which followe the Carouan, ſome carry for marchandiſe cloth of ſilke, ſome Corall, ſome tinne, others wheat, riſe, and all ſorts of graine. Some ſell by the way, ſome at Mecca, ſo that euery one bringeth ſomething to gaine by, becauſe all marchandiſe that goeth by land payeth no cuſtome, but that which goeth by ſea is bound to pay tenne in the hundred.

Pieces of dry wood in ſtead of torches.

The beginning of the voyage.

THe feaſt before the Carouan ſetteth forth, the Captaine with all his retinue and officers reſort vnto the caſtle of Cairo before the Baſha, which giueth vnto euery man a garment, and that of the Captaine is wrought with golde, and the others are ſerued according to their degree. Moreouer he deliuereth vnto him yͤ Chiſua Talnabi, which ſignifieth in the Arabian tongue, The garment of the Prophet: this veſture is of ſilke, wrought in the midſt with letters of gold, which ſignifie: La illa ill' alla Mahumet Reſullala: that is to ſay, There are no gods but God, and his ambaſſadour Mahumet. This garment is made of purpoſe to couer from top to botome a litle houſe in Mecca ſtanding in the midſt of the Meſquita, the which houſe (they ſay) was builded by Abraham or by his ſonne Iſmael. After this he deliuereth to him a gate made of purpoſe for the foreſaid houſe of Abraham wrought all with fine golde, and being of excellent workmanſhip, and it is a thing of great value. Beſides, he deliuereth vnto him a couering of greene veluet made in maner of a pyramis, about nine palmes high, and artificially wrought with moſt fine golde, and this is to couer the tombe of their prophet within Medina, which tombe is built in manner of a pyramis: and beſides that couering there are brought many others of golde and ſilke, for the ornament of the ſayde tombe. Which things being conſigned, the Baſha departeth not from his place; but the Captaine of the Carouan taketh his leaue with all his officers and ſouldiers, and departeth accompanied with all the people of Cairo orderly in manner of a proceſſion, with ſinging, ſhouting and a thouſand other ceremonies too long to recite. From the caſtle they goe to a gate of the citie called Bab-Naſſera, without the which ſtandes a Moſquita, and therein they lay vp the ſayd veſtures very well kept and guarded. And of this ceremony they make ſo great account, that the world commeth to ſee this ſight, yea the women great with childe, and others with children in their armes, neither is it lawfull for any man to forbid his wife the going to this feaſt, for that in ſo doing the wife may ſeparate her ſelfe from her huſband, and may lie with any other man, in regard of ſo great a treſpaſſe. Now this proceſſion proceeding from the caſtle towardes the Moſquita, the Camels which bring the veſtures are all adorned with cloth of golde, with many little belles, and paſſing along the ſtreete you may ſee the multitude caſting vpon the ſaid veſtures thouſands of beautifull flowers of diuers colours, & ſweete water, others bringing towels & fine cloth touch the ſame, which euer after they keepe as reliques with great reuerence. Afterward hauing left the veſture in the Moſquita, as is aforeſaid, they returne againe into the citie, where they remaine the ſpace of 20 dayes, and then the captaine departeth with his company, and taking the veſtures out of the Moſquita, carieth the ſame to the foreſaid place of Birca, where the Captaine hauing pitched his tent with the ſtandard of the grand Signior ouer the gate, & the other principall tents ſtanding about his, ſtayeth there ſome tenne dayes and no more: in which time all thoſe reſort thither that meane to follow the Carouan in this voyage to Mecca. Where you ſhall ſee certaine women which intend to goe on this voiage accompanied with their parents and friends mounted vpon Camels, adorned with ſo many tryfles, taſſels, and knots, that in beholding the ſame a man cannot refraine from laughter. The laſt night before their departure they make great feaſting and triumph within the Carouan, with caſtles and other infinite deuiſes of fireworke, the Ianizaries alwayes ſtanding round about the tent of the Captaine with ſuch ſhouting and ioy, that on euery ſide the earth reſoundeth, and this night they diſcharge all their ordinance, foure or ſixe times, and after at the breake of the day vpon the ſound of a trumpet they march forward on their way.

What times the Carouan trauelleth, and when it reſteth.

IT is to be noted, that from Cairo to Mecca they make 40 dayes iourney or thereabout, & the ſame great dayes iourneies. For the cuſtome of the Carouan is to trauell much and reſt little, and ordinarily they iourney in this maner: They trauell from two a clocke in the morning vntill the ſunne riſing, then hauing reſted till noone, they ſet forward, and ſo continue till night, & then alſo reſt againe, as is aboueſaid, till two of the clocke: and this order they obſerue vntill the end of the voiage, neuer changing the ſame, except in ſome places, whereof we will hereafter ſpeake, where for reſpect of water they reſt ſometimes a day and an halfe, and this they obſerue to refreſh themſelues, otherwiſe both man and beaſt would die.

In what order the Carouan trauelleth.

THe maner and order which the Carouan obſerueth in marching is this. It goeth diuided into three parts, to wit, the foreward, the maine battell, and the rereward. In the foreward go the 8 Pilots before with a Chaus, which hath foure knaues, & ech knaue carrieth a ſinew of a bul, to the end that if occaſion requireth, ẏ baſtonado may be giuen to ſuch as deſerue the ſame. Theſe knaues caſt offendours downe, turning vp the ſoles of their feete made faſt to a ſtaffe, giuing them a perpetuall remembrance for them & the beholders. This Chaus is as the Captaine of the foreward, which commandeth lights to be carried before when they trauell in the night. Alſo there go in this foreward 6 Santones with red turbants vpon their heads, & theſe eat and ride at the coſt of the Captaine of the Carouan. Theſe Santones when the Carouan arriueth at any good lodging, ſuddenly after they haue eſcried the place, cry with an horrible voyce ſaying, good cheare, good cheare, we are neere to the wiſhed lodging. For which good newes the chiefe of the company beſtow their beneuolence vpon them. In this foreward goeth very neere the third part of the people of the Carouan, behind whom go alwayes 25 Spachi armed with ſwords, bowes & arrowes to defend them from thieues. Next vnto the foreward, within a quarter of a mile, followeth the maine battell, and before the ſame are drawen the ſayd ſixe pieces of ordinance, with their gunners, and fifteene Spachi Archers. And next vnto theſe commeth the chiefe phyſicion, who is an olde man of authoritie, hauing with him many medicines, oyntments, ſalues, and other like refreſhings for the ſicke, hauing alſo camels with him for the ſicke to ride on, which haue no horſe nor beaſt. Next vnto him goeth one Camell alone, the faireſt that can be found: for with great induſtrie is ſought the greateſt and faireſt which may be found within the dominions of the Grand Signior. This camell alſo is decked with cloth of golde and ſilke, and carieth a litle cheſt made of pure Legname made in likeneſſe of the arke of the olde Teſtament: but, as is aboueſayd, made of pure Legname, without golde or any other thing of coſt. Within this cheſt is the Alcoran all written with great letters of golde, bound betweene two tables of maſſie golde, and the cheſt during their voyage is couered with Silke, but at their entring into Mecca it is all couered with cloth of golde, adorned with iewels, and the like at the enterance into Medina. The Camell aforeſayd which carrieth the cheſt, is compaſſed about with many Arabian ſingers and muſicians, alwayes ſinging and playing vpon inſtruments. After this folow fifteene other moſt faire Camels, euery one carying one of the aboueſayd veſtures, being couered from toppe to toe with ſilke. Behind theſe goe twentie other Camels which carrie the money, apparell, and prouiſion of the Amir el Cheggi captaine of the Carouan. After foloweth the royall Standard of the grand Signior, accompanied continually with the muſicians of the captaine, and fiue and twentie Spachi archers, with a Chaus before them, and about theſe marueilous things goe all the people and Camels which follow the Carouan. Behind theſe, leſſe then a mile, foloweth the rereward, whereof the greater part are pilgrimes: the occaſion whereof is, for that the merchants ſeeke alwayes to be in the foreward for the ſecuritie of their goods, but the pilgrimes which haue litle to looſe care not though they come behind. Behind theſe alwayes goe fiue and twentie other Spachi well armed with another Chaus their captaine, and fortie Arabians all Archers for guard of the rereward. And becauſe the Carouan goeth alwayes along the red ſea banke, which in going forth they haue on their right hand, therfore the two hundred Ianiſſaries parted into three companies goe vpon their left hand well armed and mounted vpon Camels bound one to another, for vpon that ſide is all the danger of thieues, and on the other no danger at all, the captaine of the Carouan alwayes going about his people, ſometimes on the one ſide, and ſometimes on the other, neuer keeping any firme place, being continually accompanied with a Chaus and 25. Spachi, armed and mounted vpon Dromedaries, and 8. muſicians with violes in their handes, which ceaſe not ſounding till the captaine take his reſt, vpon whom they attend, till ſuch time as he entreth his pauillion, and then licencing all his attendants and folowers to depart, they goe each man to their lodging.

Of things notable which are ſeene in this voyage by the way.

BEcauſe in the way there are not many things found woorthie memorie, for that the Carouan ſeldome reſteth in places of habitation, of which in the way there are but fewe, yea rather the Carouan reſteth altogether in the field: therefore in this our voyage wee will onely make mention of certaine Caſtles found in the way, which bee theſe, namely, Agerut, Nachel, Acba, Biritem, Muel, and Ezlem. Of which fiue, the two firſt are kept of Moores, and the other three of Turkes, and for guard they haue eight men or tenne at the moſt in euery Caſtle, with foure or fiue Smerigli, which ſerue to keepe the water from the Arabians, ſo that the Carouan comming thither, may haue wherewithall to refreſh it ſelfe. Agerut is diſtant from Suez a port of the red Sea eight miles, where are alwayes reſident fiue and twentie gallies of the Grand Signior for the keeping of that Sea. Nachel is diſtant from the Sea a dayes iourney. The walles of Acba are founded vpon the red Sea banke. Biritem and Muel likewiſe are daſhed with the waues of the Sea. Ezlem is diſtant from thence aboue a dayes iourney. Theſe fiue Caſtles aboueſayd are not of force altogether to defend themſelues agaynſt an hundred men. The Carouan departing from Birca vntill Agerut findeth no water by the way to drinke, neither from Agerut till Nachel, nor from Nachel till Acba, but betweene Acba and Biritem are found two waters, one called Agium el Caſſap, and the other Magaraxiaibi, that is to ſay, the riuer of Iethro the father in lawe of Moſes, for this is the place mentioned in the ſecond chapter of Exodus, whither it is ſayd that Moſes fledde from the anger of Pharao, who would haue killed him, becauſe hee had ſlaine the Ægyptian, which fought with the Hebrew, in which place ſtoode the citie of Midian; and there are yet the pondes, neere vnto the which Moſes ſate downe. And from that place forward they finde more ſtore of water by the way, and in more places, though not ſo good. It is alſo to bee noted, that in this voiage it is needfull and an vſuall thing, that the captaine put his hand to his purſe in theſe places, and beſtow preſents, garments, and turbants vpon certaine of the chiefe of the Arabians, to the ende they may giue him and his Carouan free paſſage: who alſo promiſe, that their followers likewiſe ſhall doe no damage to the Carouan, and bind themſelues to accompliſh the ſame, promiſing alſo by worde of mouth, that if the Carouan bee robbed, they will make reſtitution of ſuch things as are ſtollen: but notwithſtanding, the Carouan is by them oftentimes damnified, and thoſe which are robbed haue no other reſtitution at the Arabians handes then the ſhewing of them a paire of heeles, flying into ſuch places as it is impoſſible to finde them. Nowe the Carouan continuing her accuſtomed iourneys, and hauing paſſed the aboueſayd caſtles, and others not woorthie mention, at length commeth to a place called Iehbir, which is the beginning and confine of the ſtate and realme of Seriſo the king of Mecca: where, at their approching iſſueth out to meete them the gouernour of the land, with all his people to receiue the Carouan, with ſuch ſhouting and triumph, as is impoſſible to expreſſe, where they ſtaie one whole day. This place aboundeth with freſh and cleare waters, which with ſtreames fall downe from the high mountaines. Moreouer, in this place are great ſtore of dates, and fleſh great ſtore and good cheape, and eſpecially laced muttons which willingly fall downe, and here the wearie pilgrimes haue commoditie to refreſh themſelues, ſaying, that this wicked fact purgeth them from a multitude of ſinnes, and beſides increaſeth deuotion to proſecute the voiage. Touching the building in theſe places, it is to bee iudged by the houſes halfe ruinated, that it hath bene a magnificent citie: but becauſe it was in times paſt inhabited more with thieues then true men, it was therefore altogether deſtroyed by Soldan Gauri king of Ægypt, who going on pilgrimage vnto Mecca, and paſſing by this place, there was by the inhabitants hereof ſome iniurie done vnto his Carouan, which hee vnderſtanding of, diſſembled till his returned from Mecca, and then cauſed it to bee burned and deſtroyed in pitifull ſort for reuenge of the iniurie done vnto the Carouan. The Carouan hauing reſted and being refreſhed as is aboueſayd, the next day departeth on the way, and the firſt place they arriue at woorthy mention is called Bedrihonem, in which place (as is aforeſayd) grow thoſe little ſhrubbes whereout Balme iſſueth. And before the Carouan arriueth at this place, a mile from the citie is a large and great field enuironed about with moſt high and huge mountaines. And in this field, according to the Alcoran, their prophet Mahomet had a moſt fierce and cruell battell giuen by the Chriſtians of the countrey and other people which ſet themſelues agaynſt them, and withſtood his opinion, ſo that hee was ouercome and vanquiſhed of the Chriſtians, and almoſt halfe of his people ſlaine in the battell. Whereupon, the prophet ſeeing himſelfe in ſuch extremitie, fell to his prayers, and they ſay, that God hauing compaſſion vpon his deare friend and prophet, heard him, and ſent him infinite thouſands of angels, wherewith returning to the battell, they conquered and ouercame the conquerour. And therefore in memorie of this victorie, the Carouan lodgeth euery yeere one night in this place, making great bonefires with great mirth. And they ſay that as yet there is heard vpon the mountaines a litle drumme, which while the Carouan paſſeth, neuer ceaſeth ſounding. And they ſay further, that the ſayd drumme is ſounded by the angels in ſigne of that great victory graunted of God to their prophet. Alſo the Mahumetan writings affirme, that after the ende of the ſayd battell, the prophet commaunded certaine of his people to goe and burie all the Mahumetans which were dead in the fields, who going, knew not the one from the other, becauſe as yet they vſed not circumciſion, ſo they returned vnto him, anſwering, that they had bene to doe his commaundement, but they knew not the Muſulmans from the Chriſtians. To whom the prophet anſwered, ſaying: Turne againe, and all thoſe which you ſhall finde with their faces downeward, leaue them, becauſe all they are miſbeleeuers; and the other which you ſhall finde with their faces turned vpward, them burie, for they are the true Muſulmani, and ſo his commaundement was done.

The next morning by Sunne riſing, the Carouan arriueth at Bedrihonem, in which place euery man waſheth himſelfe from toppe to toe, as well men as women, and leauing off their apparell, hauing each one a cloth about their priuities, called in their tongue Photah, and another white one vpon their ſhoulders, all which can goe to Mecca in this habite, do ſo, and are thought to merite more then the other, but they which cannot doe ſo make a vowe to ſacrifice a Ramme at the mountaine of pardons: and after they bee waſhed, it is not lawfull for any man or woman man to kill either flea or lowſe with their handes, neither yet to take them with their nailes, vntill they haue accompliſhed their vowed orations in the mountaine of pardons aboueſayd: and therefore they cary with them certaine ſtickes made of purpoſe in maner of a File, called in their language Arca, Caſſah Guch, with which they grate their ſhoulders. And ſo the Carouan marching, commeth within two miles of Mecca where they reſt that night. In the morning at the breake of day, with all pompe poſſible they ſet forward toward Mecca, and drawing neere thereunto, the Seripho iſſueth foorth of the citie with his guard, accompanied with an infinite number of people, ſhouting, and making great triumph. And being come out of the citie a bowe-ſhoote into a faire field, where a great multitude of tents are pitched, and in the middeſt the pauillion of the captaine, who meeting with the Seriſo, after ſalutations on each ſide, they light from their horſes and enter into the pauillion, where the king of Mecca depriueth himſelfe of all authoritie and power, and committeth the ſame to the aboue-named captaine, giuing him full licence and authoritie to commaund, gouerne, and miniſter iuſtice during his aboad in Mecca with his company, and on the other ſide the captaine to requite this liberalitie vſed toward him by the Seriſo, giueth him a garment of cloth of gold of great value, with certaine iewels and other like things. After this, ſitting downe together vpon carpets and hides they eate together, and riſing from thence with certaine of the chiefeſt, and taking with them the garment and gate aboueſayd, they goe directly to the Moſquita, attended on but with a fewe, and being entered, they cauſe the olde to be pulled downe, and put the newe couerture vpon the houſe of Abraham, and the olde veſture is the eunuchs which ſerue in the ſayde Moſquita, who after ſell it vnto the pilgrimes at foure or fiue ſeraſines the pike: and happy doth that man thinke himſelfe, which can get neuer ſo litle a piece thereof, to conſerue euer after as a moſt holy relique: and they ſay, that putting the ſame vnder the head of a man at the houre of his death, through vertue thereof all his ſinnes are forgiuen. Alſo they take away the old doore, ſetting in the place the new doore, and the old by cuſtome they giue vnto the Seriſo. After hauing made their praiers with certaine ordinarie and woonted ceremonies, the Seriſo remaineth in the citie, and the captaine of the pilgrimage returneth vnto his pauillion.

Of the Seriſo the king of Mecca.

The Seriſo is deſcended of the prophet Mahomet by Fatma daughter of that good prophet, and Alli huſband to her, and ſonne in lawe to Mahumet, who had no iſſue male, ſaue this ſtocke of the Seriſo, to the eldeſt ſonne whereof the realme commeth by ſucceſſion. This realme hath of reuenues royall, euery yeere halfe a million of golde, or litle more: and all ſuch as are of the prophets kinred, or deſcended of that blood (which are almoſt innumerable) are called Emyri, that is to ſay, lordes. Theſe all goe clothed in greene, or at the leaſt haue their turbant greene, to bee knowen from the other. Neither is it permitted that any of thoſe Chriſtians which dwell or traffique in their Countrey goe clothed in greene, neither may they haue any thing of greene about them: for they ſay it is not lawfull for miſbeleeuers to weare that colour, wherein that great friend and prophet of god Mahomet was woont to be apparelled.

Of the citie of Mecca.

The Citie of Mecca in the Arabian tongue is called Macca, that is to ſay, an habitation. This citie is inuironed about with exceeding high and barren mountaines, and in the plaine betweene the ſayde mountaines and the citie are many pleaſaunt gardens, where groweth great abundaunce of figges, grapes, apples, and melons. There is alſo great abundance of good water and fleſhe, but not of bread. This citie hath no walles about it, and containeth in circuite fiue miles. The houſes are very handſome and commodious, and are built like to the houſes in Italie. The palace of the Seriſo is ſumptuous and gorgeouſly adorned. The women of the place are courteous, iocund, and louely, faire, with alluring eyes, being hote and libidinous, and the moſt of them naughtie packes. The men of this place are giuen to that abhominable, curſed, and opprobrious vice, whereof both men and women make but ſmall account by reaſon of the pond Zun Zun, wherein hauing waſhed themſelues, their opinion is, that although like the dog they returne to their vomite, yet they are clenſed from all ſinne whatſoeuer, of which ſin we will hereafter more largely diſcourſe. In the midſt of the city is yͤ great Moſquita, with the houſe of Abraham ſtanding in the very middeſt thereof, which Moſquita was built in the time when their prophet liued. It is foure ſquare, and ſo great, that it containeth two miles in circuit, that is to ſay, halfe a mile each ſide. Alſo it is made in maner of a cloiſter, for that in the midſt thereof ſeparate from the reſt, is the aboueſayd houſe of Abraham, alſo the galleries round about are in maner of 4. ſtreetes, and the partitions which diuide the one ſtreet from the other are pillars, whereof ſome are of marble, and others of lime and ſtone. This famous and ſumptuous Moſquita hath 99. gates, and 5. ſteeples, from whence the Taliſmani call the people to the Moſquita. And the pilgrimes which are not prouided of tents, reſort hither, and for more deuotion the men and women lie together aloft and beneath, one vpō another, ſo that their houſe of praier becommeth worſe ſometimes then a den of thieues.

Of the houſe of Abraham.

The houſe of Abraham is alſo foure ſquare, and made of ſpeckled ſtone, 20. paces high, and 40 in circuit. And vpon one ſide of this houſe within the wall, there is a ſtone of a ſpan long, and halfe a ſpan broad, which ſtone (as they ſay) before this houſe was builded, fell downe from heauen, at the fall whereof was heard a voyce, that whereſoeuer this ſtone fell, there ſhould be built the houſe of God, wherein God will heare ſinners. Moreouer, they ſay that when this ſtone fell from heauen, it was not blacke as now, but as white as the whiteſt ſnow, and by reaſon it hath bene ſo oft kiſſed by ſinners, it is therewith become blacke: for all the pilgrimes are bound to kiſſe this ſtone, otherwiſe they cary their ſinnes home with them again. The entrance into this houſe is very ſmall, made in maner of a window, and as high from the ground as a man can reach, ſo that it is painful to enter. This houſe hath without 31. pillars of braſſe, ſet vpon cubike or ſquare ſtones being red and greene, the which pillars ſuſtaine not ought els ſaue a threed of copper, which reacheth from one to another, whereunto are faſtened many burning lampes. Theſe pillars of braſſe were cauſed to be made by Sultan Soliman grandfather to Sultan Amurath now Emperor. After this, hauing entred with the difficultie aboueſayd, there ſtand at the entrance two pillars of marble, to wit, on each ſide one. In the midſt there are three of Aloes-wood not very thicke, and couered with tiles of India of 1000. colours which ſerue to vnderproppe the Terratza. It is ſo darke, that they can hardly ſee within for want of light, not without an euill ſmell. Without the gate fiue paſes is the aboueſayd pond Zun Zun, which is that bleſſed pond that the angell of the lord ſhewed vnto Agar whiles ſhe went ſeeking water for her ſonne Iſmael to drinke.

Of the ceremonies of the pilgrimes.

In the beginning we haue ſayd how the Mahumetans haue two feaſts in the yeere. The one they call Paſcha di Ramazaco, that is to ſay, The feaſt of faſting, and this feaſt of faſting is holden thirtie dayes after the feaſt, wherein the Carouan trauelleth to Mecca. The other is called the feaſt of the Ramme, wherein all they which are of abilitie are bound to ſacrifice a Ramme, and this they call Bine Bairam, that is to ſay, The great feaſt. And as the Carouan departeth from Cairo thirtie dayes after the little feaſt, ſo likewiſe they come hither fiue or ſixe dayes before the great feaſt, to the ende the pilgrimes may haue time before the feaſt to finiſh their rites and ceremonies, which are theſe. Departing from the Carouan, and being guided by ſuch as are experienced in the way, they goe vnto the citie twentie or thirtie in a company as they thinke good, walking through a ſtreete which aſcendeth by litle and litle till they come vnto a certaine gate, whereupon is written on each ſide in marble ſtone, Babel Salema, which in the Arabian tongue ſignifieth, the gate of health. And from this place is deſcried the great Moſquita, which enuironeth the houſe of Abraham, which being deſcried, they reuerently ſalute twiſe, ſaying, Salem Alech Iara ſul Alla, that is to ſay, Peace to thee, ambaſſadour of God. This ſalutation being ended, proceeding on the way, they finde an arche vpon their right hand, whereon they aſcend fiue ſteps, vpon the which is a great voyd place made of ſtone: after, deſcending other fiue ſteps, and proceeding the ſpace of a flight-ſhoot, they finde another arche like vnto the firſt, and this way from the one arche to the other they go and come 7. times, ſaying alwaies ſome of their prayers, which (they ſay) the afflicted Agar ſayd, whiles ſhe ſought and found not water for her ſonne Iſmael to drinke. This ceremonie being ended, the pilgrimes enter into the Moſquita, and drawing neere vnto the houſe of Abraham, they goe round about it other ſeuen times, alwayes ſaying: This is the houſe of God, and of his ſeruaunt Abraham; This done, they goe to kiſſe that blacke ſtone aboueſayd. After they go vnto the pond Zun Zun, and in their apparell as they be, they waſh themſelues from head to foote, ſaying, Tob ah Allah, Tobah Allah, that is to ſay, Pardon lord, Pardon lord, drinking alſo of that water, which is both muddie, filthie, and of an ill ſauour, and in this wiſe waſhed and watered, euery one returneth to his place of abode, and theſe ceremonies euery one is bound to doe once at the leaſt. But thoſe which haue a mind to ouergoe their fellowes, and to go into paradiſe before the reſt, doe the ſame once a day while the Carouan remaineth there.

What the Carouan doeth after hauing reſted at Mecca:

The mountain of pardons.

The Carouan hauing abode within the citie of Mecca fiue dayes, the night before the euening of their feaſt, the captaine with all his company ſetteth forward towards the mountaine of pardons, which they call in the Arabian tongue, Iabel Araſata. This mountaine is diſtant from Mecca 15. miles, and in the mid way thereto is a place called Mina, that is to ſay, The hauen, and a litle from thence are 4. great pillars, of which hereafter we will ſpeake. Now firſt touching the mountaine of Pardons, which is rather to be called a litle hill, then a mountain, for that it is low, litle, delightful and pleaſant, containing in circuit two miles, and enuironed round about with the goodlieſt plaine that euer with mans eie could be ſeen, and the plaine likewiſe compaſſed with exceeding high mountains, in ſuch ſort, that this is one of the goodlieſt ſituations in the world: and it ſeemeth verily, that nature hath therein ſhewed all her cunning, in making this place vnder the mountaine of pardons ſo broad and pleaſant. Vpon the ſide towards Mecca there are many pipes of water cleare, faire, and freſh, and aboue all moſt wholeſome, falling down into certaine veſſels made of purpoſe, where the people refreſh and waſh themſelues, and water their cattel. And when Adam and Euah were caſt out of paradiſe by the angel of the Lord, the Mahumetans ſay, they came to inhabite this litle mountaine of pardons. Alſo they ſay, that they had loſt one another, and were ſeperated for the ſpace of 40. yeeres, and in the end met at this place with great ioy & gladneſſe, and builded a litle houſe vpon the top of this mountaine, the which at this day they call Beyt Adam, that is to ſay, the houſe of Adam.

Of the three Carouans.

The ſame day that the Carouan of Cairo commeth to this place, hither come 2. Carouans alſo, one of Damaſco, the other of Arabia, and in like maner all the inhabitants for ten dayes iourney round about, ſo that at one time there is to be ſeen aboue 200000. perſons, and more thē 300000. cattell. Now all this company meeting together in this place the night before the feaſt, the three hoſtes caſt themſelues into a triangle, ſetting the mountaine in the midſt of them: and all that night there is nothing to be heard nor ſeene, but gunſhot and fireworkes of ſundry ſortes, with ſuch ſinging, ſounding, ſhouting, halowing, rumors, feaſting, and triumphing, as is wonderfull. After this, the day of the feaſt being come, they are all at reſt and ſilence, and that day they attend on no other thing, then to ſacrifice oblations and prayers vnto God, and in the euening all they which haue horſes mount thereon, and approch as nigh vnto the mountaine as they can, and thoſe which haue no horſes make the beſt ſhift they can on foote, giuing euer vnto the captaine of Cairo the chiefe place, the ſecond to the captaine of Damaſco, and the third to the captaine of Arabia, & being all approched as is aboueſayd, there commeth a ſquare ſquire, one of the Santones, mounted on a camell well furniſhed, who at the other ſide of the mountain aſcendeth fiue ſteps into a pulpit made for that purpoſe, and all being ſilent, turning his face towards the people, he maketh a ſhort ſermon of the tenour folowing.

The ſumme of the Santones ſermon.

The ſumme of this double doctors ſermon is thus much in briefe. He ſheweth them how many and how great benefits God hath giuen to the Mahumetan people by the hand of his beloued friend and prophet Mahomet, hauing deliuered them from the ſeruitude of ſinne & from idolatry, in which before time they were drowned, and how he gaue vnto them the houſe of Abraham wherein they ſhould be heard, and likewiſe the mountaine of pardons, by meanes whereof they might obtaine grace and remiſſion of their ſinnes: adding, that the mercifull God, who is a liberall giuer of all good things, commaunded his ſecretarie Abraham to build him an houſe in Mecca, where his ſucceſſours might make their prayers vnto him and bee heard, at which time all the mountains in the world came together thither with ſufficiencie of ſtones for building hereof, except that litle and low hill, which for pouertie could not go to diſcharge this debt, for the which it became ſorrowfull, weeping beyond all meaſure for the ſpace of thirtie yeeres, at the ende whereof the eternall God hauing pitie and compaſſion vpon this poore Mountaine, ſaide vnto it: Weepe no more (my daughter) for thy bitter plaints haue aſcended vp into mine eares, therefore comfort thy ſelfe: for I will cauſe all thoſe that ſhall goe to viſite the houſe of my friend Abraham, that they ſhall not be abſolued from their ſinnes, vnleſſe they firſt come to doe thee reuerence, and to keepe in this place their holieſt feaſt. And this I haue commanded vnto my people by the mouth of my friend and prophet Mahumet. This ſaid, he exhorteth them vnto the loue of God, and to prayer and almes. The ſermon being done at the Sunne-ſetting they make 3. prayers, namely, the firſt for the Serifo, the ſecond for the Grand Signior with his hoſte, and the third for all the people: to which prayers all with one voyce cry ſaying; Amni Ia Alla, Amni Ia Alla, that is to ſay, Be it ſo Lord, be it ſo Lord. Thus hauing had the Santones bleſſing and ſaluted the Mountaine of pardons, they returne the way they came vnto Mina, whereof wee haue made mention. In returning at the end of the plaine are the aboueſaid 4. pillers, to wit, two on ech ſide of the way, through the midſt whereof they ſay it is needfull that euery one paſſe, ſaying, that who ſo paſſeth without looſeth all that merit which in his pilgrimage he had gotten. Alſo from the mountaine of pardons vntil they be paſſed the ſaid pillers none dare looke backward, for feare leaſt the ſinnes which he hath left in the mountains returne to him againe. Being paſt theſe pillers euery one lighteth downe, ſeeking in this ſandy field 50. or 60. litle ſtones, which being gathered, and bound in an handkerchiffe they carry to the aboueſaid place of Mina, where they ſtay 5. dayes, becauſe at that time there is a faire free and franke of al cuſtome. And in this place are other 3. pillers, not together, but ſet in diuers places, where (as their prophet ſaith) were the three apparitions which the diuel made vnto Abraham, and to Iſmael his ſonne; for amongſt them they make no mention of Iſaac, as if he had neuer bene borne. So they ſay, that the bleſſed God hauing commanded Abraham his faithfull ſeruant to ſacrifice his firſt begotten Iſmael, the old Abraham went to do according to Gods wil, and met with the infernal enemie in the ſhape of a man, and being of him demanded whither he went, he anſwered, that he went to ſacrifice his ſonne Iſmael, as God had commanded him. Againſt whom the diuel exclaiming ſaid: Oh doting old man, ſith God in thine old age hath maruellouſly giuen thee this ſon (in whom all nations ſhalbe bleſſed) wherefore giuing credite vnto vaine dreames, wilt thou kill him whom ſo much thou haſt deſired, and ſo intirely loued. But Abraham ſhaking him off proceeded on his way, whereupon the diuel ſeeing his words could not preuaile with the father attempted the ſonne, ſaying; Iſmael, haue regard vnto thy ſelfe betimes in this thing which is ſo dangerous. Wherefore? anſwered yͤ childe. Becauſe (ſaith the diuel) thy doting father ſeeketh to take away thy life. For what occaſion, ſaid Iſmael? Becauſe (ſaith the enemie) he ſaith, that God hath commanded him. Which Iſmael hearing hee tooke vp ſtones and threw at him, ſaying, Auzu billahi minal ſcia itanil ragini, which is to ſay, I defend me with God from the diuel the offender, as who would ſay, wee ought to obey the commandement of God and reſiſt the diuel with al our force. But to returne to our purpoſe, the pilgrimes during their aboad there goe to viſite theſe three pillers, throwing away the little ſtones which before they gathered, whiles they repeat the ſame words which they ſay, that Iſmael ſaid to the diuell, when hee withſtoode him. From hence halfe a mile is a mountaine, whither Abraham went to ſacrifice his ſonne, as is aboueſaid. In this mountaine is a great den whither the pilgrims reſort to make their prayers, and there is a great ſtone naturally ſeparated in the midſt; and they ſay, that Iſmael, while his father Abraham was buſie about the ſacrifice, tooke the knife in hand to prooue how it would cut, and making triall diuided the ſtone into two parts. The fiue dayes being expired, the captaine ariſeth with all the Carouan, and returneth againe to Mecca, where they remaine other fiue dayes. And while theſe reſt, we will treat of the city and port of Grida vpon the Red Sea.

Of Grida.

Grida a port neere Mecca.

Therefore wee ſay that from Mecca to Grida they make two ſmall dayes iourney: and becauſe in thoſe places it is ill traueiling in the day-time by reaſon of the great heat of the Sunne, therefore they depart in the euening from Mecca, and in the morning before Sunne-riſing they are arriued halfe way, where there are certaine habitations well furniſhed, and good Innes to lodge in, but eſpecially women ynough which voluntarily beſtowe their almes vpon the poore pilgrims: likewiſe departing the next euening, the morning after, they come vnto Grida. This citie is founded vpon the Red Sea banke, enuironed with wals & towers to the land-ward, but through continuance of time almoſt cōſumed and waſted: on the ſide to ſeaward it ſtands vnwalled. Grida hath three gates, one on eche ſide, and the thirde in the midſt towarde the land, which is called, The port of Mecca, neere vnto which are 6, or 7. Turks vpon the old towers for guard thereof with foure faulcons vpon one of the corners of the city to the land-ward. Alſo to ſea-ward where the wall ioyneth with the water, there is lately made a fort like vnto a bulwarke, where they haue planted 25 pieces of the beſt ordinance that might be had, which are very well kept and guarded. More outward towards the ſea vpon the fartheſt olde tower are other fiue good pieces with 30 men to guard them. On the other ſide of the city at the end of the wall there is lately builded a bulwarke ſtrong and well guarded by a Saniaccho with 150 Turks wel prouided with ordinance and all other neceſſaries and munition, and all theſe fortifyings are for none other cauſe then for feare and ſuſpition of the Portugals. And if the port were good all this were in vaine: but the port cannot be worſe nor more dangerous, being all full of rocks and ſands, in ſuch wiſe, that the ſhips cannot come neere, but perforce ride at the leaſt two miles off. At this port arriue euery yeere forty or fifty great ſhippes laden with ſpices and other rich marchandize which yeeld in cuſtome 150000 ducats, the halfe whereof goeth vnto the Grand Signior, and the other halfe to the Seriſo. And becauſe there is none other thing worthy mention in Grida we wil returne to our Carouan which hath almoſt reſted enough.

The Portugals greatly feared in the Red ſea.

Forty or fifty rich ſhips arriue yerely at Grida.

Of their going to Medina.

THe Carouan departeth for Medina returning the ſame way they came vnto Bedrihonem abouesayd, where they leaue their ordinance and other cariages, whereof they haue no need, with the pilgrims which haue ſeene Medina aforetime, and deſire not to ſee it againe, but ſtay in that place, expecting the carouan, and reſting vntill the carouan go from Bedrihonem to Medina, where they allwayes finde goodly habitations, with abundance of ſweet waters, and dates enough, and being within foureteene miles of Medina they come vnto a great plaine called by them Iabel el ſalema, that is to ſay, the mountaine of health, from which they begin to deſcry the city and tombe of Mahomet, at which ſight they light from their horſes in token of reuerence. And being aſcended vp the ſayd mountaine with ſhouting which pierceth the ſkies they ſay, Sala tuua ſalema Alaccah Iarah ſul Allah. Sala tuua Salema Alaccah Ianabi Allah, Sala tuua Salema Alaccha Iahabit Allah: which words in the Arabian tongue ſignifie: Prayer and health be vnto thee, oh prophet of God: prayer and health be vpon thee, oh beloued of God. And hauing pronounced this ſalutation, they proceed on their iourney, ſo that they lodge that night within three miles of Medina: and the next morning the captaine of the pilgrimage ariſeth, & proceeding towards the city, and drawing neere, there commeth the gouernour vnder the Seriſo, accompanied with his people to receiue the Carouan, hauing pitched their tents in the midſt of a goodly field where they lodge.

Of Medina.

MEdina is a little city of great antiquity, containing in circuit not aboue two miles, hauing therein but one caſtle, which is olde and weake, guarded by an Aga with fifty pieces of artillery, but not very good. The houſes thereof are faire and well ſituated, built of lime and ſtone, and in the midſt of the city ſtands a foureſquare Moſquita, not ſo great as that of Mecca, but more goodly, rich, and ſumptuous in building. Within the ſame in a corner thereof is a tombe built vpon foure pillers with a vault, as if it were vnder a pauement, which bindeth all the foure pillers together. The tombe is ſo high, that it farre exceedeth in heighth the Moſquita, being couered with lead, and the top all inamelled with golde, with an halfe moone vpon the top: and within the pauement it is all very artificially wrought with golde. Below there are round about very great ſtaires of yron aſcending vp vntill the midſt of the pillers, and in the very midſt thereof is buried the body of Mahomet, and not in a cheſt of yron cleauing to the adamant, as many affirme that know not the trueth thereof. Moreouer, ouer the body they haue built a tombe of ſpeckled ſtone a‖ brace and an halfe high, and ouer the ſame another of Legmame foureſquare in maner of a pyramis. After this, round about the ſepulture there hangeth a curtaine of ſilke, which letteth the ſight of thoſe without, that they cannot ſee the ſepulture. Beyond this in the ſame Moſquita are other two ſepulchres couered with greene cloth, and in the one of them is buried Fatma the daughter of Mahomet, and Alli is buried in the other, who was the huſband of the ſayd Fatma. The attendants vpon theſe ſepulchres are fifty eunuches white and tawny, neither is it granted to any of them to enter within the tombe, ſauing to three white eunuches the oldeſt and beſt of credit; vnto whom it is lawfull to enter but twiſe in the day, to light the lamps, and to doe other ſeruices. All the other eunuchs attend without to the ſeruice of the Moſquita, and the other two ſepulchres of Fatma, and Alli, where euery one may go and touch at his pleaſure, and take of the earth for deuotion, as many do.

‖Or, a fathome.

Of things without the City.

Without the city and on euery ſide are moſt faire gardens, with many fountaines of moſt ſweet water, infinite pondes, abundance of fruit, with much honeſt liuing, ſo that this place is very pleaſant and delightfull. This city hath three gates, one of which is an hoſpitall cauſed to be built by Caſſachi, called the Roſe, who was wife to Sultan Soliman grandfather to this emperour. The ſayd hoſpitall hath nought els worthy mention, ſaue that it is fairely built, and hath large reuenues belonging thereunto, and nouriſheth many poore people. A mile from the city are certaine houſes whereof they affirme one to be the ſame, where Mahumet in his life-time dwelt. This houſe hath on euery ſide very many faire date trees, amongſt which there are two which grow out of one ſtocke exceeding high, and theſe, they ſay, their Prophet graffed with his owne hand: the fruit thereof is alwayes ſent to Conſtantinople, to be preſented vnto the Grand Signior, and is ſayd to be that bleſſed fruit of the Prophet. Nere vnto the date trees is a faire fountaine of cleere and ſweet water, the which by a conduct pipe is brought into the city of Medina. Alſo there is a little Moſquita, wherein three places are counted holy, and greatly reuerenced: the firſt they affirme, that their Prophet made his firſt prayer in, after he knew God: the ſecond is that whither he went when he would ſee the holy houſe of Abraham, where when he ſate downe to that intent, they ſay the mountaines opened from the toppe to the bottome to ſhew him the houſe, and after cloſed againe as before: the third holy place is in the midſt of the ſayd Moſquita, where is a tombe made of lime and ſtone foureſquare, and full of ſand, wherein, they ſay, was buried that bleſſed camell which Mahumet was alwayes woont to ride vpon. On the other ſide of the city are other tombes of holy Mahumetans, and euery one of them hath a tombe built vpon foure pillers, amongſt which three were the companions of Mahumet, to wit, Abubacar, Ottoman, and Omar; all which are viſited of the pilgrims as holy places.

The offering of the veſtures vnto the ſepulchres.

The Carouan being come to Medina two houres before day, and reſting there till the euening, the captaine then with his company and other pilgrims ſetteth forward, with the greateſt pompe poſſible: and taking with him the veſture which is made in maner of a pyramis, with many other of golde and ſilke, departeth, going thorow the midſt of the city, vntill he come to the Moſquita, where hauing praied, he preſenteth vnto the tombe of his prophet (where the eunuchs receiuing hands are ready) the veſture for the ſayd tombe: and certaine eunuchs entring in take away the old veſture, and lay on the new, burning the olde one, and diuiding the golde thereof into equall portions. After this are preſented other veſtures for the ornament of the Moſquita. Alſo the people without deliuer vnto the eunuchs ech man ſomewhat to touch the tombe therewith, which they keepe as a relique with great deuotion. This ceremony being ended, the captaine reſteth in Medina two dayes, to the end the pilgrims may finiſh their deuotion and ceremonies: and after they depart to Iambor. A good dayes iourney thence is a ſteepe mountaine, ouer which is no paſſage, ſauing by one narrow path called Demir Capi, which was in times paſt called the yron gate. Of this gate the Mahumetans ſay, that Ally the companion and ſonne in law of Mahumet, being here purſued by many Chriſtians, and comming vnto this mountaine, not ſeeing any way whereby to flee, drew out his ſword, and ſtriking the ſaid mountaine, diuided it in ſunder, and paſſing thorow ſaued his life on the other ſide. Moreouer, this Alli among the Perſians is had in greater reuerence then Mahumet, who affirme, that the ſayd Alli hath done greater things and more miraculous then Mahumet, and therefore they eſteeme him for God almighty his fellow. But to returne to our matter, the captaine with the carouan within two dayes after returneth for Cairo, and comming to Ezlem, findeth there a captaine with threeſcore horſes come thither to bring refreſhments to the ſaid captaine of the pilgrimage, as alſo to ſell vnto the pilgrims ſome victuals. From thence they ſet forward, and comming to Birca within two leagues of Cairo, there is the maſter of the houſe of the Baſſha of Cairo with all his horſemen come thither to receiue him, with a ſumptuous and coſtly banket made at the coſt of the Baſha for the captaine and his retinue, who after he is well refreſhed departeth toward the caſtle of Cairo to ſalute the Baſha, who receiuing him with great ioy and gladneſſe in token of good wil preſenteth him with a garment of cloth of golde very rich: and the captaine taking the Alcaron out of the cheſt preſenteth it to the Baſha, who hauing kiſſed it, commandeth to lay it vp againe. Some there are which affirme, that being arriued at Cairo, they kill that goodly camell which carried the Alcaron, and eate him; which is nothing ſo: for they are ſo ſuperſtitious to the contrary, that to gaine all the world they would not kill him. But if by caſualty he ſhould die, in this caſe happy and bleſſed they thinke themſelues, which can get a morſell to eat. And thus much concerning the voyage of the captaine of the carouan of Cairo.

The voyage and trauell of M. Caſar Fredericke, Marchant of Venice, into the Eaſt India, and beyond the Indies. Wherein are conteined the cuſtomes and rites of thoſe countries, the merchandiſes and commodities, aſwell of golde and ſiluer, as ſpices, drugges, pearles, and other iewels: tranſlated out of Italian by M. Thomas Hickocke.

Cæſar Fredericke to the Reader.

I Hauing (gentle Reader) for the ſpace of eighteene yeeres continually coaſted and trauelled, as it were, all the Eaſt Indies, and many other countreys beyond the Indies, wherein I haue had both good and ill ſucceſſe in my trauels: and hauing ſeene & vnderſtood many things woorthy the noting, and to be knowen to all the world, the which were neuer as yet written of any: I thought it good (ſeeing the Almighty had giuen me grace, after ſo long perils in paſsing ſuch a long voyage to returne into mine owne countrey, the noble city of Venice) I ſay, I thought it good, as briefly as I could, to write and ſet forth this voyage made by me, with the maruellous things I haue ſeene in my trauels in the Indies: The mighty Princes that gouerne thoſe countreys, their religion and faith that they haue, the rites and cuſtomes which they vſe, and liue by, of the diuers ſucceſſe that happened vnto me, and how many of theſe countreys are abounding with ſpices, drugs, and iewels, giuing alſo profitable aduertiſement to all thoſe that haue a deſire to make ſuch a voyage. And becauſe that the whole world may more commodiouſly reioyce at this my trauell, I haue cauſed it to be printed in this order: and now I preſent it vnto you (gentle & louing Readers) to whom for the varieties of things heerein conteined, I hope that it ſhall be with great delight receiued. And thus God of his goodneſſe keepe you.

Cæſar Fredericke trauelled eighteene yeeres in the Eaſt Indies.

A voyage to the Eaſt Indies, and beyond the Indies, &c.

In the yere of our Lord God 1563, I Cæſar Fredericke being in Venice, and very deſirous to ſee the Eaſt parts of the world, ſhipped my ſelfe in a ſhippe called the Gradaige of Venice, with certaine marchandiſe, gouerned by M. Iacomo Vatica, which was bound to Cyprus with his ſhip, with whom I went: and when we were arriued in Cyprus, I left that ſhip, and went in a leſſer to Tripoly in Soria, where I ſtayed a while. Afterward I tooke my iourney to Alepo, and there I acquainted my ſelfe with marchants of Armenia, and Moores, that were marchants, and conſorted to go with them to Ormus, and wee departed from Alepo, and in two dayes iourney and a halfe, wee came to a city called Bir.

The authours going frō Venice to Cyprus and Tripoly.

Of the city called Bir.

Bir is a ſmall city very ſcarſe of all maner of victuals, and nere vnto the walles of the city runneth the riuer of Euphrates. In this city the marchants diuide themſelues into companies, according to their merchandiſe that they haue, and there either they buy or make a boat to carry them and their goods to Babylon downe the riuer Euphrates, with charge of a maſter and mariners to conduct the boat in the voyage: theſe boats are in a maner flat bottomed, yet they be very ſtrong: and for all that they are ſo ſtrong, they will ſerue but for one voyage. They are made according to the ſholowneſſe of the riuer, becauſe that the riuer is in many places full of great ſtones, which greatly hinder and trouble thoſe that goe downe the riuer. Theſe boats ſerue but for one voyage downe the riuer vnto a village called Feluchia, becauſe it is impoſſible to bring them vp the riuer backe againe. At Feluchia the marchants plucke their boats in pieces, or elſe ſell them for a ſmall price; for that at Bir they coſt the marchants forty or fifty chickens a piece, and they ſel them at Feluchia for ſeuen or eight chickens a piece, becauſe that when the marchants returne from Babylon backe againe, if they haue marchandiſe or goods that oweth cuſtome, then they make their returne in forty dayes thorow the wilderneſſe, paſſing that way with a great deale leſſer charges then the other way. And if they haue not marchandiſe that oweth cuſtome, then they goe by the way of Moſul, where it coſteth them great charges both the Carouan and company.

company. From Bir where the marchants imbarke themſelues to Feluchia ouer againſt Babylon, if the riuer haue good ſtore of water, they ſhall make their voyage in fifteene or eighteene dayes downe the riuer, and if the water be lowe, and it hath not rained, then it is much trouble, and it will be forty or fifty dayes iourney downe, becauſe that when the barks ſtrike on the ſtones that be in the riuer, then they muſt vnlade them, which is great trouble, and then lade them againe when they haue mended them: therefore it is not neceſſary, neither doe the marchants go with one boat alone, but with two or three, that if one boat ſplit and be loſt with ſtriking on the ſholdes, they may haue another ready to take in their goods, vntill ſuch time as they haue mended the broke boat, and if they draw the broken boat on land to mend her, it is hard to defend her in the night from the great multitude of Arabians that will come downe there to robbe you: and in the riuers euery night, when you make faſt your boat to the banckeſide, you muſt keepe good watch againſt the Arabians which are theeues in number like to ants, yet when they come to robbe, they will not kill, but ſteale & run away. Harquebuzes are very good weapons againſt them, for that they ſtand greatly in feare of the ſhot. And as you paſſe the riuer Euphrates from Bir to Feluchia, there are certein places which you muſt paſſe by, where you pay cuſtome certaine medines vpon a bale, which cuſtome is belonging to the ſonne of Aboriſe king of the Arabians and of the deſert, who hath certaine cities and villages on the riuer Euphrates.

The Arabian theeues are in number like to Ants.

Feluchia and Babylon.

Feluchia is a village where they that come from Bir doe vnbarke themſelues and vnlade their goods, and it is diſtant from Babylon a dayes iourney and an halfe by land: Babylon is no great city, but it is very populous, and of great trade of ſtrangers becauſe it is a great thorowfare for Perſia, Turkia, and Arabia: and very often times there goe out from thence Carouans into diuers countreys: and the city is very copious of victuals, which comme out of Armenia downe the riuer of Tygris, on certaine Zattares or Raffes made of blowen hides or ſkinnes called Vtrij. This riuer Tygris doeth waſh the walles of the city. Theſe Raffes are bound faſt together, and then they lay boards on the aforeſayd blowen ſkinnes, and on the boards they lade the commodities, and ſo come they to Babylon where they vnlade them, and being vnladen, they let out the winde out of the ſkinnes, and lade them on cammels to make another voyage. This city of Babylon is ſituate in the kingdome of Perſia, but now gouerned by the Turks. On the other ſide of the riuer towards Arabia, ouer againſt the city, there is a faire place or towne, and in it a faire Bazarro for marchãts, with very many lodgings, where the greateſt part of the marchants ſtrangers wich come to Babylon do lie with their marchandize. The paſſing ouer Tygris from Babylon to this Borough is by a long bridge made of boates chained together with great chaines: prouided, that when the riuer wareth great with the abundance of raine that falleth, then they open the bridge in the middle, where the one halfe of the bridge falleth to the walles of Babylon, and the other to the brinks of this Borough, on the other ſide of the riuer: and as long as the bridge is open, they paſſe the riuer in ſmall boats with great danger, becauſe of the ſmalneſſe of the boats, and the ouerlading of them, that with the fierceneſſe of the ſtreame they be ouerthrowen, or els the ſtreame doth cary them away, ſo that by this meanes, many people are loſt and drowned: this thing by proofe I haue many times ſeene.

The olde Babylon hath great trade wᵗ marchants ſtill.

A bridge made of boats.

Of the tower of Babylon.

The Tower of Nimrod or Babel is ſituate on that ſide of Tygris that Arabia is, and in a very great plaine diſtant from Babylon ſeuen or eight miles: which tower is ruinated on euery ſide, and with the falling of it there is made a great mountaine: ſo that it hath no forme at all, yet there is a great part of it ſtanding, which is compaſſed and almoſt couered with the aforeſayd fallings: this Tower was builded and made of foureſquare Brickes, which Brickes were made of earth, and dried in the Sunne in maner and forme following: firſt they layed a lay of Brickes, then a Mat made of Canes, ſquare as the Brickes, and in ſtead of lime, they daubed it with earth: theſe Mats of Canes are at this time ſo ſtrong, that it is a thing woonderfull to beholde, being of ſuch great antiquity: I haue gone round about it, and haue not found any place where there hath bene any doore or entrance: it may be in my iudgement in circuit about a mile, and rather leſſe then more.

Theſe bricks be in thicknes ſix or ſeuen inches, and a foot & a halfe ſquare.

This Tower in effect is contrary to all other things which are ſeene afar off, for they ſeeme ſmall, & the more nere a man commeth to them the bigger they be: but this tower afar off ſeemeth a very great thing, and the nerer you come to it the leſſer. My iudgement & reaſon of this is, that becauſe the Tower is ſet in a very great plaine, and hath nothing more about to make any ſhew ſauing the ruines of it which it hath made round about, and for this reſpect deſcrying it a farre off, that piece of the Tower which yet ſtandeth with the mountaine that is made of the ſubſtance that hath fallen from it, maketh a greater ſhew then you ſhall finde comming neere to it.

Babylon and Baſora.

FRom Babylon I departed for Baſora, ſhipping my ſelfe in one of the barks that vſe to go in the riuer Tigris from Babylon to Baſora, and from Baſora to Babylon: which barks are made after the maner of Fuſts or Galliots with a Speron and a couered poope: they haue no pumpe in them becauſe of the great abundance of pitch which they haue to pitch them with all: which pitch they haue in abundance two dayes iourney from Babylon. Nere vnto the riuer Euphrates, there is a city called Heit, nere vnto which city there is a great plaine full of pitch, very maruellous to beholde, and a thing almoſt incredible, that out of a hole in the earth, which continually throweth out pitch into the aire with continuall ſmoake, this pitch is throwen with ſuch force, that being hot it falleth like as it were ſprinckled ouer all the plaine, in ſuch abundance that the plaine is alwayes full of pitch: the Mores and the Arabians of that place ſay, that that hole is the mouth of hell: and in trueth, it is a thing very notable to be marked: and by this pitch the whole people haue great benefit to pitch their barks, which barks they call Daneck and Saffin. When the riuer of Tygris is well repleniſhed with water, you may paſſe from Babylon to Baſora in eight or nine dayes, and ſometimes more and ſometimes leſſe: we were halfe ſo much more which is 14 or 15 daies, becauſe the waters were low: they may ſaile day & night, and there are ſome places in this way where you pay ſo many medins on a baile: if the waters be lowe, it is 18 dayes iourney.

This hole whereout cõmeth this pitch is moſt true, and the water & pitch runneth into the valley or Iland where the pitch reſteth, & the water runneth into the riuer Euphrates, and it maketh all the riuer to be as it were brackiſh with the ſmell of pitch and brimſtone.

Baſora.

BAſora is a city of the Arabians, which of olde time was gouerned by thoſe Arabians called Zizarij, but now it is gouerned by the great Turke where he keepeth an army to his great charges.

Zizarij, an ancient people.

The Arabians called Zizarij haue the poſſeſſion of a great countrey, and cannot be ouercome of the Turke, becauſe that the ſea hath diuided their countrey into an Iland by channels with the ebbing and flowing of the ſea, and for that cauſe the Turke cannot bring an army againſt them, neither by ſea nor by land, and another reaſon is, the inhabitants of that Iland are very ſtrong and warlike men. A dayes iourney before you come to Baſora, you ſhall haue a little caſtle or fort, which is ſet on that point of the land where the riuers of Euphrates and Tygris meet together, and the caſtle is called Corna: at this point, the two riuers make a monſtrous great riuer, that runneth into the ſea, which is called the gulfe of Perſia, which is towards the South: Baſora is diſtant from the ſea fifteene miles, and it is a city of great trade of ſpices and drugges which come from Ormus. Alſo there is great ſtore of corne, Rice, and Dates, which the countrey doth yeeld. I ſhipped my ſelfe in Baſora to go for Ormus, and ſo we ſailed thorow the Perſian ſea ſix hundred miles, which is the diſtance from Baſora to Ormus, and we ſailed in ſmall ſhips made of boards, bound together with ſmall cords or ropes, and in ſtead of calking they lay betweene euery board certaine ſtraw which they haue, and ſo they ſowe board and board together, with the ſtraw betweene, wherethorow there commeth much water, and they are very dangerous. Departing from Baſora we paſſed 200 miles with the ſea on our right hand, along the gulfe, vntil at length we arriued at an Iland called Carichij, fro whẽce we ſailed to Ormus in ſight of the Perſian ſhore on the left ſide, and on the right ſide towards Arabia we diſcouered infinite Ilands.

At the caſtle of Corna the riuer Euphrates and Tygris do meet.

Ormus is the barrenneſt Iland in all the world.

Carichij an Iland in ẏ gulfe of Perſia.

Ormus.

ORmus is an Iland in circuit fiue and twenty or thirty miles, and it is the barreneſt and moſt drie Iland in all the world, becauſe that in it there is nothing to be had, but ſalt water, and wood, all other things neceſſary for mans life are brought out of Perſia twelue miles off, and out of other Ilands neere thereunto adioyning, in ſuch abundance and quantity, that the city is alwayes repleniſhed with all maner of ſtore: there is ſtanding neere vnto the waters ſide a very faire caſtell, in the which the captaine of the king of Portugall is alwayes reſident with a good band of Portugalles, and before this caſtell is a very faire proſpect: in the city dwell the maried men, ſouldiers and marchants of euery nation, amongſt whom there are Moores and Gentiles. In this city there is very great trade for all ſorts of ſpices, drugges, ſilke, cloth of ſilke, brocar-

Ormus is alwayes repleniſhed with abundance of victuall, and yet there is none that groweth in the Iland.

Great trade of merchandiſe in Ormus.

do, and diuers other ſorts of marchandiſe come out of Perſia: and amongſt all other trades of merchandiſe, the trade of Horſes is very great there, which they carry from thence into the Indies. This Iland hath a Moore king of the race of the Perſians, who is created and made king by the Captaine of the caſtle, in the name of the king of Portugall. At the creation of this king I was there, and ſaw the ceremonies that they vſe in it, which are as followeth. The olde King being dead, the Captaine of the Portugals chuſeth another of the blood royall, and maketh this election in the caſtle with great ceremonies, and when hee is elected, the Captaine ſweareth him to be true and faithfull to the King of Portugall, as his Lord and Gouernour, and then he giueth him the Scepter regall. After this with great feaſting & pompe, and with great company, he is brought into the royall palace in the city. This King keepeth a good traine, and hath ſufficient reuenues to maintaine himſelfe without troubling of any, becauſe the Captaine of the caſtle doeth mainteine and defend his right, and when that the Captaine and he ride together, he is honoured as a king, yet he cannot ride abroad with his traine, without the conſent of the Captaine firſt had: it behooueth them to doe this, and it is neceſſary, becauſe of the great trade that is in the city: their proper language is the Perſian tongue. There I ſhipped my ſelfe to goe for Goa, a city in the Indies, in a ſhippe that had fourescore horſes in her. This is to aduertiſe thoſe Marchants that go from Ormus to Goa to ſhippe themſelues in thoſe ſhippes that carry horſes, becauſe euery ſhippe that carrieth twenty horſes or vpwards is priuileged, that all the marchandiſe whatſoeuer they carry ſhall pay no cuſtome, whereas the ſhippes that carry no horſes are bound to pay eight per cento of all the goods they bring.

A priuilege for Marchants.

Goa, Diu, and Cambaia.

GOa is the principall city that the Portugals haue in the Indies, where is reſident the Viceroy with his Court and miniſters of the King of Portugall. From Ormus to Goa is nine hundred foure ſcore and ten miles diſtance, in which paſſage the firſt city that you come to in the Indies, is called Diu, and is ſituate in a little Iland in the kingdome of Cambaia, which is the greateſt ſtrength that the Portugals haue in all the Indies, yet a ſmall city, but of great trade, becauſe there they lade very many great ſhips for the ſtraights of Mecca and Ormus with marchandiſe, and theſe ſhippes belong to the Moores and Chriſtians, but the Moores can not trade neither ſaile into thoſe ſeas without the licence of the Viceroy of the king of Portugall, otherwiſe they are taken and made good priſes. The marchandiſe that they lade theſe ſhips withall commeth frō Cambaietta a port in the kingdome of Cambaia, which they bring from thence in ſmall barks, becauſe there can no great ſhippes come thither, by reaſon of the ſholdneſſe of the water thereabouts, and theſe ſholds are an hundred or fourescore miles about in a ſtraight or gulfe, which they call Macareo, which is as much to ſay, as a race of a tide, becauſe the waters there run out of that place without meaſure, ſo that there is no place like to it, vnleſſe it be in the kingdome of Pegu, where there is another Macareo, where the waters run out with more force then theſe doe. The principall city in Cambaia is called Amadauar, it is a dayes iourney and an halfe from Cambaietta, it is a very great city and very populous, and for a city of the Gentiles it is very well made and builded with faire houſes and large ſtreets, with a faire place in it with many ſhippes, and in ſhew like to Cairo, but not ſo great: alſo Cambaietta is ſituate on the ſeas ſide, and is a very faire city. The time that I was there, the city was in great calamity & ſcarſeneſſe, ſo that I haue ſeene the men of the countrey that were Gentiles take their children, their ſonnes and their daughters, and haue deſired the Portugals to buy them, and I haue ſeene them ſolde for eight or ten larines a piece, which may be of our money x.s. or xiiii.s. iiii.d. For all this, if I had not ſeene it, I could not haue beleeued that there ſhould be ſuch a trade at Cambaietta as there is: for in the time of euery new Moone and euery full Moone, the ſmall barks (innumerable) come in and out, for at thoſe times of the Moone the tides and waters are higher then at other times they be. Theſe barkes be laden with all ſorts of ſpices, with ſilke of China, with Sandols, with Elephants teeth, Veluets of Vercini, great quantity of Pannina, which commeth from Mecca, Chickinos which be pieces of golde worth ſeuen ſhillings a piece ſterling, with money, and with diuers ſorts of other marchandize. Alſo theſe barks lade out, as it were, an infinite quantity of cloth made of Bumbaſt of all ſorts, as white ſtamped and painted, with great quantity of Indico, dried ginger & conſerued, Myrabolans drie and condite, Boraſo in paſte, great ſtore of ſugar, great quantity of Cotton, abundance of Opium, Aſſa Fetida, Puchio, with many other ſorts of drugges, turbants made in Dui, great ſtones like to Corneolaes, Granats, Agats, Diaſpry, Calcidonij, Hematiſts, and ſome kinde of naturall Diamonds. There is in the city of Cambaietta an order, but no man is bound to keepe it, but they that will;

Diu.

but all the Portugall marchants keepe it, the which is this. There are in this city certaine Brokers which are Gentiles and of great authority, and haue euery one of them fifteene or twenty ſeruants, and the Marchants that vſe that countrey haue their Brokers, with which they be ſerued: and they that haue not bene there are informed by their friends of the order, and of what broker they ſhall be ſerued. Now euery fifteene dayes (as aboue ſayd) that the fleet of ſmall ſhippes entreth into the port, the Brokers come to the water ſide, and theſe Marchants aſſoone as they are come on land, do giue the cargaſon of all their goods to that Broker that they will haue to do their buſineſſe for them, with the marks of all the fardles and packs they haue: and the marchant hauing taken on land all his furniture for his houſe, becauſe it is needfull that the Marchants that trade to the Indies cary prouiſion of houſholde with them, becauſe that in euery place where they they come they muſt haue a new houſe, the Broker that hath receiued his cargaſon, commandeth his ſeruants to carry the Marchants furniture for his houſe home, and load it on ſome cart, and carry it into the city, where the Brokers haue diuers empty houſes meet for the lodging of Marchants, furniſhed onely with bedſteds, tables, chaires, and empty iarres for water: then the Broker ſayth to the Marchant, Goe and repoſe your ſelfe, and take your reſt in the city. The Broker tarrieth at the water ſide with the cargaſon, and cauſeth all his goods to be diſcharged out of the ſhip, and payeth the cuſtome, and cauſeth it to be brought into the houſe where the marchant lieth, the Marchant not knowing any thing thereof, neither cuſtome, nor charges. Theſe goods being brought to this paſſe into the houſe of the Marchant, the Broker demandeth of the Marchant if he haue any deſire to ſell his goods or marchandiſe, at the priſes that ſuch wares are worth at that preſent time: And if he hath a deſire to ſell his goods preſently, then at that inſtant the Broker ſelleth them away. After this the Broker ſayth to the Marchant, you haue ſo much of euery ſort of marchandiſe neat and cleare of euery charge, and ſo much ready money. And if the Marchant will imploy his money in other commodities, then the Broker telleth him that ſuch and ſuch commodities will coſt ſo much, put aboord without any maner of charges. The Marchant vnderſtanding the effect, maketh his account; and if he thinke to buy or ſell at the priſes currant, he giueth order to make his marchandiſe away: and if he hath commodity for 20000 duckets, all ſhalbe barred or ſolde away in fifteene dayes without any care or trouble: and when as the Marchant thinketh that he cannot ſell his goods at the priſe currant, he may tary as long as he will, but they cannot be ſolde by any man but by that Broker that hath taken them on land and payed the cuſtome: and perchance tarying ſometimes for ſale of their commodity, they make good profit, and ſometimes loſſe: but thoſe marchandiſe that come not ordinarily euery fifteene dayes, in tarying for the ſale of them, there is great profit. The barks that lade in Cambaietta go for Diu to lade the ſhips that go from thence for the ſtreights of Mecca and Ormus, and ſome go to Chaul and Goa: and theſe ſhips be very wel appointed, or els are guarded with the Armada of the Portugals, for that there are many Corſaries or Pyrats which goe courſing alongſt that coaſt, robbing and ſpoiling: and for feare of theſe theeues there is no ſafe ſailing in thoſe ſeas, but with ſhips very well appointed and armed, or els with the fleet of the Portugals, as is aforeſayd. In fine, the kingdome of Cambaia is a place of great trade, and hath much doings and traffique with all men, although hitherto it hath bene in the hands of tyrants, becauſe that at 75 yeeres of age the true king being at the aſſault of Diu, was there ſlaine; whoſe name Sultan Badu. At that time foure or fiue captaines of the army diuided the kingdome amongſt themſelues, and euery one of them ſhewed in his countrey what tyranny he could: but twelue yeeres ago the great Mogol a Moore king of Agra and Delly, forty dayes iourny within the land of Amadauar, became the gouernour of all the kingdome of Cambaia without any reſiſtance, becauſe he being of great power and force, deuiſing which way to enter the land with his people, there was not any man that would make him any reſiſtance, although they were tyrants and a beaſtly people, they were ſoone brought vnder obedience. During the time I dwelt in Cambaietta I ſaw very maruellous things: there were an infinite number of artificers that made bracelets called Manij, or bracelets of elephants teeth, of diuers colours, for the women of the Gentiles, which haue their armes full decked with them. And in this occupation there are ſpent euery yeere many thouſands of crownes: the reaſon whereof is this, that when there dieth any whatſoeuer of their kindred, then in ſigne and token of mourning and ſorrow, they breake all their bracelets from their armes, and preſently they go and buy new againe, becauſe that they had rather be without their meat then without their bracelets.

Marchants that trauell to the Indies muſt cary their prouiſion of houſhold with thē.

Great ſtore of men of warre and rouers on the coaſt of Cambaia.

A marueilous fond delight in women.

Daman. Baſan. Tana.

Hauing paſſed Diu, I came to the ſecond city that the Portugals haue, called Daman, ſituate in the territory of Cambaia, diſtant from Diu an hundred and twenty miles: it is no towne of merchandiſe, ſaue Rice and corne, and hath many villages vnder it, where in time of peace the Portugals take their pleaſure, but in time of warre the enemies haue the ſpoile of them; in ſuch wiſe that the Portugals haue little benefit by them. Next vnto Daman you ſhall haue Baſan, which is a filthy place in reſpect of Daman: in this place is Rice, Corne, and Timber to make ſhippes and gallies. And a ſmall diſtance beyond Baſan is a little Iland called Tana, a place very populous with Portugals, Moores, and Gentiles: theſe haue nothing but Rice, there are many makers of Armeſine, and weauers of girdles of wooll and bumbaſt blacke and redde like to Moocharies.

Tana an Iland whereof Odoricus writeth, pag 41.

Of the cities of Chaul, and of the Palmer tree.

BEyond this Iland you ſhall finde Chaul in the firme land; and they are two cities, one of the Portugals, and the other of the Moores: that city which the Portugals haue is ſituate lower then the other, and gouerneth the mouth of the harbour, and is very ſtrongly walled: and as it were a mile and an halfe diſtant from this is the city of Moores, gouerned by their king Zamalluco. In the time of warres there cannot any great ſhips come to the city of the Moores, becauſe the Portugals with their ordinance will ſincke them, for that they muſt perforce paſſe by the caſtles of the Portugals: both the cities are ports of the ſea, and are great cities, and haue vnto them great traffique and trade of merchandiſe, of all ſorts of ſpices, drugges, ſilke, cloth of ſilke, Sandols, Marſine, Verſine, Porcelane of China, Veluets and Scarlets that come from Portugall, and from Meca: with many other ſortes of merchandiſe. There come euery yeere from Cochin, and from Cananor tenne or fifteene great ſhippes laden with great Nuts cured, and with Sugar made of the ſelfe ſame Nuts called Giagra: the tree whereon theſe Nuts doe grow is called the Palmer tree: and thorowout all the Indies, and eſpecially from this place to Goa, there is great abundance of them, and it is like to the Date tree. In the whole world there is not a tree more profitable and of more goodneſſe then this tree is, neither doe men reape ſo much benefit of any other tree as they do of this, there is not any part of it but ſerueth for ſome vſe, and none of it is worthy to be burnt. With the timber of this tree they make ſhippes without the mixture of any other tree, and with the leaues thereof they make ſailes, and with the fruit thereof, which be a kinde of Nuts, they make wine, and of the wine they make Sugar and Placetto, which wine they gather in the ſpring of the yeere: out of the middle of the tree where continually there goeth or runneth out white liquour like vnto water, in that time of the yeere they put a veſſell vnder euery tree, and euery euening and morning they take it away full, and then diſtilling it with fire it maketh a very ſtrong liquour: and then they put it into buts, with a quantity of Zibibbo, white or blacke and in ſhort time it is made a perfect wine. After this they make of the Nuts great ſtore of oile: of the tree they make great quantity of boordes and quarters for buildings. Of the barke of this tree they make cables, ropes, and other furniture for ſhippes, and, as they ſay, theſe ropes be better then they that are made of Hempe. They make of the bowes, bedſteds, after the Indies faſhion, and Scauaſches for merchandiſe. The leaues they cut very ſmall, and weaue them, and ſo make ſailes of them, for all maner of ſhipping, or els very fine mats. And then the firſt rinde of the Nut they ſtampe, and make thereof perfect Ockam to calke ſhippes, great and ſmall: and of the hard barke thereof they make ſpoones and other veſſels for meat, in ſuch wiſe that there is no part thereof throwen away or caſt to the fire. When theſe Nuts be greene they are full of an excellent ſweet water to drinke: and if a man be thirſty, with the liquour of one of the Nuts he may ſatiſfie himſelfe: and as this Nut ripeneth, the liquor thereof turneth all to kernell. There goeth out of Chaul for Mallaca, for the Indies, for Macao, for Portugall, for the coaſts of Melinde, for Ormus, as it were an infinite number and quantity of goods and merchandiſe that come out of the kingdome of Cambaia, as cloth of bumbaſt white, painted, printed, great quantity of Indico, Opium, Cotton, Silke of euery ſort, great ſtore of Boraſo in Paſte, great ſtore of Fetida, great ſtore of yron, corne, and other merchandiſe. The Moore king Zamalluco is of great power, as one that at need may command, & hath in his camp, two hundred thouſand men of warre, and hath great ſtore of artillery, ſome of them made in pieces, which for their greatneſſe can not bee carried to and fro: yet although they bee made in pieces, they are ſo commodious that they worke with them maruellous well, whoſe ſhotte is of ſtone, and there hath bene of that ſhot ſent vnto the king of Portugall for the rareneſſe of the thing. The city where the king Zamalluco hath his being, is within the land of Chaul ſeuen or eight dayes iourney, which city is called Abneger. Threeſcore and tenne miles from Chaul, towards the Indies, is the port of Dabul, an hauen of the king Zamallaco: from thence to Goa is an hundred and fifty miles.

Great ordinance made in pieces, and yet ſeruiceable.

Goa.

Goa is the principall city that the Portugals haue in the Indies, wherein the Viceroy with his royall Court is reſident, and is in an Iland which may be in circuit fiue and twenty or thirty miles: and the city with the boroughs is reaſonable bigge, and for a citie of the Indies it is reaſonable faire, but the Iland is farre more fairer: for it is as it were full of goodly gardens, repleniſhed with diuers trees and with the Palmer trees as is aforeſayd. This city is of great trafique for all ſorts of marchandiſe which they trade withall in thoſe parts: and the fleet which commeth euery yeere from Portugall, which are fiue or ſixe great ſhippes that come directly for Goa, arriue there ordinarily the ſixth or tenth of September, and there they remaine forty or fifty dayes, and from thence they goe to Cochin, where they lade for Portugall, and often times they lade one ſhippe at Goa and the other at Cochin for Portugall. Cochin is diſtant from Goa three hundred miles. The city of Goa is ſituate in the kingdome of Dialcan a king of the Moores, whoſe chiefe city is vp in the countrey eight dayes iourney, and is called Biſapor: this king is of great power, for when I was in Goa in the yeere of our Lord 1570, this king came to giue aſſault to Goa, being encamped neere vnto it by a riuer ſide with an army of two hundred thouſand men of warre, and he lay at this ſiege foureteene moneths: in which time there was peace concluded, and as report went amongſt his people, there was great calamity and mortality which bred amongſt them in the time of Winter, and alſo killed very many elephants. Then in the yeere of our Lord 1567. I went from Goa to Bezeneger the chiefe city of the kingdome of Narſinga eight dayes iourney from Goa, within the land, in the company of two other merchants which carried with them three hundred Arabian horſes to that king: becauſe the horſes of that countrey are of a ſmall ſtature, and they pay well for the Arabian horſes: and it is requiſite that the merchants ſell them well, for that they ſtand them in great charges to bring them out of Perſia to Ormus, and from Ormus to Goa, where the ſhip that bringeth twenty horſes and vpwards payeth no cuſtome, neither ſhip nor goods whatſoeuer; whereas if they bring no horſes, they pay 8 per cento of all their goods: and at the going out of Goa the horſes pay cuſtome, two and forty pagodies for euery horſe, which pagody may be of ſterling money ſixe ſhillings eight pence, they be pieces of golde of that value. So that the Arabian horſes are of great value in thoſe countreys, as 300, 400, 500 duckets a horſe, and to 1000 duckets a horſe.

The chiefe place the Portugals haue in the Indies.

A very good ſale for horſes.

Bezeneger.

The city of Bezeneger was ſacked in the yeere 1565, by foure kings of the Moores, which were of great power and might: the names of theſe foure kings were theſe following, the firſt was called Dialcan, the ſecond Zamaluc, the third Cotamaluc, and the fourth Viridy: and yet theſe foure kings were not able to ouercome this city and the king of Bezeneger, but by treaſon. This king of Bezeneger was a Gentile, and had, amongſt all other of his captaines, two which were notable, and they were Moores: and theſe two captaines had either of them in charge threeſcore and ten or fourescore thouſand men. Theſe two captaines being of one religion with the foure kings which were Moores, wrought meanes with them to betray their owne king into their hands. The king of Bezeneger eſteemed not the force of the foure kings his enemies, but went out of his city to wage battell with them in the fieldes; and when the armies were ioyned, the battell laſted but a while not the ſpace of foure houres, becauſe the two traitourous captaines, in the chiefeſt of the fight, with their companies turned their faces againſt their king, and made ſuch diſorder in his army, that as aſtonied they ſet themſelues to flight. Thirty yeeres was this kingdome gouerned by three brethren which were tyrants, the which keeping the rightfull king in priſon, it was their vſe euery yeere once to ſhew him to the people, and they at their pleaſures ruled as they liſted. Theſe brethren were three captaines belonging to the father of the king they kept in priſon, which when he died, left his ſonne very yong, and then they tooke the gouernment to themſelues. The chiefeſt of theſe three was called Ramaragio, and ſate in the royall throne, and was called the king: the ſecond was called Temiragio, and he tooke the gouernment on him: the third was called Bengatre, and he was captaine generall of the army. Theſe three brethren were in this battell, in the which the chiefeſt and the laſt were neuer heard of quicke nor dead. Onely Temiragio fled in the battel, hauing loſt one of his eyes: when the newes came to the city of the ouerthrow in the battell, the wiues and children of theſe three tyrants, with their lawfull king (kept priſoner) fled away, ſpoiled as they were, & the foure kings of the Moores entred the city Bezeneger with great triumph, & there they remained ſixe moneths, ſearching vnder houſes & in all places for money & other things that were hidden, and then they departed to their owne kingdomes, becauſe they were not able to maintaine ſuch a kingdome as that was, ſo farre diſtant from their owne countrey.

An excellent good policy to intrap men.

When the kings were departed from Bezeneger, this Temiragio returned to the city, and then beganne for to repopulate it, and ſent word to Goa to the Merchants, if they had any horſes, to bring them to him, and he would pay well for them, and for this cauſe the aforeſayd two Merchants that I went in company withall, carried thoſe horſes that they had to Bezeneger. Alſo this Tyrant made an order or lawe, that if any Merchant had any of the horſes that were taken in the aforeſayd battell or warres, although they were of his owne marke, that he would giue as much for them as they would: and beſide he gaue generall ſafe conduct to all that ſhould bring them. When by this meanes he ſaw that there were great ſtore of horſes brought thither unto him, hee gaue the Merchants faire wordes, untill ſuch time as he ſaw they could bring no more. Then he licenced the Merchants to depart, without giuing them any thing for their horſes, which when the poore men ſaw, they were deſperate, and as it were mad with ſorrow and griefe.

I reſted in Bezeneger ſeuen moneths, although in one moneth I might haue diſcharged all my buſineſſe, for it was neceſſary to reſt there untill the wayes were cleere of theeues, which at that time ranged up and downe. And in the time I reſted there, I ſaw many ſtrange and beaſtly deeds done by the Gentiles. Firſt, when there is any Noble man or woman dead, they burne their bodies: and if a married man die, his wife muſt burne herſelfe aliue, for the loue of her husband, and with the body of her husband: ſo that when any man dieth, his wife will take a moneths leaue, two or three, or as ſhee will, to burne her ſelfe in, and that day being come, wherein ſhee ought to be burnt, that morning ſhee goeth out of her houſe very earely, either on horſebacke or on an eliphant, or elſe is borne by eight men on a ſmal ſtage: in one of theſe orders ſhe goeth, being apparelled like to a Bride, carried round about the City, with her haire downe about her ſhoulders, garniſhed with iewels and flowers, according to the eſtate of the party, and they goe with as great ioy as Brides doe in Venice to their nuptials: ſhee carrieth in her left hand a looking glaſſe, and in her right hand an arrow, and ſingeth thorow the City as ſhe paſſeth, and ſayth, that ſhe goeth to ſleepe with her deere ſpowſe and husband. She is accompanied with her kindred and friends untill it be one or two of the clocke in the afternoone, then they goe out of the City, and going along the riuers ſide called Nigondin, which runneth under the walles of the City, untill they come unto a place where they uſe to make this burning of women, being widdowes, there is prepared in this place a great ſquare caue, with a little pinnacle hard by it, foure or fiue ſteppes up: the foreſayd caue is full of dried wood. The woman being come thither, accompanied with a great number of people which come to ſee the thing, then they make ready a great banquet, and ſhe that ſhall be burned eateth with as great ioy and gladneſſe, as though it were her wedding day: and the feaſt being ended, then they goe to dancing and ſinging a certeine time, according as ſhe will. After this, the woman of her owne accord, commandeth them to make the fire in the ſquare caue where the drie wood is, and when it is kindled, they come and certifie her thereof, then preſently ſhe leaueth the feaſt, and taketh the neereſt kinſeman of her husband by the hand, and they both goe together to the banke of the foreſayd riuer, where ſhee putteth off all her iewels and all her clothes, and giueth them to her parents or kinſefolke, and couering herſelfe with a cloth, becauſe ſhe will not be ſeene of the people being naked, ſhe throweth herſelfe into the riuer, ſaying: O wretches, waſh away your ſinnes. Comming out of the water, ſhe rowleth herſelfe into a yellow cloth of fourteene braces long: and againe ſhe taketh her husbands kinſeman by the hand, and they go both together up to the pinnacle of the ſquare caue wherein the fire is made. When ſhe is on the pinnacle, ſhee talketh and reaſoneth with the people, recommending unto them her children and kindred. Before the pinnacle they uſe to ſet a mat, becauſe they ſhall not ſee the fierceneſſe of the fire, yet there are many that will haue them plucked away, ſhewing therein an heart not fearefull, and that they are not affrayd of that ſight. When this ſilly woman hath reaſoned with the people a good while to her content, there is another woman that taketh a pot with oile, and ſprinckleth it ouer her head, and with the ſame ſhe anoynteth all her body, and afterwards throweth the pot into the fornace, and both the woman and the pot goe together into the fire, and preſently the people that are round about the fornace throw after her into the caue great pieces of wood, ſo by this meanes, with the fire and with the blowes that ſhe hath with the wood throwen after her, ſhe is quickly dead, and after this there groweth ſuch ſorrow and ſuch lamentacion among the people, that all their mirth is turned into howling and weeping, in ſuch wiſe, that a man could ſcarſe beare the hearing of it. I haue ſeene many burnt in this maner, becauſe my houſe was neere to the gate where they goe out to the place of burning: and when there dieth any great man, his wife with all his ſlaues with whom hee hath had carnall copulation, burne themſelues together with him. Alſo in this kingdome I haue ſeene amongſt the baſe ſort of people this vſe and order, that the man being dead, hee is carried to the place where they will make his ſepulchre, and ſetting him as it were vpright, then commeth his wife before him on her knees, caſting her armes about his necke, with imbracing and claſping him, vntill ſuch time as the Maſons haue made a wall round about them, and when the wall is as high as their neckes, there commeth a man behinde the woman and strangleth her: then when ſhe is dead, the workemen finiſh the wall ouer their heads, and ſo they lie buried both together. Beſides theſe, there are an infinite number of beaſtly qualities amongſt them, of which I haue no deſire to write. I was deſirous to know the cauſe why theſe women would ſo wilfully burne themſelues againſt nature and law, and it was tolde mee that this law was of an ancient time, to make prouiſion againſt the ſlaughters which women made of their huſbands. For in thoſe dayes before this law was made, the women for euery little diſpleaſure that their huſbands had done vnto them, would preſently poiſon their huſbands, and take other men, and now by reaſon of this law they are more faithfull vnto their huſbands, and count their liues as deare as their owne, becauſe that after his death her owne followeth preſently.

The cauſe why the women do ſo burne themſelues.

Penegonde.

In the yeere of our Lord God 1567, for the ill ſucceſſe that the people of Bezeneger had, in that their City was ſacked by the foure kings, the king with his Court went to dwell in a caſtle eight dayes iourney vp in the land from Bezeneger, called Penegonde. Alſo ſixe dayes iourney from Bezeneger, is the place where they get Diamants: I was not there, but it was tolde me that it is a great place, compaſſed with a wall, and that they ſell the earth within the wall, for ſo much a ſquadron, and the limits are ſet how deepe or how low they ſhall digge. Thoſe Diamants that are of a certeine ſiſe and bigger then that ſiſe are all for the king, it is many yeeres agone, ſince they got any there, for the troubles that haue beene in that kingdome. The firſt cauſe of this trouble was, becauſe the ſonne of this Temetagio had put to death the lawfull king which he had in priſon, for which cauſe the Barons and Noblemen in that kingdome would not acknowledge him to be their King, and by this meanes there are many kings, and great diuiſion in that kingdome, and the city of Bezeneger is not altogether deſtroyed, yet the houſes ſtand ſtill, but empty, and there is dwelling in them nothing, as is reported, but Tygers and other wilde beaſts. The circuit of this city is foure & twentie miles about, and within the walles are certeine mountaines. The houſes ſtand walled with earth, and plaine, all ſauing the three palaces of the three tyrant brethren, and the Pagodes which are idole houſes: theſe are made with lime and fine marble. I haue ſeene many kings Courts, and yet haue I ſeene none in greatneſſe like to this of Bezeneger, I ſay, for the order of his palace, for it hath nine gates or ports. Firſt when you goe into the place where the king did lodge, there are fiue great ports or gates: theſe are kept with Captaines and ſouldiers: then within theſe there are foure leſſer gates, which are kept with Porters. Without the firſt gate there is a little porch, where there is a Captaine with fiue and twenty ſouldiers, that keepeth watch and ward night and day: and within that another with the like guard, wherethorow they come to a very faire Court, and at the end of that Court there is another porch as the firſt, with the like guard, and within that another Court. And in this wiſe are the firſt fiue gates guarded and kept with thoſe Captaines: and then the leſſer gates within are kept with a guard of Porters: which gates ſtand open the greateſt part of the night, becauſe the cuſtome of the Gentiles is to doe their buſineſſe, and make their feaſts in the night, rather then by day. The city is very ſafe from theeues, for the Portugall merchants ſleepe in the ſtreets, or vnder porches, for the great heat which is there, and yet they neuer had any harme in the night. At the end of two moneths, I determined to go for Goa in the company of two other Portugall Marchants, which were making ready to depart, with two palanchines or little litters, which are very commodious for the way, with eight Falchines which are men hired to cary the palanchines, eight for a palanchine, foure at a time: they carry them as we vſe to carry barrowes. And I bought me two bullocks, one of them to ride on, and the other to carry my victuals and prouiſion, for in that countrey they ride on bullocks with pannels, as we terme them, girts and bridles, and they haue a very good commodious pace. From Bezeneger to Goa in Summer it is eight dayes iourney, but we went in the midſt of Winter, in the moneth of July, and were fifteene dayes comming to Ancola on the ſea coaſt, ſo in eight dayes I had loſt my two bullocks: for he that carried my victuals, was weake and could not goe, the other when I came vnto a riuer where was a little bridge to paſſe ouer, I put my bullocke to ſwimming, and in the middeſt of the riuer there was a little Iland, vnto the which my bullocke went, and finding paſture, there he remained ſtill, and in no wiſe we could come to him: and ſo perforce, I was forced to leaue him, and at that time there was much raine, and I was forced to go ſeuen dayes

a foot with great paines : and by great chance I met with Falchines by the way, whom I hired to carry my clothes and victuals. We had great trouble in our iourney, for that euery day wee were taken priſoners, by reaſon of the great diſſenſion in that kingdome : and euery morning at our departure we muſt pay reſcat foure or fiue pagies a man. And another trouble wee had as bad as this, that when as wee came into a new gouernours countrey, as euery day we did, although they were al tributary to the king of Bezeneger, yet euery one of them ſtamped a ſeueral coine of Copper, ſo that the money that we tooke this day would not ſerue the next : at length, by the helpe of God, we came ſafe to Ancola, which is a countrey of the queene of Gargopam, tributary to the king of Bezeneger. The marchandiſe that went euery yere from Goa to Bezeneger were Arabian horſes, Veluets, Damaſks, and Sattens, Armeſine of Portugall, and pieces of China, Saffron, and Skarlets : and from Bezeneger they had in Turky for their commodities, iewels, and Pagodies which be ducats of golde : the apparell that they vſe in Bezeneger is Veluet, Satten, Damaſke, Scarlet, or white Bumbaſt cloth, according to the eſtate of the perſon with long hats on their heads, called Colae, made of Veluet, Satten, Damaſke, or Scarlet, girding themſelues in ſtead of girdles with ſome fine white bombaſt cloth : they haue breeches after the order of the Turks : they weare on their feet plaine high things called of them Aſpergh, and at their eares they haue hanging great plenty of golde.

Their Winter is our Summer.

Foure ſmall fortes of the Portugals.

Returning to my voyage, when we were together in Ancola, one of my companions that had nothing to loſe, tooke a guide, and went to Goa, whither they goe in foure dayes, the other Portugall not being diſpoſed to go, taried in Ancola for that Winter. The Winter in thoſe parts of the Indies beginneth the fifteenth of May, and laſteth vnto the end of October : and as we were in Ancola, there came another Marchant of horſes in a palanchine, and two Portugall ſouldiers which came from Zeilan, and two cariers of letters, which were Chriſtians borne in the Indies: all theſe conſorted to goe to Goa together, and I determined to goe with them, and cauſed a pallanchine to be made for me very poorely of Canes ; and in one of them Canes I hid priuily all the iewels I had, and according to the order, I tooke eight Falchines to cary me : and one day about eleuen of the clocke wee ſet forwards on our iourney, and about two of the clocke in the afternoone, as we paſſed a mountaine which diuideth the territory of Ancola and Dialcan, I being a little behinde my company, was aſſaulted by eight theeues, foure of them had ſwordes and targets, and the other foure had bowes and arrowes. When the Falchines that carried me vnderſtood the noiſe of the aſſault, they let the pallanchine and me fall to the ground, and ranne away and left me alone, with my clothes wrapped about me : preſently the theeues were on my necke, and rifeling me, they ſtripped me ſtarke naked, and I fained my ſelfe ſicke, becauſe I would not leaue the pallanchine, and I had made me a little bedde of my clothes ; the theeues ſought it very narrowly and ſubtilly, and found two purſſes that I had, well bound vp together, wherein I had put my Copper money which I had changed for foure pagodies in Ancola. The theeues thinking it had beene ſo many duckats of golde, ſearched no further : then they threw all my clothes in a buſh, and hied them away, and as God would haue it, at their departure there fell from them an handkercher, and when I ſaw it, I roſe from my pallanchine or couch, and tooke it vp, and wrapped it together within my pallanchine. Then theſe my Falchines were of ſo good condition, that they returned to ſeeke mee, whereas I thought I ſhould not haue found ſo much goodneſſe in them : becauſe they were payed their mony aforehand, as is the vſe, I had thought to haue ſeene them no more. Before their comming I was determined to plucke the Cane wherein my iewels were hidden, out of my coutch, and to haue made me a walking ſtaffe to carry in my hand to Goa, thinking that I ſhould haue gone thither on foot, but by the faithfulnes of my Falchines, I was rid of that trouble, and ſo in foure dayes they carried me to Goa, in which time I made hard fare, for the theeues left me neither money, golde, nor ſiluer, and that which I did eat was giuen me of my men for Gods ſake : and after at my comming to Goa I payed them for euery thing royally that I had of them. From Goa I departed for Cochin, which is a voyage of three hundred miles, and betweene theſe two cities are many holdes of the Portugals, as Onor, Mangalor, Barzelor, and Cananor. The Holde or Fort that you ſhall haue from Goa to Cochin that belongeth to the Portugals, is called Onor, which is in the kingdome of the queene of Bartacella, which is tributary to the king of Bezeneger : there is no trade there, but onely a charge with the Captaine and company he keepeth there. And paſſing this place, you ſhall come to another ſmall caſtle of the Portugals called Mangalor, and there is very ſmall trade but onely for a little Rice : and from thence you goe to a little fort called Barzelor, there they haue good ſtore of Rice which is carried to Goa : and from thence you ſhall goe to a city called Cananor, which is a harquebuſh ſhot diſtant from the chiefeſt city that yͤ king of Cananor hath in his kingdome being a king of the Gentiles : and he & his are very naughty & malicious people, alwayes hauing delight to be in warres with the Portugales, and when they are in peace, it is for their intereſt to let their merchandize paſſe: there goeth out of this kingdom of Cananor, all the Cardamomũ, great ſtore of Pepper, Ginger, Honie, ſhips laden with great Nuts, great quantitie of Archa, which is a fruit of the bigneſſe of Nutmegs, which fruite they eate in all thoſe partes of the Indies and beyond the Indies, with the leafe of an Herbe which they call Bettell, the which is like vnto our Iuie leafe, but a litle leſſer and thinner: they eate it made in plaiſters with the lime made of Oiſterſhels, and thorow the Indies they ſpend great quantitie of money in this compoſition, and it is vſed daily, which thing I would not haue beleeued, if I had not ſeene it. The cuſtomers get great profite by theſe Herbes, for that they haue cuſtome for them. When this people eate and chawe this in their mouthes, it maketh their ſpittle to bee red like vnto blood, and they ſay, that it maketh a man to haue a very good ſtomacke and a ſweete breath, but ſure in my iudgement they eate it rather to fulfill their filthie luſtes, and of a knauerie, for this Herbe is moyſt and hote, & maketh a very ſtrong expulſion. Frõ Cananor you go to Cranganor, which is another ſmal Fort of the Portugales in the land of the king of Cranganor, which is another king of the Gentiles, and a countrey of ſmall importance, and of an hundreth and twentie miles, full of thieues, being vnder the king of Calicut, a king alſo of the Gentiles, and a great enemie to the Portugales, which when hee is alwayes in warres, hee and his countrey is the neſt and reſting for ſtranger theeues, and thoſe bee called Moores of Carpoſa, becauſe they weare on their heads long red hats, and theſe thieues part the ſpoyles that they take on the Sea with the king of Calicut, for hee giueth leaue vnto all that will goe a rouing, liberally to goe, in ſuch wiſe, that all along that coaſt there is ſuch a number of thieues, that there is no ſailing in thoſe Seas but with great ſhips and very well armed, or els they muſt go in company with the army of the Portugals. From Cranganor to Cochin is 15. miles.

Bettell is a very profitable herbe in that countrey.

Enimies to the king of Portugall.

Cochin.

Cochin is, next vnto Goa, the chiefeſt place that the Portugales haue in the Indies, and there is great trade of Spices, drugges, and all other ſortes of merchandize for the kingdome of Portugale, and there within the land is the kingdome of Pepper, which Pepper the Portugales lade in their ſhippes by bulke, and not in ſackes: the Pepper that goeth for Portugale is not ſo good as that which goeth for Mecca, becauſe that in times paſt the officers of the king of Portugale made a contract with the king of Cochin, in the name of the king of Portugale, for the prizes of Pepper, and by reaſon of that agreement betweene them at that time made, the price can neither riſe nor fall, which is a very lowe and baſe price, and for this cauſe the villaines bring it to the Portugales, greene and full of filthe. The Moores of Mecca that giue a better price, haue it cleane and drie, and better conditioned. All the Spices and drugs that are brought to Mecca, are ſtollen from thence as Contrabanda. Cochin is two cities, one of the Portugales, and another of the king of Cochin: that of the Portugales is ſituate neereſt vnto the Sea, and that of the king of Cochin is a mile and a halfe vp higher in the land, but they are both ſet on the bankes of one riuer which is very great and of a good depth of water, which riuer commeth out of the mountaines of the king of the Pepper, which is a king of the Gentiles, in whoſe kingdome are many Chriſtians of ſaint Thomas order: the king of Cochin is alſo a king of the Gentiles and a great faithfull friend to the king of Portugale, and to thoſe Portugales which are married, and are Citizens in the Citie Cochin of the Portugales. And by this name of Portugales throughout all the Indies, they call all the Chriſtians that come out of the Weſt, whether they bee Italians, Frenchmen, or Almaines, and all they that marrie in Cochin do get an office according to the trade he is of: this they haue by the great priuileges which the Citizens haue of that city, becauſe there are two principal commodities that they deale withal in that place, which are theſe. The great ſtore of Silke that commeth from China, and the great ſtore of Sugar which commeth from Bengala: the married Citizens pay not any cuſtome for theſe two commodities: for all other commodities they pay 4. per cento cuſtome to the king of Cochin, rating their goods at their owne pleaſure. Thoſe which are not married and ſtrangers, pay in Cochin to the king of Portugale eight per cento of all maner of merchandiſe. I was in Cochin when the Viceroy of the king of Portugale wrought what hee coulde to breake the priuilege of the Citizens, and to make them to pay cuſtome as other did: at which time the Citizens were glad to waigh their Pepper in the night that they laded the ſhips withall that went to Portugale and ſtole the cuſtome in the night. The king of Cochin hauing vnderſtanding of this, would not ſuffer any more Pepper to bee weighed. Then preſently after this, the marchants were licenſed to doe as they did before, and there was no more ſpeach of this matter, nor any wrong done. This king of Cochin is of a ſmall power in reſpect of the other kings of the Indies, for hee can make but ſeuentie thouſand men of armes in his campe: hee hath a great number of Gentlemen which hee calleth Amochi, and ſome are called Nairi: theſe two ſorts of men eſteeme not their liues any thing, ſo that it may be for the honour of their king, they will thruſt themſelues forward in euery danger, although they know they ſhall die. Theſe men goe naked from the girdle vpwardes, with a clothe rolled about their thighs, going barefooted, and hauing their haire very long and rolled vp together on the toppe of their heads, and alwayes they carrie their Bucklers or Targets with them and their ſwordes naked, theſe Nairi haue their wiues common amongſt themſelues, and when any of them goe into the houſe of any of theſe women, hee leaueth his ſworde and target at the doore, and the time that hee is there, there dare not any bee ſo hardie as to come into that houſe. The kings children ſhall not inherite the kingdome after their father, becauſe they hold this opinion, that perchance they were not begotten of the king their father, but of ſome other man, therefore they accept for their king, one of the ſonnes of the kings ſiſters, or of ſome other woman of the blood roial, for that they be ſure they are of the blood roiall.

A very ſtrange thing hardly to be beleeued.

The Nairi and their wiues vſe for a brauerie to make great holes in their eares, and ſo bigge and wide, that it is incredible, holding this opinion, that the greater the holes bee, the more noble they eſteeme themſelues. I had leaue of one of them to meaſure the circumference of one of them with a threed, and within that circumference I put my arme vp to the ſhoulder, clothed as it was, ſo that in effect they are monſtrous great. Thus they doe make them when they be litle, for then they open the eare, & hang a piece of gold or lead thereat, & within the opening, in the hole they put a certaine leafe that they haue for that purpoſe, which maketh the hole ſo great. They lade ſhips in Cochin for Portugale and for Ormus, but they that goe for Ormus carrie no Pepper but by Contrabanda, as for Sinamome they eaſilie get leaue to carrie that away, for all other Spices and drugs they may liberally carie them to Ormus or Cambaia, and ſo all other merchandize which come from other places, but out of the kingdom of Cochin properly they cary away with them into Portugale great abundance of Pepper, great quantitie of Ginger dried and conſerued, wild Sinamom, good quantitie of Arecca, great ſtore of Cordage of Cairo, made of the barke of the tree of the great Nut, and better then that of Hempe, of which they carrie great ſtore into Portugale.

Note the departing of the ſhips from Cochin.

The ſhippes euery yeere depart from Cochin to goe for Portugall, on the fift day of December, or the fift day of January. Nowe to follow my voyage for the Indies: from Cochin I went to Coulam, diſtant from Cochin ſeuentie and two miles, which Coulam is a ſmall Fort of the king of Portugales, ſituate in the kingdom of Coulam, which is a king of the Gentiles, and of ſmall trade: at that place they lade onely halfe a ſhip of Pepper, and then ſhe goeth to Cochin to take in the reſt, and from thence to Cao Comori is ſeuentie and two miles, and there endeth the coaſt of the Indies: and alongſt this coaſt, neere to the water ſide, and alſo to Cao Comori, downe to the lowe land of Chilao, which is about two hundred miles, the people there are as it were all turned to the Chriſtian faith: there are alſo Churches of the Friers of S. Pauls order, which Friers doe very much good in thoſe places in turning the people, and in conuerting them, and take great paines in inſtructing them in the law of Chriſt.

The fiſhing for Pearles.

The order how they fiſh for pearles.

The Sea that lieth betweene the coaſt which deſcendeth from Cao Comori, to the lowe land of Chilao, and the Iland Zeilan, they call the fiſhing of Pearles, which fiſhing they make euery yeere, beginning in March or Aprill, and it laſteth fiftie dayes, but they doe not fiſhe euery yeere in one place, but one yeere in one place, and another yeere in another place of the ſame ſea. When the time of this fiſhing draweth neere, then they ſend very good Diuers, that goe to diſcouer where the greateſt heapes of Oiſters bee vnder water, and right agaynſt that place where greateſt ſtore of Oiſters bee, there they make or plant a village with houſes and a Bazaro, all of ſtone, which ſtandeth as long as the fiſhing time laſteth, and it is furniſhed with all things neceſſarie, and nowe and then it is neere vnto places that are inhabited, and other times farre off, according to the place where they fiſhe. The Fiſhermen are all Chriſtians of the countrey, and who ſo will may goe to fiſhing, paying a certaine dutie to the king of Portugall, and to the Churches of the Friers of Saint Paule, which are in that coaſt. All the while that they are fiſhing, there are three or foure Fuſtes armed to defend the Fiſhermen from Rouers. It was my chance to bee there one time in my paſſage, and I ſaw the order that they vſed in fiſhing, which is this. There are three or foure Barkes that make conſort together, which are like to our litle Pilot boates, and a litle leſſe, there goe ſeuen or eight men in a boate: and I haue ſeene in a morning a great number of them goe out, and anker in fifteene or eighteene fadome of water, which is the Ordinarie depth of all that coaſt. When they are at anker, they caſt a rope into the Sea, and at the ende of the rope, they make faſt a great ſtone, and then there is readie a man that hath his noſe and his eares well ſtopped, and annointed with oyle, and a baſket about his necke, or vnder his left arme, then hee goeth downe by the rope to the bottome of the Sea, and as faſt as he can hee filleth the baſket, and when it is full, he ſhaketh the rope, and his fellowes that are in the Barke hale him vp with the baſket: and in ſuch wiſe they goe one by one vntill they haue laden their barke with oyſters, and at euening they come to the village, and then euery company maketh their mountaine or heape of oyſters one diſtant from another, in ſuch wiſe that you ſhall ſee a great long rowe of mountaines or heapes of oyſters, and they are not touched vntill ſuch time as the fiſhing bee ended, and at the ende of the fiſhing euery companie ſitteth round about their mountaine or heape of oyſters, and fall to opening of them, which they may eaſilie doe becauſe they bee dead, drie and brittle: and if euery oyſter had pearles in them, it would bee a very good purchaſe, but there are very many that haue no pearles in them: when the fiſhing is ended, then they ſee whether it bee a good gathering or a badde: there are certaine expert in the pearles whom they call Chitini, which ſet and make the price of pearles according to their carracts, beautie, and goodneſſe, making foure ſortes of them. The firſt ſort bee the round pearles, and they be called Aia of Portugale, becauſe the Portugales doe buy them. The ſecond ſorte which are not round, are called Aia of Bengala. The third ſort which are not ſo good as the ſecond, they call Aia of Canara, that is to ſay, the kingdome of Bezeneger. The fourth and laſt ſort, which are the leaſt and worſt ſort, are called Aia of Cambaia. Thus the price being ſet, there are merchants of euery countrey which are readie with their money in their handes, ſo that in a fewe dayes all is bought vp at the priſes ſet according to the goodneſſe and caracts of the pearles.

These pearles are priſed according to the caracts which they weigh, euery caract is 4. graines, and these men that priſe thē haue an inſtrument of copper with holes in it, which be made by degrees for to ſort yͤ perles withall.

In this Sea of the fiſhing of pearles is an Iland called Manar, which is inhabited by Chriſtians of the countrey which firſt were Gentiles, and haue a ſmall hold of the Portugales being ſituate ouer agaynſt Zeilan: and betweene theſe two Ilands there is a chanell, but not very big, and hath but a ſmall depth therein: by reaſon whereof there cannot any great ſhippe paſſe that way, but ſmall ſhips, and with the increaſe of the water which is at the change or the full of the Moone, and yet for all this they muſt vnlade them and put their goods into ſmall veſſels to lighten them before they can paſſe that way for feare of Sholdes that lie in the chanell, and after lade them into their ſhippes to goe for the Indies, and this doe all ſmall ſhippes that paſſe that way, but thoſe ſhippes that goe for the Indies Eaſtwardes, paſſe by the coaſt of Coromandel, on the other ſide by the land of Chilao which is betweene the firme land and the Iland Manor: and going from the Indies to the coaſt of Corômandel, they looſe ſome ſhippes, but they bee emptie, becauſe that the ſhippes that paſſe that way diſcharge their goods at an Iland called Peripatane, and there land their goods into ſmall flat bottomed boates which drawe litle water, and are called Tane, and can run ouer euery Shold without either danger or loſſe of any thing, for that they tarrie in Peripatane vntill ſuch time as it bee faire weather. Before they depart to paſſe the Sholdes, the ſmall ſhippes and flat bottomed boates goe together in companie, and when they haue ſailed ſixe and thirtie miles, they arriue at the place where the Sholdes are, and at that place the windes blowe ſo forcibilie, that they are forced to goe thorowe, not hauing any other refuge to ſaue themſelues. The flat bottomed boates goe ſafe thorow, where as the ſmall ſhippes if they miſſe the aforeſayd chanell, ſticke faſt on the Sholdes, and by this meanes many are loſt: and comming backe from the Indies, they goe not that way, but paſſe by the chanell of Manar as is aboueſayd, whoſe chanell is Ozie, and if the ſhippes ſticke faſt, it is great chance if there be any danger at all. The reaſon why this chanell is not more ſure to goe thither, is, becauſe the windes that raigne or blowe betweene Zeilan and Manar, make the chanell ſo ſhalow with water, that almoſt there is not any paſſage. From Cao Comori to the Iland of Zeilan is 120. miles ouerthwart.

Zeilan.

ZEilan is an Iland, in my iudgement, a great deale bigger then Cyprus: on that ſide towards the Indies lying Weſtward is the citie called Columba, which is a hold of the Portugales, but without walles or enimies. It hath towards the Sea a free port, the lawfull king of that Iland is in Columbo, and is turned Chriſtian and maintained by the king of Portugall, being depriued of his kingdome. The king of the Gentiles, to whom this kingdome did belong, was called Madoni, which had two ſonnes, the firſt named Barbinas the prince; and the ſecond Ragine. This king by the pollicie of his yonger ſonne, was depriued of his kingdome, who becauſe hee had entiſed and done that which pleaſed the armie and ſouldiours, in deſpight of his father and brother being prince, vſurped the kingdome, and became a great warriour. Firſt, this Iland had three kings; the king of Cotta with his conquered priſoners: the king of Candia, which is a part of that Iland, and is ſo called by the name of Candia, which had a reaſonable power, and was a great friend to the Portugals, which ſayd that hee liued ſecretly a Chriſtian; the third was the king of Gianifampatan. In thirteene yeeres that this Ragine gouerned this Iland, he became a great tyrant.

Cairo is a ſtuffe that they make ropes with, the which is the barke of a tree.

In this Iland there groweth fine Sinamom, great ſtore of Pepper, great ſtore of Nuttes and Arochoe: there they make great ſtore of Cairo to make Cordage: it bringeth foorth great ſtore of Chriſtall Cats eyes, or Ochi de Gati, and they ſay that they finde there ſome Rubies, but I haue ſold Rubies well there that I brought with me from Pegu. I was deſirous to ſee how they gather the Sinamom, or take it from the tree that it groweth on, and ſo much the rather, becauſe the time that I was there, was the ſeaſon which they gather it in, which was in the moneth of Aprill, at which time the Portugals were in armes, and in the field, with the king of the countrey; yet I to ſatiſfie my deſire, although in great danger, tooke a guide with mee and went into a wood three miles from the Citie, in which wood was great ſtore of Sinamome trees growing together among other wilde trees; and this Sinamome tree is a ſmall tree, and not very high, and hath leaues like to our Baie tree. In the moneth of March or Aprill, when the ſappe goeth vp to the toppe of the tree, then they take the Sinamom from that tree in this wiſe. They cut the barke of the tree round about in length from knot to knot, or from ioint to ioint, aboue and belowe, and then eaſilie with their handes they take it away, laying it in the Sunne to drie, and in this wiſe it is gathered, and yet for all this the tree dieth not, but againſt the next yeere it will haue a new barke, and that which is gathered euery yeere is the beſt Sinamome: for that which groweth two or three yeeres is great, and not ſo good as the other is; and in theſe woods groweth much Pepper.

The cutting & gathering of Sinamom.

A rare thinge.

Negapatan.

FRom the Iland of Zeilan men vſe to goe with ſmall ſhippes to Negapatan, within the firme land, and ſeuentie two miles off is a very great Citie, and very populous of Portugals and Chriſtians of the countrey, and part Gentiles: it is a countrey of ſmall trade, neither haue they any trade there, ſaue a good quantitie of Rice, and cloth of Bumbaſt which they carie into diuers partes: it was a very plentifull countrey of victuals, but now it hath a great deale leſſe; and that abundance of victuals cauſed many Portugales to goe thither and build houſes, and dwell there with ſmall charge.

This Citie belongeth to a noble man of the kingdome of Bezeneger being a Gentile, neuertheleſſe the Portugales and other Chriſtians are well intreated there, and haue their Churches there with a monaſterie of Saint Francis order, with great deuotion and very well accommodated, with houſes round about: yet for all this, they are amongſt tyrants, which alwayes at their pleaſure may doe them ſome harme, as it happened in the yeere of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred, ſixtie and fiue: for I remember very well, how that the Nayer, that is to ſay, the lord of the citie, ſent to the citizens to demaund of them certaine Arabian horſes, and they hauing denied them vnto him, and gaineſayd his demaund, it came to paſſe that this lord had a deſire to ſee the Sea, which when the poore citizens vnderſtood, they doubted ſome euill, to heare a thing which was not woont to bee, they thought that this man would come to ſacke the Citie, and preſently they embarked themſelues the beſt they could with their mooueables, marchandize, iewels, money, and all that they had, and cauſed the ſhippes to put from the ſhore. When this was done, as their euill chance would haue it, the next night following, there came ſuch a great ſtorme that it put all the ſhippes on land perforce, and brake them to pieces, and all the goods that came on land and were ſaued, were taken from them by the ſouldiours and armie of this lord which came downe with him to ſee the Sea, and were attendant at the Sea ſide, not thinking that any ſuch thing would haue happened.

A fooliſh feare of Portugals.

Saint Thomas or San Tome.

S. Thomas his ſepulchre.

FRom Negapatan following my voyage towards the Eaſt an hundred and fiftie miles, I found the houſe of bleſſed Saint Thomas, which is a Church of great deuotion, and greatly regarded of the Gentiles for the great miracles they haue heard to haue bene done by that bleſſed Apoſtle: neere vnto this Church the Portugals haue builded them a Citie in the countrey ſubiect to the king of Bezeneger, which citie although it bee not very great, yet in my iudgement it is the faireſt in all that part of the Indies: and it hath very faire houſes and faire gardens in vacant places very well accommodated: it hath ſtreetes large and ſtreight, with many Churches of great deuotion, their houſes be ſet cloſe one vnto another, with litle doores, euery houſe hath his defence, ſo that by that meanes it is of force ſufficient to defend ŷ Portugals againſt the people of that countrey. The Portugals there haue no other poſſeſſion but their gardens and houſes that are within the citie: the cuſtomes belong to the king of Bezeneger, which are very ſmall and eaſie, for that it is a countrey of great riches and great trade: there come euery yeere two or three great ſhips very rich, beſides many other ſmall ſhips: one of the two great ſhips goeth for Pegu, and the other for Malacca, laden with fine Bumbaſt cloth of euery ſort, painted, which is a rare thing, becauſe thoſe kinde of clothes ſhew as they were gilded with diuers colours, and the more they be waſhed, the liuelier the colours will ſhew. Alſo there is other cloth of Bumbaſt which is wouen with diuers colours, and is of great value: alſo they make in San Tome great ſtore of red Yarne, which they die with a roote called Saia, and this colour will neuer waſte, but the more it is waſhed, the more redder it will ſhew: they lade this yarne the greateſt part of it for Pegu, becauſe that there they worke and weaue it to make cloth according to their owne faſhion, and with leſſer charges. It is a maruelous thing to them which haue not ſeene the lading and vnlading of men and merchandize in S. Tome as they do: it is a place ſo dangerous, that a man cannot bee ſerued with ſmall barkes, neither can they doe their buſineſſe with the boates of the ſhippes, becauſe they would be beaten in a thouſand pieces, but they make certaine barkes (of purpoſe) high, which they call Maſadie, they be made of litle boards; one board being ſowed to another with ſmall cordes, and in this order are they made. And when they are thus made, and the owners will embarke any thing in them, either men or goods, they lade them on land, and when they are laden, the Barke-men thruſt the boate with her lading into the ſtreame, and with great ſpeed they make haſte all that they are able to rowe out againſt the huge waues of the ſea that are on that ſhore, vntill that they carie them to the ſhips: and in like maner they lade theſe Maſadies at the ſhippes with merchandiſe and men. When they come neere the ſhore, the Barke-men leap out of the Barke into the Sea to keepe the Barke right that ſhe caſt not thwart the ſhore, and being kept right, the Suffe of the Sea ſetteth her lading dry on land without any hurt or danger, and ſometimes there are ſome of them that are ouerthrowen, but there can be no great loſſe, becauſe they lade but a litle at a time. All the marchandize they lade outwards, they emball it well with Oxe hides, ſo that if it take wet, it can haue no great harme.

A painted kind of cloth & died of diuers colours which thoſe people delight much in, and eſteeme them of great price.

In my voyage, returning in the yeere of our Lord God one thouſand, fiue hundred, ſixtie and ſixe, I went from Goa vnto Malacca, in a ſhippe or Gallion of the king of Portugal, which went vnto Banda for to lade Nutmegs & Maces: from Goa to Malacca are one thouſand eight hundred miles, we paſſed without the Iland Zeilan, and went through the chanell of Nicubar, or els through the chanell of Sombrero, which is by the middle of the Iland of Sumatra, called in olde time Taprobana: and from Nicubar to Pegu is as it were a rowe or chaine of an infinite number of Ilands, of which many are inhabited with wilde people, and they call thoſe Ilands the Ilands of Andemaon, and they call their people ſauage or wilde, becauſe they eate one another: alſo theſe Ilands haue warre one with another, for they haue ſmall Barkes, and with them they take one another, and ſo eate one another: and if by euil chance any ſhip be loſt on thoſe Ilands, as many haue bene, there is not one man of thoſe ſhips loſt there that eſcapeth vneaten or vnſlaine. Theſe people haue not any acquaintance with any other people, neither haue they trade with any, but liue onely of ſuch fruites as thoſe Ilands yeeld: and if any ſhip come neere vnto that place or coaſt as they paſſe that way, as in my voyage it happened as I came from Malacca through the chanell of Sombrero, there came two of their Barkes neere vnto our ſhip laden with fruite, as with Mouces which wee call Adams apples, with freſh Nuts, and with a fruite called Inani, which fruite is like to our Turneps, but is very ſweete and good to eate: they would not come into the ſhippe for any thing that wee could doe: neither would they take any money for their fruite, but they would trucke for olde ſhirtes or pieces of olde linnen breeches, theſe ragges they let downe with a rope into their Barke vnto them, and looke what they thought thoſe things to bee worth, ſo much fruite they would make faſt to the rope and let vs hale it in: and it was told me that at ſometimes a man ſhall haue for an old ſhirt a good piece of Amber.

In the Iland of Banda they lade Nutmegs for there they grow.

In the Ilands of Andemaon, they eate one another.

Sumatra.

The commodities that grow in the kingdom of Aſſi.

THis Iland of Sumatra is a great Iland and deuided and gouerned by many kings, and deuided into many chanels, where through there is paſſage: vpon the headland towardes the Weſt is the kingdom of Aſſi gouerned by a Moore king: this king is of great force and ſtrength, as he that beſide his great kingdom, hath many Foiſts and Gallies. In his kingdom groweth great ſtore of Pepper, Ginger, Beniamin: he is an vtter enemy to the Portugals, and hath diuers times bene at Malacca to fight againſt it, and hath done great harme to the boroughes thereof, but the citie alway withſtood him valiantly, and with their ordinance did great ſpoile to his campe. At length I came to the citie of Malacca.

The Citie Malacca.

The great trade that is at Malacca.

At the Moluccos they lade the Cloues.

The kingdoms of Aſſa.

The ſhip of drugs, ſo termed of the Portugals.

Ilands not diſcouered.

China is vnder the gouernment of the great Tartar.

MAlacca is a Citie of marueilous great trade of all kind of marchandize, which come from diuers partes, becauſe that all the ſhippes that ſaile in theſe ſeas, both great and ſmall, are bound to touch at Malacca to paie their cuſtome there, although they vnlade nothing at all, as we doe at Elſinor: and if by night they eſcape away, and pay not their cuſtome, then they fall into a greater danger after: for if they come into the Indies and haue not the ſeale of Malacca, they pay double cuſtome. I haue not paſſed further then Malacca towards the Eaſt, but that which I will ſpeake of here is by good information of them that haue bene there. The ſailing from Malacca towards the Eaſt is not common for all men, as to China and Iapan, and ſo forwards to go who will, but onely for the king of Portugall and his nobles, with leaue granted vnto them of the king to make ſuch voiages, or to the iuriſdiction of the captaine of Malacca, where he expecteth to know what voiages they make from Malacca thither, & theſe are the kings voiages, that euery yere there departeth frõ Malacca 2. gallions of the kings, one of thẽ goeth to ẏ Moluccos to lade Cloues, and the other goeth to Banda to lade Nutmegs and Maces. Theſe two gallions are laden for the king, neither doe they carie any particular mans goods, ſauing the portage of the Mariners and ſouldiers, and for this cauſe they are not voiages for marchants, becauſe that going thither, they ſhal not haue where to lade their goods of returne; and beſides this, the captaine will not cary any marchant for either of theſe two places. There goe ſmall ſhippes of the Moores thither, which come from the coaſt of Iaua, and change or guild their commodities in the kingdom of Aſſa, and theſe be the Maces, Cloues, and Nutmegs, which go for the ſtreights of Mecca. The voiages that the king of Portugall granteth to his nobles are theſe, of China and Iapan, from China to Iapan, and from Iapan to China, and from China to the Indies, and the voyage of Bengala, Maluco, and Sonda, with the lading of fine cloth, and euery ſort of Bumbaſt cloth. Sonda is an Iland of the Moores neere to the coaſt of Iaua, and there they lade Pepper for China. The ſhip that goeth euery yeere from the Indies to China, is called the ſhip of Drugs, becauſe ſhe carieth diuers drugs of Cambaia, but the greateſt part of her lading is ſiluer. From Malacca to China is eighteene hundred miles: and from China to Iapan goeth euery yeere a ſhippe of great importance laden with Silke, which for returne of their Silke bringeth barres of ſiluer which they trucke in China. The diſtance betweene China and Iapan is foure and twentie hundred miles, and in this way there are diuers Ilands not very bigge, in which the Friers of ſaint Paul, by the helpe of God, make many Chriſtians there like to themſelues. From theſe Ilands hitherwards the place is not yet diſcouered for the great ſholdneſſe of Sandes that they find. The Portugals haue made a ſmall citie neere vnto the coaſt of China called Macao, whoſe church and houſes are of wood, and it hath a biſhoprike, but the cuſtoms belong to the king of China, and they goe and pay the ſame at a citie called Canton, which is a citie of great importance and very beautifull two dayes iourney and a halfe from Macao. The people of China are Gentiles, and are ſo iealous and fearefull, that they would not haue a ſtranger to put his foote within their land: ſo that when the Portugals go thither to pay their cuſtome, and to buy their marchandize, they will not conſent that they ſhall lie or lodge within the citie, but ſend them foorth into the ſuburbes. The countrey of China is neere the kingdom of great Tartaria, and is a very great countrey of the Gentiles and of great importance, which may be iudged by the rich and precious marchandize that come from thence, then which I beleeue there are not better nor in greater quantitie in the whole world beſides.

Firſt, great ſtore of golde, which they carie to the Indies, made in plates like to little ſhippes, and in value three and twentie caracts a peece, very great aboundance of fine ſilke, cloth of damaſke and taffata, great quantitie of muſke, great quantitie of Occam in barres, great quantitie of quickſiluer and of Cinaper, great ſtore of Camfora, an infinite quantitie of Porcellane, made in veſſels of diuerſe ſortes, great quantitie of painted cloth and ſquares, infinite ſtore of the rootes of China: and euery yeere there commeth from China to the Indies, two or three great ſhippes, laden with moſt rich and precious marchandiſe. The Rubarbe commeth from thence ouer lande, by the way of Perſia, becauſe that euery yeere there goeth a great Carouan from Perſia to China, which is in going thither ſixe moneths. The Carouan arriueth at a Citie called Lanchin, the place where the king is reſident with his Court. I ſpake with a Perſian that was three yeeres in that citie of Lanchin, and he tolde me that it was a great Citie and of great importance. The voiages of Malacca which are in the iuriſdiction of the Captaine of the caſtle, are theſe: Euery yeere he ſendeth a ſmall ſhippe to Timor to lade white Sandols, for all the beſt commeth from this Iland: there commeth ſome alſo from Solor, but that is not ſo good: alſo he ſendeth another ſmall ſhip euery yere to Cauchin China, to lade there wood of Aloes, for that all the wood of Aloes commeth from this place, which is in the firme land neere vnto China, and in that kingdome I could not knowe how that wood groweth by any meanes. For that the people of the countrey will not ſuffer the Portugales to come within the land, but onely for wood and water, and as for all other things that they wanted, as victuals or marchandiſe, the people bring that a boord the ſhip in ſmall barkes, ſo that euery day there is a mart kept in the ſhip, vntill ſuch time as ſhe be laden: alſo there goeth another ſhip for the ſaid Captaine of Malacca to Sion, to lade Verzino: all theſe voiages are for the Captaine of the caſtle of Malacca, and when he is not diſpoſed to make theſe voiages, he ſelleth them to another.

A yeerely Carouan from Perſia to China.

The citie of Sion, or Siam.

Sion was the imperiall ſeat, and a great Citie, but in the yeere of our Lord God one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie and ſeuen, it was taken by the king of Pegu, which king made a voyage or came by lande foure moneths iourney with an armie of men through his lande, and the number of his armie was a million and foure hundreth thouſand men of warre: when hee came to the Citie, he gaue aſſault to it, and beſieged it one and twentie monethes before he could winne it, with great loſſe of his people, this I know, for that I was in Pegu ſixe moneths after his departure, and ſawe when that his officers that were in Pegu, ſent fiue hundreth thouſand men of warre to furniſh the places of them that were ſlaine and loſt in that aſſault: yet for all this, if there had not beene treaſon againſt the citie, it had not beene loſt: for on a night there was one of the gates ſet open, through the which with great trouble the king gate into the citie, and became gouernour of Sion: and when the Emperour ſawe that he was betrayed, and that his enemie was in the citie, he poyſoned himſelfe: and his wiues and children, friends and noblemen, that were not ſlaine in the firſt affront of the entrance into the citie, were all caried captiues into Pegu, where I was at the comming home of the king with his triumphs and victorie, which comming home & returning from the warres was a goodly ſight to beholde, to ſee the Elephants come home in a ſquare, laden with golde, ſiluer, iewels, and with Noble men and women that were taken priſoners in that citie.

A prince of a marueilous ſtrength and power.

Now to returne to my voyage: I departed from Malacca in a great ſhippe which went for Saint Tome, being a Citie ſituate on the coaſt of Coromandel: and becauſe the Captaine of the caſtles of Malacca had vnderſtanding by aduiſe that the king of *Aſſi would come with a great armie and power of men againſt them, therefore vpon this he would not giue licence that any ſhippes ſhould depart: Wherefore in this ſhip wee departed from thence in the night, without making any prouiſion of our water: and wee were in that ſhippe foure hundreth and odde men: we departed from thence with intention to goe to an Iland to take in water, but the windes were ſo contrary, that they would not ſuffer vs to fetch it, ſo that by this meanes wee were two and fortie dayes in the ſea as it were loſt, and we were driuen too and fro, ſo that the firſt lande that we diſcouered, was beyonde Saint Tome, more then fiue hundreth miles which were the mountaines of Zerzerline, neere vnto the kingdome of Oriſa, and ſo wee came to Oriſa with many ſicke, and more that were dead for want of water: and they that were ſicke in foure dayes dyed: and I for the ſpace of a yeere after had my throat ſo ſore and hoarſe, that I could neuer ſatiſfie my thirſt in drinking of water: I iudge the reaſon of my hoarſeneſſe to bee with ſoppes that I wet in vineger and oyle, wherewith I ſuſteyned my ſelfe many dayes. There was not any want of bread nor of wine: but the wines of that countrey are ſo hot that being drunke without water they will kill a man: neither are they able to drinke them: when we beganne to want water, I ſawe certaine Moores that were officers in the ſhip, that ſolde a ſmall diſh full for a duckat, after this I ſawe one that would haue giuen a barre of Pepper, which is two quintalles and a halfe, for a litle meaſure of water, and he could not haue it. Truely I beleeue that I had died with my ſlaue, whom then I had to ſerue mee, which coſt mee verie deare: but to prouide for the daunger at hand, I ſolde my ſlaue for halfe that he was worth, becauſe that I would ſaue his drinke that he drunke, to ſerue my owne purpoſe, and to ſaue my life.

Of the kingdome of Oriſa, and the riuer Ganges.

ORiſa was a faire kingdome and truſtie, through the which a man might haue gone with golde in his hande without any daunger at all, as long as the lawefull King reigned which was a Gentile, who continued in the citie called Catecha, which was within the land ſixe dayes iourney. This king loued ſtrangers maruellous well, eſpecially marchants which had traffique in and out of his kingdome, in ſuch wiſe that hee would take no cuſtome of them, neither any other grieuous thing. Onely the ſhippe that came thither payde a ſmall thing according to her portage, and euery yeere in the port of Oriſa were laden fiue and twentie or thirtie ſhips great and ſmall, with ryce and diuers ſortes of fine white bumbaſte cloth, oyle of Zerzeline which they make of a ſeed, and it is very good to eate and to fry fiſh withal, great ſtore of butter, Lacca, long pepper, Ginger, Mirabolans dry and condite, great ſtore of cloth of herbes, which is a kinde of ſilke which groweth amongſt the woods without any labour of man, and when the bole thereof is growen round as bigge as an Orenge, then they take care onely to gather them. About ſixteene yeeres paſt, this king with his kingdome were deſtroyed by the king of Patane, which was alſo king of the greateſt part of Bengala, and when he had got the kingdome, he ſet cuſtome there twenty pro cento, as Marchants paide in his kingdome: but this tyrant enioyed his kingdome but a ſmall time, but was conquered by another tyrant, which was the great Mogol king of Agra, Delly, and of all Cambaia, without any reſiſtance. I departed from Oriſa to Bengala, to the harbour Piqueno, which is diſtant from Oriſa towardes the Eaſt a hundred and ſeuentie miles. They goe as it were rowing alongſt the coaſt fiftie and foure miles, and then we enter into the riuer Ganges: from the mouth of this riuer, to a citie called Satagan, where the marchants gather themſelues together with their trade, are a hundred miles, which they rowe in eighteene houres with the increaſe of the water: in which riuer it floweth and ebbeth as it doth in the Thamis, and when the ebbing water is come, they are not able to rowe againſt it, by reaſon of the ſwiftneſſe of the water, yet their barkes be light and armed with oares, like to Foiſtes, yet they cannot preuaile againſt that ſtreame, but for refuge muſt make them faſt to the banke of the riuer vntill the next flowing water, and they call theſe barkes Bazaras and Patuas: they rowe as well as a Galliot, or as well as euer I haue ſeene any. A good tides rowing before you come to Satagan; you ſhall haue a place which is called Buttor, and from thence vpwards the ſhips doe not goe, becauſe that vpwardes the riuer is very ſhallowe, and litle water. Euery yeere at Buttor they make and vnmake a Village, with houſes and ſhoppes made of ſtrawe, and with all things neceſſarie to their vſes, and this village ſtandeth as long as the ſhips ride there, and till they depart for the Indies, and when they are departed, euery man goeth to his plot of houſes, and there ſetteth fire on them, which thing made me to maruaile. For as I paſſed vp to Satagan, I ſawe this village ſtanding with a great number of people, with an infinite number of ſhips and Bazars, and at my returne comming downe with my Capteine of the laſt ſhip, for whom I tarried, I was al amazed to ſee ſuch a place ſo ſoone razed and burnt, & nothing left but the ſigne of the burnt houſes. The ſmall ſhips go to Satagan, and there they lade.

Of the citie of Satagan.

IN the port of Satagan euery yeere lade thirtie or fiue and thirtie ſhips great and ſmall, with rice, cloth of Bombaſt of diuerſe ſortes, Lacca, great abundance of ſugar, Mirabolans dried and preſerued, long pepper, oyle of Zerzeline, and many other ſorts of marchandiſe. The citie of Satagan is a reaſonable faire citie for a citie of the Moores, abounding with all things, and was gouerned by the king of Patane, and now is ſubiect to the great Mogol. I was in this kingdome foure monethes, whereas many marchants did buy or fraight boates for their benefites, and with theſe barkes they goe vp and downe the riuer of Ganges to faires, buying their commoditie with a great aduantage, becauſe that euery day in the weeke they haue a faire, now in one place, and now in another, and I alſo hired a barke and went vp and downe the riuer and did my buſineſſe, and ſo in the night I ſaw many ſtrange things. The kingdome of Bengala in times paſt hath bene as it were in the power of Moores, neuertheleſſe there is great ſtore of Gentiles among them; alwayes whereas I haue ſpoken of Gentiles, is to be vnderſtood Idolaters, and wheras I ſpeak of Moores I meane Mahomets ſect. Thoſe people eſpecially that be within the land doe greatly worſhip the riuer of Ganges: for when any is ſicke, he is brought out of the countrey to the banke of the riuer, and there they make him a ſmall cottage of ſtrawe, and euery day they wet him with that water, whereof there are many that die, and when they are dead, they make a heape of ſtickes and boughes and lay the dead bodie thereon, and putting fire thereunto, they let the bodie alone vntill it be halfe roſted, and then they take it off from the fire, and make an emptie iarre faſt about his necke, and ſo throw him into the riuer. Theſe things euery night as I paſſed vp and downe the riuer I ſaw for the ſpace of two moneths, as I paſſed to the fayres to buy my commodities with the marchants. And this is the cauſe that the Portugales will not drinke of the water of the riuer Ganges, yet to the ſight it is more perfect and clearer then the water of Nilus is. From the port Piqueno I went to Cochin, and from Cochin to Malacca, from whence I departed for Pegu being eight hundred miles diſtant. That voyage is woont to be made in fiue and twentie or thirtie dayes, but we were foure moneths, and at the ende of three moneths our ſhip was without victuals. The Pilot told vs that wee were by his altitude not farre from a citie called Tanaſary, in the kingdome of Pegu, and theſe his words were not true, but we were (as it were) in the middle of many Ilands, and many vninhabited rockes, and there were alſo ſome Portugales that affirmed that they knew the land, and knewe alſo where the citie of Tanaſari was.

This citie of right belongeth to the kingdome of Sion, which is ſituate on a great riuers ſide, which commeth out of the kingdome of Sion: and where this riuer runneth into the ſea, there is a village called Mirgim, in whoſe harbour euery yeere there lade ſome ſhips with Verzina, Nypa, and Beniamin, a few cloues, nutmegs and maces which come from the coaſt of Sion, but the greateſt marchandiſe there is Verzin and Nypa, which is an excellent wine, which is made of the floure of a tree called Nyper. Whoſe liquour they diſtill, and ſo make an excellent drinke cleare as chriſtall, good to the mouth, and better to the ſtomake, and it hath an excellent gentle vertue, that if one were rotten with the french pockes, drinking good ſtore of this, he ſhall be whole againe, and I haue ſeene it proued, becauſe that when I was in Cochin, there was a friend of mine, whoſe noſe beganne to drop away with that diſeaſe, and he was counſelled of the doctors of phiſicke, that he ſhould goe to Tanaſary at the time of the new wines, and that he ſhould drinke of the nyper wine, night and day, as much as he could before it was diſtilled, which at that time is moſt delicate, but after that it is diſtilled, it is more ſtrong, and if you drinke much of it, it will fume into the head with drunkenneſſe. This man went thither, and did ſo, and I haue ſeene him after with a good colour and ſound. This wine is very much eſteemed in the Indies, and for that it is brought ſo farre off, it is very deare: in Pegu ordinarily it is good cheape, becauſe it is neerer to the place where they make it, and there is euery yeere great quantitie made thereof. And returning to my purpoſe, I ſay, being amongſt theſe rockes, and farre from the land which is ouer againſt Tanaſary, with great ſcarcitie of victuals, and that by the ſaying of the Pylot and two Portugales, holding then firme that wee were in front of the aforeſayd harbour, we determined to goe thither with our boat and fetch victuals, and that the ſhippe ſhould ſtay for vs in a place aſſigned. We were twentie and eight perſons in the boat that went for victuals, and on a day about twelue of the clocke we went from the ſhip, aſſuring our ſelues to bee in the harbour before night in the aforeſaid port, wee rowed all that day, and a great part of the next night, and all the next day without finding harbour, or any ſigne of good landing, and this came to paſſe through the euill counſell of the two Portugales that were with vs.

Marchandiſe comming from Sion.

Niper wine good to cure the French diſeaſe.

For we had ouerſhot the harbour and left it behind vs, in ſuch wiſe that we had loſt the lande inhabited, together with the ſhippe, and we eight and twentie men had no maner of victuall with vs in the boate, but it was the Lords will that one of the Mariners had brought a litle rice with him in the boate to barter away for ſome other thing, and it was not ſo much but that three or foure men would haue eaten it at a meale: I tooke the gouernment of this Ryce, promiſing that by the helpe of God that Ryce ſhould be nouriſhment for vs vntil it pleaſed God to ſend vs to ſome place that was inhabited: & when I ſlept I put the ryce into my boſome becauſe they ſhould not rob it from me: we were nine daies rowing alongſt the coaſt, without finding any thing but countreys vninhabited, & deſert Ilands, where if we had found but graſſe it would haue ſeemed ſugar vnto vs, but wee could not finde any, yet we found a fewe leaues of a tree, and they were ſo hard that we could not chewe them, we had water and wood ſufficient, and as wee rowed, we could goe but by flowing water, for when it was ebbing water, wee made faſt our boat to the banke of one of thoſe Ilandes, and in theſe nine dayes that we rowed, we found a caue or neſt of Tortoiſes egges, wherein were one hundred fortie and foure egges, the which was a great helpe vnto vs: theſe egges are as bigge as a hennes egge, and haue no ſhell about them but a tender ſkinne, euery day we ſodde a kettle full of thoſe egges, with an handfull of rice in the broth thereof: it pleaſed God that at the ende of nine dayes we diſcouered certaine fiſher men, a fiſhing with ſmall barkes, and we rowed towardes them, with a good cheare, for I thinke there were neuer men more glad then we were, for wee were ſo ſore afflicted with penurie, that we could ſcarce ſtande on our legges. Yet according to the order that we ſet for our ryce, when we ſawe thoſe fiſher men, there was left ſufficient for foure dayes. The firſt village that we came to was in the gulfe of Tauay, vnder the king of Pegu, whereas we found great ſtore of victuals: then for two or three dayes after our arriuall there, we would eate but litle meate any of vs, and yet for all this, we were at the point of death the moſt part of vs. From Tauay to Martauan, in the kingdome of Pegu, are ſeuentie two miles. We laded our bote with victuals which were aboundantly ſufficient for ſixe monethes, from whence we departed for the port and Citie of Martauan, where in ſhort time we arriued, but we found not our ſhip there as we had thought we ſhould, from whence preſently we made out two barkes to goe to looke for her. And they found her in great calamitie, and neede of water, being at an anker with a contrary winde, which came very ill to paſſe, becauſe that ſhe wanted her boat a moneth, which ſhould haue made her prouiſion of wood and water, the ſhippe alſo by the grace of God arriued ſafely in the aforeſaid port of Martauan.

Tauay vnder the king of Pegu.

The Citie of Martauan.

WE found in the Citie of Martauan ninetie Portugales of Merchants and other baſe men, which had fallen at difference with the Retor or gouernour of the citie, and all for this cauſe, that certaine vagabondes of the Portugales had ſlaine fiue falchines of the king of Pegu, which chaunced about a moneth after the king of Pegu was gone with a million and foure hundred thouſand men to conquere the kingdome of Sion, They haue for cuſtome in this Countrey and kingdome, the king being whereſoeuer his pleaſure is to bee out of his kingdome, that euery fifteene dayes there goeth from Pegu a Carouan of Falchines, with euery one a baſket on his head full of ſome fruites or other delicates of refreſhings, and with cleane clothes: it chaunced that this Carouan paſſing by Martauan, and reſting themſelues there a night, there happened betweene the Portugales and them wordes of deſpight, and from wordes to blowes, and becauſe it was thought that the Portugales had the worſe, the night following, when the Falchines were a ſleepe with their companie, the Portugales went and cut off fiue of their heads. Now there is a lawe in Pegu, that whoſoeuer killeth a man, he ſhall buy the ſhed blood with his money, according to the eſtate of the perſon that is ſlaine, but theſe Falchines being the ſeruants of the king, the Retors durſt not doe any thing in the matter, without the conſent of the king, becauſe it was neceſſarie that the king ſhould knowe of ſuch a matter. When the king had knowledge thereof, he gaue commaundement that the malefactors ſhould be kept vntill his comming home, and then he would duely miniſter iuſtice, but the Captaine of the Portugales would not deliuer thoſe men, but rather ſet himſelfe with all the reſt in armes, and went euery day through the Citie marching with his Drumme and enſignes diſplayd. For at that time the Citie was emptie of men, by reaſon they were gone all to the warres and in buſineſſe of the king: in the middeſt of this rumour wee came thither, and I thought it a ſtrange thing to ſee the Portugales vſe ſuch inſolencie in another mans Citie. And I ſtoode in doubt of that which came to paſſe, and would not vnlade my goods becauſe that they were more ſure in the ſhippe then on the land, the greateſt part of the lading was the owners of the ſhippe, who was in Malacca, yet there were diuerſe marchants there, but their goods were of ſmall importance, all thoſe marchants tolde me that they would not vnlade any of their goods there, vnleſſe I would vnlade firſt, yet after they left my counſell and followed their owne, and put their goods a lande and loſt euery whit. The Rector with the cuſtomer ſent for mee, and demaunded why I put not my goods a lande, and payed my cuſtome as other men did: To whom I anſwered, that I was a marchant that was newly come thither, and ſeeing ſuch diſorder amongſt the Portugales, I doubted the loſſe of my goods which coſt me very deare, with the ſweate of my face, and for this cauſe I was determined not to put my goods on lande, vntill ſuch time as his honour would aſſure me in the name of the king, that I ſhould haue no loſſe, and although there came harme to the Portugales, that neither I nor my goods ſhould haue any hurt, becauſe I had neither part nor any difference with them in this tumult: my reaſon ſounded well in the Retors eares, and ſo preſently he ſent for the Bargits, which are as Counſellers of the Citie, and there they promiſed mee on the kings head or in the behalfe of the king, that neither I nor my goods ſhould haue any harme, but that we ſhould be ſafe and ſure: of which promiſe there were made publike notes. And then I ſent for my goods and had them on land, and payde my cuſtome, which is in that countrey ten in the hundreth of the ſame goods, and for my more ſecuritie I tooke a houſe right againſt the Retors houſe. The Captaine of the Portugales, and all the Portugall marchants were put out of the Citie, and I with twentie and two poore men which were officers in the ſhippe, had my dwelling in the Citie. After this, the Gentiles deuiſed to be reuenged of the Portugales; but they would not put it in execution vntill ſuch time as our ſmall ſhippe had diſcharged all her goods, and then the next night following came from Pegu foure thouſand ſouldiers with ſome Elephants of warre; and before that they made any tumult in the citie, the Retor ſent, and gaue commaundement to all Portugales that were in the Citie, when they heard any rumour or noyſe, that for any thing they ſhould not goe out of their houſes, as they tendered their owne health. Then foure houres within night I heard a great rumour and noyſe of men of warre, with Elephants which threw downe the doores of the ware-houſes of the Portugales, and their houſes of wood and ſtrawe, in the which tumult there were ſome Portugales wounded, and one of them ſlaine; and others without making proofe of their manhoode, which the day before did ſo bragge, at that time put themſelues to flight moſt ſhamefully, and ſaued themſelues a boord of litle ſhippes, that were at an anker in the harbour, and ſome that were in their beds fled away naked, and that night they caried away all the Portugalles goods out of the ſuburbes into the Citie, and thoſe Portugales that had their goods in the ſuburbes alſo. After this the Portugales that were fledde into the ſhippes to ſaue themſelues, tooke a newe courage to themſelues, and came on lande and ſet fire on the houſes in the ſuburbes, which houſes being made of boorde and ſtrawe, and the winde blowing freſh, in ſmall time were burnt and conſumed, with which fire halfe the Citie had like to haue beene burnt; when the Portugales had done this, they were without all hope to recouer any part of their goods againe, which goods might amount to the ſumme of ſixteene thouſand duckats, which, if they had not ſet fire to the towne, they might haue had againe without any loſſe at all. Then the Portugales vnderſtanding that this thing was not done by the conſent of the king, but by his Lieutenant and the Retor of the citie were very ill content, knowing that they had made a great fault, yet the next morning following, the Portugales beganne to bende and ſhoot their ordinance againſt the Citie, which batterie of theirs continued foure dayes, but all was in vaine, for the ſhotte neuer hit the Citie, but lighted on the top of a ſmall hill neere vnto it, ſo that the citie had no harme. When the Retor perceiued that the Portugales made battery againſt the Citie, hee tooke one and twentie Portugales that were there in the Citie, and ſent them foure miles into the Countrey, there to tarry vntill ſuch time as the other Portugales were departed, that made the batterie, who after their departure let them goe at their owne libertie without any harme done vnto them. I my ſelfe was alwayes in my houſe with a good guard appointed me by the Retor, that no man ſhould doe me iniurie, nor harme me nor my goods; in ſuch wiſe that hee perfourmed all that he had promiſed me in the name of the king, but he would not let me depart before the comming of the king, which was greatly to my hinderance, becauſe I was twenty and one moneths ſequeſtred, that I could not buy nor ſell any kinde of marchandize. Thoſe commodities that I brought thither, were peper, ſandols, and Porcellan of China: ſo when the king was come home, I made my ſupplication vnto him, and I was licenced to depart when I would.

A reuenge on the Portugales.

From Marcauan I departed to goe to the chiefeſt Citie in the kingdome of Pegu, which is alſo called after the name of the kingdome, which voyage is made by ſea in three or foure daies; they may goe alſo by lande, but it is better for him that hath marchandize to goe by ſea and leſſer charge. And in this voyage you ſhall haue a Macareo, which is one of the moſt marueilous things in the world that nature hath wrought, and I neuer ſaw any thing ſo hard to be beleeued as this, to wit, the great increaſing & diminiſhing of the water there at one puſh or inſtant, and the horrible earthquake and great noyſe that the ſaid Macareo maketh where it commeth. We departed from Marcauan in barkes, which are like to our Pylot boates, with the increaſe of the water, and they goe as ſwift as an arrowe out of a bow, ſo long as the tide runneth with them, and when the water is at the higheſt, then they drawe themſelues out of the Chanell towardes ſome banke, and there they come to anker, and when the water is diminiſhed, then they reſt on dry land: and

and when the barkes reſt dry, they are as high from the bottome of the Chanell, as any houſe top is high from the ground. They let their barkes lie ſo high for this reſpect, that if there ſhould any ſhippe reſt or ride in the Chanell, with ſuch force commeth in the water, that it would ouerthrowe ſhippe or barke: yet for all this, that the barkes be ſo farre out of the Chanell, and though the water hath loſt her greateſt ſtrength and furie before it come ſo high, yet they make faſt their prowe to the ſtreme, and oftentimes it maketh them very fearefull, and if the anker did not holde her prow vp by ſtrength, ſhee would be ouerthrowen and loſt with men and goods. When the water beginneth to increaſe, it maketh ſuch a noyſe and ſo great that you would thinke it an earthquake, and preſently at the firſt it maketh three waues. So that the firſt waſheth ouer the barke, from ſtemme to ſterne, the ſecond is not ſo furious as the firſt, and the thirde rayſeth the Anker, and then for the ſpace of ſixe houres while the water encreaſeth, they rowe with ſuch ſwiftneſſe that you would thinke they did fly: in theſe tydes there muſt be loſt no iot of time, for if you arriue not at the ſtagions before the tyde be ſpent, you muſt turne backe from whence you came. For there is no ſtaying at any place, but at theſe ſtagions, and there is more daunger at one of theſe places then at another, as they be higher and lower one then another. When as you returne from Pegu to Martauan, they goe but halfe the tide at a time, becauſe they will lay their barkes vp aloft on the bankes, for the reaſon aforeſayd. I could neuer gather any reaſon of the noyſe that this water maketh in the increaſe of the tide, and in deminiſhing of the water. There is another Macareo in Cambaya, but that is nothing in compariſon of this. By the helpe of God we came ſafe to Pegu, which are two cities, the olde and the newe, in the olde citie are the Marchant ſtrangers, and marchantes of the Countrey, for there are the greateſt doings and the greateſt trade. This citie is not very great, but it hath very great ſuburbes. Their houſes be made with canes, and couered with leaues, or with ſtrawe, but the marchants haue all one houſe or Magaſon, which houſe they call Godon which is made of brickes, and there they put all their goods of any valure, to ſaue them from the often miſchances that there happen to houſes made of ſuch ſtuffe. In the new citie is the pallace of the king, and his abiding place with all his barons and nobles, and other gentlemen; and in the time that I was there, they finiſhed the building of the new citie: it is a great citie, very plaine and flat, and foure ſquare, walled round about, and with ditches that compaſſe the wals about with water, in which diches are many crocodils, it hath no drawe bridges, yet it hath twentie gates, fiue for euery ſquare on the walles, there are many places made for centinels to watch, made of wood and couered or guilt with gold, the ſtreetes thereof are the fayreſt that I haue ſeene, they are as ſtreight as a line from one gate to another, and ſtanding at the one gate you may diſcouer to the other, and they are as broad as 10 or 12 men may ride a breaſt in them: and thoſe ſtreetes that be thwart are faire and large, theſe ſtreetes, both on the one ſide and on the other, are planted at the doores of the houſes, with nut trees of India, which make a very commodious ſhadowe, the houſes be made of wood and couered with a kind of tiles in forme of cups, very neceſſary for their vſe, the kings palace is in the middle of the citie, made in forme of a walled caſtle, with ditches full of water round about it, the lodgings within are made of wood all ouer gilded, with fine pinacles, and very coſtly worke, couered with plates of golde. Truely it may be a kings houſe: within the gate there is a faire large court, from the one ſide to the other, wherein there are made places for the ſtrongeſt and ſtouteſt Eliphants appointed for the ſeruice of the kings perſon, and amongſt all other Eliphants, he hath foure that be white, a thing ſo rare that a man ſhall hardly finde another king that hath any ſuch, and if this king knowe any other that hath white Eliphantes, he ſendeth for them as for a gift. The time that I was there, there were two brought out of a farre Countrey, and that coſt me ſomething the ſight of them, for that they commaund the marchants to goe to ſee them, and then they muſt giue ſomewhat to the men that bring them: the brokers of the marchants giue for euery man halfe a duckat, which they call a Tanſa, which amounteth to a great ſumme, for the number of merchants that are in that citie; and when they haue payde the aforeſayde Tanſa, they may chuſe whether they will ſee them at that time or no, becauſe that when they are in the kings ſtall, euery man may ſee them that will: but at that time they muſt goe and ſee them, for it is the kings pleaſure it ſhould be ſo. This King amongſt all other his titles, is called the King of the white Eliphants, and it is reported that if this king knewe any other king that had any of theſe white Eliphantes, and would not ſend them vnto him, that he would hazard his whole kingdome to conquer them, he eſteemeth theſe white Eliphants very deerely, and they are had in great regard, and kept with very meete ſeruice, euery one of them is in a houſe, all guilded ouer, and they haue their meate giuen them in veſſels of ſiluer and golde, there is one blacke Eliphant the greateſt that hath bene ſeene, and he is kept according to his bigneſſe, he is nine cubites high, which is a marueilous thing.

Foure white Eliphants.

This money called Tanſa is halfe a duckat which may be three ſhillings & foure pence.

It is reported that this king hath foure thouſand Elephants of warre, and all haue their teeth, and they vſe to put on their two vppermoſt teeth ſharpe pikes of yron, and make them faſt with rings, becauſe theſe beaſtes fight, and make battell with their teeth; hee hath alſo very many yong Eliphants that haue not their teeth ſprowted foorth: alſo this king hath a braue deuiſe in hunting to take theſe Eliphants when hee will, two miles from the Citie. He hath builded a faire pallace all guilded, and within it a faire Court, and within it and rounde about there are made an infinite number of places for men to ſtande to ſee this hunting: neere vnto this Pallace is a mighty great wood, through the which the hunts-men of the king ride continually on the backs of the feminine Eliphants, teaching them in this buſineſſe. Euery hunter carieth out with him fiue or ſixe of theſe feminines, and they ſay that they anoynt the ſecret place with a certaine compoſition that they haue, that when the wilde Eliphant doeth ſmell thereunto, they followe the feminines and cannot leaue them: when the hunts-men haue made prouiſion, & the Eliphant is ſo entangled, they guide the feminines towards the Pallace which is called Tambell, and this Pallace hath a doore which doth open and ſhut with engines, before which doore there is a long ſtreight way with trees on both the ſides, which couereth the way in ſuch wiſe as it is like darkeneſſe in a corner: the wilde Eliphant when he commeth to this way, thinketh that he is in the woods. At the end of this darke way there is a great field, when the hunters haue gotten this praye, when they firſt come to this field, they ſend preſently to giue knowledge thereof to the Citie, and with all ſpeed there go out fiftie or ſixtie men on horſebacke, and doe beſet the fielde rounde about: in the great fielde then the females which are taught in this buſineſſe goe directly to the mouth of the darke way, and when as the wilde Eliphant is entred in there, the hunters ſhoute and make a great noyſe, as much as is poſſible, to make the wilde Eliphant enter in at the gate of that Pallace, which is then open, and aſſoone as hee is in, the gate is ſhut without any noyſe, and ſo the hunters with the female Eliphants, and the wilde one are all in the Court together, and then within a ſmall time the females withdraw themſelues away one by one out of the Court, leauing the wilde Eliphant alone: and when he perceiueth that he is left alone, he is ſo madde that for two or three houres to ſee him, it is the greateſt pleaſure in the world: he weepeth, hee flingeth, hee runneth, he iuſtleth, hee thruſteth vnder the places where the people ſtand to ſee him, thinking to kil ſome of them, but the poſts and timber is ſo ſtrong and great, that hee cannot hurt any body, yet hee oftentimes breaketh his teeth in the grates; At length when hee is weary and hath laboured his body that hee is all wet with ſweat, then he plucketh in his truncke into his mouth, and then hee throweth out ſo much water out of his belly, that he ſprinckleth it ouer the heades of the lookers on, to the vttermoſt of them, although it bee very high: and then when they ſee him very weary, there goe certaine officers into the Court with long ſharpe canes in their hands, and prick him that they make him to goe into one of the houſes that is made alongſt the Court for the ſame purpoſe: as there are many which are made long and narrow, that when the Eliphant is in, he cannot turne himſelf to go backe againe. And it is requiſite that theſe men ſhould be very wary and ſwift, for although their canes be long, yet the Eliphant would kill them if they were not ſwift to ſaue themſelues: at length when they haue gotten him into one of thoſe houſes, they ſtand ouer him in a loft and get ropes vnder his belly and about his necke, and about his legges, and binde him faſt, and ſo let him ſtand foure or fiue dayes, and giue him neither meate nor drinke. At the ende of theſe foure or fiue dayes, they vnlooſe him and put one of the females vnto him, and giue them meate and drinke, and in eight dayes he is become tame. In my iudgment there is not a beaſt ſo intellectiue as are theſe Eliphants, nor of more vnderſtanding in al the world: for he wil do all things that his keeper ſaith, ſo that he lacketh nothing but humaine ſpeech.

A ſtrange thing that a beaſt ſo wilde ſhould in ſo ſhort time be made tame.

It is reported that the greateſt ſtrength that the king of Pegu hath is in theſe Eliphants, for when they goe to battell, they ſet on their backes a Caſtle of wood bound thereto, with bands vnder their bellies: and in euery Caſtle foure men very commodiouſly ſet to fight with hargubuſhes, with bowes and arrowes, with darts and pikes, and other launcing weapons: and they ſay that the ſkinne of this Eliphant is ſo hard, that an harquebuſſe will not pierce it, vnleſſe it bee in the eye, temples, or ſome other tender place of his body. And beſides this, they are of great ſtrength, and haue a very excellent order in their battel, as I haue ſeene at their feaſtes which they make in the yeere, in which feaſtes the king maketh triumphes, which is a rare thing and worthy memorie, that in ſo barbarous a people there ſhould be ſuch goodly orders as they haue in their armies, which be diſtinct in ſquares of Eliphants, of horſemen, of harquebuſhers and pikemen, that truly the number of them are infinite: but their armour and weapons are very nought and weake as well the one as the other: they haue very bad pikes, their ſwords are worſe made, like long kniues without points, his harquebuſhes are moſt excellent, and alway in his warres he hath eightie thouſand harquebuſhes, and the number of them encreaſeth dayly. Becauſe the king will haue them ſhoote euery day at the Plancke, and ſo by continuall exerciſe they become moſt excellent ſhot: alſo hee hath great Ordinance made of very good mettall; to conclude there is not a King on the earth that hath more power or ſtrength then this king of Pegu, becauſe hee hath twentie and ſixe crowned kings at his commaunde. He can make in his Campe a million and an halfe of men of warre in the fielde againſt his enemies. The ſtate of his kingdome and maintenance of his army, is a thing incredible to conſider, & the victuals that ſhould maintaine ſuch a number of people in the warres: but he that knoweth the nature and qualitie of that people, will eaſily beleeue it. I haue ſeene with mine eyes, that thoſe people and ſouldiers haue eaten of all ſorts of wild beaſts that are on the earth, whether it bee very filthie or otherwiſe all ſerueth for their mouthes: yea, I haue ſeene them eate Scorpions and Serpents, alſo they feed of all kinde of herbes and graſſe. So that if ſuch a great armie want not water and ſalt, they wil maintaine themſelues a long time in a buſh with rootes, flowers and leaues of trees, they cary rice with them for their voyage, & that ſerueth them in ſtead of comfits, it is ſo daintie vnto them. This king of Pegu hath not any army or power by ſea, but in the land, for people, dominions, golde and ſiluer, he farre exceeds the power of the great Turke in treaſure and ſtrength. This king hath diuers Magaſons ful of treaſure, as gold, & ſiluer, and euery day he encreaſeth it more and more, and it is neuer diminiſhed. Alſo hee is Lord of the Mines of Rubies, Safires & Spinels. Neere vnto his royal pallace there is an ineſtimable treaſure whereof hee maketh no accompt, for that it ſtandeth in ſuch a place that euery one may ſee it, and the place where this treaſure is, is a great Court walled round about with walls of ſtone, with two gates which ſtand open euery day. And within this place or Court are foure gilded houſes couered with lead, & in euery one of theſe are certaine heatheniſh idoles of a very great valure. In the firſt houſe there is a ſtature of the image of a man of gold very great, & on his head a crowne of gold beſet with moſt rare Rubies and Safires, and round about him are 4. litle children of gold. In the ſecond houſe there is the ſtature of a man of ſiluer, that is ſet as it were ſitting on heapes of money: whoſe ſtature in height, as hee ſitteth, is ſo high, that his highneſſe exceedes the height of any one roofe of an houſe; I meaſured his feete, and found that they were as long as all my body was in height, with a crowne on his head like to the firſt. And in the thirde houſe, there is a ſtature of braſſe of the ſame bigneſſe, with a like crowne on his head. In the 4. and laſt houſe there is a ſtature of a man as big as the other, which is made of Ganſa, which is the metall they make their money of, & this metall is made of copper & leade mingled together. This ſtature alſo hath a crowne on his head like the firſt: this treaſure being of ſuch a value as it is, ſtandeth in an open place that euery man at his pleaſure may go & ſee it: for the keepers therof neuer forbid any man the ſight thereof. I ſay as I haue ſaid before, that this king euery yere in his feaſtes triumpheth: & becauſe it is worthy of the noting, I thinke it meet to write therof, which is as foloweth. The king rideth on a triumphant cart or wagon all gilded, which is drawen by 16. goodly horſes: and this cart is very high with a goodly canopy ouer it, behind the cart goe 20. of his Lords & nobles, with euery one a rope in his hand made faſt to the cart for to hold it vpright that it fal not. The king ſitteth in the middle of the cart; & vpon the ſame cart about the king ſtande 4. of his nobles moſt fauored of him, and before this cart wherein the king is, goeth all his army as aforeſaid, and in the middle of his army goeth all his nobilitie, round about the cart, that are in his dominions, a marueilous thing it is to ſee ſo many people, ſuch riches & ſuch good order in a people ſo barbarous as they be. This king of Pegu hath one principal wife which is kept in a Seralio, he hath 300 concubines, of whom it is reported that he hath 90. children. This king ſitteth euery day in perſon to heare the ſutes of his ſubiects, but he nor they neuer ſpeake one to another, but by ſupplications made in this order. The king ſitteth vp aloft in a great hall, on a tribunall ſeat, and lower vnder him ſit all his Barons round about, then thoſe that demaund audience enter into a great Court before the king, and there ſet them downe on the ground 40. paces diſtant from the kings perſon, and amongſt thoſe people there is no difference in matters of audience before the king, but all alike, and there they ſit with their ſupplications in their hands, which are made of long leaues of a tree, theſe leaues are 3. quarters of a yard long, & two fingers broad, which are written with a ſharpe iron made for ẏ purpoſe, & in thoſe leaues are their ſupplications written, & with their ſupplications, they haue in their hands a preſent or gift, according to the waightines of their matter. Then come ẏ ſecretaries downe to read theſe ſupplications, taking them & reading them before the king, & if the king think it good to do to them that fauour or iuſtice that they demaund, then he cõmandeth to take the preſents out of their hands: but if he thinke their demand be not iuſt or according to right, he commandeth them away without taking of their gifts or preſents. In the Indies there is not any marchandiſe that is good to bring to Pegu, vnleſſe it bee at ſome times by chance to bring Opium of Cambaia, and if he bring money he ſhall loſe by it. Now the commodities that come from S. Tome are the onely marchandize for that place, which is the great quantity of cloth made there, which they vſe in Pegu; which cloth is made of bombaſt wouen and painted, ſo that the more that kinde of cloth is waſhed, the more liuelie they ſhew their colours, which is a rare thing, and there is made ſuch accompt of this kinde of cloth which is of ſo great importance, that a ſmall bale of it will coſt a thouſand or two thouſand duckets. Alſo from S. Tome they layd great ſtore of red yarne, of bombaſt died with a roote which they call Saia, as aforeſayd, which colour will neuer out. With which marchandiſe euery yeere there goeth a great ſhippe from S. Tome to Pegu, of great importance, and they vſually depart from S. Tome to Pegu the 11. or 12. of September, & if ſhe ſtay vntil the twelfth, it is a great hap if ſhe returne not without making of her voiage. Their vſe was to depart the ſixt of September, and then they made ſure voyages, and now becauſe there is a great labour about that kind of cloth to bring it to perfection, and that it be well dried, as alſo the greedineſſe of the Captaine that would make an extraordinary gaine of his fraight, thinking to haue the wind alwayes to ſerue their turne, they ſtay ſo long, that at ſometimes the winde turneth. For in thoſe parts the windes blow firmely for certaine times, with the which they goe to Pegu with the winde in poope, and if they arriue not there before the winde change, and get ground to anker, perforce they muſt returne backe againe : for that the gales of the winde blowe there for three or foure moneths together in one place with great force. But if they get the coaſt & anker there, then with great labour they may ſaue their voyage. Alſo there goeth another great ſhippe from Bengala euery yeere, laden with fine cloth of bombaſt of all ſorts, which arriueth in the harbour of Pegu, when the ſhip that commeth from S. Tome departeth. The harbour where theſe two ſhips arriue is called Coſmin. From Malaca to Martauan, which is a port in Pegu, there come many ſmall ſhips, and great, laden with pepper, Sandolo, Procellan of China, Camfora, Bruneo, and other marchandiſe. The ſhips that come from Mecca enter into the port of Pegu and Cirion, and thoſe ſhippes bring cloth of Wooll, Scarlets, Veluets, Opium, and Chickinos, by the which they loſe, and they bring them becauſe they haue no other thing that is good for Pegu: but they eſteeme not the loſſe of them, for that they make ſuch great gaine of their commodities that they cary from thence out of that kingdome. Alſo the king of Aſſi his ſhips come thither into the ſame port laden with peper; from the coaſt of S. Tome of Bengala out of the Sea of Bara to Pegu are three hundreth miles, and they go it vp the riuer in foure daies, with the encreaſing water, or with the flood, to a City called Coſmin, and there they diſcharge their ſhips, whither the Cuſtomers of Pegu come to take the note and markes of all the goods of euery man, & take the charge of the goods on them, and conuey them to Pegu, into the kings houſe, wherin they make the cuſtome of the marchandize. When the Cuſtomers haue taken the charge of the goods & put them into barks, the Retor of the City giueth licence to the Marchants to take barke, and goe vp to Pegu with their marchandize; and ſo three or foure of them take a barke and goe vp to Pegu in company. God deliuer euery man that hee giue not a wrong note, and entrie, or thinke to ſteale any cuſtome: for if they do, for the leaſt trifle that is, he is vtterly vndone, for the king doeth take it for a moſt great affront to bee deceiued of his cuſtome; and therefore they make diligent ſearches, three times at the lading and vnlading of the goods, and at the taking of them a land. In Pegu this ſearch they make when they goe out of the ſhip for Diamonds, Pearles, and fine cloth which taketh little roome: for becauſe that all the iewels that come into Pegu, and are not found of that countrey, pay cuſtome, but Rubies, Safyres and Spinels pay no cuſtome in nor out: becauſe they are found growing in that Countrey. I haue ſpoken before, how that all Marchants that meane to goe thorow the Indies, muſt cary al maner of houſhold ſtuffe with them which is neceſſary for a houſe, becauſe that there is not any lodging nor Innes nor hoſtes, nor chamber roome in that Countrey, but the firſt thing a man doth when he commeth to any City is to hier a houſe, either by the yeere or by the moneth, or as he meanes to ſtay in thoſe parts.

Great rigour for the ſtealing of Cuſtomes.

In Pegu their order is to hire their houſes for ſixe moneths. Nowe from Coſmin to the Citie of Pegu they goe in ſixe houres with the flood, and if it be ebbing water, then they make faſt their boate to the riuer ſide, and there tary vntil the water flow againe. It is a very commodious and pleaſant voyage, hauing on both ſides of the riuers many great villages, which they call Cities: in the which hennes, pigeons, egges, milke, rice, and other things be very good cheape. It is all plaine, and a goodly Countrey, and in eight dayes you may make your voyage vp to Macceo, diſtant frō Pegu twelue miles, & there they diſcharge their goods, & lade them in Carts or waines drawen with oxen, and the Marchants are caried in a cloſet which they call Deling, in the which a man ſhall be very well accommodated, with cuſhions vnder his head, and couered for the defence of the Sunne and raine, and there he may ſleepe if he haue wil thereunto: and his foure Falchines cary him running away, changing two at one time and two at another. The cuſtome of Pegu and fraight thither, may amount vnto twentie or twentie two per cento, and 23. according as he hath more or leſſe ſtolen from him that day they cuſtome the goods. It is requiſite that a man haue his eyes watchfull, and to be carefull, and to haue many friendes, for when they cuſtome in the great hall of the king, there come many gentlemen accompanied with a number of their ſlaues, and theſe gentlemen haue no ſhame that their ſlaues rob ſtrangers: whether it be cloth in ſhewing of it or any other thing, they laugh at it. And although the Marchants helpe one another to keepe watch, & looke to their goods, they cannot looke thereto ſo narrowly but one or other wil rob ſomething, either more or leſſe, according as their marchandiſe is more or leſſe: and yet on this day there is a worſe thing then this: although you haue ſet ſo many eyes to looke there for your benefit, that you eſcape vnrobbed of the ſlaues, a man cannot chooſe but that he muſt be robbed of the officers of the cuſtome houſe. For paying the cuſtome with the ſame goods oftentimes they take the beſt that you haue, & not by rate of euery ſort as they ought to do, by which meanes a man payeth more then his dutie. At length when the goods be diſpatched out of the cuſtome houſe in this order, the Marchant cauſeth them to be caried to his houſe, and may do with them at his pleaſure.

There are in Pegu 8. brokers of the kings, which are called Tareghe, who are bound to ſell all the marchandize which come to Pegu, at the common or the currant price: then if the marchants wil ſell their goods at that price, they ſel them away, and the brokers haue two in the hundreth of euery ſort of marchandiſe, and they are bound to make good the debts of thoſe goods, becauſe they be ſold by their hands or meanes, & on their wordes, and oftentimes the marchant knoweth not to whom he giueth his goods, yet he cannot loſe any thing thereby, for that the broker is bound in any wiſe to pay him, and if the marchant ſel his goods without the conſent of the broker, yet neuertheleſſe he muſt pay him two per cento, and be in danger of his money: but this is very ſeldom ſeene, becauſe the wife, children, and ſlaues of the debtor are bound to the creditor, and when his time is expired and paiment not made, the creditor may take the debtor and cary him home to his houſe, and ſhut him vp in a Magaſin, whereby preſently he hath his money, and not being able to pay the creditor, he may take the wife, children, and ſlaues of the debtor, and ſel them, for ſo is the lawe of that kingdome. The currant money that is in this city, and throughout all this kingdom is called Ganſa or Ganza, which is made of Copper and leade: It is not the money of the king, but euery man may ſtamp it that wil, becauſe it hath his iuſt partition or value: but they make many of them falſe, by putting ouermuch lead into them, and thoſe will not paſſe, neither will any take them. With this money Ganza, you may buy golde or ſiluer, Rubies and Muſke, and other things. For there is no other money currant amongſt them. And Golde, ſiluer and other marchandize are at one time dearer then another, as all other things be.

Euery man may ſtampe what money he wil.

This Ganza goeth by weight of Byze, & this name of Byza goeth for yͤ accompt of the weight, and commonly a Byza of a Ganza is worth (after our accompt) halfe a ducat, litle more or leſſe: and albeit that Gold and ſiluer is more or leſſe in price, yet the Byza neuer changeth: euery Byza maketh a hundreth Ganza of weight, and ſo the number of the money is Byza. He that goeth to Pegu to buy Iewels, if he wil do well, it behoueth him to be a whole yere there to do his buſineſſe. For if ſo be that he would return with the ſhip he cāme in, he cānot do any thing ſo cōueniently for the breuitie of the time, becauſe that when they cuſtome their goods in Pegu that come from S. Tome in their ſhips, it is as it were about Chriſtmas: and when they haue cuſtomed their goods, then muſt they ſell them for their credits ſake for a moneth or two: and then at the beginning of March the ſhips depart. The Marchants that come from S. Tome take for the paiment of their goods, gold, and ſiluer, which is neuer wanting there. And 8. or 10. dayes before their departure they are all ſatiſfied: alſo they may haue Rubies in paiment, but they make no accompt of them: and they that will winter there for another yere, it is needfull that they be aduertized, that in the ſale of their goods, they ſpecifie in their bargaine, the terme of two or 3. moneths paiment, & that their paiment ſhalbe in ſo many Ganza, and neither golde nor ſiluer: becauſe that with the Ganza they may buy & ſel euery thing with great aduātage. And how needful is it to be aduertized, when they will recouer their paiments, in what order they ſhal receiue their Ganza? Becauſe he that is not experienced may do himſelfe great wrong in the weight of the Ganſa, as alſo in the falſeneſſe of them: in the weight he may be greatly deceiued, becauſe that from place to place it doth riſe and fall greatly: and therefore when any wil receiue money or make paiment, he muſt take a publique wayer of money, a day or two before he go about his buſineſſe, and giue him in paiment for his labour two Byzaes a moneth, and for this he is bound to make good all your money, & to maintaine it for good, for that hee receiueth it and ſeales the bags with his ſeale: and when hee hath receiued any ſtore, then hee cauſeth it to bee brought into the Magaſon of the Marchant, that is the owner of it.

How a man may diſpoſe himſelfe for the trade in Pegu.

Good inſtructions.

That money is very weightie, for fourtie Byza is a ſtrong Porters burden; and alſo where the Marchant hath any payment to be made for thoſe goods which he buyeth, the Common wayer of money that receiueth his money muſt make the payment thereof. So that by this meanes, the Marchant with the charges of two Byzes a moneth, receiueth and payeth out his money without loſſe or trouble. The Marchandizes that goe out of Pegu are Gold, Siluer, Rubies, Saphyres, Spinelles, great ſtore of Beniamin, long peper, Leade, Lacca, rice, wine, ſome ſugar, yet there might be great ſtore of ſugar made in the Countrey, for that they haue aboundance of Canes, but they giue them to Eliphants to eate, and the people conſume great ſtore of them for food, and many more doe they conſume in vaine things, as theſe folowing. In that kingdome they ſpend many of theſe Sugar canes in making of houſes and tents which they call Varely for their idoles, which they call Pagodes, whereof there are great aboundance, great and ſmal, and theſe houſes are made in forme of little hilles, like to Sugar loaues or to Bells, and ſome of theſe houſes are as high as a reaſonable ſteeple, at the foote they are very large, ſome of them be in circuit a quarter of a mile. The ſaide houſes within are full of earth, and walled round about with brickes and dirt in ſteade of lime, and without forme, from the top to the foote they make a couering for them with Sugar canes, and plaiſter it with lime all ouer, for otherwiſe they would bee ſpoyled, by the great aboundance of raine that falleth in thoſe Countreys. Alſo they conſume about theſe Varely or idol houſes great ſtore of leafe-gold, for that they ouerlap all the tops of the houſes with gold, and ſome of them are couered with golde from the top to the foote: in couering whereof there is great ſtore of gold ſpent, for that euery 10. yeeres they new ouerlap them with gold, from the top to the foote, ſo that with this vanitie they ſpend great aboundance of golde. For euery 10. yeres the raine doeth conſume the gold from theſe houſes. And by this meanes they make golde dearer in Pegu then it would bee, if they conſumed not ſo much in this vanitie. Alſo it is a thing to bee noted in the buying of iewels in Pegu, that he that hath no knowledge ſhall haue as good iewels, and as good cheap, as he that hath bene practized there a long time, which is a good order, and it is in this wiſe. There are in Pegu foure men of good reputation, which are called Tareghe, or brokers of Iewels. Theſe foure men haue all the Iewels or Rubies in their handes, and the Marchant that will buy commeth to one of theſe Tareghe and telleth him, that he hath ſo much money to imploy in Rubies. For through the hands of theſe foure men paſſe all the Rubies: for they haue ſuch quantitie, that they knowe not what to doe with them, but ſell them at moſt vile and baſe prices. When the Marchant hath broken his mind to one of theſe brokers or Tareghe, they cary him home to one of their Shops, although he hath no knowledge in Iewels: and when the Iewellers perceiue that hee will employ a good round ſumme, they will make a bargaine, and if not, they let him alone. The vſe generally of this Citie is this: that when any Marchant hath bought any great quantitie of Rubies, and hath agreed for them, hee carieth them home to his houſe, let them be of what value they will, he ſhall haue ſpace to looke on them and peruſe them two or three dayes: and if he hath no knowledge in them, he ſhall alwayes haue many Marchants in that Citie that haue very good knowledge in Iewels; with whom he may alwayes conferre and take counſell, and may ſhew them vnto whom he will; and if he finde that hee hath not employed his money well, hee may returne his Iewels backe to them whom hee had them of, without any loſſe at all. Which thing is ſuch a ſhame to the Tareghe to haue his Iewels returne, that he had rather beare a blow on the face then that it ſhould be thought that he ſolde them ſo deere to haue them returned. For theſe men haue alwayes great care that they affoord good penworths, eſpecially to thoſe that haue no knowledge. This they doe, becauſe they would not looſe their credite: and when thoſe Marchants that haue knowledge in Iewels buy any, if they buy them deere, it is their own faults and not the brokers: yet it is good to haue knowledge in Iewels, by reaſon that it may ſomewhat eaſe the price. There is alſo a very good order which they haue in buying of Iewels, which is this; There are many Marchants that ſtand by at the making of the bargaine, and becauſe they ſhall not vnderſtand howe the Iewels be ſolde, the Broker and the Marchants haue their hands vnder a cloth, and by touching of fingers and nipping the ioynts they knowe what is done, what is bidden, and what is asked. So that the ſtanders by knowe not what is demaunded for them, although it be for a thouſand or 10. thouſand duckets. For euery ioynt and euery finger hath his ſignification. For if the Marchants that ſtande by ſhould vnderſtand the bargaine, it would breede great controuerſie amongſt them. And at my being in Pegu in the moneth of Auguſt, in Anno 1569. hauing gotten well by my endeuour, I was deſirous to ſee mine owne Countrey, and I thought it good to goe by the way of S. Tome, but then I ſhould tary vntill March.

In which iourney I was counſailed, yea, and fully reſolued to go by the way of Bengala, with a ſhippe there ready to depart for that voyage. And then wee departed from Pegu to Chatigan a great harbour or port, from whence there goe ſmal ſhips to Cochin, before the fleete depart for Portugall, in which ſhips I was fully determined to goe to Lisbon, and ſo to Venice. When I had thus reſolued my ſelfe, I went a boord of the ſhippe of Bengala, at which time it was the yeere of Touffon: concerning which Touffon ye are to vnderſtand, that in the Eaſt Indies often times, times, there are not ſtormes as in other countreys; but euery 10. or 12. yeeres there are ſuch tempeſts and ſtormes, that it is a thing incredible, but to thoſe that haue ſeene it, neither do they know certainly what yeere they wil come.

The Touſon cōmeth but euery 10. or 12. yeeres.

Vnfortunate are they that are at ſea in that yere and time of the Touffon, becauſe few there are that eſcape that danger. In this yere it was our chance to be at ſea with the like ſtorme, but it happened well vnto vs, for that our ſhip was newly ouer-plancked, and had not any thing in her ſaue victuall and balaſts, Siluer and golde, which from Pegu they cary to Bengala, and no other kinde of Marchandiſe. This Touffon or cruel ſtorme endured three dayes and three nights: in which time it caried away our ſailes, yards, and rudder; and becauſe the ſhippe laboured in the Sea, wee cut our maſt ouer boord: which when we had done ſhe laboured a great deale more then before, in ſuch wiſe, that ſhe was almoſt full with water that came ouer the higheſt part of her and ſo went downe: and for the ſpace of three dayes and three nights ſixtie men did nothing but hale water out of her in this wiſe, twentie men in one place, and twentie men in another place, and twentie in a thirde place: and for all this ſtorme, the ſhippe was ſo good, that ſhee tooke not one iot of water below through her ſides, but all ran downe through the hatches, ſo that thoſe ſixtie men did nothing but caſt the Sea into the Sea. And thus driuing too and fro as the winde and Sea would, we were in a darke night about foure of the clocke caſt on a ſholde: yet when it was day, we could neither ſee land on one ſide nor other, and knew not where we were. And as it pleaſed the diuine power, there came a great waue of the Sea, which draue vs beyonde the ſhould. And when wee felt the ſhippe aflote, we roſe vp as men reuiued, becauſe the Sea was calme and ſmooth water, and then ſounding we found twelue fadome water, and within a while after wee had but ſixe fadome, and then preſently we came to anker with a ſmall anker that was left vs at the ſterne, for all our other were loſt in the ſtorme: and by and by the ſhippe ſtrooke a ground, and then wee did prop her that ſhe ſhould not ouerthrow.

A manifeſt token of the ebbing and flowing in thoſe Countreis.

When it was day the ſhippe was all dry, and wee found her a good mile from the Sea on drie land. This Touffon being ended, we diſcouered an Iſland not farre from vs, and we went from the ſhippe on the ſands to ſee what Iſland it was: and wee found it a place inhabited, and, to my iudgement, the fertileſt Iſland in all the world, the which is diuided into two parts by a chanell which paſſeth betweene it, & with great trouble we brought our ſhip into the ſame chanel, which parteth the Iſland at flowing water, and there we determined to ſtay 40. dayes to refreſh vs. And when the people of the Iſland ſaw the ſhip, and that we were cōming a land: preſently they made a place of bazar or a market, with ſhops right ouer againſt the ſhip with all maner of prouiſion of victuals to eate, which they brought downe in great abundance, and ſold it ſo good cheape, that we were amazed at the cheapeneſſe thereof. I bought many ſalted kine there, for the prouiſion of the ſhip, for halfe a Larine a piece, which Larine may be 12. ſhillings ſixe pence, being very good and fat; and 4. wilde hogges ready dreſſed for a Larine; great fat hennes for a Bizze a piece, which is at the moſt a pennie: and the people told vs that we were deceiued the halfe of our money, becauſe we bought things ſo deare. Alſo a ſacke of fine rice for a thing of nothing, and conſequently all other things for humaine ſuſtenance were there in ſuch aboundance, that it is a thing incredible but to them that haue ſeene it. This Iſland is called Sondiua belonging to the kingdome of Bengala, diſtant 120. miles from Chatigan, to which place wee were bound. The people are Moores, and the king a very good man of a Moore king, for if he had bin a tyrant as others be, he might haue robbed vs of all, becauſe the Portugall captaine of Chatigan was in armes againſt the Retor of that place, & euery day there were ſome ſlaine, at which newes we reſted there with no ſmal feare, keeping good watch and ward aboord euery night as the vſe is, but the gouernour of the towne did comfort vs, and bad vs that we ſhould feare nothing, but that we ſhould repoſe our ſelues ſecurely without any danger, although the Portugales of Chatigan had ſlaine the gouernour of that City, and ſaid that we were not culpable in that fact; and moreouer he did vs euery day what pleaſure he could, which was a thing contrary to our expectations conſidering that they & the people of Chatigan were both ſubiects to one king. We departed from Sondiua, & came to Chatigan the great port of Bengala, at the ſame time when the Portugales had made peace and taken a truce with the gouernours of the towne, with this condition that the chiefe Captaine of the Portugales with his ſhip ſhould depart without any lading: for there were then at that time 18. ſhips of Portugales great and ſmall. This Captaine being a Gentleman and of good courage, was notwithſtanding contented to depart to his greateſt hinderance, rather then hee would ſeeke to hinder ſo many of his friends as were there, as alſo becauſe the time of the yeere was ſpent to go to the Indies. The night before he departed, euery ſhip that had any lading therein, put it aboord of the Captaine to helpe to eaſe his charge and to recompence his courteſies. In this time there came a meſſenger from the king of Rachim to this Portugal Captaine, who ſaide in the behalfe of his king, that hee had had heard of the courage and valure of him, deſiring him gently that he would vouchſafe to come with the ſhip into his port, and comming thither he ſhould be very wel intreated. This Portugal went thither and was very well ſatiſfied of this King.

This King of Rachim hath his ſeate in the middle coaſt betweene Bengala and Pegu, and the greateſt enemie he hath is the king of Pegu: which king of Pegu deuiſeth night and day how to make this king of Rachim his ſubiect, but by no meanes hee is able to doe it: becauſe the king of Pegu hath no power nor armie by Sea. And this king of *Rachim may arme two hundreth Galleyes or Fuſts by Sea, and by land he hath certaine ſluſes with the which when the king of Pegu pretendeth any harme towards him, hee may at his pleaſure drowne a great part of the Countrey. So that by this meanes hee cutteth off the way whereby the king of Pegu ſhould come with his power to hurt him.

Or, Aracam.

From the great port of Chatigan they cary for the Indies great ſtore of Rice, very great quantitie of Bombaſt cloth of euery ſort, Suger, corne, and money, with other marchandize. And by reaſon of the warres in Chatigan, the Portugall ſhips taried there ſo long, that they arriued not at Cochin ſo ſoone as they were wont to doe other yeeres. For which cauſe the fleete that was at Cochin was departed for Portugal before they arriued there, and I being in one of the ſmall ſhippes before the fleete, in diſcouering of Cochin, we alſo diſcouered the laſt ſhippe of the Fleete that went from Cochin to Portugall, where ſhee made ſaile, for which I was marueilouſly diſcomforted, becauſe that all the yeere following, there was no going for Portugale, and when we arriued at Cochin I was fully determined to goe for Venice by the way of Ormus, and at that time the Citie of Goa was beſieged by the people of Dialcan, but the Citizens forced not this aſſault, becauſe they ſuppoſed that it would not continue long. For all this I imbarked my ſelfe in a Galley that went for Goa, meaning there to ſhippe my ſelfe for Ormus; but when we came to Goa, the Viceroy would not ſuffer any Portugal to depart, by reaſon of the warres. And being in Goa but a ſmall time, I fell ſicke of an infirmitie that helde mee foure moneths: which with phiſicke and diet coſt me eight hundreth duckets, and there I was conſtrained to ſell a ſmal quantitie of Rubies to ſuſtaine my neede: and I ſolde that for fiue hundreth duckets, that was worth a thouſand. And when I beganne to waxe well of my diſeaſe, I had but little of that money left, euery thing was ſo ſcarſe: For euery chicken (and yet not good) coſt mee ſeuen or eight Liuers, which is ſixe ſhillings, or ſixe ſhillings eight pence. Beſide this great charges, the Apothecaries with their medicines were no ſmall charge to me. At the ende of ſixe moneths they raiſed the ſiege, and then I beganne to worke, for Iewels were riſen in their prices: for, whereas before I ſold a few of refuſed Rubies, I determined then to ſell the reſt of all my Iewels that I had there, and to make an other voyage to Pegu. And for becauſe that at my departure from Pegu, Opium was in great requeſt, I went then to Cambaya to imploy a good round ſumme of money in Opium, and there I bought 60. percels of Opium, which coſt me two thouſand & a hundreth duckets, euery ducket at foure ſhillings two pence. Moreouer I bought three bales of Bombaſt cloth, which coſt me eight hundred duckats, which was a good cõmoditie for Pegu: when I had bought theſe things, the Viceroy commanded that the cuſtome of the Opium ſhould be paide in Goa, and paying cuſtome there I might cary it whither I would. I ſhipped my 3. bales of cloth at Chaul in a ſhippe that went for Cochin, and I went to Goa to pay the aforeſaid cuſtome for my Opium, and from Goa I departed to Cochin in a ſhip that was for the voyage of Pegu, and went to winter then at S. Tome. When I came to Cochin, I vnderſtood that the ſhip that had my three bales of cloth was caſt away and loſt, ſo that I loſt my 800. Serafins or duckats: and departing from Cochin to goe for S. Tome, in caſting about for the Iſland of Zeilan the Pilote was deceiued, for that the Cape of the Iſland of Zeilan lieth farre out into the ſea, and the Pilot thinking that he might haue paſſed hard aboord the Cape, and paying roomer in the night; when it was morning we were farre within the Cape, and paſt all remedy to go out, by reaſon the winds blew ſo fiercely againſt vs. So that by this meanes we loſt our voyage for that yere, and we went to Manar with the ſhip to winter there, the ſhip hauing loſt her maſtes, and with great diligence we hardly ſaued her, with great loſſes to the Captaine of the ſhip, becauſe he was forced to freight another ſhip in S. Tome for Pegu with great loſſes and intereſt, and I with my friends agreed together in Manar to take a bark to cary vs to S. Tome; which thing we did withal the reſt of the marchants; and ariuing at S. Tome I had newes through or by the way of Bengala, that in Pegu Opium was very deare, and I knew that in S. Tome there was no Opium but mine to go for Pegu that yere, ſo that I was holden of al the marchants there to be very rich: and ſo it would haue proued, if my aduerſe fortune had not bin contrary to my hope, which was this. At that time there went a great ſhip from Cambaya, to the king of Aſſi, with great quantitie of Opium, & there to lade peper: in which voyage there came ſuch a ſtorme, that the ſhip was forced with wether to goe roomer 800. miles, and by this meanes came to Pegu, whereas they arriued a day before mee; ſo that Opium which was before very deare, was now at a baſe price: ſo that which was ſold for fiftie Bizze before, was ſolde for 2. Bizze & an halfe, there was ſuch quantitie came in that ſhip; ſo that I was glad to ſtay two yeres in Pegu vnleſſe I would haue giuen away my commoditie: and at the end of two yeres of my 2100. duckets which I beſtowed in Cambaya, I made but a thouſand duckets. Then I departed againe from Pegu to goe for the Indies and for Ormus with great quantitie of Lacca, and from Ormus I returned into the Indies for Chaul, and from Chaul to Cochin, and from Cochin to Pegu. Once more I loſt occaſion to make me riche, for whereas I might haue brought good ſtore of Opium againe, I brought but a little, being fearefull of my other voyage before. In this ſmall quantitie I made good profite. And now againe I determined to go for my Countrey, and departing from Pegu, I tarried and wintered in Cochin, and then I left the Indies and came for Ormus.

I thinke it very neceſſary before I ende my voyage, to reaſon ſomewhat, and to ſhewe what fruits the Indies do yeeld and bring forth. Firſt, in the Indies and other Eaſt parts of India there is Peper and ginger, which groweth in all parts of India. And in ſome parts of the Indies, the greateſt quantitie of peper groweth amongſt wilde buſhes, without any maner of labour: ſauing, that when it is ripe they goe and gather it. The tree that the peper groweth on is like to our Iuie, which runneth vp to the tops of trees whereſoeuer it groweth: and if it ſhould not take holde of ſome tree, it would lie flat and rot on the ground. This peper tree hath his floure and berry like in all parts to our Iuie berry, and thoſe berries be graines of peper: ſo that when they gather them they be greene, and then they lay them in the Sunne, and they become blacke.

Peper tree.

The Ginger groweth in this wiſe: the land is tilled and ſowen, and the herbe is like to Panizzo, and the roote is the ginger. Theſe two ſpices grow in diuers places.

Ginger.

The Cloues come all from the Moluccas, which Moluccas are two Iſlands, not very great, and the tree that they grow on is like to our Lawrell tree.

Cloues.

The Nutmegs and Maces, which grow both together, are brought from the Iſland of Banda, whoſe tree is like to our walnut tree, but not ſo big.

Nutmegs and Maces.

All the good white Sandol is brought from the Iſland of Timor. Canfora being compound commeth all from China, and all that which groweth in canes commeth from Borneo, & I thinke that this Canfora commeth not into theſe parts: for that in India they conſume great ſtore, and that is very deare. The good Lignum Aloes commeth from Cauchinchina.

The Beniamin commeth from the kingdome of Aſſi and Sion.

Long peper groweth in Bengala, Pegu, and Iaua.

Muſke commeth from Tartaria, which they make in this order, as by good information I haue bene told. There is a certaine beaſt in Tartaria, which is wilde and as big as a wolfe, which beaſt they take aliue, & beat him to death with ſmall ſtaues y^t his blood may be ſpread through his whole body, then they cut it in pieces, & take out all the bones, & beat the fleſh with the blood in a morter very ſmal, and dry it, and make purſes to put it in of the ſkin, and theſe be the cods of muſke.

This Muſke the Iewes doe counterfeit and take out halfe the good muſke and beat the fleſh of an aſſe and put in the roome of it.

Truely I know not whereof the Amber is made, and there are diuers opinions of it, but this is moſt certaine, it is caſt out of the Sea, and throwne on land, and found vpon the ſea bankes.

The Rubies, Saphyres, and the Spinels be gotten in the kingdome of Pegu. The Diamants come from diuers places; and I know but three ſorts of them. That ſort of Diamants that is called Chiappe, commeth from Bezeneger. Thoſe that be pointed naturally come from the land of Delly, and from Iaua, but the Diamants of Iaua are more waightie then the other. I could neuer vnderſtand from whence they that are called Balaſſi come.

Rubies Saphyres, and Spinels.

The Balaſſi growe in Zeilan.

Pearles they fiſh in diuers places, as before in this booke is ſhowne.

From Cambaza commeth the Spodiom which congeleth in certaine canes, whereof I found many in Pegu, when I made my houſe there, becauſe that (as I haue ſaid before) they make their houſes there of wouen canes like to mats. From Chaul they trade alongſt the coaſt of Melinde in Ethiopia, within the land of Cafraria: on that coaſt are many good harbors kept by the Moores. Thither the Portugals bring a kinde of Bombaſt cloth of a low price, and great ſtore of Paternoſters or beads made of paltrie glaſſe, which they make in Chaul according to the vſe of the Countrey: and from thence they cary Elephants teeth for India, ſlaues called Cafari, and ſome Amber and Gold. On this coaſt the king of Portugall hath his caſtle called Mozambique, which is of as great importance as any caſtle that hee hath in all his Indies vnder his protection, and the Captaine of this caſtle hath certaine voyages to this Cafraria, to which places no Marchants may goe, but by the Agent of this Captaine: and they vſe to goe in ſmall ſhippes, and trade with the Cafars, and their trade in buying and ſelling is without any ſpeach one to the other. In this wiſe the Portugals bring their goods by litle and litle alongſt the Sea coaſt, and lay them downe:

and ſo depart, and the Caſar Marchants come and ſee the goods, & there they put downe as much gold as they thinke the goods are worth, and ſo goe their way and leaue their golde and the goods together, then commeth the Portugal, and finding the golde to his content, hee taketh it and goeth his way into his ſhip, and then commeth the Caſar and taketh the goods and carieth them away: and if he finde the golde there ſtill, it is a ſigne that the Portugals are not contented, and if the Caſar thinke he hath put too little, he addeth more, as he thinketh the thing is worth: and the Portugales muſt not ſtand with them too ſtrickt; for if they doe, then they will haue no more trade with them: For they diſdaine to be refuſed, when they thinke that they haue offered ynough, for they be a peeuiſh people, and haue dealt ſo of a long time: and by this trade the Portugals change their commodities into gold, and cary it to the Caſtle of Mozámbique, which is in an Iſland not farre diſtant from the firme land of Caſraria on the coaſt of Ethiopia, and is diſtant from India 2800. miles. Now to returne to my voyage, when I came to Ormus, I found there Maſter Francis Berettin of Venice, and we fraighted a bark together to goe for Baſora for 70. duckets, and with vs there went other Marchants, which did eaſe our fraight, and very commodiouſly wee came to Baſora and there we ſtayed 40. dayes for prouiding a Carouan of barks to go to Babylon, becauſe they vſe not to goe two or 3. barkes at once, but 25. or 30. becauſe in the night they cannot go, but muſt make them faſt to the banks of the riuer, and then we muſt make a very good & ſtrong guard, and be wel prouided of armor, for reſpect & ſafegard of our goods, becauſe the number of theeues is great that come to ſpoile and rob the marchants. And when we depart for Babylon we goe a litle with our ſaile, and the voyage is 38. or 40. dayes long, but we were 50. dayes on it. When we came to Babylon we ſtayed there 4. moneths, vntil the Carouan was ready to go ouer the wildernes, or deſert for Alepo; in this citie we were 6. Marchants that accompanied together, fiue Venetians and a Portugal; whoſe names were as followeth, Meſſer Florinaſa with one of his kinſmen, Meſſer Andrea de Polo, the Portugal & M. Francis Berettin and I, and ſo wee furniſhed our ſelues with victuals and beanes for our horſes for 40. dayes; and wee bought horſes and mules, for that they bee very good cheape there, I my ſelfe bought a horſe there for 11. akens, and ſolde him after in Alepo for 30. duckets. Alſo we bought a Tent which did vs very great pleaſure: we had alſo amongſt vs 32. Camels laden with marchandiſe: for the which we paid 2. duckets for euery camels lading, and for euery 10. camels they made 11, for ſo is their vſe and cuſtome. We take alſo with vs 3. men to ſerue vs in the voyage, which are vſed to goe in thoſe voyages for fiue D d. a man, and are bound to ſerue vs to Alepo: ſo that we paſſed very well without any trouble: when the camels cried out to reſt, our pauilion was the firſt that was erected. The Carouan maketh but ſmall iourneis about 20. miles a day, & they ſet forwards euery morning before day two houres, and about two in the after noone they ſit downe. We had great good hap in our voyage, for that it rained: For which cauſe we neuer wanted water, but euery day found good water, ſo that we could not take any hurt for want of water. Yet we caried a camel laden alwayes with water for euery good reſpect that might chance in the deſert, ſo that wee had no want neither of one thing, nor other that was to bee had in the countrey. For wee came very well furniſhed of euery thing, and euery day we eat freſh mutton, becauſe there came many ſhepheards with vs with their flocks, who kept thoſe ſheepe that we bought in Babylon, and euery marchant marked his ſheepe with his owne marke, and we gaue the ſhepheards a Medin, which is two pence of our money, for the keeping and feeding our ſheep on the way, and for killing of them. And beſide the Medin they haue the heads, the ſkinnes, and the intrals of euery ſheepe they kil. We ſixe bought 20. ſheepe, and when we came to Alepo we had 7. aliue of them. And in the Carouan they vſe this order, that the marchants doe lende fleſh one to another, becauſe they will not cary raw fleſh with them, but pleaſure one another by lending one one day, and another another day.

Golden trades that the Portugals haue.

An order how to prouide to goe ouer the Deſert from Babylon to Alepo.

From Babylon to Alepo is 40. dayes iourney, of the which they make 36. dayes ouer the wildernes, in which 36. dayes they neither ſee houſe, trees, nor people that inhabite it, but onely a plaine, and no ſigne of any way in the world. The pilots go before, and the Carouan followeth after. And when they ſit downe all the Carouan vnladeth and ſitteth downe, for they know the ſtations where the wells are. I ſay, in 36. dayes we paſſe ouer the wilderneſſe. For when wee depart from Babylon two dayes we paſſe by villages inhabited vntil we haue paſſed the riuer Euphrates, And then within two dayes of Alepo we haue villages inhabited. In this Carouan there goeth alway a Captaine that doth Iuſtice vnto all men: and euery night they keepe watch about the Carouan, and comming to Alepo we went to Tripoli, whereas Maſter Florin, and Maſter Andrea Polo, and I, with a Frier, went and hired a barke to goe with vs to Ieruſalem. Departing from Tripolie, we arriued at Iaffa: from which place in a day and halfe we went to Ieruſalem, and we gaue order to our barke to tary for vs vntill our returne. Wee ſtayed in Ieruſalem 14. dayes, to viſite thoſe holy places: from whence we returned to Iaffa, and from Iaffa to Tripolie, and there wee wee ſhipped our ſelues in a ſhip of Venice called the Bagazzana: And by the helpe of the diuine power, we arriued ſafely in Venice the fift of Nouember 1581. If there be any that hath any deſire to goe into thoſe partes of India, let him not be aſtonied at the troubles that I haue paſſed: becauſe I was intangled in many things: for that I went very poore frõ Venice with 1200. duckets imployed in marchandize, and when I came to Tripolie, I fell ſicke in the houſe of Maſter Regaly Oratio, and this man ſent away my goods with a ſmall Carouan that went from Tripolie to Alepo, and the Carouan was robd, and all my goods loſt ſauing foure cheſts of glaſſes which coſt me 200. duckets, of which glaſſes I found many broken: becauſe the theeues thinking it had bene other marchandize, brake them vp, and ſeeing they were glaſſes they let them all alone. And with this onely ſtocke I aduentured to goe into the Indies: And thus with change and rechange, and by diligence in my voyage, God did bleſſe and helpe mee, ſo that I got a good ſtocke. I will not be vnmindfull to put them in remembrance, that haue a deſire to goe into thoſe parts, how they ſhall keepe their goods, and giue them to their heires at the time of their death, and howe this may be done very ſecurely. In all the cities that the Portugales haue in the Indies, there is a houſe called the ſchoole of Sancta miſericordia comiſſaria: the gouernours whereof, if you giue them for their paines, will take a coppy of your will and Teſtament, which you muſt alwayes cary about you; and chiefly when you go into the Indies. In the countrey of the Moores and Gentiles, in thoſe voyages alwayes there goeth a Captaine to adminiſter Iuſtice to all Chriſtians of the Portugales. Alſo this captaine hath authoritie to recouer the goods of thoſe Marchants that by chance die in thoſe voyages, and they that haue not made their Wills and regiſtred them in the aforeſaide ſchooles, the Captaines wil conſume their goods in ſuch wiſe, that litle or nothing will be left for their heires and friends. Alſo there goeth in theſe ſame voyages ſome marchants that are commiſſaries of the ſchoole of Sancta miſericordia, that if any Marchant die and haue his Wil made, and hath giuen order that the ſchoole of Miſericordia ſhall haue his goods and ſell them, then they ſende the money by exchange to the ſchoole of Miſericordia in Lisbone, with that copie of his Teſtament, then from Lisbon they giue intelligence thereof, into what part of Chriſtendome ſoeuer it be, and the heires of ſuch a one comming thither, with teſtimoniall that they be heires, they ſhall receiue there the value of his goods: in ſuch wiſe that they ſhall not looſe any thing. But they that die in the kingdome of Pegu looſe the thirde part of their goods by ancient cuſtome of the Countrey, that if any Chriſtian dieth in the kingdome of Pegu, the king and his officers reſt heires of a thirde of his goods, and there hath neuer bene any deceit or fraude vſed in this matter. I haue knowen many rich men that haue dwelled in Pegu, and in their age they haue deſired to go into their owne Countrey to die there, and haue departed with al their goods and ſubſtance without let or trouble.

A very good order that they haue in thoſe Countreys for the recouering of the goods of the dead.

Order of apparel in Pegu.

In Pegu the faſhion of their apparel is all one, as well the Noble man, as the ſimple: the onely difference is in the finenes of the cloth, which is cloth of Bombaſt one finer then another, and they weare their apparell in this wiſe: Firſt, a white Bombaſt cloth which ſerueth for a ſhirt, then they gird another painted bombaſt cloth of foureteene braſes, which they binde vp betwixt their legges, and on their heads they weare a ſmall tock of three braces, made in guize of a myter, and ſome goe without tocks, and cary (as it were) a hiue on their heades, which doeth not paſſe the lower part of his eare, when it is lifted vp: they goe all bare footed, but the Noble men neuer goe on foote, but are caried by men in a ſeate with great reputation, with a hat made of the leaues of a tree to keepe him from the raine and Sunne, or otherwiſe they ride on horſebacke with their feete bare in the ſtirops. All ſorts of women whatſoeuer they be, weare a ſmocke downe to the girdle, and from the girdle downewards to the foote they weare a cloth of three braſes, open before; ſo ſtraite that they cannot goe, but they muſt ſhewe their ſecret as it were aloft, and in their going they faine to hide it with their hand, but they cãnot by reaſon of the ſtraitnes of their cloth. They ſay that this vſe was inuented by a Queene to be an occaſion that the ſight thereof might remoue from men the vices againſt nature, which they are greatly giuen vnto: which ſight ſhould cauſe them to regard women the more. Alſo the women goe bare footed, their armes laden with hoopes of golde and Iewels: And their fingers full of precious rings, with their haire rolled vp about their heads. Many of them weare a cloth about their ſhoulders in ſtead of a cloake.

The order of the womens apparel in Pegu.

Now to finiſh that which I haue begunne to write, I ſay, that thoſe parts of the Indies are very good, becauſe that a man that hath litle, ſhall make a great deale thereof; alwayes they muſt gouerne themſelues that they be taken for honeſt men. For why? to ſuch there ſhal neuer want helpe to doe wel, but he that is vicious, let him tary at home and not go thither, becauſe he ſhall alwayes be a begger, and die a poore man.

Letters concerning the voyage of M. Iohn Newbery and M. Ralph Fitch, made by the way of the Leuant Sea to Syria, and ouerland to Balſara, and thence into the Eaſt Indies, and beyond, In the yeere 1583.

¶ A letter written from the Queenes Maieſtie, to Zelabdim Echebar King of Cambaia, and ſent by Iohn Newbery. In February Anno 1583.

ELizabeth by the grace of God, &c. To the moſt inuincible, and moſt mightie prince, lord Zelabdim Echebar king of Cambaya. Inuincible Emperor, &c. The great affection which our Subiects haue, to viſit the moſt diſtant places of the world, not without good will and intention to introduce the trade of marchandize of al nations whatſoeuer they can, by which meanes the mutual and friendly trafique of marchandize on both ſides may come, is the cauſe that the bearer of this letter Iohn Newbery, ioyntly with thoſe that be in his company, with a curteous and honeſt boldneſſe, doe repaire to the borders and countreys of your Empire, we doubt not but that your imperial Maieſtie through your royal grace, will fauourably and friendly accept him. And that you would doe it the rather for our ſake, to make vs greatly beholding to your Maieſtie; wee ſhould more earneſtly, and with more wordes require it, if wee did think it needful. But by the ſingular report that is of your imperial Maieſties humanitie in theſe vttermoſt parts of the world, we are greatly eaſed of that burden, and therefore we vſe the fewer and leſſe words: onely we requeſt that becauſe they are our ſubiects, they may be honeſtly intreated and receiued. And that in reſpect of the hard iourney which they haue vndertaken to places ſo far diſtant, it would pleaſe your Maieſtie with ſome libertie and ſecuritie of voiage to gratifie it, with ſuch priuileges as to you ſhall ſeeme good; which curteſie if your Imperiall maieſtie ſhal to our ſubiects at our requeſts performe, wee, according to our royall honour, wil recompence the ſame with as many deſerts as we can. And herewith we bid your Imperial Maieſtie to farewel.

A letter written by her Maieſtie to the King of China, In Februarie 1583.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, &c. Moſt Imperial and inuincible prince, our honeſt ſubiect Iohn Newbery the bringer hereof, who with our fauour hath taken in hand the voyage which nowe hee purſueth to the parts and countreys of your Empire, not truſting vpon any other ground then vpon the fauour of your Imperiall clemencie and humanitie, is mooued to vndertake a thing of ſo much difficultie, being perſwaded that hee hauing entred into ſo many perils, your Maieſtie will not diſlike the ſame, eſpecially, if it may appeare that it be not damageable vnto your royall Maieſtie, and that to your people it will bring ſome profite: of both which things he not doubting, with more willing minde hath prepared himſelfe for his deſtinated voyage vnto vs well liked of. For by this meanes we perceiue, that the profit which by the mutual trade on both ſides, al the princes our neighbors in yͤ West do receiue, your Imperial maieſtie & thoſe that be ſubiect vnder your dominion, to their great ioy and benefit ſhal haue the ſame, which conſiſteth in the tranſporting outward of ſuch things whereof we haue plenty, & in bringing in ſuch things as we ſtand in need of. It cannot otherwiſe be, but that ſeeing we are borne and made to haue need one of another, & that wee are bound to aide one another, but that your imperial Maieſtie wil wel like of it, & by your ſubiects wͩ like indeuor wil be accepted. For the increaſe whereof, if your imperial Maieſtie ſhall adde the ſecuritie of paſſage, with other priuileges moſt neceſſary to vſe the trade with your men, your maieſtie ſhall doe that which belongeth to a moſt honorable & liberal prince, and deſerue ſo much of vs, as by no cōtinuance or length of time ſhalbe forgotten. Which requeſt of ours we do moſt inſtantly deſire to be takē in good part of your maieſtie, and ſo great a benefit towards vs & our men, we ſhall endeuor by diligence to requite when time ſhal ſerue thereunto. The God Almighty long preſerue your Imperial maieſtie.

A letter of M. Iohn Newbery, written from Alepo, to M. Richard Hakluit of Oxford, the 28. of May, Anno 1583.

RIght welbeloued, and my aſſured good friend, I heartily commend me vnto you, hoping of your good health, &c. After we ſet ſaile from Graueſend, which was the 13. day of February laſt, wee remained vpon our coaſt vntill the 11. day of March, and that day we ſet ſaile from Falmouth, and neuer ankered till wee arriued in the road of Tripolie in Syria, which was the laſt day of Aprill laſt paſt, where wee ſtayed 14. dayes: and the twentie of this preſent we came hither to Alepo, and with Gods helpe, within fiue or ſixe dayes goe from hence towards the Indies. Since my comming to Tripolis I haue made very earneſt inquirie both there and here, for the booke of Coſmographie of Abilſada Iſmael, but by no meanes can heare of it. Some ſay that poſſibly it may be had in Perſia, but notwithſtanding I will not faile to make inquirie for it, both in Babylon, and in Balſara, and if I can finde it in any of theſe places, I wil ſend it you from thence. The letter which you deliuered me for to copy out, that came from M. Thomas Steuens in Goa, as alſo the note you gaue mee of Francis Fernandes the Portugal, I brought thence with me among other writings vnawares, the which I haue ſent you here incloſed. Here is great preparation for the warres in Perſia, and from hence is gone the Baſſa of a towne called Rahemet, and ſhortly after goeth the Baſſa of Tripolis, and the Baſſa of Damaſco, but they haue not all with them aboue 6000. men from hence, and they goe to a towne called Aſmerome, which is three dayes iourney from Trapezunde, where they ſhal meete with diuers captaines and ſouldiers that come from Conſtantinople and other places thereabout, which goe altogether into Perſia. This yeere many men goe into the warres, and ſo hath there euery yeere ſince the beginning thereof, which is eight yeeres or thereabouts, but very fewe of them returne againe. Notwithſtanding, they get of the Perſians, and make caſtles and holds in their countrey. I pray you make my hearty commendations to maſter Peter Guillame, and maſter Philip Iones, and to M. Walter Warner, and to all the reſt of our friends. Maſter Fitch hath him heartily commended vnto you: and ſo I commit you to the tuition of the Almightie, who bleſſe and keepe you, and ſend vs a ioyfull meeting. From Alepo, the 28. of May 1583.

Your louing friend to command in all that I may,

John Newberie.

Another letter of the ſaid M. Newberie, written to Maſter Leonard Poore of London, from Alepo.

March 11.

The laſt of Aprill.

Right welbeloued, my very heartie commendations vnto you, and the reſt of my friends remembred. My laſt I ſent you was the 25. of February laſt, from Dele out of the Downes, after which time with contrary windes wee remained vpon our owne coaſt, vntill the 11. day of March, and then wee ſet ſaile from Falmouth, and the thirteenth day the winde came contrary with a very great ſtorme, which continued eight dayes, and in this great ſtorme wee had ſome of our goods wette, but God bee thanked no great hurt done. After which time we ſailed with a faire wind within the Streights, and ſo remained at Sea, and ankered at no place vntil our comming into the roade of Tripolis in Syria, which was the laſt day of April. This was a very good paſſage, God make vs thankfull for it. The foureteenth day of this preſent wee came from Tripolis, and the twentieth day arriued here in Alepo, and with the helpe of God to morrowe or next day, wee beginne our voyage towards Babylon and Balſara, and ſo into India. Our friend Maſter Barret hath him commended to you, who hath ſent you in the Emanuel a ball of Nutmegs for the ſmall trifles you ſent him, which I hope long ſince you haue receiued. Alſo hee hath by his letter certified you in what order hee ſolde thoſe things, whereof I can ſay nothing, becauſe I haue not ſeene the accompt thereof, neither haue demaunded it: for euer ſince our comming hither hee hath bene ſtill buſie about the diſpatch of the ſhippe, and our voyage, and I likewiſe in buying of things here to cary to Balſara, and the Indies.

Currall.
Amber greeſe.
Sope.
Broken glaſſe.

Wee haue bought in currall for 1200. and odde ducats, and amber for foure hundreth ducates, and ſome ſope and broken glaſſe, with all other ſmall trifles, all which things I hope will ſerue very wel for thoſe places that wee ſhall goe vnto. All the reſt of the accompt of the Barke Reinolds was ſent home in the Emanuel, which was 3600. ducats, which is 200. pound more then it was rated. For maſter Staper rated it but 1100. li. and it is 1300. pound, ſo that our part is 200. pound. Beſides ſuch profit as it ſhall pleaſe God to ſende thereof: wherefore you ſhall doe very well to ſpeake to M. Staper for the accompt. And if you would content your ſelfe to trauell for three or foure yeeres, I would wiſh you to come hither or goe to Cairo, if any goe thither. For wee doubt not if you had remained there but three or foure moneths, you would like ſo well of the place, that I thinke you would not deſire to returne againe in three or foure yeeres. And, if it ſhould be my chance to remaine in any place out of England, I would chooſe this before all other that I know. My reaſon is, the place is healthfull and pleaſant, and the gaines very good, and no doubt the profit will bee hereafter better, things being vſed in good order: for there ſhould come in euery ſhip the fourth part of her Cargaſon in money, which would helpe to put away our commodities at a very good price. Alſo to haue two very good ſhips to come together, would doe very well: for in ſo doing, the danger of the voyage might be accompted as little as from London to Antwerpe. Maſter

Giles Porter and maſter Edmund Porter, went from Tripolis in a ſmall barke to Iaffa, the ſame day that we came from thence, which was the 14 day of this preſent, ſo that no doubt but long ſince they are in Ieruſalem: God ſend them and vs ſafe returne. At this inſtant I haue receiued the account of M. Barret, and the reſt of the rings, with two and twentie duckats, two medines in readie money. So there is nothing remaining in his hands but a few bookes, and with Thomas Boſtocke I left certaine ſmall trifles, which I pray you demaund. And ſo once againe with my hearty commendations I commit you to the tuition of the almightie, who alwayes preſerue vs. From Aleppo the 29 of May. 1583.

Yours aſſured, Iohn Newberie.

Another letter of Maſter Newberie to the aforeſaide M. Poore, written from Babylon.

My laſt I ſent you, was the 29 of May laſt paſt from Aleppo, by George Gill the purſer of the Tiger, which the laſt day of the ſame moneth came from thence, & arriued at Feluge the 19 day of Iune, which Feluge is one dayes iourney from hence. Notwithſtanding ſome of our company came not hither till the laſt day of the laſt moneth, which was for want of Camels to cary our goods: for at this time of the yeere, by reaſon of the great heate that is here, Camels are very ſcant to be gotten. And ſince our comming hither we haue found very ſmall ſales, but diuers ſay that in the winter our commodities will be very well ſold, I pray God their words may prooue true. I thinke cloth, kerſies & tinne, haue neuer bene here at ſo low prices as they are now. Notwithſtanding, if I had here ſo much readie money as the commodities are worth, I would not doubt to make a very good profite of this voiage hither, and to Balſara, and ſo by Gods helpe there will be reaſonable profite made of the voiage. But with halfe money & halfe commoditie, may be bought here the beſt ſort of ſpices, and other commodities that are brought from the Indies, and without money there is here at this inſtant ſmall good to be done. With Gods helpe two dayes hence, I minde to goe from hence to Balſara, and from thence of force I muſt goe to Ormus for want of a man that ſpeaketh the Indian tongue. At my being in Aleppo I hired two Nazaranies, and one of them hath bene twiſe in the Indies, and hath the language very well, but he is a very lewde fellow, and therefore I will not take him with me.

The beſt ſort of ſpices at Babylon, Balſara, Ormus.

Here follow the prices of wares as they are worth here at this inſtant.

The prices of ſpices at Babylon.

Cloues and Maces, the bateman, 5 duckats.
Cynamom 6 duckats, and few to be gotten.
Nutmegs, the bateman, 45 medins, and 40 medins maketh a duckat.
Ginger, 40 medins.
Pepper, 75 medins.
Turbetta, the bateman, 50 medins.
Neel the churle, 70 duckats, and a churle is 27 rottils and a halfe of Aleppo.
Silke, much better then that which commeth from Perſia, 11 duckats and a halfe the bateman, and euery bateman here maketh 7 pound and 5 ounces Engliſh waight. From Babylon the 20 day of Iuly, 1583.

Yours, Iohn Newberie.

Maſter Newberie his letter from Ormus, to M. Iohn Eldred and William Shals at Balſara.

Right welbeloued and my aſſured good friends, I heartily cōmend me vnto you, hoping of your good healths, &c. To certifie you of my voiage, after I departed frō you, time wil not permit: but the 4 of this preſent we arriued here, & the 10 day I with the reſt were committed to priſon, and about the middle of the next moneth, the Captaine wil ſend vs all in his ſhip for Goa. The cauſe why we are taken, as they ſay, is, for that I brought letters from Don Antonio. But the trueth is, Michael Stropene was the onely cauſe, vpon letters that his brother wrote him from Aleppo. God knoweth how we ſhall be delt withall in Goa, and therfore if you can procure our maſters to ſend the king of Spaine his letters for our releaſement, you ſhould doe vs great good: for they cannot with iuſtice put vs to death. It may be that they will cut our throtes, or keepe vs long in priſon: Gods will be done. All thoſe commodities that I brought hither, had beene very well ſold, if this trouble had not chanced. You ſhall do well to ſend with all ſpeed a meſſenger by land from Balſara to Aleppo, for to certifie of this miſchance, although it coſt thirtie or fortie crownes, for that we may be the ſooner releaſed, and I ſhalbe the better able to recouer this againe which is now like to be loſt: I pray you make my hearty commendations, &c. From out of the priſon in Ormuz, this 21 of September 1583.

His ſecond Letter to the foreſaid Maſter Iohn Eldred and William Shales.

THe barke of the Iewes is arriued here two daies paſt, by whom I know you did write, but your letters are not like to come to my handes. This bringer hath ſhewed me here very great courteſie, wherfore I pray you ſhew him what fauor you may. About the middle of the next moneth I thinke we ſhall depart from hence, God be our guide. I thinke Andrew will goe by land to Aleppo, wherein I pray you further him what you may: but if he ſhould not goe, then I pray you diſpatch away a meſſenger with as much ſpeede as poſſible you may. I can ſay no more, but do for me as you would I ſhould do for you in the like cauſe, and ſo with my very hearty commendations, &c. From out of the priſon in Ormuz, this 24 day of September, 1583.

Yours, Iohn Newberie.

His third Letter to Maiſter Leonard Poore, written from Goa.

Michael Stropene an Italian accuſed our men to be ſpies.

MY laſt I ſent you was from Ormuz, wherby I certified you what had happened there vnto me, and the reſt of my company, which was, that foure dayes after our arriuall there, we were all committed to priſon, except one Italian which came with me from Aleppo, whom the Captaine neuer examined, onely demaunded what countryman he was, but I make account Michael Stropene, who accuſed vs, had informed the Captaine of him. The firſt day we arriued there, this Stropene accuſed vs that we were ſpies ſent from Don Antonio, beſides diuers other lies: notwithſtanding if we had beene of any other countrey then of England, we might freely haue traded with them. And although we be Engliſhmen, I know no reaſon to the contrary, but that we may trade hither and thither as well as other nations, for all nations doe, and may come freely to Ormuz, as Frenchmen, Flemmings, Almains, Hungarians, Italians, Greekes, Armenians, Nazaranies, Turkes and Moores, Iewes & Gentiles, Perſians, Moſcouites, and there is no nation that they ſeeke for to trouble, except ours: wherefore it were contrary to all iuſtice and reaſon that they ſhould ſuffer all nations to trade with them, and to forbid vs. But now I haue as great liberty as any other nation, except it be to go out of the countrey, which thing as yet I deſire not. But I thinke hereafter, and before it be long, if I ſhall be deſirous to go from hence, that they wil not deny me licence. Before we might be ſuffered to come out of priſon, I was forced to put in ſuerties for 2000 pardaus, not to depart from hence without licence of the viceroy: otherwiſe except this, we haue as much libertie as any other nation, for I haue our goods againe, & haue taken an houſe in the chiefeſt ſtreete in the towne, called the Rue drette, where we ſell our goods.

Two cauſes of our mens impriſonment at Ormus.

There were two cauſes which moued the captaine of Ormus to impriſon vs, & afterwards to ſend vs hither. The firſt was, becauſe Michael Stropene had accuſed vs of many matters, which were moſt falſe. And the ſecond was for that M. Drake at his being at Maluco, cauſed two pieces of his ordinance to be ſhot at a gallion of the kings of Portugall, as they ſay. But of theſe things I did not know at Ormus: and in the ſhip that we were ſent in came the chiefeſt iuſtice in Ormus, who was called Aueador generall of that place, he had beene there three yeeres, ſo that now his time was expired: which Aueador is a great friend to the captaine of Ormus, who, certaine dayes after our comming from thence, ſent for mee into his chamber, and there beganne to demaund of me many things, to the which I anſwered: and amongſt the reſt, he ſaid, that Maſter Drake was ſent out of England with many ſhips, and came to Maluco, and there laded cloues, and finding a gallion there of the kings of Portugall, hee cauſed two pieces of his greateſt ordinance to be ſhot at the ſame: and ſo perceiuing that this did greatly grieue them, I asked, if they would be reuenged of me for that which M. Drake had done: To the which he anſwered, No: although his meaning was to the contrary.

He ſaid moreouer, that the cauſe why the captaine of Ormus did ſend me for Goa, was, for that the Viceroy would vnderſtand of mee, what newes there was of Don Antonio, and whether he were in England, yea or no, and that it might be all for the beſt that I was ſent hither, the which I truſt in God wil ſo fall out, although contrary to his expectation: for had it not pleaſed God to put into the minds of the archbiſhop and other two Padres or Ieſuits of S. Pauls colledge to ſtand our friends, we might haue rotted in priſon. The archbiſhop is a very good man, who hath two yong men to his ſeruantes, the one of them was borne at Hamborough, and is called Bernard Borgers: and the other was borne at Enchuyſen, whoſe name is Iohn Linſcot, who did vs great pleaſure: for by them the archbiſhop was many times put in minde of vs. And the two good fathers of S. Paul, who trauelled very much for vs; the one of them is called Padre Marke, who was borne in Bruges in Flanders, and the other was borne in Wilſhire in England, and is called ‖Padre Thomas Steuens;

The author of the book of the East Indies.

‖This is he whoſe letters to his father from Goa are before put downe, and he was ſometimes of New colledge in Oxford.

Alſo I chanced to finde here a young man, who was borne in Antwerpe, but the moſt part of his bringing vp hath beene in London, his name is Francis de Rea; and with him it was my hap to be acquainted in Aleppo, who alſo hath done me great pleaſure here.

In the priſon at Ormus we remained many dayes, alſo we lay a long time at ſea comming hither, and forthwith at our arriuall here were caried to priſon, and the next day after were ſent for before the Aueador, who is the chiefeſt iuſtice, to be examined: and when we were examined, he preſently ſent vs backe againe to priſon.

And after our being here in priſon 13 daies, Iames Storie went into the monaſtery of S. Paul, where he remaineth, and is made one of the company, which life he liketh very well.

Iames Storie their painter.

And vpon S. Thomas day (which was 22 dayes after our arriuall here) I came out of priſon, and the next day after came out Ralph Fitch, and William Bets.

They arriued at Goa the 20 of Nouember 1583.

If theſe troubles had not chanced, I had beene in poſſibility to haue made as good a voyage as euer any man made with ſo much money. Many of our things I haue ſolde very well, both here and at Ormus in priſon, notwithſtanding the captaine willed me (if I would) to ſell what I could before we imbarked: & ſo with officers I went diuers times out of the caſtle in the morning, and ſolde things, and at night returned againe to the priſon, and all things that I ſolde they did write, and at our imbarking from thence, the captain gaue order that I ſhould deliuer all my mony with the goods into the hands of the ſcriuano, or purſer of the ſhip, which I did, and the ſcriuano made a remembrance, which he left there with the captaine, that my ſelfe and the reſt with money & goods he ſhould deliuer into the hands of the Aueador generall of India: but at our arriuall here, the Aueador would neither meddle with goods nor money, for that he could not proue any thing againſt vs: wherefore the goods remained in the ſhip 9 or 10 daies after our arriuall, and then, for that the ſhip was to ſaile from thence, the ſcriuano ſent the goods on ſhore, and here they remained a day and a night, and no body to receiue them. In the end they ſuffered this bringer to receiue them, who came with me from Ormus, and put them into an houſe which he had hired for me, where they remained foure or fiue daies. But afterward when they ſhould deliuer the money, it was concluded by the iuſtice, that both the money and goods ſhould be deliuered into the poſitors hands, where they remained fourteene dayes after my comming out of priſon. At my being in Aleppo, I bought a fountaine of ſiluer and gilt, ſixe kniues, ſixe ſpoones, and one forke trimmed with corall for fiue and twentie chekins, which the captaine of Ormus did take, and payed for the ſame twentie pardaos, which is one hundred larines, and was worth there or here one hundred chekins. Alſo he had fiue emrauds ſet in golde, which were worth fiue hundred or ſixe hundred crownes, and payed for the ſame an hundred pardaos. Alſo he had nineteene and a halfe pikes of cloth, which coſt in London twenty ſhillings the pike, and was worth 9 or 10 crownes the pike, and he payed for the ſame twelue larines a pike. Alſo he had two pieces of greene Kerſies, which were worth foure and twentie pardaos the piece, and payd for them ſixteene pardaos a piece: beſides diuers other trifles, that the officers and others had in the like order, and ſome for nothing at all. But the cauſe of all this was Michael Stropene, which came to Ormus not worth a penie, and now hath thirtie or fortie thouſand crownes, and he grieueth that any other ſtranger ſhould trade thither but himſelfe. But that ſhall not ſkill, for I truſt in God to goe both thither and hither, and to buy and ſell as freely as he or any other. Here is very great good to be done in diuers of our commodities, and in like manner there is great profite to be made with commodities of this countrey, to be carried to Aleppo.

It were long for me to write, and tedious for you to read of all things that haue paſſed ſince my parting from you. But of all the troubles that haue chanced ſince mine arriuall in Ormus, this bringer is able to certifie you. I mind to ſtay here: wherefore if you will write vnto me, you may ſend your letters to ſome friend at Lisbone, & frō thence by the ſhips they may be conueyed hither.

Let the direction of your letters be either in Portuguiſe or Spaniſh, whereby they may come the better to my hands. From Goa this 20 day of Ianuarie. 1584.

A Letter written from Goa by Maſter Ralph Fitch to Maſter Leonard Poore aboueſaid.

LOuing friend Maſter Poore, &c. Since my departure from Aleppo, I haue not written vnto you any letters, by reaſon that at Babylon I was ſicke of the fluxe, and being ſicke, I went from thence for Balſara, which was twelue dayes iourney downe the riuer Tygris, where we had extreame hot weather, which was good for my diſeaſe, ill fare, and worſe lodging, by reaſon our boat was peſtered with people. In eight daies, that which I did eate was very ſmall, ſo that if we had ſtayed two dayes longer vpon the water, I thinke I had died: but comming to Balſara, preſently I mended, I thanke God. There we ſtayed 14 dayes, and then we imbarked our ſelues for Ormuz, where we arriued the fifth of September, and were put in priſon the ninth of the ſame moneth, where we continued vntill the 11 of October, and then were ſhipt for this citie of Goa in the captaines ſhip, with an 114 horſes, and about 200 men: and paſſing by Diu & Chaul, Diu. Chaul. where we went on land to water the 20 of Nouember, we arriued at Goa the 29 of the ſaid moneth, where for our better intertainment we were preſently put into a faire ſtrong priſon, where we continued vntill the 22 of December. It was the will of God that we found there 2 Padres, the one an Engliſhman, the other a Flemming. The Engliſhmans name is Padre Thomas Steuens, the others Padre Marco, of the order of S. Paul. Theſe did ſue for vs vnto the Viceroy and other officers, and ſtood vs in as much ſtead, as our liues and goods were worth: for if they had not ſtucke to vs, if we had eſcaped with our liues, yet we had had long impriſonment.

After 14 dayes impriſonment they offered vs, if we could put in ſuerties for 2000 duckats, we ſhould goe abroad in the towne: which when we could not doe, the ſaid Padres found ſuerties for vs, that we ſhould not depart the countrey without the licence of the Viceroy. It doth ſpite the Italians to ſee vs abroad: The Italians our great enemies for the trade in the Eaſt. and many maruell at our deliuery. The painter is in the cloiſter of S. Paul, and is of their order, and liketh there very well. While we were in priſon, both at Ormuz and here, there was a great deale of our goods pilfered and loſt, and we haue beene at great charges in gifts and otherwiſe, ſo that a great deale of our goods is conſumed. There is much of our things which wil ſell very well, & ſome we ſhall get nothing for. I hope in God that at the returne of the Viceroy, which is gone to Chaul and to Diu, they ſay, to winne a caſtle of the Moores, whoſe returne is thought will be about Eaſter, then we ſhall get our libertie, and our ſuerties diſcharged. Then I thinke it wil be our beſt way, either one or both to returne, becauſe our troubles haue bene ſo great, & ſo much of our goods ſpoyled and loſt. But if it pleaſe God that I come into England, by Gods helpe, I will returne hither againe. It is a braue and pleaſant countrey, and very fruitfull. The ſummer is almoſt all the yeere long, but the chiefeſt at Chriſtmas.

The day and the night are all of one length, very litle difference, and marueſlous great ſtore of fruits. For all our great troubles, yet are we fat and well liking, for victuals are here plentie and good cheape. And here I will paſſe ouer to certifie you of ſtrange things, vntill our meeting, for it would be too long to write thereof. And thus I commit you to God, who euer preſerue you and vs all. From Goa in the Eaſt Indies the 25 of Ianuarie 1584.

Yours to command, Ralph Fitch.

The voyage of M. Ralph Fitch marchant of London by the way of Tripolis in Syria, to Ormus, and ſo to Goa in the Eaſt India, to Cambaia, and all the kingdome of Zelabdim Echebar the great Mogor, to the mighty riuer Ganges, and downe to Bengala, to Bacola, and Chonderi, to Pegu, to Iamahay in the kingdome of Siam, and backe to Pegu, and from thence to Malacca, Zeilan, Cochin, and all the coaſt of the Eaſt India: begunne in the yeere of our Lord 1583, and ended 1591, wherein the ſtrange rites, maners, and cuſtomes of thoſe people, and the exceeding rich trade and commodities of thoſe countries are faithfully ſet downe and diligently deſcribed, by the aforeſaid M. Ralph Fitch.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1583, I Ralph Fitch of London marchant being deſirous to ſee the countreys of the Eaſt India, in the company of M. Iohn Newberie marchant (which had beene at Ormus once before) of William Leedes Ieweller, and Iames Story Painter, being chiefly ſet foorth by the right worſhipfull Sir Edward ward Osborne knight, and M. Richard Staper citizens and marchants of London, did ſhip my ſelfe in a ſhip of London called the Tyger, wherein we went for Tripolis in Syria: & from thence we tooke the way for Aleppo, which we went in ſeuen dayes with the Carouan. Being in Aleppo, and finding good company, we went from thence to Birra, which is two dayes and an halfe trauaile with Camels.

Birra.

Birra is a little towne, but very plentifull of victuals: and neere to the wall of the towne runneth the riuer of Euphrates. Here we bought a boate and agreed with a maſter and bargemen, for to go to Babylon. Theſe boats be but for one voiage; for the ſtreame doth runne ſo faſt downewardes that they cannot returne. They carie you to a towne which they call Felugia, and there you ſell the boate for a litle money, for that which coſt you fiftie at Birra you ſell there for ſeuen or eight. From Birra to Felugia is ſixteene dayes iourney, it is not good that one boate goe alone, for if it ſhould chance to breake, you ſhould haue much a doe to ſaue your goods from the Arabians, which be alwayes there abouts robbing: and in the night when your boates be made faſt, it is neceſſarie that you keepe good watch. For the Arabians that bee theeues, will come ſwimming and ſteale your goods and flee away, againſt which a gunne is very good, for they doe feare it very much. In the riuer of Euphrates from Birra to Felugia there be certaine places where you pay cuſtome, ſo many Medines for a ſome or Camels lading, and certaine raysons and ſope, which is for the ſonnes of Aboriſe, which is Lord of the Arabians and all that great deſert, and hath ſome villages vpon the riuer. Felugia where you vnlade your goods which come from Birra is a little village: from whence you goe to Babylon in a day.

Felugia.

Babylon.

Babylon is a towne not very great but very populous, and of great traffike of ſtrangers, for that it is the way to Perſia, Turkia and Arabia: and from thence doe goe Carouans for theſe and other places. Here are great ſtore of victuals, which come from Armenia downe the riuer of Tygris. They are brought vpon raftes made of goates ſkinnes blowne full of winde and bordes layde vpon them: and thereupon they lade their goods which are brought downe to Babylon, which being diſcharged they open their ſkinnes, and carry them backe by Camels, to ſerue another time. Babylon in times paſt did belong to the kingdome of Perſia, but nowe is ſubiect to the Turke. Ouer againſt Babylon there is a very faire village from whence you paſſe to Babylon vpon a long bridge made of boats, and tyed to a great chaine of yron, which is made faſt on either ſide of the riuer. When any boates are to paſſe vp or downe the riuer, they take away certaine of the boates vntill they be paſt.

The tower of Babel.

The Tower of Babel is built on this ſide the riuer Tygris, towardes Arabia from the towne about ſeuen or eight miles, which tower is ruinated on all ſides, and with the fall therof hath made as it were a litle mountaine, ſo that it hath no ſhape at all: it was made of brickes dried in the ſonne, and certaine canes and leaues of the palme tree layed betwixt the brickes. There is no entrance to be ſeene to goe into it. It doth ſtand vpon a great plaine betwixt the riuers of Euphrates and Tygris.

Boyling pitch continually iſſuing out of the earth.

By the riuer Euphrates two dayes iourney from Babylon at a place called Ait, in a fielde neere vnto it, is a ſtrange thing to ſee: a mouth that doth continually throwe foorth againſt the ayre boyling pitch with a filthy ſmoke: which pitch doth runne abroad into a great fielde which is alwayes full thereof. The Moores ſay that it is the mouth of hell. By reaſon of the great quantitie of it, the men of that countrey doe pitch their boates two or three inches thicke on the out ſide, ſo that no water doth enter into them. Their boates be called Danec. When there is great ſtore of water in Tygris you may goe from Babylon to Baſora in 8 or 9 dayes: if there be ſmall ſtore it will coſt you the more dayes.

Baſora in times paſt was vnder the Arabians, but now is ſubiect to the Turke. But ſome of them the Turke cannot ſubdue, for that they holde certaine Ilandes in the riuer Euphrates which the Turke cannot winne of them. They be theeues all and haue no ſetled dwelling, but remoue from place to place with their Camels, goates, and horſes, wiues and children and all. They haue large blew gownes, their wiues eares and noſes are ringed very full of rings of copper and ſiluer, and they weare rings of copper about their legs.

Baſora ſtandeth neere the gulfe of Perſia, and is a towne of great trade of ſpices and drugges which come from Ormus. Alſo there is great ſtore of wheate, ryce, and dates growing thereabout, wherewith they ſerue Babylon and all the countrey, Ormus, and all the partes of India. I went from Baſora to Ormus downe the gulfe of Perſia in a certaine ſhippe made of bordes, and ſowed together with cayro, which is threede made of the huſke of Cocoes, and certaine canes or ſtrawe leaues ſowed vpon the ſeames of the bordes which is the cauſe that they leake very much. And ſo hauing Perſia alwayes on the left hande, and the coaſt of Arabia on the right hande we paſſed many Ilandes, and among others the famous Ilande

Ormus is an Iſland in circuit about fiue and twentie or thirtie miles, and is the drieſt Iſland in the world: for there is nothing growing in it but onely ſalt; for their water, wood, or victuals, and all things neceſſary come out of Perſia, which is about twelue miles from thence. All the Iſlands thereabout be very fruitfull, from whence all kinde of victuals are ſent vnto Ormus. The Portugales haue a caſtle here which ſtandeth neere vnto the ſea, wherein there is a Captaine for the king of Portugale hauing vnder him a conuenient number of ſouldiers, wherof ſome part remaine in the caſtle, and ſome in the towne. In this towne are marchants of all Nations, and many Moores and Gentiles. Here is very great trade of all ſortes of ſpices, drugs, ſilke, cloth of ſilke, fine tapeſtrie of Perſia, great ſtore of pearles which come from the Iſle of Babarim, and are the beſt pearles of all others, and many horſes of Perſia, which ſerue all India. They haue a Moore to their king which is choſen and gouerned by the Portugales. Their women are very ſtrangely attyred, wearing on their noſes, eares, neckes, armes and legges many rings ſet with iewels, and lockes of ſiluer and golde in their eares, and a long barre of golde vpon the ſide of their noſes. Their eares with the weight of their iewels be worne ſo wide, that a man may thruſt three of his fingers into them. Here very ſhortly after our arriuall wee were put in priſon, and had part of our goods taken from vs by the Captaine of the caſtle, whoſe name was Don Mathias de Albuquerque; and from hence the eleuenth of October he ſhipped vs and ſent vs for Goa vnto the Viceroy, which at that time was Don Franciſco de Maſcarenhas. The ſhippe wherein we were imbarked for Goa belonged to the Captaine, and carried one hundred twentie and foure horſes in it. All marchandiſe carried to Goa in a ſhippe wherein are horſes pay no cuſtome in Goa. The horſes pay cuſtome, the goods pay nothing; but if you come in a ſhip which bringeth no horſes, you are then to pay eight in the hundred for your goods. The firſt citie of India that we arriued at vpon the fift of Nouember, after we had paſſed the coaſt of Zindi, is called Diu, which ſtandeth in an Iland in the kingdome of Cambaia, and is the ſtrongeſt towne that the Portugales haue in thoſe partes. It is but litle, but well ſtored with marchandiſe; for here they lade many great ſhippes with diuerſe commodities for the ſtreits of Mecca, for Ormus, and other places, and theſe be ſhippes of the Moores and of Chriſtians. But the Moores cannot paſſe, except they haue a paſſeport from the Portugales. Cambaietta is the chiefe citie of that prouince, which is great and very populous, and fairely builded for a towne of the Gentiles: but if there happen any famine, the people will ſell their children for very little. The laſt king of Cambaia was Sultan Badu, which was killed at the ſiege of Diu, and ſhortly after his citie was taken by the great Mogor, which is the king of Agra and of Delli, which are fortie dayes iourney from the country of Cambaia. Here the women weare vpon their armes infinite numbers of rings made of Elepſants teeth, wherein they take ſo much delight, that they had rather be without their meate then without their bracelets. Going from Diu we come to Daman the ſecond towne of the Portugales in the countrey of Cambaia which is diſtant from Diu fortie leagues. Here is no trade but of corne and rice. They haue many villages vnder them which they quietly poſſeſſe in time of peace, but in time of warre the enemie is maiſter of them. From thence we paſſed by Baſaim, and from Baſaim to Tana, at both which places is ſmall trade but only of corne and rice. The tenth of Nouember we arriued at Chaul which ſtandeth in the firme land. There be two townes, the one belonging to the Portugales, and the other to the Moores. That of the Portugales is neereſt to the ſea, and commaundeth the bay, and is walled round about. A little aboue that is the towne of the Moores which is gouerned by a Moore king called Xa-Maluco. Here is great traffike for all ſortes of ſpices and drugges, ſilke, and cloth of ſilke, ſandales, Elephants teeth, and much China worke, and much ſugar which is made of the nutte called Gagara: the tree is called the palmer: which is the profitableſt tree in the worlde: it doth alwayes beare fruit, and doth yeeld wine, oyle, ſugar, vineger, cordes, coles, of the leaues are made thatch for the houſes, ſayles for ſhippes, mats to ſit or lie on: of the branches they make their houſes, and broomes to ſweepe, of the tree wood for ſhippes. The wine doeth iſſue out of the toppe of the tree. They cut a branch of a bowe and binde it hard, and hange an earthen pot vpon it, which they emptie euery morning and euery euening, and ſtill it and put in certaine dried rayſins, and it becommeth very ſtrong wine in ſhort time. Hither many ſhippes come from all partes of India, Ormus, and many from Mecca: heere be manie Moores and Gentiles. They haue a very ſtrange order among them, they worſhippe a cowe, and eſteeme much of the cowes doung to paint the walles of their houſes. They will kill nothing not ſo much as a louſe: for they holde it a ſinne to kill any thing. They eate no fleſh, but liue by rootes, and ryce, and milke. And when the huſbande dieth his wife is burned with him, if ſhee be aliue: if ſhee will not, her head is ſhauen, and then is neuer any account made of her after. They ſay if they ſhould be buried, it were a great ſinne, for of their bodies there would come many wormes and other vermine, and when their bodies were conſumed, thoſe wormes would lacke ſuſtenance, which were a ſinne, therefore they will be burned. In Cambaia they will kill nothing, nor haue any thing killed: in the towne they haue hoſpitals to keepe lame dogs and cats, and for birds. They will giue meat to the Ants.

Goa.

Goa is the moſt principal citie which the Portugals haue in India, wherin the Viceroy remaineth with his court. It ſtandeth in an Iland, which may be 25. or 30. miles about: It is a fine citie, and for an Indian towne very faire. The Iland is very faire, full of orchards and gardens, and many palmer trees, and hath ſome villages. Here bee many marchants of all nations. And the Fleete which commeth euery yeere from Portugal, which be foure, fiue, or ſixe great ſhippes, commeth firſt hither. And they come for the moſt part in September, and remaine there fortie or fiftie dayes; and then goe to Cochin, where they lade their Pepper for Portugall. Oftentimes they lade one in Goa, the reſt goe to Cochin which is from Goa an hundred leagues ſouthward. Goa ſtandeth in the countrey of Hidalcan, who lieth in the countrey ſixe or ſeuen dayes iourney. His chiefe citie is called Biſapor. At our comming we were caſt into the priſon, and examined before the Iuſtice and demanded for letters, and were charged to be ſpies, but they could prooue nothing by vs. We continued in priſon vntill the two and twentie of December, and then we were ſet at libertie, putting in ſureties for two thouſand duckats not to depart the towne; which ſureties father Steuens an Engliſh Ieſuite which we found there, & another religious mã a friend of his procured for vs. Our ſureties name was Andreas Taborer, to whom we paid 2150. duckats, and ſtill he demaunded more: whereupon we made ſute to the Viceroy and Iuſtice to haue our money againe, conſidering that they had had it in their hands neere fiue moneths and could prooue nothing againſt vs. The Viceroy made vs a very ſharpe anſwere, and ſayd wee ſhould be better ſifted before it were long, and that they had further matter againſt vs. Whereupon we preſently determined rather to ſeeke our liberties, then to bee in danger for euer to be ſlaues in the countrey, for it was told vs we ſhould haue ẏ ſtrapado. Wherupon preſently, the fift day of April 1585. in the morning we ranne from thence. And being ſet ouer the riuer, we went two dayes on foote not without feare, not knowing the way nor hauing any guide, for we durſt truſt none. One of the firſt townes which we came vnto, is called Bellergan, where there is a great market kept of Diamants, Rubies, Saphires, and many other ſoft ſtones. From Bellergan we went to Biſapor which is a very great towne where the king doeth keepe his court. Hee hath many Gentiles in his court and they bee great idolaters. And they haue their idols ſtanding in the Woods, which they call Pagodes. Some bee like a Cowe, ſome like a Monkie, ſome like Buffles, ſome like peacockes, and ſome like the deuill. Here be very many elephants which they goe to warre withall. Here they haue good ſtore of gold and ſiluer: their houſes are of ſtone very faire and high. From hence wee went for Gulconda, the king whereof is called Cutup de laſhach. Here and in the kingdome of Hidalcan, and in the countrey of the king of Decan bee the Diamants found of the olde water. It is a very faire towne, pleaſant, with faire houſes of bricke and timber, it aboundeth with great ſtore of fruites and freſh water. Here the men and the women do go with a cloth bound about their middles without any more apparell. We found it here very hote.

This was the 20. of Nouember.

The winter beginneth here about the laſt of May. In theſe partes is a porte or hauen called Maſulipatan, which ſtandeth eight dayes iourney from hence toward the gulfe of Bengala, whether come many ſhippes out of India, Pegu, and Sumatra, very richly laden with Pepper, ſpices, and other commodities. The countrie is very good and fruitfull. From thence I went to Seruidore which is a fine countrey, and the king is called, the king of Bread. The houſes here bee all thatched and made of lome. Here be many Moores and Gentiles, but there is ſmall religion among them. From thence I went to Bellapore, and ſo to Barrampore, which is in the country of Zelabdim Echebar. In this place their money is made of a kind of ſiluer round and thicke, to the value of twentie pence, which is very good ſiluer. It is marueilous great and a populous countrey. In their winter which is in Iune, Iuly, and Auguſt, there is no paſſing in the ſtreetes but with horſes, the waters be ſo high. The houſes are made of lome and thatched. Here is great ſtore of cotton cloth made, and painted clothes of cotton wooll: here groweth great ſtore of corne and Rice. We found mariages great ſtore both in townes and villages in many places where wee paſſed, of boyes of eight or ten yeeres, and girles of fiue or ſix yeeres old. They both do ride vpon one horſe very trimly decked, and are caried through the towne with great piping and playing, and ſo returne home and eate of a banket made of Rice and fruits, and there they daunce the moſt part of the night and ſo make an ende of the marriage. They lie not together vntill they be ten yeeres old. They ſay they marry their children ſo yoong, becauſe it is an order that when the man dieth, the woman muſt be burned with him: ſo that if the father die, yet they may haue a father in lawe to helpe to bring vp the children which bee maried: and alſo that they will not leaue their ſonnes without wiues, nor their daughters without huſbands. From thence we went to Mandoway, which is a very ſtrong towne. It was beſieged twelue yeeres by Zelabdim Echebar before hee could winne it. It ſtandeth vpon a very great high rocke as the moſt part of of their caſtles doe, and was of a very great circuite. From hence wee went to Vgini and Serringe, where wee ouertooke the ambaſſadour of Zelabdim Echebar with a maruellous great company of men, elephants, and camels. Here is great trade of cotton and cloth made of cotton, and great ſtore of drugs. From thence we went to Agra paſſing many riuers, which by reaſon of the raine were ſo ſwollen, that wee waded and ſwamme oftentimes for our liues. Agra is a very great citie and populous, built with ſtone, hauing faire and large ſtreetes, with a faire riuer running by it, which falleth into the gulfe of Bengala. It hath a faire caſtle and a ſtrong with a very faire ditch. Here bee many Moores and Gentiles, the king is called Zelabdim Echebar: the people for the moſt part call him The great Mogor. From thence wee went for Fatepore, which is the place where the king kept his court. The towne is greater then Agra, but the houſes and ſtreetes be not ſo faire. Here dwell many people both Moores and Gentiles. The king hath in Agra and Fatepore as they doe credibly report 1000. elephants, thirtie thouſand horſes, 1400. tame Deere, 800. concubines: ſuch ſtore of Ounces, Tigers, Buffles, Cocks & Haukes, that is very ſtrange to ſee. He keepeth a great court, which they call Dericcan. Agra and Fatepore are two very great cities, either of them much greater then Loudon and very populous. Betweene Agra and Fatepore are 12. miles, and all the way is a market of victuals & other things, as full as though a man were ſtill in a towne, and ſo many people as if a man were in a market. They haue many fine cartes, and many of them carued and gilded with gold, with two wheeles which be drawen with two litle Buls about the bigneſſe of our great dogs in England, and they will runne with any horſe, and carie two or three men in one of theſe cartes: they are couered with ſilke or very fine cloth, and be vſed here as our Coches be in England. Hither is great reſort of marchants from Perſia and out of India, and very much marchandiſe of ſilke and cloth, and of precious ſtones, both Rubies, Diamants, and Pearles. The king is apparelled in a white Cabie made like a ſhirt tied with ſtrings on the one ſide, and a litle cloth on his head coloured oftentimes with red or yealow. None come into his houſe but his eunuches which keepe his women. Here in Fatepore we ſtaied all three vntill the 28. of September 1585. and then maſter Iohn Newberie tooke his iourney toward the citie of Lahor, determining from thence to goe for Perſia and then for Aleppo or Conſtantinople, whether hee could get ſooneſt paſſage vnto, and directed me to goe for Bengala and for Pegu, and did promiſe me, if it pleaſed God, to meete me in Bengala within two yeeres with a ſhippe out of England. I left William Leades the ieweller in ſeruice with the king Zelabdim Echebar in Fatepore, who did entertaine him very well, and gaue him an houſe and fiue ſlaues, an horſe, and euery day ſixe S.S. in money. I went from Agra to Satagam in Bengala, in the companie of one hundred and foureſcore boates laden with Salt, Opium, Hinge, Lead, Carpets, and diuers other commodities downe the riuer Iemena. The chiefe marchants are Moores and Gentiles. In theſe countries they haue many ſtrange ceremonies. The Bramanes which are their prieſts, come to the water and haue a ſtring about their necks made with great ceremonies, and lade vp water with both their hands, and turne the ſtring firſt with both their hands within, and then one arme after the other out. Though it be neuer ſo cold, they will waſh themſelues in cold water or in warme. Theſe Gentiles will eate no fleſh nor kill any thing. They liue with rice, butter, milke, and fruits. They pray in the water naked, and dreſſe their meat & eate it naked, and for their penance they lie flat vpon the earth, and riſe vp and turne themſelues about 30. or 40. times, and vſe to heaue vp their hands to the ſunne, & to kiſſe the earth, with their armes and legs ſtretched along out, and their right leg alwayes before the left. Euery time they lie downe, they make a ſcore on the ground with their finger to know when their ſtint is finiſhed. The Bramanes marke themſelues in the foreheads, eares and throates with a kind of yellow geare which they grind, & euery morning they do it. And they haue ſome old men which go in the ſtreetes with a boxe of yellow powder, and marke men on their heads & necks as they meet them. And their wiues do come by 10, 20, & 30. together to the water ſide ſinging, & there do waſh themſelues, & then vſe their ceremonies, & marke themſelues in their forheds and faces, and cary ſome with them, and ſo depart ſinging. Their daughters be maried, at, or before the age of 10. yeres. The men may haue 7. wiues. They be a kind of craftie people, worſe then the Iewes. When they ſalute one another, they heaue vp their hands to their heads, and ſay Rame, Rame. Frõ Agra I came to Prage, where the riuer Iemena entreth into the mightie riuer Ganges, and Iemena looſeth his name. Ganges commeth out of the Northweſt, & runneth Eaſt into the gulfe of Bengala. In thoſe parts there are many Tigers and many partriges & turtle-doues, and much other foule. Here be many beggers in theſe countries which goe naked, and the people make great account of them: they call them Scheſche. Here I ſawe one which was a monſter among the reſt. He would haue nothing vpon him, his beard was very long, and with the haire of his head he couered his priuities. The nailes of ſome of his fingers were two inches long, for he would cut nothing from him, neither would he ſpeake. He was accompanied with eight or tenne, and they ſpake for him. When any man ſpake to him, he would lay his hand vpon his breſt and bowe himſelfe, but would not ſpeake. Hee would not ſpeake to the king. We went from Prage downe Ganges, the which is here very broad. Here is great ſtore of fiſh of ſundry ſorts, & of wild foule, as of ſwannes, geeſe, cranes, and many other things. The countrey is very fruitfull and populous. The men for the moſt part haue their faces ſhauen, and their heads very long, except ſome which bee all ſhauen ſaue the crowne: and ſome of them are as though a man ſhould ſet a diſh on their heads, and ſhaue them round, all but the crowne. In this riuer of Ganges are many Ilands. His water is very ſweete and pleaſant, and the countrey adioyning very fruitfull. From thence wee went to Bannaras which is a great towne, and great ſtore of cloth is made there of cotton, and Shaſhes for the Moores. In this place they be all Gentiles, and be the greateſt idolaters that euer I ſawe. To this towne come the Gentiles on pilgrimage out of farre countreys. Here alongſt the waters ſide bee very many faire houſes, and in all of them, or for the moſt part they haue their images ſtanding, which be euill fauoured, made of ſtone and wood, ſome like lions, leopards, and monkeis, ſome like men & women, and pecocks, and ſome like the deuil with foure armes and 4. hands. They ſit croſſe legged, ſome with one thing in their hands, & ſome another, & by breake of day and before, there are men & women which come out of the towne and waſh thēſelues in Ganges. And there are diuers old men which vpon places of earth made for the purpoſe, ſit praying, and they giue the people three or foure ſtrawes, which they take & hold them betweene their fingers when they waſh themſelues: and ſome ſit to marke them in the foreheads, and they haue in a cloth a litle Rice, Barlie, or money, which, when they haue waſhed themſelues, they giue to the old men which ſit there praying. Afterwards they go to diuers of their images, & giue them of their ſacrifices. And when they giue, the old men ſay certaine prayers, and then is all holy. And in diuers places there ſtandeth a kind of image which in their language they call Ada. And they haue diuers great ſtones carued, whereon they poure water, & throw thereupon ſome rice, wheate, barly, and ſome other things. This Ada hath foure hands with clawes. Moreouer, they haue a great place made of ſtone like to a well with ſteppes to goe downe; wherein the water ſtandeth very foule and ſtinketh: for the great quantitie of flowers, which continually they throwe into it, doe make it ſtinke. There be alwayes many people in it: for they ſay when they waſh themſelues in it, that their ſinnes be forgiuen them, becauſe God, as they ſay, did waſh himſelfe in that place. They gather vp the ſand in the bottome of it, and ſay it is holy. They neuer pray but in the water, and they waſh themſelues ouer head, and lade vp water with both their handes, and turne themſelues about, and then they drinke a litle of the water three times, and ſo goe to their gods which ſtand in thoſe houſes. Some of them will waſh a place which is their length, and then will pray vpon the earth with their armes and legs at length out, and will riſe vp and lie downe, and kiſſe the ground twentie or thirtie times, but they will not ſtirre their right foote. And ſome of them will make their ceremonies with fifteene or ſixteene pots litle and great, and ring a litle bel when they make their mixtures tenne or twelue times: and they make a circle of water round about their pots and pray, and diuers ſit by them, and one that reacheth them their pots: and they ſay diuers things ouer their pots many times, and when they haue done, they goe to their gods, and ſtrowe their ſacrifices which they thinke are very holy, and marke many of them which ſit by, in the foreheads, which they take as a great gift. There come fiftie and ſometime an hundred together, to waſh them in this well, and to offer to theſe idols.

Bannaras.

A pilgrimage of the Gentiles.

They haue in ſome of theſe houſes their idoles ſtanding, and one ſitteth by them in warme weather with a fanne to blowe winde vpon them. And when they ſee any company comming, they ring a litle bell which hangeth by them, and many giue them their almes, but eſpecially thoſe which come out of the countrey. Many of them are blacke and haue clawes of braſſe with long nayles, and ſome ride vpon peacockes and other foules which be euill fauoured, with long haukes bils, and ſome like one thing and ſome another, but none with a good face. Among the reſt there is one which they make great account of: for they ſay hee giueth them all things both foode and apparell, and one ſitteth alwayes by him with a fanne to make wind towards him. Here ſome bee burned to aſhes, ſome ſcorched in the fire and throwen into the water, and dogges and foxes doe preſently eate them. The wiues here doe burne with their huſbands when they die, if they will not, their heads be ſhauen, and neuer any account is made of them afterward.

The people goe all naked ſaue a litle cloth bound about their middle. Their women haue their necks, armes and eares decked with rings of ſiluer, copper, tinne, and with round hoopes made of Iuorie, adorned with amber ſtones, and with many agats, and they are marked with a great ſpot of red in their foreheads, and a ſtroke of red vp to the crowne, and ſo it runneth three maner of wayes. In their Winter, which is our May, the men weare quilted gownes of cotton like to our mattraces and quilted caps like to our great Grocers morters, with a ſlit to looke out at, and ſo tied downe beneath their eares. If a man or a woman be ſicke and like to die, they will lay him before their idols all night, and that ſhall helpe him or make an ende of him. And if he do not mend that night, his friends will come and ſit with him a litle and cry, and afterwards will cary him to the waters ſide and ſet him vpon a litle raft made of reeds, and ſo let him goe downe the riuer. When they be maried the man and the woman come to the water ſide, and there is an olde man which they call a Bramane, that is, a prieſt, a cowe, and a calfe, or a cowe with calfe. Then the man and the woman, cowe and calfe, and the olde man goe into the water together, and they giue the olde man a white cloth of foure yards long, and a baſket croſſe bound with diuers things in it: the cloth hee laieth vpon the backe of the cowe, and then he taketh the cowe by the ende of the taile, and ſaieth certaine wordes: and ſhe hath a copper or a braſſe pot full of water, and the man doeth hold his hand by the olde mans hand, and the wiues hand by her huſbands, and all haue the cowe by the taile, and they poure water out of the pot vpon the cowes taile, and it runneth through all their hands, and they lade vp water with their handes, and then the olde man doeth tie him and her together by their clothes. Which done, they goe round about the cowe and calfe, and then they giue ſomewhat to the poore which be alwayes there, and to the Bramane or prieſt they giue the cowe and calfe, and afterward goe to diuers of their idoles and offer money, and lie downe flat vpon the ground and kiſſe it diuers times, and then goe their way. Their chiefe idoles bee blacke and euill fauoured, their mouthes monſtrous, their eares gilded, and full of iewels, their teeth and eyes of gold, ſiluer, and glaſſe, ſome hauing one thing in their handes, and ſome another. You may not come into the houſes where they ſtand, with your ſhooes on. They haue continually lampes burning before them. From Bannaras I went to Patenaw downe the riuer of Ganges: where in the way we paſſed many faire townes, and a countrey very fruitfull: and many very great riuers doe enter into Ganges, and ſome of them as great as Ganges, which cauſe Ganges to bee of a great breadth, and ſo broad that in the time of raine you cannot ſee from one ſide to the other. Theſe Indians when they bee ſcorched and throwen into the water, the men ſwimme with their faces downewards, the women with their faces vpwards, I thought they tied ſomething to them to cauſe them to doe ſo: but they ſay no. There be very many thieues in this countrey, which be like to the Arabians: for they haue no certaine abode, but are ſometime in one place and ſometime in another. Here the women bee ſo decked with ſiluer and copper, that it is ſtrange to ſee, they vſe no ſhooes by reaſon of the rings of ſiluer and copper which they weare on their toes. Here at Patanaw they finde gold in this maner. They digge deepe pits in the earth, and waſh the earth in great bolles, and therein they finde the gold, and they make the pits round about with bricke, that the earth fall not in. Patenaw is a very long and a great towne. In times paſt it was a kingdom, but now it is vnder Zelabdim Echebar the great Mogor. The men are tall and ſlender, and haue many old folks among them: the houſes are ſimple, made of earth and couered with ſtrawe, the ſtreetes are very large. In this towne there is a trade of cotton, & cloth of cotton, much ſugar, which they cary from hence to Bengala and India, very much Opium & other commodities. He that is chiefe here vnder the king is called Tipperdas, and is of great account among the people. Here in Patenau I ſaw a diſſembling prophet which ſate vpon an horſe in the market place, and made as though he ſlept, and many of the people came and touched his feete with their hands, and then kiſſed their hands. They tooke him for a great man, but ſure he was a laſie lubber. I left him there ſleeping. The people of theſe countries be much giuen to ſuch praiing and diſſembling hypocrites.

This tying of new maried folks together by the clothes, was vſed by the Mexicans in old time.

Tanda in Gouren

From Patanaw I went to Tanda which is in the land of Gouren. It hath in times paſt bene a kingdom, but now is ſubdued by Zelabdim Echebar. Great trade and traffique is here of cotton, and of cloth of cotton. The people goe naked with a litle cloth bound about their waſte. It ſtandeth in the countrey of Bengala. Here be many Tigers, wild Bufs, and great ſtore of wilde foule: they are very great idolaters. Tanda ſtandeth from the riuer Ganges a league, becauſe in times paſt the riuer flowing ouer the bankes, in time of raine did drowne the countrey and many villages, and ſo they do remaine. And the old way which the riuer Ganges was woont to run, remaineth drie, which is the occaſion that the citie doeth ſtand ſo farre from the water. From Agra downe the riuer Iemena, and downe the riuer Ganges, I was fiue moneths comming to Bengala, but it may be ſailed in much ſhorter time.

I went from Bengala into the country of Couche, which lieth 25. dayes iourny Northwards from Tanda. The king is a Gentile, his name is Suckel Counſe: his countrey is great, and lieth not far from Cauchin China: for they ſay they haue pepper from thence. The port is called Cacchegate. All the countrie is ſet with Bambos or Canes made ſharpe at both the endes & driuen into the earth, and they can let in the water & drowne the ground aboue knee deepe, ſo that mē nor horſes can paſſe. They poiſon all the waters if any wars be. Here they haue much ſilke & muske, and cloth made of cotton. The people haue eares which be marueilous great of a ſpan long, which they draw out in length by deuiſes when they be yong. Here they be all Gentiles, and they will kil nothing. They haue hoſpitals for ſheepe, goates, dogs, cats, birds, & for all other liuing creatures. When they be old & lame, they keepe them vntil they die. If a man catch or buy any quicke thing in other places & bring it thither, they wil giue him mony for it or other victuals, & keepe it in their hoſpitals or let it go. They wil giue meat to the Ants. Their ſmal mony is almonds, which oftentimes they vſe to eat. From thence I returned to Hugeli, which is the place where the Portugals keep in the country of Bengala which ſtandeth in 23. degrees of Northerly latitude, and ſtandeth a league from Satagan: they cal it Porto Piqueno. We went through the wildernes, becauſe the right way was full of thieues, where we paſſed the countrey of Gouren, where we found but few villages, but almoſt all wildernes, & ſaw many buffes, ſwine & deere, graſſe longer then a mā, and very many Tigers. Not far from Porto Piqueno ſouthweſtward, ſtandeth an hauen which is called Angeli, in the countrey of Orixa. It was a kingdom of it ſelfe, & the king was a great friend to ſtrangers. Afterwards it was taken by the king of Patan which was their neighbour, but he did not enioy it long, but was taken by Zelabdim Echebar, which is king of Agra, Delli, & Cambaia. Orixa ſtandeth 6. daies iourney from Satagan ſouthweſtward. In this place is very much Rice, and cloth made of cotton, & great ſtore of cloth which is made of graſſe, which they call Yerua, it is like a ſilke. They make good cloth of it which they ſend for India & diuers other places. To this hauen of Angeli come euery yere many ſhips out of India, Negapatan, Sumatra, Malacca, and diuers other places; & lade from thence great ſtore of Rice, & much cloth of cotton wooll, much ſugar, & long pepper, great ſtore of butter & other victuals for India. Satagam is a faire citie for a citie of the Moores, and very plentifull of all things. Here in Bengala they haue euery day in one place or other a great market which they call Chandeau, and they haue many great boats which they cal pericoſe, wherewithall they go from place to place and buy Rice and many other things: theſe boates haue 24. or 26. oares to rowe them, they be great of burthen, but haue no couerture. Here the Gentiles haue the water of Ganges in great eſtimation, for hauing good water neere them, yet they will fetch the water of Ganges a great way off, and if they haue not ſufficient to drinke, they will ſprinkle a litle on them, and then they thinke themſelues well. From Satagam I trauelled by the countrey of the king of Tippara or porto Grande, with whom the Mogores or Mogen haue almoſt continuall warres. The Mogen which be of the kingdom of Recon and Rame, be ſtronger then the king of Tippara, ſo that Chatigan or porto Grande is oftentimes vnder the king of Recon.

There is a country 4. daies iournie from Couche or Quicheu before mentioned, which is called Bottanter and the citie Bottia, the king is called Dermain; the people whereof are very tall and ſtrong, and there are marchants which come out of China, & they ſay out of Muſcouia or Tartarie. And they come to buy muske, cambals, agats, ſilke, pepper and ſaffron like the ſaffron of Perſia. The countrey is very great, 3. moneths iourney. There are very high mountains in this countrey, & one of them ſo ſteep that when a man is 6. daies iourney off it, he may ſee it perfectly. Vpon theſe mountains are people which haue eares of a ſpanne long: if their eares be not long, they call them apes. They ſay that when they be vpon the mountaines, they ſee ſhips in the Sea ſayling to and fro; but they know not from whence they come, nor whether they go. There are marchants which come out of the Eaſt, they ſay, from vnder the ſunne, which is from China, which haue no beards, and they ſay there it is ſomething warme. But thoſe which come from the other ſide of the mountains which is from the North, ſay there it is very cold. Theſe Northern merchants are apparelled with woollen cloth and hats, white hoſen cloſe, and bootes which be of Moſcouia or Tartarie. They report that in their countrey they haue very good horſes, but they be litle: ſome men haue foure, fiue, or ſixe hundred horſes and kine: they liue with milke and fleſhe. They cut the tailes of their kine, and ſell them very deere, for they bee in great requeſt, and much eſteemed in thoſe partes. The haire of them is a yard long, the rumpe is aboue a ſpanne long: they vſe to hang them for brauerie vpon the heades of their Elephants: they bee much vſed in Pegu and China: they buie and ſell by ſcores vpon the ground. The people be very ſwift on foote.

From Chatigan in Bengala, I came to Bacola; the king whereof is a Gentile, a man very well diſpoſed and delighteth much to ſhoot in a gun. His countrey is very great and fruitful, and hath ſtore of Rice, much cotton cloth, and cloth of ſilke. The houſes be very faire and high builded, the ſtreetes large, the people naked, except a litle cloth about their waſte. The women weare great ſtore of ſiluer hoopes about their neckes and armes, and their legs are ringed with ſiluer and copper, and rings made of elephants teeth.

Serrepore.

From Bacola I went to Serrepore which ſtandeth vpon the riuer of Ganges, the king is called Chondery. They be all hereabout rebels againſt their king Zebaldim Echebar: for here are are ſo many riuers & Iſlands, that they flee from one to another, whereby his horſemen cannot preuaile againſt them. Great ſtore of cotton cloth is made here.

Sinnergan.

Sinnergan is a towne ſixe leagues from Serrepore, where there is the beſt and fineſt cloth made of cotton that is in all India. The chiefe king of all theſe countries is called Iſacan, and he is chiefe of all the other kings, and is a great friend to all Chriſtians. The houſes here, as they be in the moſt part of India, are very litle, and couered with ſtrawe, and haue a fewe mats round about the wals, and the doore to keepe out the Tygers and the Foxes. Many of the people are very rich. Here they will eate no fleſh, nor kill no beaſt: they liue of Rice, milke, and fruits. They goe with a litle cloth before them, and all the reſt of their bodies is naked. Great ſtore of Cotton cloth goeth from hence, and much Rice, wherewith they ſerue all India, Ceilon, Pegu, Malacca, Sumatra, and many other places.

I went from Serrepore the 28. of Nouember 1586. for Pegu in a ſmall ſhip or foiſt of one Albert Carauallos, and ſo paſſing downe Ganges, and paſſing by the Iſland of Sundiua, porto Grande, or the countrie of Tippera, the kingdom of Recon and Mogen, leauing them on our left ſide with a faire wind at Northweſt: our courſe was South & by Eaſt, which brought vs to the barre of Negrais in Pegu: if any contrary wind had come, we had throwen many of our things ouer-boord: for we were ſo peſtered with people & goods, that there was ſcant place to lie in. From Bengala to Pegu is 90. leagues. We entred the barre of Negrais, which is a braue barre & hath 4. fadomes water where it hath leaſt. Three dayes after we came to Coſmin, which is a very pretie towne, and ſtandeth very pleaſantly, very well furniſhed with all things. The people be very tall & well diſpoſed; the women white, round faced, with litle eies: the houſes are high built, ſet vpon great high poſtes, & they go vp to them with long ladders for feare of the Tygers which be very many. The countrey is very fruitful of all things. Here are very great Figs, Orenges, Cocoes, and other fruits. The land is very high that we fall withall, but after we be entred the barre, it is very lowe and full of riuers, for they goe all too and fro in boates, which they call paroes, and keepe their houſes with wife and children in them.

Medon.

From the barre of Nigrais to the citie of Pegu is ten dayes iourney by the riuers. Wee went from Coſmin to Pegu in Paroes or boates, and paſſing vp the riuers wee came to Medon, which is a prety towne, where there be a wonderfull number of Paroes, for they keepe their houſes and their markets in them all vpon the water. They rowe too and fro, and haue all their marchandizes in their boates with a great Sombrero or ſhadow ouer their heads to keepe the ſunne from them, which is as broad as a great cart wheele made of the leaues of the Coco trees and fig trees, and is very light.

Pegu.

From Medon we went to Dela, which is a very faire towne, and hath a faire port into the ſea, from whence go many ſhips to Malacca, Mecca, and many other places. Here are 18. or 20. very great and long houſes, where they tame and keep many elephants of the kings: for there about in the wilderneſſe they catch the wilde elephants. It is a very fruitfull countrey. From Dela we went to Cirion, which is a good towne, and hath a faire porte into the ſea, whither come many ſhips from Mecca, Malacca, Sumatra, and from diuers other places. And there the ſhips ſtaie and diſcharge, & ſend vp their goods in Paroes to Pegu. From Cirion we went to Macao, which is a pretie towne, where we left our boats or Paroes, & in the morning taking Delingeges, which are a kind of Coches made of cords & cloth quilted, & caried vpon a ſtang betweene 3. or 4. men: we came to Pegu the ſame day. Pegu is a citie very great, ſtrong, and very faire, with walles of ſtone, and great ditches round about it. There are two townes, the old towne and the newe. In the olde towne are all the marchants ſtrangers, and very many marchants of the countrey. All the goods are ſold in the olde towne which is very great, and hath many ſuburbes round about it, and all the houſes are made of Canes which they call Bambos, and bee couered with ſtrawe. In your houſe you haue a Warehouſe which they call Godon, which is made of bricke to put your goods in, for oftentimes they take fire and burne in an houre foure or fiue hundred houſes: ſo that if the Godon were not, you ſhould bee in danger to haue all burned, if any winde ſhould riſe, at a trice. In the newe towne is the king, and all his Nobilitie and Gentrie. It is a citie very great and populous, and is made ſquare and with very faire walles, and a great ditch round about it full of water, with many crocodiles in it: it hath twenty gates, and they bee made of ſtone, for euery ſquare fiue gates. There are alſo many Turrets for Centinels to watch, made of wood, and gilded with golde very faire. The ſtreets are the faireſt that euer I ſaw, as ſtraight as a line from one gate to the other, and ſo broad that tenne or twelue men may ride a front thorow them. On both ſides of them at euery mans doore is ſet a palmer tree which is the nut tree, which make a very faire ſhew and a very commodious ſhadow, ſo that a man may walke in the ſhade all day. The houſes be made of wood, and couered with tiles. The kings houſe is in the middle of the city, and is walled and ditched round about: and the buildings within are made of wood very ſumptuouſly gilded, and great workemanſhip is vpon the forefront, which is likewiſe very coſtly gilded. And the houſe wherein his Pagode or idole ſtandeth is couered with tiles of ſiluer, and all the walles are gilded with golde. Within the firſt gate of the kings houſe is a great large roome, on both ſides whereof are houſes made for the kings elephants, which be maruellous great and faire, and are brought vp to warres and in ſeruice of the king. And among the reſt he hath foure white elephants, which are very ſtrange and rare: for there is none other king which hath them but he: if any other king hath one, hee will ſend vnto him for it. When any of theſe white elephants is brought vnto the king, all the merchants in the city are commanded to ſee them, and to giue him a preſent of halfe a ducat, which doth come to a great ſumme: for that there are many merchants in the city. After that you haue giuen your preſent you may come and ſee them at your pleaſure, although they ſtand in the kings houſe. This king in his title is called the king of the white elephants. If any other king haue one, and will not ſend it him, he will make warre with him for it: for he had rather loſe a great part of his kingdome, then not to conquere him. They do very great ſeruice vnto theſe white elephants; euery one of them ſtandeth in an houſe gilded with golde, and they doe feede in veſſels of ſiluer and gilt. One of them when he doth go to the riuer to be waſhed, as euery day they do, goeth vnder a canopy of cloth of golde or of ſilke carried ouer him by ſixe or eight men, and eight or ten men goe before him playing on drummes, ſhawmes, or other inſtruments: and when he is waſhed and commeth out of the riuer, there is a gentleman which doth waſh his feet in a ſiluer baſin: which is his office giuen him by the king. There is no ſuch account made of any blacke elephant, be he neuer ſo great. And ſurely there be woonderfull faire and great, and ſome be nine cubites in height. And they do report that the king hath aboue fiue thouſand elephants of warre, beſides many other which be not taught to fight. This king hath a very large place wherein he taketh the wilde elephants. It ſtandeth about a mile from Pegu, builded with a faire court within, and is in a great groue or wood: and there be many huntſmen, which go into the wilderneſſe with ſhe elephants: for without the ſhe they are not to be taken. And they be taught for that purpoſe: and euery hunter hath fiue or ſixe of them: and they ſay that they anoint the ſhe elephants with a certaine ointment, which when the wild elephant doth ſmell, he will not leaue her. When they haue brought the wilde elephant neere vnto the place, they ſend word vnto the towne, and many horſemen and footmen come out and cauſe the ſhe elephant to enter into a ſtrait way which doeth goe to the palace, and the ſhe and he do runne in: for it is like a wood: and when they be in, the gate doth ſhut. Afterward they get out the female: and when the male ſeeth that he is left alone, he weepeth and crieth, and runneth againſt the walles, which be made of ſo ſtrong trees, that ſome of them doe breake their teeth with running againſt them. Then they pricke him with ſharpe canes, & cauſe him to go into a ſtrait houſe, and there they put a rope about his middle and about his feet, and let him ſtand there three or foure dayes without eating or drinking: and then they bring a female to him, with meat and drinke, and within few dayes he becommeth tame. The chiefe force of the king is in theſe elephants. And when they go into the warres they ſet a frame of wood vpon their backes, bound with great cordes, wherein ſit foure or ſixe men, which fight with gunnes, bowes and arrowes, darts and other weapons. And they ſay that their ſkinnes are ſo thicke that a pellet of an harquebuſh will ſcarſe pearce them, except it be in ſome tender place. Their weapons be very badde. They haue gunnes, but ſhoot very badly in them, darts and ſwords ſhort without points. The king keepeth a very great ſtate: when he ſitteth abroad as he doth euery day twiſe, all his noble men which they call Shemines ſit on ech ſide, a good diſtance off, and a great guard without them. The Court yard is very great. If any man will ſpeake with the king, he is to kneele downe, to heaue vp his hands to his head, and to put his head to the ground three times, when he entreth, in the middle way, and when he commeth neere to the king: and then he ſitteth downe and talketh with the king: if the king like well of him, he ſitteth neere him within three or foure paces: if he thinke not well of him, he ſitteth further off. When he goeth to warre, he goeth very ſtrong. At my being there he went to Odia in the countrey of Siam with three hundred thouſand men, and fiue thouſand elephants. Thirty thouſand men were his guard. Theſe people do eate roots, herbs, leaues, dogs, cats, rats, ſerpents, and ſnakes; they refuſe almoſt nothing. When the king rideth abroad, he rideth with a great guard, and many noblemen, oftentimes vpon an elephant with a fine caſtle vpon him very fairely gilded with gold; and ſometimes vpon a great frame like an horſliter, which hath a little houſe vpon it couered ouer head, but open on the ſides, which is all gilded with golde, & ſet with many rubies & ſaphires, whereof he hath infinite ſtore in his country, and is caried vpon ſixteene or eighteene mens ſhoulders. This coach in their language is called Serrion. Very great feaſting and triumphing is many times before the king both of men and women. This king hath little force by Sea, becauſe hee hath but very few ſhips. He hath houſes full of golde and ſiluer, and bringeth in often, but ſpendeth very little, and hath the mines of rubies and ſaphires, and ſpinelles. Neere vnto the palace of the king, there is a treaſure woonderfull rich; the which becauſe it is ſo neere, he doth not account of it: and it ſtandeth open for all men to ſee in a great walled court with two gates, which be alwayes open. There are foure houſes gilded very richly, and couered with leade: in euery one of them are Pagodes or images of huge ſtature and great value. In the firſt is the picture of a king in golde with a crowne of golde on his head full of great rubies and ſaphires, and about him there ſtand foure children of golde. In the ſecond houſe is the picture of a man in ſiluer woonderfull great, as high as an houſe; his foot is as long as a man, and he is made ſitting, with a crowne on his head very rich with ſtones. In the third houſe is the picture of a man greater then the other, made of braſſe, with a rich crowne on his head. In the fourth and laſt houſe doth ſtand another, made of braſſe, greater then the other, with a crowne alſo on his head very rich with ſtones. In another court not farre from this ſtand foure other Pagodes or idoles, maruellous great, of copper, made in the ſame place where they do ſtand; for they be ſo great that they be not to be remooued: they ſtand in foure houſes gilded very faire, and are themſelues gilded all ouer ſaue their heads, and they ſhew like a blacke Morian. Their expences in gilding of their images are wonderfull. The king hath one wife and aboue three hundred concubines, by which they ſay he hath foureſcore or foureſcore and ten children. He ſitteth in iudgement almoſt euery day. They vſe no ſpeech, but giue vp their ſupplications written in the leaues of a tree with the point of an yron bigger then a bodkin. Theſe leaues are an elle long, and about two inches broad; they are alſo double. He which giueth in his ſupplication, doth ſtand in a place a little diſtance off with a preſent. If his matter be liked of, the king accepteth of his preſent, and granteth his requeſt: if his ſute be not liked of, he returneth with his preſent; for the king will not take it.

An excellent colour with a root called Saia.

Woollen cloth and ſcarlets ſolde in Pegu.

The money of Pegu.

The ſeuerall merchandiſes of Pegu.

The forme of their Temples or Varellaes.

In India there are few commodities which ſerue for Pegu, except Opium of Cambaia, painted cloth of S. Thome, or of Maſulipatan, and white cloth of Bengala, which is ſpent there in great quantity. They bring thither alſo much cotton, yarne red coloured with a root which they call Saia, which will neuer loſe his colour: it is very wel ſolde here, and very much of it commeth yerely to Pegu. By your mony you loſe much. The ſhips which come from Bengala, S. Thome, and Maſulipatan, come to the bar of Nigrais and to Coſmin. To Martauan a port of the ſea in the kingdome of Pegu come many ſhips from Malacca laden with Sandall, Porcelanes, and other wares of China, and with Camphora of Borneo, and Pepper from Achen in Sumatra. To Cirion a port of Pegu come ſhips from Mecca with woollen cloth, Scarlets, Veluets, Opium, and ſuch like. There are in Pegu eight Brokers, whom they call Tareghe, which are bound to ſell your goods at the price which they be worth, and you giue them for their labour two in the hundred: and they be bound to make your debt good, becauſe you ſell your marchandiſes vpon their word. If the Broker pay you not at his day, you may take him home, and keepe him in your houſe: which is a great ſhame for him. And if he pay you not preſently, you may take his wife and children and his ſlaues, and binde them at your doore, and ſet them in the Sunne; for that is the law of the countrey. Their current money in theſe parts is a kinde of braſſe which they call Ganſa, wherewith you may buy golde, ſiluer, rubies, muſke, and all other things. The golde and ſiluer is marchandiſe, and is worth ſometimes more, and ſometimes leſſe, as other wares be. This braſen money doeth goe by a weight which they call a biza; and commonly this biza after our account is worth about halfe a crowne or ſomewhat leſſe. The marchandiſe which be in Pegu, are golde, ſiluer, rubies, ſaphires, ſpinelles, muſke, beniamin or franckincenſe, long pepper, tinne, leade, copper, lacca whereof they make hard ware, rice, and wine made of rice, and ſome ſugar. The elephants doe eate the ſugar canes, or els they would make very much. And they conſume many canes likewiſe in making of their Varellaes or Idole temples, which are in great number both great and ſmall. They be made round like a ſugar loafe, ſome are as high as a Church, very broad beneath, ſome a quarter of a mile in compaſſe: within they be all earth done about with ſtone. They conſume in theſe Varellaes great quantity of golde; for that they be all gilded aloft: and many of them from the top to the bottome: and euery ten or twelue yeeres they muſt be new gilded, becauſe the raine conſumeth off the golde: for they ſtand open abroad. If they did not conſume their golde in theſe vanities, it would be very plentifull and good cheape in Pegu. About two dayes iourney from Pegu there is a Varelle or Pagode, which is the pilgrimage of the Pegues: it is called Dogonne, and is of a woonderfull bigneſſe, and all gilded from the foot to the toppe. And there is an houſe by it wherein the Tallipoies which are their Prieſts doe preach. This houſe is fiue and fifty paces in length, and hath three pawnes or walks in it, and forty great pillars gilded, which ſtand betweene the walks; and it is open on all ſides with a number of ſmall pillars, which be likewiſe gilded: it is gilded with golde within and without. There are houſes very faire round about for the pilgrims to lie in: and many goodly houſes for the Tallipoies to preach in, which are full of images both of men and women, which are all gilded ouer with golde. It is the faireſt place, as I ſuppoſe, that is in the world: it ſtandeth very high, and there are foure wayes to it, which all along are ſet with trees of fruits, in ſuch wiſe that a man may goe in the ſhade aboue two miles in length. And when their feaſt day is, a man can hardly paſſe by water or by land for the great preſſe of people; for they come from all places of the kingdome of Pegu thither at their feaſt. In Pegu they haue many Tallipoies or prieſts, which preach againſt all abuſes. Many men reſort vnto them. When they enter into their kiack, that is to ſay, their holy place or temple, at the doore there is a great iarre of water with a cocke or a ladle in it, and there they waſh their feet; and then they enter in, and lift vp their hands to their heads firſt to their preacher, and then to the Sunne, and ſo ſit downe. The Tallipoies go very ſtrangely apparelled with one camboline or thinne cloth next to their body of a browne colour, another of yellow doubled many times vpon their ſhoulder: and thoſe two be girded to them with a broad girdle: and they haue a ſkinne of leather hanging on a ſtring about their necks, whereupon they ſit, bare headed & bare footed; for none of them weareth ſhooes; with their right armes bare and a great broad ſombrero or ſhadow in their hands to defend them in the Summer from the Sunne, and in the Winter from the raine. When the Tallipoies or prieſts take their Orders, firſt they go to ſchoole vntill they be twenty yeres olde or more, and then they come before a Tallipoie appointed for that purpoſe, whom they call Rowli: he is of the chiefeſt and moſt learned, and he oppoſeth them, and afterward examineth them many times, whether they will leaue their friends, and the company of all women, and take vpon them the habit of a Tallipoie. If any be content, then he rideth vpon an horſe about the ſtreets very richly apparelled, with drummes and pipes, to ſhew that he leaueth the riches of the world to be a Tallipoie. In few dayes after, he is caried vpon a thing like an horſliter, which they call a ſerion, vpon ten or twelue mens ſhoulders in the apparell of a Tallipoie, with pipes and drummes, and many Tallipoies with him, and al his friends, and ſo they go with him to his houſe, which ſtandeth without the towne, and there they leaue him. Euery one of them hath his houſe, which is very little, ſet vpon ſix or eight poſts, and they go vp to them with a ladder of twelue or foureteene ſtaues. Their houſes be for the moſt part by the hie wayes ſide, and among the trees, and in the woods. And they go with a great pot made of wood or fine earth, and couered, tied with a broad girdle vpon their ſhoulder, which commeth vnder their arme, wherewith they go to begge their victuals which they eate, which is rice, fiſh, and herbs. They demand nothing, but come to the doore, and the people preſently doe giue them, ſome one thing, and ſome another: and they put all together in their potte: for they ſay they muſt eate of their almes, and therewith content themſelues. They keepe their feaſts by the Moone: and when it is new Moone they keepe their greateſt feaſt: and then the people ſend rice and other things to that kiack or church of which they be; and there all the Tallipoies doe meete which be of that Church, and eate the victuals which are ſent them. When the Tallipoies do preach, many of the people cary them gifts into the pulpit where they ſit and preach. And there is one which ſitteth by them to take that which the people bring. It is diuided among them. They haue none other ceremonies nor ſeruice that I could ſee, but onely preaching.

I went from Pegu to Iamahey, which is in the countrey of the Langeiannes, whom we call Iangomes; it is fiue and twenty dayes iourney Northeaſt from Pegu. In which iourney I paſſed many fruitfull and pleaſant countreys. The countrey is very lowe, and hath many faire riuers. The houſes are very bad, made of canes, and couered with ſtraw. Heere are many wilde buffes and elephants. Iamahey is a very faire and great towne, with faire houſes of ſtone, well peopled, the ſtreets are very large, the men very well ſet and ſtrong, with a cloth about them, bare headed and bare footed: for in all theſe countreys they weare no ſhooes. The women be much fairer then thoſe of Pegu. Heere in all theſe countreys they haue no wheat. They make ſome cakes of rice. Hither to Iamahey come many marchants out of China, and bring great ſtore of muſke, golde, ſiluer, and many other things of China worke. Here is great ſtore of victuals: they haue ſuch plenty that they will not milke the buffles, as they doe in all other places.

Iamahey fiue & twenty dayes iourny Northeaſtward from Pegu.

Here is great ſtore of copper and beniamin. In theſe countreys when the people be ſicke they make a vow to offer meat vnto the diuell, if they eſcape: and when they be recouered they make a banket with many pipes & drummes and other inſtruments, and danſing all the night, and their friends come and bring gifts, cocos, figges, arrecaes, and other fruites, and with great dauncing and reioycing they offer to the diuell, and ſay, they giue the diuel to eat, and driue him out. When they be dancing and playing they will cry & hallow very loud; and in this ſort they ſay they driue him away. And when they be ſicke a Tallipoy or two euery night doth ſit by them & ſing, to pleaſe the diuell that he ſhould not hurt them. And if any die he is caried vpon a great frame made like a tower, with a couering all gilded with golde made of canes caried with foureteene or ſixteene men, with drummes and pipes and other inſtruments playing before him to a place out of the towne and there is burned. He is accompanied with all his friends and neighbours, all men: and they giue to the tallipoies or prieſts many mats and cloth: and then they returne to the houſe and there make a feaſt for two dayes: and then the wife with all the neighbours wiues & her friends go to the place where he was burned, and there they ſit a certaine time add cry and gather the pieces of bones which be left vnburned and bury them, and then returne to their houſes and make an end of all mourning. And the men and women which be neere of kin do ſhaue their heads, which they do not vſe except it be for the death of a friend: for they much eſteeme of their haire.

They burne their dead.

Caplan is the place where the rubies and other precious ſtones are found.

Caplan is the place where they finde the rubies, ſaphires, and ſpinelles: it ſtandeth ſixe dayes iourney from Aua in the kingdome of Pegu. There are many great high hilles out of which they digge them. None may go to the pits but onely thoſe which digge them.

In Pegu, and in all the countreys of Aua, Langeiannes, Siam, and the Bramas, the men weare bunches or little round balles in their priuy members: ſome of them weare two and ſome three. They cut the ſkin and ſo put them in, one into one ſide and another into the other ſide; which they do when they be 25 or 30 yeeres olde, and at their pleaſure they take one or more of them out as they thinke good. When they be maried the huſband is for euery child which his wife hath, to put in one vntill he come to three and then no more: for they ſay the women doe deſire them. They were inuented becauſe they ſhould not abuſe the male ſexe. For in times paſt all thoſe countries were ſo giuen to that villany, that they were very ſcarſe of people. It was alſo ordained that the women ſhould not haue paſt three cubits of cloth in their nether clothes, which they binde about them; which are ſo ſtrait, that when they go in the ſtreets, they ſhew one ſide of the leg bare aboue the knee. The bunches aforeſayd be of diuers ſorts: the leaſt be as big as a litle walnut, and very round: the greateſt are as big as a litle hennes egge: ſome are of braſſe and ſome of ſiluer: but thoſe of ſiluer be for the king and his noble men. Theſe are gilded and made with great cunning, and ring like a litle bell. There are ſome made of leade, which they call Selwy becauſe they ring but litle: and theſe be of leſſer price for the poorer ſort. The king ſometimes taketh his out, and giueth them to his noblemen as a great gift: and becauſe he hath vſed them, they eſteeme them greatly. They will put one in, and heale vp the place in ſeuen or eight dayes.

Anthony Galuano writeth of theſe bals.

The Bramas which be of the kings countrey (for the king is a Brama) haue their legs or bellies, or ſome part of their body, as they thinke good themſelues, made black with certaine things which they haue: they vſe to pricke the ſkinne, and to put on it a kinde of anile or blacking, which doth continue alwayes. And this is counted an honour among them: but none may haue it but the Bramas which are of the kings kinred.

The people of Pegu weare no beards.

Theſe people weare no beards: they pull out the haire on their faces with little pinſons made for that purpoſe. Some of them will let 16 or 20 haires grow together, ſome in one place of his face and ſome in another, and pulleth out all the reſt: for he carieth his pinſons alwayes with him to pull the haires out aſſoone as they appeare. If they ſee a man with a beard they wonder at him. They haue their teeth blacked both men and women, for they ſay a dogge hath his teeth white, therefore they will blacke theirs.

The Pegues if they haue a ſute in the law which is ſo doubtfull that they cannot well determine it, put two long canes into the water where it is very deepe: and both the parties go into the water by the poles, and there ſit men to iudge, and they both do diue vnder the water, and he which remaineth longeſt vnder the water doth winne the ſute.

Malacca.

The 10 of Ianuary I went from Pegu to Malacca, paſſing by many of the ports of Pegu, as Martauan, the Iland of Taui, from whence commeth great ſtore of tinne which ſerueth all India, the Ilands of Tanaſeri, Iunſalaon, and many others; and ſo came to Malacca the 8 of February, where the Portugals haue a caſtle which ſtandeth nere the ſea. And the countrey faſt without the towne belongeth to the Malayos, which is a kinde of proud people. They go naked with a cloth about their middle, and a litle roll of cloth about their heads. Hither come many ſhips from China & from the Malucos, Banda, Timor, and from many other Ilands of the Iauas, which bring great ſtore of ſpices and drugs, and diamants and other iewels. The voyages into many of theſe Ilands belong vnto the captaine of Malacca: ſo that none may goe thither without his licence: which yeeld him great ſummes of money euery yeere. The Portugals heere haue often times warres with the king of Achem which ſtandeth in the Iland of Sumatra: from whence commeth great ſtore of pepper and other ſpices euery yeere to Pegu and Mecca within the Red ſea, and other places.

When the Portugals go from Macao in China to Iapan, they carry much white ſilke, golde, muſke, and porcelanes: and they bring from thence nothing but ſiluer. They haue a great caracke which goeth thither euery yere, and ſhe bringeth from thence euery yere aboue ſixe hundred thouſand cruſadoes: and all this ſiluer of Iapan, and two hundred thouſand cruſadoes more in ſiluer which they bring yeerely out of India, they imploy to their great aduantage in China: and they bring from thence golde, muſke, ſilke, copper, porcelanes, and many other things very coſtly and gilded. When the Portugals come to Canton in China to traffike, they muſt remaine there but certaine dayes: and when they come in at the gate of the city, they muſt enter their names in a booke, and when they goe out at night they muſt put out their names. They may not lie in the towne all night, but muſt lie in their boats without the towne. And their dayes being expired, if any man remaine there, they are euill vſed and impriſoned. The Chinians are very ſuſpicious, and doe not truſt ſtrangers. It is thought that the king doth not know that any ſtrangers come into his countrey. And further it is credibly reported that the common people ſee their king very ſeldome or not at all, nor may not looke vp to that place where he ſitteth. And when he rideth abroad he is caried vpon a great chaire or ſerrion gilded very faire, wherein there is made a little houſe with a latiſe to looke out at: ſo that he may ſee them, but they may not looke vp at him: and all the time that he paſſeth by them, they heaue vp their hands to their heads, & lay their heads on the ground, and looke not vp vntill he be paſſed. The order of China is when they mourne, that they weare white thread ſhoes, and hats of ſtraw. The man doth mourne for his wife two yeeres, the wife for her huſband three yeeres: the ſonne for his father a yeere, and for his mother two yeres. And all the time which they mourne they keepe the dead in the houſe, the bowels being taken out and filled with chownam or lime, and coffined: and when the time is expired they carry them out playing and piping, and burne them. And when they returne they pull off their mourning weeds, and marry at their pleaſure. A man may keepe as many concubines as he will, but one wife onely. All the Chineans, Iaponians, and Cauchin Chineans do write right downwards, and they do write with a fine penſill made of dogs or cats haire.

Laban is an Iland among the Iauas from whence come the diamants of the New water. And they finde them in the riuers: for the king will not ſuffer them to digge the rocke.

Laban.
Diamants.

Iamba is an Iland among the Iauas alſo, from whence come diamants. And the king hath a maſſe of earth which is golde; it groweth in the middle of a riuer: and when the king doth lacke gold, they cut part of the earth and melt it, whereof commeth golde. This maſſe of earth doth appeare but once in a yere; which is when the water is low: and this is in the moneth of April.

Iamba.

Golde.

Bima is another Iland among the Iauas, where the women trauell and labour as our men do in England, and the men keepe houſe and go where they will.

Bima.

The 29 of March 1588, I returned from Malacca to Martauan, and ſo to Pegu, where I remained the ſecond time vntill the 17 of September, and then I went to Coſmin, and there tooke ſhipping; and paſſing many dangers by reaſon of contrary windes, it pleaſed God that we arriued in Bengala in Nouember following: where I ſtayed for want of paſſage vntill the third of February 1589, and then I ſhipped my ſelfe for Cochin. In which voyage we endured great extremity for lacke of freſh water: for the weather was extreme hote, and we were many marchants and paſſengers, and we had very many calmes, and hote weather. Yet it pleaſed God that we arriued in Ceylon the ſixth of March, where we ſtayed fiue dayes to water, and to furniſh our ſelues with other neceſſary prouiſion. This Ceylon is a braue Iland, very fruitfull & faire; but by reaſon of continuall warres with the king thereof, all things are very deare: for he will not ſuffer any thing to be brought to the caſtle where the Portugals be: wherefore often times they haue great want of victuals. Their prouiſion of victuals commeth out of Bengala euery yere. The king is called Raia, and is of great force; for he commeth to Columbo, which is the place where the Portugals haue their fort, with an hundred thouſand men, and many elephants. But they be naked people all of them; yet many of them be good with their pieces which be muskets. When the king talketh with any man, he ſtandeth vpon one legge, and ſetteth the other foot vpon his knee with his ſword in his hand: it is not their order for the king to ſit but to ſtand. His apparell is a fine painted cloth made of cotton wooll about his middle: his haire is long and bound vp with a little fine cloth about his head: all the reſt of his body is naked. His guard are a thouſand men, which ſtand round about him, and he in the middle; and when he marcheth, many of them goe before him, and the reſt come after him. They are of the race of the Chingalayes, which they ſay are the beſt kinde of all the Malabars. Their eares are very large; for the greater they are, the more honourable they are accounted. Some of them are a ſpanne long. The wood which they burne is Cinamom wood, and it ſmelleth very ſweet. There is great ſtore of rubies, ſaphires, and ſpinelles in this Iland: the beſt kinde of all be here; but the king will not ſuffer the inhabitants to digge for them, leſt his enemies ſhould know of them, and make warres againſt him, and ſo driue him out of his countrey for them. They haue no horſes in all the countrey. The elephants be not ſo great as thoſe of Pegu, which be monſtrous huge: but they ſay all other elephants do feare them, and none dare fight with them, though they be very ſmall. Their women haue a cloth bound about them from their middle to their knee: and all the reſt is bare. All of them be blacke and but little, both men and women. Their houſes are very little, made of the branches of the palmer or coco-tree, and couered with the leaues of the ſame tree.

Blacke people.

Cape de Comori.

The eleuenth of March we ſailed from Ceylon, and ſo doubled the cape of Comori. Not far from thence, betweene Ceylon and the maine land of Negapatan, they fiſh for pearles. And there is fiſhed euery yere very much; which doth ſerue all India, Cambaia, and Bengala, it is not ſo orient as the pearle of Baharim in the gulfe of Perſia. From cape de Comori we paſſed by Coulam, which is a fort of the Portugals: from whence commeth great ſtore of pepper, which commeth for Portugall: for oftentimes there ladeth one of the caracks of Portugall. Thus paſſing the coaſt we arriued in Cochin the 22 of March, where we found the weather warme, but ſcarſity of victuals: for here groweth neither corne nor rice: and the greateſt part commeth from Bengala. They haue here very bad water, for the riuer is farre off. This bad water cauſeth many of the people to be like lepers, and many of them haue their legs ſwollen as bigge as a man in the waſte, & many of them are ſcant able to go. Theſe people here be Malabars, and of the race of the Naires of Calicut: and they differ much from the other Malabars. Theſe haue their heads very full of haire, and bound vp with a ſtring: and there doth appeare a buſh without the band wherewith it is bound. The men be tall and ſtrong, and good archers with a long bow and a long arrow, which is their beſt weapon: yet there be ſome caliuers among them, but they handle them badly.

How pepper groweth.

Heere groweth the pepper; and it ſpringeth vp by a tree or a pole, and is like our iuy berry, but ſomething longer like the wheat eare: and at the firſt the bunches are greene, and as they ware ripe they cut them off and dry them. The leafe is much leſſer then the iuy leafe and thinner. All the inhabitants here haue very little houſes couered with the leaues of the coco-trees. The men be of a reaſonable ſtature; the women litle; all blacke, with a cloth bound about their middle hanging downe to their hammes: all the reſt of their bodies be naked: they haue horrible great eares with many rings ſet with pearles and ſtones in them. The king goeth incached, as they do all; he doth not remaine in a place aboue fiue or ſixe dayes: he hath many houſes, but they be but litle: his guard is but ſmall: he remooueth from one houſe to another according to their order. All the pepper of Calicut and courſe cinamom groweth here in this countrey. The beſt cinamom doth come from Ceylon, and is pilled from fine yoong trees. Here are very many palmer or coco trees, which is their chiefe food: for it is their meat and drinke: and yeeldeth many other neceſſary things, as I haue declared before.

Blacke people.

‖ Or Calicut, or Cananor.

The Naires which be vnder the king of ‖ Samorin, which be Malabars, haue alwayes wars with the Portugals. The king hath alwayes peace with them; but his people goe to the ſea to robbe & ſteale. Their chiefe captaine is called Cogi Alli; he hath three caſtles vnder him. When the Portugals complaine to the king, he ſayth he doth not ſend them out: but he conſenteth that they go. They range all the coaſt from Ceylon to Goa, and go by foure or fiue parowes or boats together; and haue in euery one of them fifty or threeſcore men, and boord preſently. They do much harme on that coaſt, and take euery yere many foiſts and boats of the Portugals. Many of theſe people be Moores. This kings countrey beginneth twelue leagues from Cochin, and reacheth neere vnto Goa. I remained in Cochin vntill the ſecond of Nouember, which was eight moneths; for that there was no paſſage that went away in all that time: if I had come two dayes ſooner I had found a paſſage preſently. From Cochin I went to Goa, where I remained three dayes. From Cochin to Goa is an hundred leagues. From Goa I went to Chaul, which is threeſcore leagues, where I remained three and twenty dayes: and there making my prouiſion of things neceſſary for the ſhippe, from thence I departed to Ormus; where I ſtayed for a paſſage to Balſara fifty dayes. From Goa to Ormus is foure hundred leagues.

Ormus,

Here I thought good, before I make an end of this my booke, to declare ſome things which India and the countrey farther Eaſtward do bring forth.

The pepper groweth in many parts of India, eſpecially about Cochin: and much of it doeth grow in the fields among the buſhes without any labour: and when it is ripe they go and gather it. The ſhrubbe is like vnto our ivy tree: and if it did not run about ſome tree or pole, it would fall downe and rot. When they firſt gather it, it is greene; and then they lay it in the Sun, and it becommeth blacke.

The pepper tree.

The ginger groweth like vnto our garlike, and the root is the ginger: it is to be found in many parts of India.

Ginger.

The cloues doe come from the Iſles of the Moluccoes, which be diuers Ilands: their tree is like to our bay tree.

Cloues.

The nutmegs and maces grow together, and come from the Iſle of Banda: the tree is like to our walnut tree, but ſomewhat leſſer.

Nutmegs & maces.

The white ſandol is wood very ſweet & in great requeſt among the Indians; for they grinde it with a litle water, and anoynt their bodies therewith: it commeth from the Iſle of Timor.

Camphora is a precious thing among the Indians, and is ſolde dearer then golde. I thinke none of it commeth for Chriſtendome. That which is compounded commeth from China: but that which groweth in canes and is the beſt, commeth from the great Iſle of Borneo.

Camphora.

Lignum Aloes commeth from Cauchinchina.

Lignum Aloes.

The beniamin commeth out of the countreys of Siam and Iangomes.

The long pepper groweth in Bengala, in Pegu, and in the Ilands of the Iauas.

Long pepper.

The muſke commeth out of Tartarie, and is made after this order, by report of the marchants which bring it to Pegu to ſell; In Tartarie there is a little beaſt like vnto a yong roe, which they take in ſnares, and beat him to death with the blood: after that they cut out the bones, and beat the fleſh with the blood very ſmall, and fill the ſkin with it: and hereof commeth the muſke.

Muſke.

Of the amber they holde diuers opinions; but moſt men ſay it commeth out of the ſea, and that they finde it vpon the ſhores ſide.

Amber.

The rubies, ſaphires, and ſpinelles are found in Pegu.

Rubies, ſaphires and ſpinels.

The diamants are found in diuers places, as in Biſnagar, in Agra, in Delli, and in the Ilands of the Iauas.

Diamants.

The beſt pearles come from the Iland of Baharim in the Perſian ſea, the worſer from the Piſcaria neere the Iſle of Ceylon, and from Aynam a great Iland on the Southermoſt coaſt of China.

Spodium and many other kindes of drugs come from Cambaia.

Spodium.

Now to returne to my voyage; from Ormus I went to Balſara or Baſora, and from Baſora to Babylon: and we paſſed the moſt part of the way by the ſtrength of men by halling the boat vp the riuer with a long cord. From Babylon I came by land to Moſul, which ſtandeth nere to Niniue, which is all ruinated and deſtroyed; it ſtandeth faſt by the riuer of Tigris. From Moſul I went to Merdin, which is in the countrey of the Armenians; but now there dwell in that place a people which they call Cordies, or Curdi. From Merdin I went to Orfa, which is a very faire towne, and it hath a goodly fountaine ful of fiſh; where the Moores hold many great ceremonies and opinions concerning Abraham: for they ſay he did once dwell there. From thence I went to Bir, & ſo paſſed the riuer of Euphrates. From Bir I went to Aleppo, where I ſtayed certaine moneths for company; and then I went to Tripolis; where finding Engliſh ſhipping, I came with a proſperous voyage to London, where by Gods aſſiſtance I ſafely arriued the 29 of April 1591, hauing bene eight yeeres out of my natiue countrey.

The report of Iohn Huighen van Linſchoten concerning M. Newberies and M. Fitches impriſonment, and of their eſcape, which happened while he was in Goa.

IN the moneth of December, Anno 1583, there arriued in the towne and Iland of Ormus foure Engliſh men, which came from Aleppo in the countrey of Syria, hauing ſailed out of England, & paſſed thorow the ſtraights of Gibraltar to Tripoli a towne and hauen lying on the coaſt of Syria, where all the ſhips diſcharge their wares & marchandiſes, & from thence are caried by land vnto Aleppo, which is nine dayes iourny. In Aleppo there are reſident diuers marchants & factours of all nations, as Italians, French men, Engliſh men, Armenians, Turks and Moores, euery man hauing his religion apart, paying tribute vnto the great Turke. In that towne there is great traffique, for that from thence euery yeere twiſe, there trauell two Caffyls, that is, companies of people and camels, which trauell vnto India, Perſia, Arabia, and all the countreys bordering on the ſame, and deale in all ſorts of marchandiſe, both to and from thoſe countreys, as I in another place haue already declared. Three of the ſayd Engliſh men aforeſayd, were ſent by the company of Engliſh men that are reſident in Aleppo, to ſee if in Ormus they might keepe any factours, and ſo traffique in that place, like as alſo the Italians do, that is to ſay, the Venetians which in Ormus, Goa, and Malacca haue their factours, and traffique there, aſwell for ſtones and pearles, as for other wares and ſpices of thoſe countreyes, which from thence are caried ouer land into Venice. One of theſe Engliſh men had bene once before in the ſayd towne of Ormus, and there had taken good information of the trade, and vpon his aduiſe and aduertiſement, the other were as then come thither with him, bringing great ſtore of marchandiſes with them, as Clothes, Saffron, all kindes of drinking glaſſes, and Haberdaſhers wares, as looking glaſſes, kniues, and ſuch like ſtuffe: and to conclude, brought with them all kinde of ſmall wares that may be deuiſed. And although thoſe wares amounted vnto great ſummes of money, notwithſtanding it was but onely a ſhadow or colour, thereby to giue no occaſion to be miſtruſted, or ſeene into: for that their principall intent was to buy great quantities of precious ſtones, as Diamants, Pearles, Rubies, &c. to the which end they brought with them a great ſumme of money and golde, and that very ſecretly, not to be deceiued or robbed thereof, or to runne into any danger for the ſame. They being thus arriued in Ormus, hired a ſhoppe, and beganne to ſell their wares: which the Italians perceiuing, whoſe factours continue there (as I ſayd before) and fearing that thoſe Engliſh men finding good vent for their commodities in that place, would be reſident therein, and ſo dayly increaſe, which would be no ſmall loſſe and hinderance vnto them, did preſently inuent all the ſubtile meanes they could to hinder them: and to that end they went vnto the Captaine of Ormus, as then called Don Gonſalo de Meneſes, telling him that there were certaine Engliſh men come into Ormus, that were ſent onely to ſpie the countrey; and ſayd further, that they were heretikes: and therefore they ſayd it was conuenient they ſhould not be ſuffered ſo to depart, without being examined, and puniſhed as enemies, to the example of others. The Captaine being a friend vnto the Engliſh men, by reaſon that one of them which had bene there before, had giuen him certaine preſents, would not be perſwaded to trouble them, but ſhipped them with all their wares in a ſhippe that was to ſaile for Goa, and ſent them to the Viceroy, that he might examine and trie them, as he thought good: where when they were arriued, they were caſt into priſon, and firſt examined whether they were good Chriſtians or no: and becauſe they could ſpeake but badde Portugall, onely two of them ſpake good Dutch, as hauing bene certaine yeres in the Low countreyes, and there traffiked, there was a Dutch Ieſuite born in the towne of Bruges in Flanders, that had bene reſident in the Indies for the ſpace of thirty yers, ſent vnto them, to vndermine and examine them: wherein they behaued themſelues ſo well, that they were holden and eſteemed for good and Catholicke Chriſtians: yet ſtill ſuſpected, becauſe they were ſtrangers, and ſpecially Engliſh men. The Ieſuites ſtill tolde them that they ſhould be ſent priſoners into Portugall, wiſhing them to leaue off their trade of marchandiſe, and to become Ieſuites, promiſing them thereby to defend them from all trouble. The cauſe why they ſayd ſo, and perſwaded them in that earneſt maner, was, for that the Dutch Ieſuite had ſecretly bene aduertiſed of great ſummes of money which they had about them, and ſought to get the ſame into their fingers, for that the firſt vowe and promiſe they make at their entrance into their Order, is, to procure the welfare of their ſayd Order, by what meanes ſoeuer it be. But although the Engliſh men denied them, and refuſed the Order, ſaying, that they were vnfit for ſuch places, neuertheleſſe they proceeded ſo farre, that one of them, being a Painter (that came with the other three for company, to ſee the countreys, and to ſeeke his fortune, and was not ſent thither by the Engliſh marchants) partly for feare, and partly for want of meanes to relieue himſelfe, promiſed them to become a Ieſuite: and although they knew and well perceiued he was not any of thoſe that had the treaſure, yet becauſe he was a Painter, whereof there are but few in India, and that they had great need of him to paint their Church, which otherwiſe would coſt them great charges, to bring one from Portugall, they were very glad thereof, hoping in time to get the reſt of them with all their money into their felloſhip: ſo that to conclude, they made this Painter a Ieſuite, where he continued certaine dayes, giuing him good ſtore of worke to doe, and entertaining him with all the fauour and friendſhip they could deuiſe, and all to winne the reſt, to be a pray for them: but the other three continued ſtill in priſon, being in great feare, becauſe they vnderſtood no man that came to them, nor any man almoſt knew what they ſayd: till in the end it was tolde them that certaine Dutch men dwelt in the Archbiſhops houſe, and counſell giuen them to ſend vnto them, whereat they much reioyced, and ſent to me and an other Dutch man, deſiring vs once to come and ſpeake with them, which we preſently did, and they with teares in their eyes made complaint vnto vs of their hard vſage, ſhewing vs from point to point (as it is ſayd before) why they were come into the countrey, withall deſiring vs for Gods cauſe, if we might by any meanes, to helpe them, that they might be ſet at libertie vpon ſureties, being ready to endure what iuſtice ſhould ordaine for them, ſaying, that if it were found contrary, and that they were other then trauelling marchants, and ſought to finde out further benefit by their wares, they would be content to be puniſhed. With that we departed from them, promiſing them to do our beſt: and in the end we obtained ſo much of the Archbiſhop, that he went vnto the Viceroy to deliuer our petition, and perſwaded him ſo well, that he was content to ſet them at libertie, and that their goods ſhould be deliuered vnto them againe, vpon condition they ſhould put in ſureties for two thouſand pardawes, not to depart the countrey before other order ſhould be taken with them. Thereupon they preſently found a Citizen of the towne that was their ſurety for two thouſand pardawes, to whom they payed in hand one thouſand and three hundred pardawes, and becauſe they ſayd they had no more ready money, he gaue them credit, ſeeing what ſtore of marchandiſe they had, whereby at all times if need were, he might be ſatiſfied: and by that meanes they were deliuered out of priſon, and hired themſelues an houſe, and beganne to ſet open ſhoppe: ſo that they vttered much ware, and were preſently well knowen among all the marchants, becauſe they alwayes reſpected gentlemen, ſpecially ſuch as bought their wares, ſhewing great courteſie and honour vnto them, whereby they woon much credit, and were beloued of all men, ſo that euery man fauoured them, and was willing to doe them pleaſure. To vs they ſhewed great friendſhip, for whoſe ſake the Archbiſhop fauoured them much, and ſhewed them very good countenance, which they knew well how to increaſe, by offering him many preſents, although he would not receiue them, neither would euer take gift or preſent at any mans hands. Likewiſe they behaued themſelues ſo diſcreetly that no man caried an euill eye, no, nor an euill thought towards them. Which liked not the Ieſuites, becauſe it hindered them from that they hoped for, ſo that they ceaſed not ſtill by this Dutch Ieſuite to put them in feare, that they ſhould be ſent into Portugall to the King, counſelling them to yeeld themſelues Ieſuites into their Cloiſter, which if they did, he ſayd they would defend them from all troubles, ſaying further, that he counſelled them therin as a friend, & one that knew for certaine that it was ſo determined by the Viceroyes Priuy councell: which to effect he ſayd they ſtayed but for ſhipping that ſhould ſaile for Portugall, with diuers other perſwaſions, to put them in ſome feare, and ſo to effect their purpoſe. The Engliſh men to the contrary, durſt not ſay any thing to them, but anſwered, that as yet they would ſtay a while, and conſider thereof, thereby putting the Ieſuites in comfort, as one among them, being the principall of them (called Iohn Newbery) complained vnto me often times, ſaying that he knew not what to ſay or thinke therein, or which way he might be ridde of thoſe troubles: but in the end they determined with themſelues to depart from thence; and ſecretly by meanes of other friendes they imployed their money in precious ſtones; which the better to effect, one of them was a Ieweller, and for the ſame purpoſe came with them. Which being concluded among them, they durſt not make knowen to any man, neither did they credite vs ſo much, as to ſhew vs their mindes therein, although they tolde vs all whatſoeuer they knew. But on a Whitſunday they went abroad to ſport themſelues about three miles from Goa, in the mouth of the riuer in a countrey called Bardes, hauing with them good ſtore of meate and drinke. And becauſe they ſhould not be ſuſpected, they left their houſe and ſhoppe, with ſome wares therein vnſolde, in cuſtody of a Dutch boy, by vs prouided for them, that looked vnto it. This boy was in the houſe not knowing their intent, and being in Bardes, they had with them a Patamar, which is one of the Indian poſtes, which in the Winter times carieth letters from one place to the other, whom they had hired to guide them: and becauſe that betweene Bardes and the firme land there is but a little riuer, in a maner halfe drie, they paſſed ouer it on foot, and ſo trauelled by land, being neuer heard of againe: but it is thought they arriued in Aleppo, as ſome ſay, but they know not certainely. Their greateſt hope was that Iohn Newbery could ſpeake the Arabian tongue, which is vſed in all thoſe countreys, or at the leaſt vnderſtood; for it is very common in all places there abouts, as French with vs. Newes being come to Goa, there was a great ſtirre and murmuring among the people, and we much wondered at it: for many were of opinion, that we had giuen them counſell ſo to do; and preſently their ſurety ſeiſed vpon the goods remaining, which might amount vnto aboue two hundred pardawes; and with that and the money he had receiued of the Engliſh men, he went vnto the Viceroy, and deliuered it vnto him: which the Viceroy hauing receiued, forgaue him the reſt. This flight of the Engliſh men grieued the Ieſuites moſt, becauſe they had loſt ſuch a praye, which they made ſure account of: whereupon the Dutch Ieſuite came to vs to aske vs if we knew thereof, ſaying, that if he had ſuſpected ſo much, he would haue dealt otherwiſe, for that he ſayd, he once had in his hands of theirs a bagge wherein was forty thouſand veneſeanders (ech veneſeander being two pardawes) which was when they were in priſon. And that they had alwayes put him in comfort to accompliſh his deſire: vpon the which promiſe he gaue them their money againe, which otherwiſe they ſhould not ſo lightly haue come by, or peraduenture neuer, as he openly ſayd: and in the end he called them hereticks, and ſpies, with a thouſand other railing ſpeeches, which he vttered againſt them. The Engliſh man that was become a Ieſuite, hearing that his companions were gone, and perceiuing that the Ieſuites ſhewed him not ſo great fauour, neither vſed him ſo well as they did at the firſt, repented himſelfe; and ſeeing he had not as then made any ſolemne promiſe, and being counſelled to leaue the houſe, and tolde that he could not want a liuing in the towne, as alſo that the Ieſuites could not keepe him there without he were willing to ſtay, ſo they could not accuſe him of any thing, he tolde them flatly that he had no deſire to ſtay within the Cloiſter. And although they vſed all the meanes they could to keepe him there, yet he would not ſtay, but hired an houſe without the Cloiſter, and opened ſhoppe, where he had good ſtore of worke: and in the end married a Meſtizos daughter of the towne, ſo that he made his account to ſtay there while he liued. By this Engliſh man I was inſtructed of all the wayes, trades, and voyages of the countrey, betweene Aleppo and Ormus, and of all the ordinances and common cuſtomes which they vſually holde during their voyage ouer the land, as alſo of the places and townes where they paſſed. And ſince thoſe Engliſh mens departures from Goa, there neuer arriued any ſtrangers, either Engliſh or others, by land, in the ſayd countreys, but onely Italians which dayly traffique ouer land, and vſe continuall trade going and comming that way.

The voyage of M. Iohn Eldred to Trypolis in Syria by ſea, and from thence by land and riuer to Babylon and Balſara. 1583.

I Departed out of London in the ſhip called the Tiger, in the company of M. Iohn Newbery, M. Ralph Fitch, and ſixe or ſeuen other honeſt marchants vpon Shroue munday 1583, and arriued in Tripolis of Syria the firſt day of May next inſuing: at our landing we went on Maying vpon S. Georges Iland, a place where Chriſtians dying aboord the ſhips, are woont to be buried. In this city our Engliſh marchants haue a Conſull, and our nation abide together in one houſe with him, called Fondeghi Ingles, builded of ſtone, ſquare, in maner like a Cloiſter, & euery man hath his ſeuerall chamber, as it is the vſe of all other Chriſtians of ſeuerall nations. This towne ſtandeth vnder a part of the mountaine of Libanus two Engliſh miles diſtant from the port: on the ſide of which port, trending in forme of an halfe Moone, ſtand fiue blockehouſes or ſmall forts, wherein is ſome very good artillery, and the forts are kept with about an hundred Ianiſaries. Right before this towne from the ſeaward is a banke of mouing ſand, which gathereth and increaſeth with the Weſterne winds, in ſuch ſort, that, according to an olde propheſie among them, this banke is like to ſwallow vp & ouerwhelme the towne: for euery yere it increaſeth and eateth vp many gardens, although they vſe all policy to diminiſh the ſame, and to make it firme ground. The city is about the bigneſſe of Biſtow, and walled about, though the walles be of no great force. The chiefe ſtrength of the place is in a Citadell, which ſtandeth on the South ſide within the walles, and ouerlooketh the whole towne, and is ſtrongly kept with two hundred Ianiſaries and good artillery. A riuer paſſeth thorow the midſt of the city, wherewith they water their gardens and mulberry trees, on which there grow abundance of ſilke wormes, wherewith they make great quantity of very white ſilke, which is the chiefeſt naturall commodity to be found in and about this place. This rode is more frequented with Chriſtian marchants, to wit, Venetians, Genouois, Florentines, Marſilians, Sicilians, Raguſes, and lately with Engliſh men, then any other port of the Turks dominions. From Tripolis I departed the 14 of May with a carauan, paſſing three dayes ouer the ridge of mount Libanus, at the end whereof we arriued in a city called Hammah, which ſtandeth on a goodly plaine repleniſhed with corne & cotton wooll. On theſe mountaines which we paſſed grow great quantity of gall trees, which are ſomewhat like our okes, but leſſer and more crooked: on the beſt tree a man ſhall not finde aboue a pound of galles. This towne of Hammah is fallen and falleth more and more to decay, and at this day there is ſcarſe one halfe of the wall ſtanding, which hath bene very ſtrong and faire: but becauſe it coſt many mens liues to win it, the Turke will not haue it repaired; and hath written in the Arabian tongue ouer the caſtle gate, which ſtandeth in the midſt of the towne, theſe words: Curſed be the father and the ſonne that ſhall lay their hands to the repairing hereof. Refreſhing our ſelues one day here, we paſſed forward with camels three dayes more vntill we came to Aleppo, where we arriued the 21 of May. This is the greateſt place of traffique for a dry towne that is in all thoſe parts: for hither reſort Iewes, Tartarians, Perſians, Armenians, Armenians, Egyptians, Indians, and many ſorts of Chriſtians, and inioy freedome of their conſciences, and bring thither many kinds of rich marchandiſes. In the middeſt of this towne alſo ſtandeth a goodly caſtle raiſed on high, with a gariſon of foure or fiue hundred Ianiſaries. Within foure miles round about are goodly gardens and vineyards and trees, which beare goodly fruit neere vnto the riuers ſide, which is but ſmall; the walles are about three Engliſh miles in compaſſe, but the ſuburbs are almoſt as much more. The towne is greatly peopled. We departed from thence with our camels the laſt of May with M. Iohn Newbery and his company, and came to Birrah in three dayes, being a ſmall towne ſituated vpon the riuer Euphrates, where it beginneth firſt to take his name, being here gathered into one chanell, whereas before it commeth downe in manifolde branches, and therefore is called by the people of the countrey by a name which ſignifieth a thouſand heads. Here is plenty of victuals, whereof we all furniſhed our ſelues for a long iourney downe the aforeſayd riuer. And according to the maner of thoſe that trauell downe by water, we prepared a ſmall barke for the conueyance of our ſelues and of our goods. Theſe boats are flat bottomed, becauſe the riuer is ſhallow in many places: and when men trauell in the moneth of Iuly, Auguſt, and September, the water being then at the loweſt, they are conſtrained to cary with them a ſpare boat or two to lighten their owne boats, if they chance to fall on the ſholds. We were eight and twenty dayes vpon the water betweene Birrah and Felugia, where we diſimbarked our ſelues and our goods. Euery night after the Sunne ſetteth, we tie our barke to a ſtake, go on land to gather ſticks, and ſet on our pot with rice or bruſed wheat, and hauing ſupped, the marchants lie aboord the barke, and the mariners vpon the ſhores ſide as nere as they can vnto the ſame. In many places vpon the riuers ſide we met with troops of Arabians, of whom we bought milke, butter, egges, and lambs, and gaue them in barter, (for they care not for money) glaſſes, combes, corall, amber, to hang about their armes and necks, and for churned milke we gaue them bread and pomgranat peeles, wherewith they vſe to tanne their goats ſkinnes which they churne withall. Their haire, apparell, and colour are altogether like to thoſe vagabond Egyptians, which heretofore haue gone about in England. Their women all without exception weare a great round ring in one of their noſtrels, of golde, ſiluer, or yron, according to their ability, and about their armes and ſmalles of their legs they haue hoops of golde, ſiluer or yron. All of them aſwel women and children as men, are very great ſwimmers, and often times ſwimming they brought vs milke to our barke in veſſels vpon their heads. Theſe people are very theeuiſh, which I proued to my coſt: for they ſtole a caſket of mine, with things of good value in the ſame, from vnder my mans head as he was aſleepe: and therefore trauellers keepe good watch as they paſſe downe the riuer. Euphrates at Birrah is about the breadth of the Thames at Lambeth, and in ſome places narrower, in ſome broader: it runneth very ſwiftly, almoſt as faſt as the riuer of Trent: it hath diuers ſorts of fiſh in it, but all are ſcaled, ſome as bigge as ſalmons, like barbils. We landed at Felugia the eight and twentieth of Iune, where we made our abode ſeuen dayes, for lacke of camels to cary our goods to Babylon: the heat at that time of the yere is ſuch in thoſe parts, that men are loth to let out their camels to trauell. This Felugia is a village of ſome hundred houſes, and a place appointed for diſcharging of ſuch goods as come downe the riuer: the inhabitants are Arabians. Not finding camels here, we were conſtrained to vnlade our goods, and hired an hundred aſſes to cary our Engliſh marchandiſes onely to New Babylon ouer a ſhort deſert, in croſſing whereof we ſpent eighteene houres trauelling by night, and part of the morning, to auoid the great heat.

In this place which we croſſed ouer, ſtood the olde mighty city of Babylon, many olde ruines whereof are eaſily to be ſeene by day-light, which I Iohn Eldred haue often beheld at my good leaſure, hauing made three voyages betweene the new city of Babylon and Aleppo ouer this deſert. Here alſo are yet ſtanding the ruines of the olde tower of Babel, which being vpon a plaine ground ſeemeth a farre off very great, but the nerer you come to it, the leſſer and leſſer it appeareth: ſundry times I haue gone thither to ſee it, and found the remnants yet ſtanding aboue a quarter of a mile in compaſſe, and almoſt as high as the ſtone-worke of Pauls ſteeple in London, but it ſheweth much bigger. The bricks remaining in this moſt ancient monument be halfe a yard thicke, and three quarters of a yard long, being dried in the Sunne onely, and betweene euery courſe of bricks there lieth a courſe of mattes made of canes, which remaine ſound and not periſhed, as though they had beene layed within one yeere. The city of New Babylon ioyneth vpon the aforſayd ſmall deſert where the Olde city was, and the riuer of Tigris runneth cloſe vnder the wall, and they may if they will open a ſluce, and let the water of the ſame runne round about the towne. It is aboue two Engliſh miles in compaſſe, and the inhabitants generally ſpeake three languages, to wit, the Perſian, Arabian and Turkiſh tongues: the people are of the Spaniards complexion: and the women generally weare in one of the griſtles of their noſes a ring like a

A Carauan of foure thouſand Camels.

This is a place of very great traffique, and a very great thorowfare from the East Indies to Aleppo. The towne is very well furniſhed with victuals which come downe the riuer of Tigris from Moſul which was called Niniue in olde time. They bring theſe victuals and diuers ſorts of marchandiſes vpon rafts borne vpon goats ſkins blowen vp ful of wind in maner of bladders. And when they haue diſcharged their goods, they ſel the rafts for fire, and let the wind out of their goats ſkins, and cary them home againe vpon their aſſes by land, to make other voyages downe the riuer. The building here is moſt of bricke dried in the Sun, and very litle or no ſtone is to be found: their houſes are all flat-roofed and low. They haue no raine for eight moneths together, nor almoſt any clouds in the ſkie, night nor day. Their Winter is in Nouember, December, Ianuary and February, which is as warme as our Summer in England in a maner. This I know by good experience, becauſe my abode at ſeuerall times in this city of Babylon hath bene at the leaſt the ſpace of two yeres. As we come to the city, we paſſe ouer the riuer of Tigris on a great bridge made with boats chained together with two mighty chaines of yron. From thence we departed in flat bottomed barks more ſtrong & greater then thoſe of Euphrates, and were eight and twenty dayes alſo in paſſing downe this riuer to Balſara, but we might haue done it in eighteene or leſſe, if the water had bene higher. Vpon the waters ſide ſtand by the way diuers townes reſembling much the names of the olde prophets: the firſt towne they call Ozeah, & another Zecchiah. Before we come to Balſara by one dayes iourney, the two riuers of Tigris and Euphrates meet, and there ſtandeth a caſtle called Curna, kept by the Turks, where all marchants pay a ſmall cuſtome. Here the two riuers ioyned together begin to be eight or nine miles broad: here alſo it beginneth to ebbe and flow, and the water ouerflowing maketh the countrey all about very fertile of corne, rice, pulſe, and dates. The towne of Balſara is a mile and an halfe in circuit: all the buildings, caſtle and wals are made of bricke dried in the Sun. The Turke hath here fiue hundred Ianiſaries, beſides other ſouldiers continually in gariſon and pay, but his chiefe ſtrength is of gallies which are about fiue and twenty or thirty very faire and furniſhed with goodly ordinance. To this port of Balſara come monethly diuers ſhips from Ormuz, laden with all ſorts of Indian marchandiſe, as ſpices, drugs, Indico, and Calecut cloth. Theſe ſhips are vſually from forty to threeſcore tunnes, hauing their planks ſowed together with corde made of the barke of Date trees, and in ſtead of Occam they vſe the ſhiuerings of the barke of the ſayd trees, and of the ſame they alſo make their tackling. They haue no kinde of yron worke belonging to theſe veſſels, ſaue only their ankers. From this place ſix dayes ſayling downe the gulfe, they go to a place called Baharem in the mid way to Ormus; there they fiſh for pearles foure moneths in the yere, to wit, in Iune, Iuly, Auguſt, and September. My abode in Balſara was iuſt ſixe moneths, during which time I receiued diuers letters from M. Iohn Newbery from Ormus, who as he paſſed that way with her Maieſties letters to Zelabdim Echebar king of Cambaia, & vnto the mighty emperour of China, was traiterouſly there arreſted, and all his company, by the Portugals, and afterward ſent priſoner to Goa: where after a long and cruell impriſonment he and his companions were deliuered vpon ſureties, not to depart the towne without leaue, at the ſute of one father Thomas Steuens an Engliſh religious man, which they found there: but ſhortly after three of them eſcaped, whereof one, to wit, M. Ralph Fitch, is ſince come into England. The fourth, which was a painter called Iohn Story, became religious in the college of S. Paul in Goa, as we vnderſtood by their letters. I and my companion William Shales hauing diſpatched our buſineſſe at Balſara, imbarked our ſelues in company of ſeuenty barks all laden with marchandiſe, hauing euery barke 14 men to draw them, like our Weſterne bargemen on the Thames, and we were forty foure dayes comming vp againſt the ſtreame to Babylon, where arriuing and paying our cuſtome, we with all other ſorts of marchants bought vs camels, hired vs men to lade and driue them, furniſhed our ſelues with rice, butter, biſket, hony made of dates, onions and dates: and euery marchant bought a proportion of liue muttons, and hired certaine ſhepheards to driue them with vs: we alſo bought vs tents to lie in, and to put our goods vnder: and in this our carauan were foure thouſand camels laden with ſpices and other rich marchandiſes. Theſe camels will liue very well two or three dayes without water: their feeding is on thiſtles, wormewood, magdalene, and other ſtrong weeds which they finde vpon the way. The gouernment and deciding of all quarels and duties to be payed, the whole carauan committeth to one ſpeciall rich marchant of the company, of whoſe honeſty they conceiue beſt. In paſſing from Babylon to Aleppo, we ſpent forty dayes, trauelling twenty, or foure and twenty miles a day, reſting our ſelues cōmonly from two of the clocke in the afternoone, vntill three in the morning, at which time we begin to take our iourney. Eight dayes iourney from Babylon toward Aleppo, neere vnto a towne called Heit, as we croſſe the riuer Euphrates by boates, about 3. miles from the town there is a valley wherein are many ſprings throwing out abundantly at great mouths, a kind of blacke ſubſtance like vnto tarre, which ſerueth all the countrey to make ſtanch their barkes and boates: euery one of theſe ſprings maketh a noiſe like vnto a Smiths forge in the blowing & puffing out of this matter, which neuer ceaſeth night nor day, and the noiſe may be heard a mile off continually. This vale ſwalloweth vp all heauie things that come vpon it. The people of the countrey cal it in their language Babil gehenham, that is to ſay, Hell doore. As we paſſed through theſe deſerts, we ſaw certaine wild beaſts, as wild aſſes all white, Roebucks, wolues, leopards, foxes, and many hares, whereof we chaſed and killed many. Aboriſe the king of the wandring Arabians in theſe deſerts, hath a dutie of 40. s. ſterling, vpon euery Camels lode, which he ſendeth his officers to receiue of the Carauans, and in conſideration hereof, he taketh vpon him to conduct the ſayd Carauans if they need his helpe, and to defend them againſt certaine prowling thieues. I and my companion William Shales came to Aleppo with the Carauan the eleuenth of Iune, 1584. where we were ioyfully receiued 20. miles diſtant from the towne by M. William Barret our Conſull, accompanied with his people and Ianiſſaries, who fell ſicke immediatly and departed this life within 8. dayes after, and elected before his death M. Anthonie Bate Conſul of our Engliſh nation in his place, who laudably ſupplied the ſame roome 3. yeeres. In which meane time, I made two voyages more into Babylon, and returned by the way aforeſayd, ouer the deſerts of Arabia. And afterwards, as one deſirous to ſee other parts of the countrey, I went from Aleppo to Antioch, which is thence 60. Engliſh miles, and from thence went downe to Tripolis, where going aboord a ſmall veſſell, I arriued at Ioppe, and trauelled to Rama, Lycia, Gaza, Ieruſalem, Bethleem, to the riuer of Iordan, and the ſea or lake of Zodome, and returned backe to Ioppe, & from thence by ſea to Tripolis, of which places becauſe many others haue publiſhed large diſcourſes, I ſurceaſe to write. Within few dayes after imbarking my ſelfe at Tripolis the 22. of December, I arriued (God be thanked) in ſafety here in the riuer of Thames with diuers Engliſh marchants, the 26. of March, 1588. in the Hercules of London, which was the richeſt ſhip of Engliſh marchants goods that euer was knowen to come into this realme.

BABYLON:

The weight, meaſure, and money currant there, and the cuſtomes of merchandize.

A Mana of Babylon is of Aleppo 1 roue 5 ounces and a halfe: and 68 manas and three ſeuenth parts, make a quintall of Aleppo, which is 494 li. 8 ounces of London: and 100 manas is a quintall of Babylon, which maketh in Aleppo 146 roues, and of London 722 li. and ſo much is the ſayd quintall: but the marchants accord is by ſo much the mana, and in the ſayd place they bate the tare in all ſorts of commodities, according to the order of Aleppo touching the tare.

The meaſure of Babylon is greater then that of Aleppo 21 in ẏ 100. For bringing 100 pikes of any meaſurable ware from Aleppo thither, there is found but 82 pikes in Babylon, ſo that the 100 pikes of Babylon is of Aleppo 121 pikes, very litle leſſe.

The currant mony of Babylon are Saies, which Say is 5 medines, as in Aleppo, and 40 medines being 8 Saies make a duckat currant, and 47 medines paſſe in value as the duckat of gold of Venice, and the dollars of the beſt ſort are worth 33 medines. The roials of plate are ſold by the 100 drams at priſe, according as they be in requeſt: but amongſt the marchants they bargaine by the 100 metrals, which are 150 drams of Aleppo, which 150 drams are 135 ſingle roials of plate: but in the mint or caſtle, they take thē by the 100 drams, which is 90 roials of plate, and thoſe of the mint giue 5 medines leſſe in each 100 drams then they are worth to be ſold among the marchants, and make paiment at the terme of 40 dayes in Saies.

The cuſtome in Babylon, as wel inward as outward, is in this maner: Small wares at 6 per 100, Corall and amber at 5 and a halfe per 100, Venice cloth, Engliſh cloth, Kerſies, Mockars, Chamblets, Silks, Veluets, Damasks, Sattins & ſuch like at 5 per 100: & they rate the goods without reaſon as they luſt themſelues. The Coaſo, Boabo, and other exactions 6 medines per bale, all which they pay preſently in ready mony, according to the cuſtome and vſe of the emperor.

To the Ermin of the mint ẏ ordinarie vſe is to giue 30 Saies in curteſie, otherwiſe he would by authoritie of his office come aboord, & for deſpight make ſuch ſearch in the barke, that he would turne all things topſie turuie.

BAL-

BALSARA:

The weight, meaſure, and money in the citie of Balſara.

A Mana of Balſara anſwereth 5 roues 2 ounces & a halfe of Aleppo weight, & 19 manas and one 4 part of Balſara, anſwereth the quintall of Aleppo, which is 494 roues, 8 ounces Engliſh, and 20 manas is the quintall of Balſara, which is 104 Alepine, and of London 514 li. 8 ounces, and ſo much is the ſayd quintall, but the marchants bargaine at ſo much the mana or wolſene (which is all one) and they abate the tare in euery mana, as the ſort of ſpice is, and the order taken therefore in that place.

The meaſure of Balſara is called a pike, which is iuſt as the meaſure of Babylon, to ſay, 100 pikes of Balſara make of Aleppo 121 pikes, vt ſupra in the rate of Babylon.

The currant mony of Balſara is as foloweth. There is a ſort of fluſſes of copper called Eſtiui, whereof 12 make a mamedine, which is the value of one medine Aleppine, the ſaid mamedine is of ſiluer, hauing the Moreſco ſtampe on both ſides, and two of theſe make a danine, which is 2 medines Aleppine.

The ſaid danine is of ſiluer, hauing the Turkeſco ſtampe on both ſides, & 2 and a halfe of theſe make a Saie, which is in value as the Saie of Aleppo.

The ſaid Saie is of the ſimilitude and ſtampe of Aleppo, being (as appeares) 60 eſtiues. Alſo one Say and 20 eſtiues make a larine, which is of Aleppo money 6 medines and a halfe.

The ſayd larine is a ſtrange piece of money, not being round as all other currant money in Chriſtianitie, but is a ſmall rod of ſiluer of the greatneſſe of the pen of a gooſe feather, wherewith we vſe to write, and in length about one eight part thereof, which is wreſted, ſo that the two ends meet at the iuſt halfe part, and in the head thereof is a ſtampe Turkeſco, and theſe be the beſt currant money in all the Indias, and 6 of theſe larines make a duckat, which is 40 medines or eight Saies of Aleppo.

The duckat of gold is worth there 7 larines, and one danine, which is of Aleppo money 48 medines and a halfe.

The Venetian money is worth larines 88 per 100 meticals, which is 150 drams of Aleppo, vt ſupra.

The roials of plate are worth 88 larines by the 100 meticals, & albeit among the marchants they ſel by the 100 meticals, yet in the mint or caſtle, they ſel by the 100 drams, hauing there leſſe then the worth 5 medines in each hundred drams, and haue their paiment in 40 dayes made them in Saies or larines.

The cuſtome of the ſaid places, aſwell inward as outward, are alike of all ſorts of goods, to ſay 6 by the 100, and Toaſo, Boabo, & ſcriuan medines 6 by the bale inward & outward, to ſay, 3 inward, and as much outward: but who ſo leaueth his goods in the cuſtome houſe paieth nothing, where otherwiſe at the taking thereof away, he ſhould pay 3 med. by the bale, and of the ſaid goods there is no other duty to pay, and this commeth to paſſe whē the cuſtomers eſteeme the goods too high. For in ſuch a caſe they may be driuen to take ſo much commoditie as the cuſtome amounteth to, and not to pay them in money, for ſuch is the order from the Grand Signior.

Hauing paid the cuſtome, it behoueth to haue a quittance or cocket ſealed and firmed with the cuſtomers hand, in confirmatiō of the diſpatch and clearing, and before departure thence, to cauſe the ſayd cuſtomer to cauſe ſearch to be made, to the end that at the voiages returne there be no cauillation made, as it oftentimes happeneth.

Note that 100 meticals of Balſara weigh 17 ounces and a halfe ſottile Venetian, and of Aleppo drams 150, vt ſupra.

The fraight of the barkes from Ormuz to Balſara, I would ſay from Balſara to Ormuz, they pay according to the greatneſſe thereof. To ſay, for cariage of 10 tares 180 larines, thoſe of 15 tares 270 larines, thoſe of 20 tares 360 larines, thoſe of 30 tares 540 larines. Note that a tare is 4 quintals of Balſara. They pay alſo to the pilot of the barke for his owne cariage one tare, and to all the reſt of the mariners amongſt them 3 tares fraight, which is in the whole 4 tares, and paying the aboueſayd priſes and fraights, they are at no charges of victuals with them, but it is requiſite that the ſame be declared in the charter partie, with the condition that they lade not aboord one rotilo more then the fraight, vnder paines that finding more in Ormuz, it is forfeit, and beſides that to pay the fraight of that which they haue laden.

And in this accord it behoueth to deale warilie, and in the preſence of the Ermin or ſome other honeſt man (whereof there are but few) for they are the worſt people in all Arabia. And this diligence muſt be put in executiō, to the end the barks may not be ouerladen, becauſe they are to paſſe many ſands betwixt Balſara and Ormuz.

ORMVZ:

The weight, meaſure, and money currant in the kingdom of Ormuz:

Spices and drugs they weigh by the bar, and of euery ſort of goods the weight is different. To ſay, of ſome drugs 3 quintals, and 3 erubi or roues, and other ſome 4 quintals 25 rotiloes, and yet both is called a barre, which barre, as well great as litle, is 20 fraſoli, and euery fraſoll is 10 manas, and euery mana 23 chianſi, and euery chianſo 10 meticals and a halfe. Note that euery quintall maketh 4 erubi or roues, and euery roue 32 rotiloes, & euery rotilo 16 ounces, and euery ounce 7 meticals, ſo that the quintall commeth to be 128 rotiloes, which is Aleppine 26 rotiloes and one third part, which is 132 li. engliſh weight. And contrarywiſe ÿ quintal of Aleppo (which is 494 rotiloes 8 ounces engliſh) maketh 477 rotiloes and a halfe of Ormuz, which is 3 quintals 2 roues, 29 rotiloes and a halfe.

What a rotilo is.

Note that there are bars of diuers weights, vt ſupra, of which they bargaine ſimply, according to the ſort of commoditie, but if they bargaine of the great barre, the ſame is 7 quintals and 24 rotiloes, which is 958 li. 9 ounces of London weight, and of Aleppo 193 rotiloes and a halfe.

Touching the money of Ormuz, they bargaine in marchandize at ſo many leches by the barre, which lech is 100 Aſaries, and maketh larines 100 & a halfe, which maketh pardaos 38, & larines one halfe, at larines 5 by the pardao. One aſarie is ſadines 10, and euery ſadine is 100. danarie.

The larine is worth 5 ſadines and one fourth part, ſo that the ſadine is worth of Aleppo mony 1 medine and 1 fourth part, & the larine as in Balſara worth of Aleppo mony 6 medines & a half.

The pardao is 5 larines of Balſara.

There is alſo ſtamped in Ormuz a ſeraphine of gold, which is litle and round, and is worth 24 ſadines, which maketh 30 medines of Aleppo.

The Venetian mony is worth in Ormuz larines 88 per 100 meticals, & the roials are worth larines 86 leſſe one ſadine, which is euery thouſand meticals, 382 aſures: but thoſe that will not ſel them, vſe to melt them, and make them ſo many larines in the king of Ormuz his mint, whereby they cleare 2 per 100, and ſomewhat more: and this they doe becauſe neither Venetian money nor roials run as currant in Ormuz, per aduiſe.

The meaſure of Ormuz is of 2 ſorts, the one called codo which increaſeth vpon the meaſure of Aleppo 3 per 100, for bringing 100 pikes of any meaſurable wares from Aleppo to Ormuz, it is found in Ormuz to be 103 codes. Alſo theſe meaſures of Ormuz increaſe vpon thoſe of Balſara and Babylon 25 and two third parts per 100: for bringing 100 pikes of any meaſurable wares from Balſara or Babylon, there is found in Ormuz 125 codes and two third parts.

The other meaſure is called a vare, which was ſent from the king of Portugall to the India, by which they ſell things of ſmall value, which meaſure is of 5 palmes or ſpans, and is one code and two third parts, ſo that buying 100 codes of any meaſurable wares, and returning to meaſure it by the ſayd vare, there are found but 60 vares, contrarywiſe 100 vares make 166 codes and two third parts.

Note that al ſuch ſhips as lade horſes in Ormuz for Goa or any other place of India, lading 10 horſes or vpwards, in what places ſoeuer the ſaid horſes be taken a ſhore in the India, the marchandize which is to be diſcharged out of that ſhip wherein the ſaid horſes come, are bound to pay no cuſtome at all, but if they lade one horſe leſſe then ten, then the goods are bound to pay the whole cuſtome. And this law was made by Don Emanuel king of Portugall, but it is to be diligently foreſeene, whither all thoſe horſes laden be bound to pay the king his cuſtome: for many times by the king of Portugall his commandement, there is ſome of them ſent to the king of Cochin his brother in armes, ſo that his horſes that come in the ſame ſhip, are not to anſwere cuſtome. As for example: If there were 4 horſes laden in one ſhip, all which were to pay cuſtome to the king, and one other of the king of Cochins which were not to pay any cuſtome, the ſame cauſeth all the marchandize of that ſhip to be ſubiect to pay cuſtome, per aduiſe. But if they lade ten horſes vpon purpoſe to pay the king his cuſtome in Goa, and in the voyage any of them ſhould die in that caſe, if they bring the taile of the dead horſe to the cuſtome in Goa, then the marchandize is free from all cuſtome, becauſe they were laden in Ormuz to pay cuſtome in Goa. Moreouer, if the horſes ſhould die before the midſt of the voyage, they pay no cuſtome at all, and if they die in the midſt of the voyage, then they pay halfe cuſtome, but if any horſe die after the mid voiage, they pay cuſtome no leſſe then if they arriue ſafe. Notwithſtanding, the marchandize (whether the ſaid horſes die before or in the mid voyage or after the mid voiage) are free from all cuſtome.

The cuſtome of Ormuz is eleuen in the 100, to ſay, 10 for the king, and 1 for the arming of the foiſts: but for ſmall wares as glaſſes, and looking glaſſes of all ſorts, and ſuch like, made for apparell, pay no cuſtome. But cloth of Wooll, Karſies, Mockaires, Chamlets, and all ſortes of Silke, Saffron, and ſuch like, pay cuſtome, being eſteemed reaſonably.

There is alſo another cuſtome, which they call raida, which is, that one bringing his goods into Ormuz, with purpoſe to ſend ẏ ſame further into India, the ſame are boūd to pay 3 by the 100, but none other are bound to pay this cuſtome, except the Armenians, Moores, and Iewes: for the Portugals and Venetians pay nothing thereof.

Note ẏ in Ormuz they abate tare of all ſorts of commodities, by an order obſerued of cuſtome.

The fraight from Ormuz to Chaul, Goa, and Cochin, is as followeth: Mokaires larines 6 per table of 60 pikes. Aquarioſa 8 larines by ordinarie chiſt, raiſins 10 by chiſt, which is a quintall of roues 128. Ruuia of Chalangi larines 10 per quintall, glaſſes larines 8 per chiſt, of 4 foote and a halfe, glaſſes in great chiſts 14 & 15 larines by chiſt. Small wares larines 12 by chiſt of fiue foot. Tamari for Maſchat ſadines 2 and a half, and 3 by the fardle. Tamarie for Diu and Chaul 4 ſadines, and 4 and a halfe by bale. Other drugs and things which come from Perſia pay according to the greatneſſe of the bales.

The fraight mentioned, they pay as appeareth, when they ſhip the ſayd goods in ſhips where horſes goe: otherwiſe, not hauing horſes, they pay ſomewhat leſſe, becauſe of the cuſtom which they are to pay.

The vſe of the India ſhips is, that the patrones thereof are not at any charge neither with any paſſenger, nor yet with any mariner in the ſhip, but that euery one at the beginning of the voyage doe furniſh to maintaine his owne table (if he will eate) and for drinke they haue a great iarre of water, which is garded with great cuſtodie.

GOA.

The weight, meaſure, and money currant in Goa.

THe quintall of Goa is 5 manas, and 8 larines, & the mana is 24 rotilos, ſo that the quintall of Goa is 128 rot. and euery rot. is 16 ounces, which is of Venice weight 1 li. and a halfe, ſo that the quintall of Goa is 192 li. ſotile Venice, which is 26 rotiloes 8 ounces Aleppine, and of London weight 132 li. Engliſh, as the weight of Ormuz.

All the marchandize, ſpices and drugs, are ſold by this quintal, except ſome drugs, as lignū de China, Galanga, & others, whereof they bargaine at ſo much per candill, aduertiſing that there be two ſorts of candill, one of 16 manas, the other of 20 manas, that of 16 manas commeth to be iuſt 3 quintals, and that of 20 manas, 3 quintals, 3 roues. Note that 4 roues make a quintall, and the roue is 32 rotiloes, as in Ormuz. Note that 4 roues make a quintall.

There is alſo another weight which they call Marco, which is eight ounces or halfe a rotilo of Goa, & 9 ounces of Venice ſotile: with this they weigh amber, corall, muſke, ambracan, ciuet, and other fine wares.

There is alſo another ſort of weight called Mangiallino, which is 5 graines of Venice weight and therewith they weigh diamants and other iewels.

Note that in Goa they vſe not to abate any tare of any goods, except of ſacks or wraps, & therfore it requireth great aduiſement in buying of the goods, eſpecially in the muſke of Tartaria which commeth by way of China in bladders, and ſo weigh it without any tare rebating. Muſke of Tartaria by ẏ way of China.

The meaſure of Goa is called a tode, which encreaſeth vpon the meaſure of Babylon & Balſara after the rate of 17 & one eight part by the 100, ſo that bringing 100 pikes of any meaſurable ware from thence to Goa, it is found 117 pikes 7 eight parts, and bringing 100 coues from Ormuz to Goa, there is found but 93 coues and one fourth part.

There is alſo the vare in Goa, which is iuſt as the vare of Ormuz, and therewith they meaſure onely things that are of ſmall value.

For the mony of Goa, there is a kind of mony made of lead and tin mingled, being thicke and round, and ſtamped on the one ſide with the ſpheare or globe of the world, and on the other ſide two arrowes & 5 rounds: and this kind of mony is called Baſaruchi, and 15 of theſe make a vinton of naughty mony, and 5 vintons make a tanga, and 4 vintenas make a tanga of baſe money: ſo that the tanga of baſe mony is 60 baſaruchies, and the tanga of good mony 75 baſaruchies, & 5 tangas make a ſeraphine of gold, which in marchandize is worth 5 tangas good money: but if one would change them into baſaruchies, he may haue 5 tangas, and 16 baſaruchies, which ouerplus they cal cerafagio, & when they bargain of the pardaw of gold, each pardaw is ment to be 6 tangas good mony, but in marchandize they vſe not to demaund pardawes of gold in Goa, except it be for iewels and horſes, for all the reſt they take of ſeraphins of ſiluer, per aduiſo.

The roials of plate, I ſay, the roial of 8 are worth per cuſtome & commandement of the king of Portugall 400 reies, and euery rey is one baſaruchie & one fourth part, which maketh tangas 6, and 53 baſaruchies as their iuſt value, but for that the ſaid roials are excellent ſiluer and currant in diuers places of the India, and chiefly in Malacca, whē the ſhips are to depart at their due times (called Monſons) euery one to haue the ſaid roials pay more then they are worth, & the ouerplus, as is aboueſaid they call ſerafagio. And firſt they giue yͤ iuſt value of the 100 roials of 8, at 5 tangas 50 baſaruchies a piece, which done, they giue ſeraphins 5,6,7,8,9,10,12,15, vntill 22 by the 100, according as they are in requeſt.

The duckat of gold is worth 9 tangas and a halfe good money, and yet not ſtable in price, for that when the ſhips depart from Goa to Cochin, they pay them at 9 tangas and 3 fourth partes, and 10 tangas, and that is the moſt that they are worth.

The larines are worth by iuſt value baſaruchies 93 and 3 fourth parts, and 4 larines make a ſeraphine of ſiluer, which is 5 tangas of good money, and theſe alſo haue ſerafagion of 6,7,8,10, vntill 16, by the 100, for when the ſhips depart for the North, to ſay, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, or Baſſaim, all cary of the ſame, becauſe it is money more currant then any other.

There is alſo a ſort of ſeraphins of gold of the ſtampe of Ormuz, whereof there are but fewe in Goa, but being there, they are worth fiue larines and ſomewhat more, according as they are in requeſt.

There is alſo another litle ſort of mony, round, hauing on the one ſide a croſſe, and on the other ſide a crowne, which is worth one halfe a tanga of good money, and another of the ſame ſtampe leſſe then that which they call Imitiuo de buona moneda, which is worth 18 baſaruches 3 fourth parts a piece.

Note that if a man bargaine in marchandize, it behoueth to demaund tangas of good money: for by nominating tangas onely, is vnderſtood to be baſe money of 60 baſaruches, which wanteth of the good money vt ſupra.

The cuſtome of Goa is 8 in the 100 inward, and as much outward, and the goods are eſteemed iuſtly rather to the marchants aduantage then the kings. The cuſtome they pay in this order. Comming with a ſhip from Ormuz to Goa without horſes, they pay 8 in the 100 whether they ſell part or all, but if they would carie of the ſayd marchandiſe to any other place, they pay none other cuſtome, except others buy it and carie it foorth of the countrey, and then they pay it 8 in the 100. And if one hauing paied the cuſtome ſhould ſell to another with compoſition to paſſe it forth as for his proper accounts to ſaue the cuſtome, this may not be, becauſe the ſeller is put to his oth, whether he ſend the goods for his owne account, or for the account of any others that haue bought the ſame, and being found to the contrary, they pay cuſtome as aboueſaid. And in this order the marchants pay of all the goods which come from any part of the Indies. But if they come from Ormuz to Goa with horſes, they are not ſubiect to pay any cuſtome inward, notwithſtanding if they ſend all or any part thereof for any other place, or returne it to Ormuz, they pay the cuſtome outward, although they could not ſell.

They vſe alſo in Goa amongſt the common ſort to bargaine for coales, wood, lime & ſuch like, at ſo many braganines, accounting 24 baſaruches for one braganine, albeit there is no ſuch mony ſtamped. The cuſtome of the Portugals is, that any Moore or Gentile, of what condition or ſtate ſoeuer he be, may not depart from Goa to go within the land, without licence of certaine deputies deputed for that office, who (if they be Moores or Gentiles) doe ſet a ſeale vpon the arme, hauing thereon the armes of Portugal, to be knowen of the porters of the citie, whether they haue the ſaid licence or no.

COCHIN.

The weight, meaſure, and money, currant in Cochin.

ALl the marchandiſe which they ſell or buy within the ſayd citie, they bargaine for it at ſo many ſeraſines per quintal, which is 128. rotilos of iuſt weight with yͤ quintall & rotilo of Goa and Ormuz: aduertiſing that there are diuers ſorts of bars according to the ſorts of commodities, and in trafiquing, they reaſon at ſo much the bar. Note that there are bars of 3 quintals & 3 quintals and halfe, and 4 quintals. They abate a vſed tare of all marchandize, according to the ſort of goods, and order taken for the ſame.

The meaſure of Goa and Cochin are all one.

The money of Cochin are all the ſame ſorts which are currant in Goa, but the duckat of gold in value is 10 tangas of good money.

The cuſtome of Cochin as wel inward as outward for all ſtrangers, is eight in the hundred, but thoſe that haue bene married foure yeere in the countrey pay but foure in the hundred, per aduiſo.

MALACCA.

The weight, meaſure, and money of Malacca.

FOr the marchandiſe bought and ſold in the citie they reckon at ſo much the barre, which barre is of diuers ſorts, great and ſmall, according to the ancient cuſtome of the ſaid citie, & diuerſitie of the goods. But for the cloues they bargaine at ſo much the barre, which barre is 3 quintals, 2 roues and 10 rotilos. As I haue aboueſaid, all kind of drugs haue their ſorts of barres limited. Note that euery quintal is 4 roues, and euery roue 32 rotilos, which is 128 rotilos the quintall, the which anſwereth to Aleppo 95 rotilos, and to London 472 li. per quintal.

The meaſures of Malacca are as the meaſures of Goa. In Malacca they abate tare according to their diſtinction and agreement, for that there is no iuſt tare limited.

For the money of Malacca, the leaſt money currant is of tinne ſtamped with the armes of Portugall, and 12 of theſe make a Chazza.

The Chazza is alſo of tinne with the ſaid armes, and 2 of theſe make a challaine.

The Challaine is of tinne with the ſaid armes, and 40 of theſe make a tanga of Goa good money, but not ſtamped in Malacca.

There is alſo a ſort of ſiluer money which they call Patachines, and is worth 6 tangas of good money, which is 360 reyes, and is ſtamped with two letters, S. T. which is S. Thomas on the one ſide, and the armes of Portugall on the other ſide.

There is alſo a kind of mony called cruzados ſtamped with the armes of Portugall, & is worth 6 tangas good mony, the larines are euery 9 of them worth 2 cruzados, which is 12 tangas good money, and theſe larines be of thoſe which are ſtamped in Balſara and Ormuz.

The roials of 8 they call Pardaos de Reales, and are worth 7 tangas of good money.

The cuſtome of Malacca is 10 in the 100 as wel inward as out ward, and thoſe which pay the cuſtome inwards, if in caſe they ſend the ſame goods for any other place within terme of a yeere and a day, pay no cuſtome for the ſame.

The times or ſeaſonable windes called Monſons, wherein the ſhips depart from place to place in the Eaſt Indies.

NOte, that the Citie of Goa is the principall place of all the Orientall India, and the winter there beginneth the 15 of May with very great raine, and ſo continueth till the firſt of Auguſt, ſo that during that ſpace, no ſhippe can paſſe ouer the barre of Goa, becauſe through the continuall ſhoures of raine all the ſandes ioyne together neere vnto a mountaine called Oghane, and all theſe ſandes being ioyned together, runne into the ſhoales of the barre and port of Goa, and can haue no other iſſue, but to remaine in that port, and therefore it is ſhut vp vntill the firſt of Auguſt, but at the 10 of Auguſt it openeth by reaſon of the raine which ceaſeth, and the ſea doeth then ſcoure the ſands away againe.

The monſon from Goa to the Northward, to ſay, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, Daman, Baſaim, and other places.

The ſhips depart betwixt the tenth and 24 of Auguſt, for the Northward places aboue ſayde, and to theſe places they may ſaile all times of the yeere, except in the winter, which beginneth and endeth at the times aboueſaid.

The monſon from the North parts, for Goa.

The ſhips depart from Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, and other places Northwards for Goa, betwixt the 8 and 15 of Ianuarie, and come to Goa about the end of Februarie.

The firſt monſon from Diu for the ſtraight of Mecca.

The ſhips depart from Diu about the 15 of Ianuarie, and returne from the ſtraights to Diu in the moneth of Auguſt.

The ſecond monſon from Diu for the ſtraight of Mecca.

The ſhips depart betwixt the 25 and firſt of September, and returne from the ſtraights to Diu [illegible] and 15 of May.

The monſon from Secutra for Ormus.

The ſhips depart about the tenth of Auguſt for Ormus: albeit Secutra is an Iſland and hath but few ſhips, which depart as aboueſaid.

The monſon wherein the Moores of the firme land come to Goa.

About the fifteenth of September the Moores of the firme lande beginne to come to Goa, and they come from all parts, as well from Balaguate, Bezenegar, as alſo from Sudalcan, and other places.

The monſon wherein the Moores of the firme land depart from Goa.

They depart from Goa betwixt the 10 and 15 day of Nouember. Note that by going for the North is meant the departing from Goa, for Chaul, Diu, Cambaia, Daman, Baſaim, Ghaſſain, and other places vnto Zindi: and by the South is vnderſtood, departing from Goa, for Cochin, and all that coaſt vnto Cape Comori.

The firſt monſon from Goa for Ormus.

The ſhippes depart in the moneth of October from Goa, for Ormus, paſſing with Eaſterly windes along the coaſt of Perſia.

The ſecond monſon from Goa to Ormus.

The ſhips depart about the 20 of Ianuarie paſſing by the like nauigation and windes as in the firſt monſon, and this is called of the Portugals and Indians Entremonſon.

The third monſon from Goa to Ormus.

The ſhips depart betwixt the 25 of March, and 6 of Aprill, hauing Eaſterly windes, till they paſſe Secutra, and then they find Weſterly windes, and therfore they ſet their courſe ouer for the coaſt of Arabia, till they come to Cape Raſalgate and the Straight of Ormus, and this monſon is moſt troubleſome of all: for they make two nauigations in the heigth of Seylan, which is 6 degrees and ſomewhat lower.

The first monſon from Ormus for Chaul and Goa.

The ſhips depart from Ormus for Chaul, and Goa in the moneth of September, with North; and Northeaſt windes.

The ſecond monſon from Ormus for Chaul and Goa.

The ſecond monſon is betwixt the fiue and twentie and laſt of December, with like winds as the former monſon.

The third monſon from Ormus for Chaul, and Goa.

The third monſon the ſhips depart from Ormus, for Chaul and Goa, betwixt the firſt and 15 of April, and they ſaile with Southeaſt windes, Eaſt and Northeaſt windes, coaſting vpon the Arabia ſide from Cape Moſandon vnto Cape Raſalgate, and hauing loſt the ſight of Cape Raſalgate, they haue Weſterly windes, and ſo come for Chaul and Goa, and if the ſaid ſhips depart not before the 25 of April, they are not then to depart that monſon, but to winter in Ormus becauſe of the winter.

The firſt monſon from Ormus for Zindi.

The ſhips depart for Ormus betwixt the 15 and 20 of April.

The ſecond monſon from Ormus for Zindi.

The ſhips depart betwixt the 10 and 20 of October for Zindi from Ormus.

The monſon from Ormus for the red ſea.

The ſhips depart from Ormus betwixt the firſt and laſt of Januarie.

Hitherto I haue noted the monſons of the ſhips departing from Goa to the Northward: Now follow the monſons wherein the ſhips depart from Goa to the Southward.

¶ The monſon from Goa for Calicut, Cochin, Seilan, and all that coaſt.

The ſhips depart from thoſe places betwixt the 1 and 15 of Auguſt, and there they find it nauigable all the yeere except in the winter, which continueth as is aforeſaid, from the 15 of May till the 10 of Auguſt. In like maner the ſhips come from theſe places for Goa at euery time in the yeere except in the winter, but of all other the beſt time is to come in Nouember, December and January. Note.

The firſt monſon from Goa, for Pegu.

The ſhips depart from Goa, betwixt the 15 and 20 of April, and winter at S. Thomas, and after the 5 of Auguſt, they depart from S. Thomas for Pegu.

The ſecond monſon from Goa for Pegu.

The ſhips depart from Goa betwixt the 8 and 24 of Auguſt, going ſtraight for Pegu, and if they paſſe the 24 of Auguſt, they cannot paſſe that monſon, neither is there any more monſons till April as is aforeſaid. Note that the chiefeſt trade is, to take money of S. Thomas rials, and patechoni, and to goe to S. Thomas, and there to buy Tellami, which is fine cloth of India, whereof there is great quantitie made in Coromandel, and brought thither, and other marchandiſe are not good for that place except ſome dozen of very faire Emeraulds orientall. For of golde, ſiluer, and Rubies, there is ſufficient ſtore in Pegu. Marchandize good for Pegu.

The monſon from Pegu for the Indies.

The ſhips depart from Pegu betwixt the 15 and 25 of Januarie, and come to Goa about the 25 of March, or in the beginning of April. Note, that if it paſſe the 10 of May before the ſayde ſhips be arriued in Goa, they cannot come thither that monſon, and if they haue not then ſeen the coaſt of India, they ſhall with great perill fetch S. Thomas.

The firſt monſon from Goa for Malacca.

The ſhips depart betwixt the 15 and laſt of September, and arriue in Malacca about the end of October.

The ſecond monſon from Goa to Malacca.

The ſhips depart about the 5 of May from Goa, and arriue in Malacca about the 15 of June.

The firſt monſon from Malacca to Goa.

The ſhips depart about the 10 of September, and come to Goa about the end of October.

The ſecond monſon from Malacca to Goa.

The ſhips depart from Malacca about the 10 of February, and come to Goa about the end of March. But if the ſaid ſhips ſhould ſtay till the 10 of May, they cannot enter into Goa, and if at that time alſo they ſhould not be arriued at Cochin, they are forced to returne to Malacca, becauſe the winter and contrary windes then come vpon them.

The monſon from Goa for China.

The ſhips depart from Goa in the moneth of April.

The monſon from China for Goa.

The ſhips depart to be the 10 of May in Goa, and being not then arriued, they turne backe to Cochin, and if they cannot fetch Cochin, they returne to Malacca.

The monſon from Goa to the Moluccaes.

The ſhips depart about the 10 or 15 of May, which time being paſt, the ſhippes can not paſſe ouer the barre of Goa for the cauſe aboueſaid.

The monſon of the ſhips of the Moluccaes arriuall in Goa.

The ſhips which come from the Moluccaes arriue vpon the bar of Goa about the 15 of April.

The monſons of the Portingall ſhips for the Indies.

Note.

The ſhips which come from Portugall depart thence ordinarily betwixt the tenth & fifteenth of March, comming the ſtraight way during the moneth of Iuly to the coaſt of Melinde, and Moſambique, and from thence goe ſtraight for Goa, and if in the moneth of Iuly they ſhould not be at the coaſt of Melinde, they can in no wiſe that yeere fetch Melinde, but returne to the Iſle of Saint Helena, and ſo are not able, that time being paſt, to fetch the coaſt of India, and to come ſtraight for Goa. Therefore (as is aboueſaid) they returne to the Iſland of Saint Helena, and if they cannot make the ſaid Iſland, then they runne as loſt vpon the coaſt of Guinea: but if the ſaid ſhips be arriued in time vpon the coaſt of Melinde, they ſet forwardes for Goa, and if by the fifteenth of September they cannot fetch Goa, they then goe for Cochin, but if they ſee they cannot fetch Cochin, they returne to Moſambique to winter there vpon the ſayd coaſt. Albeit in the yeere of our Lord 1580 there arriued the ſhip called San Lorenzo, being wonderfull ſore ſea-beaten, the eight of October, which was accounted as a myracle for that the like had not bene ſeene before.

Note.

The monſon from India for Portugall.

The ſhippes depart from Cochin betweene the fifteenth and laſt of Ianuary, going on till they haue ſight of Capo de buona ſperanza, and the Iſle of Saint Helena, which Iſlande is about the midway, being in ſixteene degrees to the South. And it is a litle Iſland being fruitfull of all things which a man can imagine, with great ſtore of fruit: and this Iſland is a great ſuccour to the ſhipping which returne for Portugall. And not long ſince the ſaid Iſland was found by the Portugales, and was diſcouered by a ſhippe that came from the Indies in a great ſtorme, in which they found ſuch abundance of wilde beaſtes, and boares, and all ſort of fruite, that by meanes thereof that poore ſhip which had beene foure moneths at ſea, refreſhed themſelues both with water and meate very well, and this Iſland they called S. Helena, becauſe it was diſcouered vpon S. Helens day. And vndoubtedly this Iſland is a great ſuccour, and ſo great an ayde to the ſhips of Portugall, that many would ſurely periſh if that helpe wanted. And therefore the king of Portugall cauſed a Church to be made there for deuotion of S. Helena: where there are onely reſident Eremits, and all other are forbidden to inhabite there by the kings commaundement, to the ende that the ſhips may be the more ſufficiently furniſhed with victuals, becauſe the ſhips which come frõ India come but ſlenderly victualled, becauſe there groweth no corne there, neither make they any wine: but the ſhips which come from Portugall to the Indies touch not in the ſayd Iſland, becauſe they ſet out being ſufficiently furniſhed with bread and water from Portugall for eight moneths voyage. Any other people then the two Eremites aboueſaid, cannot inhabite this Iſland, except ſome ſicke man that may be ſet there a ſhore to remaine in the Eremites companie, for his helpe and recouery.

Note.

The monſon from Goa to Moſambique.

The ſhips depart betwixt the 10 and 15 of Ianuarie.

The monſon from Moſambique to Goa.

The ſhips depart betweene the 8 and laſt of Auguſt, and arriue in Chaul or Goa in the moneth of October, till the 15 of Nouember.

The monſon from Ormus to Bengala.

The ſhips depart betwixt the 15 and 20 of Iune, and goe to winter at Teue and depart thence about the 15 of Auguſt for Bengala.

The

The voyage paſſed by ſea into Aegypt, by Iohn Eueſham Gentleman. Anno 1586.

THe 5 of December 1586 we departed from Graueſend in the Tiger of London, wherein was Maſter vnder God for the voyage Robert Rickman, and the 21. day at night we came to the Iſle of Wight: departing from thence in the morning following we had a faire winde, ſo that on the 27 day wee came in ſight of the rocke of Lisbone, and ſo ſayling along we came in ſight of the South Cape, the 29 of the ſame, and on the morrowe with a Weſterly winde we entred the ſtraights: and the ſecond of Ianuary being as high as Cape de Gate, we departed from our fleete towards Argier, And the 4 day we arriued at the port of Argier aforeſaid, where we ſtaied till the firſt of March. At which time we ſet ſaile towardes a place called Tunis, to the Eaſtward of Argier 100 leagues, where we arriued the 8 of the ſame. This Tunis is a ſmall citie vp 12 miles from the ſea, and at the port or rode where ſhipping doe ride, is a caſtle or fort called Goletta, ſometimes in the handes of the Chriſtians, but now of the Turkes: at which place we remained till the third of Aprill: at which time wee ſet ſaile towardes Alexandria, and hauing ſometime faire windes, ſometime contrary, we paſſed on the 12 day betweene Sicilia and Malta (where neere adioyning hath beene the fort and holde of the knights of the Rhodes) and ſo the 19 day we fell with the Iſle of Candy, and from thence to Alexandria, where we arriued the 27 of April, and there continued till the 9 of October.

Tunis.

The deſcription of Alexandria.

The ſaid citie of Alexandria is an old thing decayed or ruinated, hauing bene a faire and great citie neere two miles in length, being all vauted vnderneath for prouiſion of freſh water, which water commeth thither but once euery yeere, out of one of the foure riuers of paradiſe (as it is termed) called Nilus, which in September floweth neere eighteene foote vpright higher then his accuſtomed manner, and ſo the banke being cut, as it were a ſluce, about thirty miles from Alexandria, at a towne called Roſſetto, it doth ſo come to the ſaide Citie, with ſuch aboundance, that barkes of twelue tunne doe come vpon the ſame water, which water doth fill all the vauts, ceſternes, and wels in the ſaid Citie, with very good water, and doth ſo continue good, till the next yeere following: for they haue there very litle raine or none at all, yet haue they exceeding great dewes. Alſo they haue very good corne, and very plentifull: all the Countrey is very hot, eſpecially in the moneths of Auguſt, September, and October. Alſo within the ſaide Citie there is a pillar of Marble, called by the Turkes, King Pharaoes needle, & it is foure ſquare, euery ſquare is twelue foote, and it is in height 90 foote. Alſo there is without the wals of the ſaid Citie, about twentie ſcore paces, another marble pillar, being round, called Pompey his pillar: this pillar ſtandeth vpon a great ſquare ſtone, euery ſquare is fifteene foote, and the ſame ſtone is fifteene foote high, and the compaſſe of the pillar is 37 foote, and the heigth of it is 101 feete, which is a wonder to thinke how euer it was poſſible to ſet the ſaid pillar vpon the ſaid ſquare ſtone. The port of the ſaid Citie is ſtrongly fortified with two ſtrong Caſtles, and one other Caſtle within the citie, being all very well planted with munition: and there is to the Eaſtward of this Citie, about three dayes iourney the citie of Grand Cayro, otherwiſe called Memphis: it hath in it by report of the regiſters bookes which we did ſee, to the number of 2400 Churches, and is wonderfully populous, and is one dayes iourney about the wals, which was iourneyed by one of our Marriners for triall thereof. Alſo neere to the ſaide citie there is a place called the Pyramides, being, as I may well terme it, one of the nine wonders of the world: that is, ſeuen ſeuerall places of flint and marble ſtone, foure ſquare, the wals thereof are ſeuen yards thicke in thoſe places that we did ſee: the ſquarenes is in length about twentie ſcore euery ſquare, being built as it were a pointed diamond, broad at the foote, and ſmall or narrow at the toppe: the heigth of them, to our iudgement, doth ſurmount twiſe the heigth of Paules ſteeple: within the ſaide Pyramides, no man doth know what there is, for that they haue no entrance but in the one of them, there is a hole where the wall is broken, and ſo we went in there, hauing torch-light with vs, for that it hath no light to it, and within the ſame, is as it were a great hall, in the which there is a coſtly tombe, which tombe they ſay, was made for king Pharao in his life time, but he was not buried there, being drowned in the red ſea: alſo there are certaine vauts or dungeons, which goe downe verie deepe vnder thoſe Pyramides with faire ſtaires, but no man dare venter to goe downe into them, by reaſon that they can cary no light with them, for the dampe of the earth doth put out the light: the red ſea is but three daies iourney from this place, and Ieruſalem about ſeuen dayes iourney from thence: but to returne to Cayro. There is a Caſtle wherein is the houſe that Pharaoes wiues were kept in, and in the Pallace or Court thereof ſtande 55 marble pillars, in ſuch order, as our Exchange ſtandeth in London: the ſaid pillars are in heigth 60 foote, and in compaſſe 14

foote: alſo in the ſaid Citie is the caſtle where Ioſeph was in priſon, where to this day they put in rich men, when the king would haue any ſumme of money of them: there are ſeuen gates to the ſayd priſon, and it goeth neere fiftie yardes downe right: alſo, the water that ſerueth this caſtle, commeth out of the foreſaide riuer of Nilus, vpon a wall made with arches, fiue miles long, and it is twelue foote thicke. Alſo there are in old Cayro two Monaſteries, the one called S. Georges, the other S. Maries: & in the Courts where the Churches be, was the houſe of king Pharao. In this Citie is great ſtore of marchandize, eſpecially pepper, and nutmegs, which come thither by land, out of the Eaſt India: and it is very plentifull of all maner of victuals, eſpecially of bread, rootes, and hearbes: to the Eaſtwards of Cayro, there is a Well, fiue miles off, called Matria, and as they ſay, when the Virgin Marie fled from Bethleem, and came into Ægypt, and being there, had neither water, nor any other thing to ſuſtaine them, by the prouidence of God, an Angell came from heauen, and ſtrake the ground with his wings, where preſently iſſued out a fountaine of water: and the wall did open where the Iſraelites did hide themſelues, which fountaine or well is walled foure ſquare till this day. Alſo we were at an old Citie, all ruinated and deſtroyed, called in olde time, the great Citie of Carthage where Hannibal and Queene Dido dwelt: this Citie was but narrow, but was very long: for there was, and is yet to bee ſeene, one ſtreete three mile long, to which Citie freſh water was brought vpon arches (as afore) aboue 25 miles, of which arches ſome are ſtanding to this day. Alſo we were at diuers other places on the coaſt, as we came from Cayro, but of other antiquities we ſaw but few. The towne of Argier which was our firſt and laſt port, within the ſtreights ſtandeth vpon the ſide of an hill, cloſe vpon the ſea ſhore: it is very ſtrong both by ſea and land, and it is very well victualed with all manner of fruites, bread and fiſh good ſtore, and very cheape. It is inhabited with Turkes, Moores, and Iewes, and ſo are Alexandria and Cayro. In this towne are a great number of Chriſtian captiues, whereof there are of Engliſhmen onely fifteene, from which port we ſet ſayle towardes England, the ſeuenth of Ianuarie, Anno 1587, and the 30 day of the ſayd moneth, we arriued at Dartmouth on the coaſt of England.

The ſecond voyage of M. Laurence Alderſey, to the Cities of Alexandria, and Cayro in Aegypt. Anno 1586.

I Embarked my ſelfe at Briſtoll, in the Hercules, a good ſhip of London, and ſet ſaile the 21 day of Februarie, about ten of the clocke in the morning, hauing a merry winde: but the 23 day, there aroſe a very great ſtorme, and in the mids of it we deſcried a ſmall boate of the burden of ten tunnes, with foure men in her, in very great danger, who called a maine for our helpe. Whereupon our Maſter made towardes them, and tooke them into our ſhip, and let the boate, which was laden with timber, and appertained to Chepſtow, to runne a drift. The ſame night about midnight aroſe another great ſtorme, but the winde was large with vs, vntill the 27 of the ſame moneth, which then grew ſomewhat contrary: yet notwithſtanding we held on our courſe, and the tenth day of March, we deſcried a ſaile about Cape Sprat, which is a litle on this ſide the ſtreight of Gibraltare, but we ſpake not with her. The next day we deſcried twelue ſayle more, with whom we thought to haue ſpoken, to haue learned what they were, but they made very faſt away, and we gaue them ouer.

Thurſday the 16 of March, we had ſight of the ſtreights, and of the coaſt of Barbary. The 18 day we paſſed them, and ſailed towards Patras. Vpon the 23 of March, we met with the Centurion of London which came from Genoa, by whom we ſent letters to England, and the foure men alſo which we tooke in, vpon the coaſt of England, before mentioned.

Goleta.

The 29 of March we came to Goleta a ſmall Iland, and had ſight of two ſhippes, which we iudged to be of England.

Malta.

Zante.

Patras.

Tueſday the fourth of Aprill, we were before Malta, and being there becalmed, our Maiſter cauſed the two ſhip boates to be had out, and they towed the ſhip, till we were out of ſight of the Caſtle of Malta. The 9 day of Aprill we came to Zante, and being before the towne, William Aldridge, ſeruant to Maſter Thomas Cordall of London, came aboord vs, with whom our Maſter and twelue more of our company, thought to haue gone on ſhoare, but they could not be permitted: ſo we all came aboord againe, and went to Patras, where we arriued vpon good Friday, and lay there with good entertainement at the Engliſh houſe, where was the Conſull Maſter Grimes, Ralph Aſhley, and Iohn Doddington, who very kindly went with vs, and ſhewed vs the pleaſures of the towne.

They brought vs to the houſe of the Cady, who was made then to vnderſtand of the 20 Turks that wee had aboord, which were to goe to Conſtantinople, being redeemed out of captiuitie, by ſir Francis Drake in the Weſt Indies, and brought with him into England, and by order of the Queenes Maieſtie ſent now into their Countrey. Whereupon the Cady commaunded them to be brought before him, that he might ſee them: and when he had talked with them, and vnderſtood howe ſtrangely they were deliuered, hee marueiled much, and admired the Queenes Maieſtie of England, who being but a woman, is notwithſtanding of ſuch power and renowne amongſt all the princes of Chriſtendome, with many other honourable wordes of commending her Maieſtie. So he tooke the names of thoſe 20. Turkes, and recorded them in their great bookes, to remaine in perpetuall memory. After this, our foreſaid countreymen brought mee to the Chappel of S. Andrew, where his tombe or ſepulchre is, and the boord vpon which hee was beheaded, which boord is now ſo rotten, that if any man offer to cut it, it falleth to powder, yet I brought ſome of it away with me.

Vpon Tueſday in Eaſter weeke, wee ſet out towards Zante againe, and the 24. of April with much adoe, wee were all permitted to come on ſhoare; and I was caried to the Engliſh houſe in Zante, where I was very well entertained. The commodities of Zante are Currans and oyle: the ſituation of the Towne is vnder a very great hill, vpon which ſtandeth a very ſtrong Caſtle, which commaundeth the Towne. At Zante we tooke in a Captaine and 16. ſouldiers, with other paſſengers. Wee departed from Zante vpon Tueſday the 15. of April, and the next day we ankered at a ſmall Iſland, called Striualia, which is deſolate of people, ſauing a fewe religious men, who entertained vs well, without taking any money: but of courteſie we beſtowed ſomewhat vpon them for their maintenance, and then they gaue vs a couple of leane ſheepe, which we caried aboord. The laſt day of Aprill, wee arriued at Candie, at a Caſtle, called Sowday, where wee ſet the Captaine, Souldiers, and Mariners aſhoare, which wee tooke in at Zante, with all their carriage.

Striualia.

Candie.

The ſecond day of May wee ſet ſaile againe, and the fourth day came to the Iſlands of Milo, where we ankered, and found the people there very courteous, and tooke in ſuch neceſſaries as we wanted. The Iſlands are in my iudgement a hundred in number, and all within the compaſſe of a hundred miles.

May.
The Iſlands of Milo, in olde time called Sporades.

The 11. day, the Chaus, which is the greateſt man there in authoritie, for certaine offences done in a little Chappell by the water ſide, which they ſaide one of our ſhippe had done, and imputed it to mee, becauſe I was ſeene goe into it three dayes before, came to vs, and made much a doe; ſo that we were faine to come out of our ſhippe armed: but by three pieces of golde the brabling was ended, and we came to our ſhippe. This day wee alſo ſet ſaile, and the next day paſſed by the Caſtle of Serpeto, which is an old ruinated thing, and ſtandeth vnder a hils ſide.

The 13. day, we paſſed by the Iſland of Paris, and the Iſland of the bankes of Helicon, and the Iſland called Ditter, where are many hoares, and the women bee witches. The ſame day alſo wee paſſed by the Caſtle of Tino, ſtanding vpon a very high mountaine, and neere vnto it is the Iſland of Diana.

The 15. of May, wee came to Sio, where I ſtayed thirtie and three dayes. In it is a very proper Towne, after the building of that Countrey, and the people are ciuil: and while we were here, there came in ſixe Gallies, which had bene at Alexandria, and one of them which was the Admiral, had a Prince of the Moores priſoner, whom they tooke about Alexandria, and they meant to preſent him to the Turke. The towne ſtandeth in a valley, and a long the water ſide pleaſantly. There are about 26. winde-mils about it, and the commodities of it are cotton wooll, cotton yarne, maſtike, and ſome other drugs.

Sio.

As we remained at Sio, there grew a great controuerſie betweene the mariners of the Hercules, and the Greekes of the Towne of Sio, about the bringing home of the Turkes, which the Greekes tooke in ill part, and the boyes cried out, Viue el Re Philippe: whereupon our men beate the boyes, and threwe ſtones, and ſo a broile beganne, and ſome of our men were hurt: but the Greekes were fetcht out of their houſes, and manacled together with irons, and threatned to the Gallies: about fourtie of them were ſent to the priſon, and what became of them, when we were gone, we know not, for we went thence within two dayes after, which was the 19. of Iune.

The 20. day wee paſſed by the Iſland of Singonina, an Iſland riſen by the caſting of ſtones in that place: the ſubſtance of the ground there is brimſtone, and burneth ſometimes ſo much, that it bloweth vp the rockes.

Singonina.

The 24. of Iune wee came to Cyprus, and had ſight in the way of the aforeſaide ſixe Gallies, that came from Alexandria, one whereof came vnto vs, and required a preſent for himſelfe, and for two of the other Gallies, which we for quietneſſe ſake gaue them.

The 27. of Iune, wee came to Tripolie, where I ſtayed till the fift of Iuly, and then tooke paſſage in a ſmal barke called a Caramuſalin, which was a paſſage boat, and was bound for Bichieri, thirteene miles on this ſide Alexandria, which boate was fraighted with Turkes, Moores, and Iewes.

The 20. day of Iuly, this barke which I paſſed in ranne vpon a rocke, and was in very great danger, ſo that we all began ſome to be ready to ſwimme, ſome to leape into the ſhippe boate, but it pleaſed God to ſet vs quickly off the rocke, and without much harme.

Bichieri.

The 28. of Iuly I came to Bichieri, where I was well entertained of a Iewe which was the Cuſtomer there, giuing me Muſkadine, and drinking water himſelfe: hauing broken my faſt with him, he prouided mee a Camell for my carriage, and a Mule for mee to ride vpon, and a Moore to runne by me to the City of Alexandria, who had charge to ſee mee ſafe in the Engliſh houſe, whither I came, but found no Engliſhmen there: but then my guide brought mee aboord a ſhip of Alderman Martins, called the Tyger of London, where I was well receiued of the Maſter of the ſaid ſhip, whoſe name was Thomas Rickman, and of all the company.

The Engliſh houſe in Alexandria.

The ſaid Maſter hauing made me good cheere, and made me alſo to drinke of the water of Nilus, hauing the keyes of the Engliſh houſe, went thither with me himſelfe, & appointed mee a faire chamber, and left a man with me to prouide me all things that I needed, and euery day came himſelfe to me, and caried me into the City, and ſhewed me the monuments thereof, which be theſe.

The monuments of Alexandria.

He brought mee firſt to Pompey his pillar, which is a mighty thing of gray marble, and all of one ſtone, in height by eſtimation aboue 52. yards, and the compaſſe about ſixe fadome.

The City hath three gates, one called the gate of Barbaria, the other of Merina, and the third of Roſſetto.

He brought me to a ſtone in the ſtreete of the Citie, whereupon S. Marke was beheaded: to the place where S. Katherine died, hauing there hid herſelfe, becauſe ſhe would not marry: alſo to the Bath of S. Katherine.

I ſaw there alſo Pharaos needle, which is a thing in height almoſt equall with Pompeys pillar, and is in compaſſe fiue fadome, and a halfe, and all of one ſtone.

I was brought alſo to a moſt braue and daintie Bath, where we waſhed our ſelues: the Bath being of marble, and of very curious workemanſhip.

The Citie ſtandeth vpon great arches, or vawtes, like vnto Churches, with mightie pillars of marble, to holde vp the foundation: which arches are built to receiue the water of the riuer of Nilus, which is for the vſe of the Citie. It hath three Caſtles, and a hundred Churches: but the part that is deſtroyed of it, is ſixe times more then that part which ſtandeth.

Roſſetto.

The laſt day of Iuly, I departed from Alexandria towards Cayro in a paſſage boate, wherein firſt I went to Roſſetto, ſtanding by the riuer ſide, hauing 13. or 14. great churches in it, their building there is of ſtone and bricke, but as for lodging, there is litle, except we bring it with vs.

From Roſſetto wee paſſed along the riuer of Nilus, which is ſo famous in the world, twiſe as broad as the Thames at London: on both ſides grow date trees in great abundance. The people be rude, inſomuch that a man cannot traueile without a Ianizary to conduct him.

The Turkes Lent.

The time that I ſtayed in Ægypt was the Turkes and Moores Lent, in all which time they burne lamps in their churches, as many as may hang in them: their Lent endureth 40. dayes, and they haue three Lents in the yere: during which time they neither eate nor drink in the day time, but all the night they do nothing elſe.

Betwixt Roſſetto and Cayro there are along the water ſide three hundred cities and townes, and the length of the way is not aboue three hundred miles.

Cayro.

To this famous Citie of Cayro I came the fift day of Auguſt, where I found M. William Alday, and William Cæſar, who intertained me in very good ſort. M. Cæſar brought mee to ſee the Pyramides which are three in number, one whereof king Pharao made for his owne tombe, the tombe it ſelfe is almoſt in the top of it: the monuments bee high and in forme 4. ſquare, and euery of the ſquares is as long as a man may ſhoote a rouing arrowe, and as high as a Church. I ſawe alſo the ruines of the Citie of Memphis hard by thoſe Pyramides.

The houſe of Ioſeph is yet ſtanding in Cayro, which is a ſumptuous thing, hauing a place to walke in of 56. mighty pillars, all gilt with gold, but I ſaw it not, being then lame.

The 11. day of Auguſt the lande was cut at Cayro, to let in the water of the riuer of Nilus, which was done with great ioy and triumph.

The 12. of Auguſt I ſet from Cayro towards Alexandria againe, and came thither the 14. of Auguſt. The 26. day there was kept a great feaſt of the Turkes and Moores, which laſted two dayes, and for a day they neuer ceaſed ſhooting off of great Ordinance.

The Engliſh Conſul at Argier.

From Alexandria I ſailed to Argier, where I lay with M. Typton Conſull of the Engliſh nation, who vſed me moſt kindly, and at his owne charge. Hee brought mee to the kings Court, and into the preſence of the King, to ſee him, and the maners of the Court: the King doeth onely beare the name of a King, but the greateſt gouernment is in the hands of the ſouldiers.

The king of Potanca is priſoner in Argier, who comming to Conſtantinople, to acknowledge a duety to the great Turke, was betrayed by his owne nephew, who wrote to the Turke, that hee went onely as a ſpy, by that meanes to get his kingdome. I heard at Argier of ſeuen Gallies that were at that time caſt away at a towne called Formentera: three of them were of Argier, the other foure were the Chriſtians.

We found here alſo 13. Engliſhmen, which were by force of weather put into the bay of Tunis, where they were very ill vſed by the Moores, who forced them to leaue their barke: whereupon they went to the Councell of Argier, to require a redreſſe and remedy for the iniurie. They were all belonging to the ſhippe, called the Golden Noble of London, whereof Maſter Birde is owner. The Maſter was Stephen Haſelwood, and the Captaine Edmond Bence.

The thirde day of December, the pinneſſe called the Mooneſhine of London, came to Argier with a prize, which they tooke vpon the coaſt of Spaine, laden with ſugar, hides, and ginger: the pinneſſe alſo belonging to the Golden Noble: and at Argier they made ſale both of ſhippe and goods, where wee left them at our comming away, which was the ſeuenth day of Ianuarie: and the firſt day of February, I landed at Dartmouth, and the ſeuenth day came to London, with humble thankes to Almightie God, for my ſafe arriuall.

A true report of a worthy fight, performed in the voyage from Turkie, by fiue Ships of London, againſt 11. Gallies, and two Frigats of the King of Spaines, at Pantalarea within the Streights, Anno, 1586. Written by Philip Iones.

The Marchants of London, being of the incorporation of the Turky trade, hauing receiued intelligences, and aduertiſements, from time to time, that the King of Spaine grudging at the proſperitie of this kingdome, had not onely of late arreſted al Engliſh ſhips, bodies, and goods, in Spaine, but alſo maligning the quiet trafique which they vſed to and in the dominions, and prouinces, vnder the obedience of the Great Turke, had giuen order to the Captaines of his gallies in the Leuant, to hinder the paſſage of all Engliſh ſhips, and to endeuour by their beſt meanes, to intercept, take, and ſpoile them, their perſons, and goods: they hereupon thought it their beſt courſe to ſet out their fleete for Turkie, in ſuch ſtrength and abilitie for their defence, that the purpoſe of their Spaniſh enemie might the better be preuented, and the voyage acompliſhed with greater ſecuritie to the men and ſhippes. For which cauſe, fiue tall, and ſtoute ſhippes, appertaining to London, and intending onely a Marchants voyage, were prouided and furniſhed with all things belonging to the Seas; The names whereof were theſe:

1. The Marchant Royall, a very braue and good ſhippe, and of great report.
2. The Tobie.
3. The Edward Bonauenture.
4. The William, and Iohn.
5. The Suſan.

Theſe fiue departing from the coaſt of England, in the moneth of Nouember 1585. kept together as one fleete, til they came as high as the Iſle of Sicile, within the Leuant. And there, according to the order and direction of the voyage, each ſhippe began to take leaue of the reſt, and to ſeparate himſelfe, ſetting his courſe for the particular port, whereunto hee was bounde: one for Tripolie in Syria, another for Conſtantinople, the chiefe Citie of the Turkes Empire, ſituated vpon the coaſt of Romania, called of olde, Thracia, and the reſt to thoſe places, whereunto they were priuatly appointed. But before they deuided themſelues, they altogether conſulted, of and about a certaine and ſpeciall place for their meeting againe after the lading of their goods at their ſeuerall portes. And in concluſion, the generall agreement was to meete at Zante, an Iſland neere to the maine continent of the Weſt part of Morea, well knowen of all the Pilots, & thought to be the fitteſt place of their Rendeuous. Concerning which meeting, it was alſo couenanted on eche ſide, and promiſed, that whatſoeuer ſhip of theſe 5. should firſt arriue at Zante, ſhould there ſtay and expect the comming of the reſt of the fleete, for the ſpace of twentie dayes. This being done, ech man made his beſt haſt according as winde and wether woulde ſerue him to fulfill his courſe, and to diſpatch his buſineſſe; and no neede was there to admoniſh or incourage any man, ſeeing no time was ill ſpent, nor opportunitie omitted on any ſide, in the performance of ech mans duetie, according to his place.

Ieſen

It fell out that the Tobie which was bound for Conſtantinople had made ſuch good ſpeede, and gotten ſuch good weather, that ſhe firſt of al the reſt came back to the appointed place of Zante, and not forgetting the former concluſion, did there caſt ancre, attending the arriuall of the reſt of the fleete, which accordingly (their buſines firſt performed) failed not to keepe promiſe. The firſt next after the Tobie was the Royal Marchant, which together with the William and Iohn came from Tripolie in Syria, and arriued at Zante within the compaſſe of the foreſaide time limitted. Theſe ſhips in token of the ioy on all parts conceiued for their happy meeting, ſpared not the diſcharging of their Ordinance, the ſounding of drums & trumpets, the ſpreading of Enſignes with other warlike and ioyfull behauiours, expreſſing by theſe outward ſignes, the inward gladneſſe of their mindes, being all as ready to ioyne together in mutuall conſent to reſiſt the cruel enemie, as now in ſporting maner they made myrth and paſtime among themſelues. Theſe three had not bene long in the hauen, but the Edward Bonauenture alſo, together with the Suſan her conſort, were come from Venice with their lading, the ſight of whom increaſed the ioy of the reſt, and they no leſſe glad of the preſence of the others, ſaluted them in moſt friendly and kinde ſort, according to the maner of the Seas: and whereas ſome of theſe ſhips ſtoode at that inſtant in ſome want of victuals, they were all content to ſtay in the port, till the neceſſities of ech ſhippe were ſupplied, and nothing wanted to ſet out for their returne.

In this port of Zante the newes was freſh and currant, of two ſeuerall armies and fleetes prouided by the king of Spaine, and lying in waite to intercept them: the one conſiſting of 30. ſtrong Gallies, ſo well appointed in all reſpects for the warre, that no neceſſary thing wanted: and this fleete houered about the Streights of Gibraltar. The other armie had in it 20. Gallies, whereof ſome were of Sicilie, and ſome of the Iſland of Malta, vnder the charge and gouernment of Iohn Andrea Dorea, a Captaine of name ſeruing the king of Spaine. Theſe two diuers and ſtrong fleetes waited and attended in the Seas for none, but the Engliſh ſhippes, and no doubt made their accompt and ſure reckoning that not a ſhippe ſhould eſcape their furie. And the opinion alſo of the inhabitants of the Iſle of Zante was, that in reſpect of the number of Gallies in both theſe armies, hauing receiued ſuch ſtreight commandement from the king, our ſhips and men being but few, and little in compariſon of them, it was a thing in humane reaſon impoſſible, that wee ſhould paſſe either without ſpoiling, if we reſiſted, or without compoſition at the leaſt, and acknowledgement of duetie to the Spaniſh king.

But it was neither the report of the attendance of theſe armies, nor the opinions of the people, nor any thing elſe, that could daunt or diſmay the courages of our men, who grounding themſelues vpon the goodneſſe of their cauſe, and the promiſe of God, to bee deliuered from ſuch as without reaſon ſought their deſtruction, caried reſolute mindes, notwithſtanding all impediments to aduenture through the Seas, and to finiſh their Nauigation, maugre the beards of the Spaniſh ſouldiers. But leaſt they ſhould ſeeme too careleſſe, and too ſecure of their eſtate, and by laying the whole and entire burden of their ſafetie vpon Gods prouidence, ſhould fooliſhly preſume altogether of his helpe, and neglect the meanes which was put into their handes, they failed not to enter into counſell among themſelues, and to deliberate aduiſedly for their beſt defence. And in the end with generall conſent, the Marchant Royall was appointed Admirall of the fleete, and the Tobie Viceadmiral, by whoſe orders the reſt promiſed to be directed, and ech ſhippe vowed not to breake from another, whatſoeuer extremitie ſhould fall out, but to ſtand to it to the death, for the honour of their Countrey, and the fruſtrating of the hope of the ambitious and proud enemie.

Thus in good order they left Zante and the Caſtle of Græcia, and committed themſelues againe to the Seas, and proceeded in their courſe and voyage in quietnes, without ſight of any enemie, till they came neere to Pantalarea, an Iſland ſo called, betwixt Sicilie, and the coaſt of Affricke: into ſight whereof they came the 13. day of Iuly 1586. And the ſame day in the morning about 7. of the clocke they deſcried 13. ſailes in number, which were of the Gallies, lying in waite of purpoſe for them, in and about that place. As ſoone as the Engliſh ſhips had ſpied them, they by and by according to a common order, made themſelues ready for a fight, layed out their Ordinance, ſcoured, charged, and primed them, diſplayed their enſignes, and left nothing vndone to arme themſelues throughly. In the meane time, the Gallies more and more approched the ſhips, and in their banners there appeared the armes of the Iſles of Sicilia, and Malta, being all as then in the ſeruice and pay of the Spaniard. Immediatly, both the Admirals of the Gallies ſent from ech of them a frigate, to the Admiral of our Engliſh ſhips, which being come neere them, the Sicilian frigat firſt hailed them, and demanded of them whence they were: They anſwered that they were of England, the armes whereof appeared in their colours. Whereupon the ſaide frigat expoſtulated with them, and aſked why they delayed to ſende or come with their Captaines and purſers to Don Pedro de Leiua their Generall, to acknowledge their duty and obedience to him in the name of the Spaniſh king, Lord of thoſe ſeas? Our men replied, and ſaid, that they owed no ſuch duetie nor obedience to him, and therefore would acknowledge none, but commanded the frigat to depart with that anſwere, and not to ſtay longer a brabling, vpon her perill. With that away ſhe went, and vp comes toward them the other frigat of Malta, and ſhee in like ſort hailed the Admiral, and would needs know whence they were, and where they had bene. Our Engliſhmen in the Admirall, not diſdaining an anſwere, tolde them that they were of England, Marchants of London, had bene at Turkie, and were now returning home: and to be requited in this caſe, they alſo demaunded of the frigat whence ſhe and the reſt of the Gallies were: the meſſenger anſwered, we are of Malta, and for mine owne part my name is Cauallero. Theſe Gallies are in ſeruice and pay to the king of Spaine, vnder the conduct of Don Pedro de Leiua a noble man of Spaine, who hath bene commanded hither by the King with this preſent force and armie, of purpoſe to intercept you. You ſhall therefore (quoth he) do well to repaire to him, to know his pleaſure, he is a noble man of good behauiour and courteſie, and meanes you no ill. The Captaine of the Engliſh Admiral, whoſe name was M. Edward Wilkinſon, replied and ſaid. We purpoſe not at this time to make triall of Don Pedro his courteſie, whereof we are ſuſpitious and doubtful, and not without good cauſe: vſing withall good words to the meſſenger, and willing him to come aboord him, promiſing ſecuritie and good vſage, that thereby he might the better knowe the Spaniards minde: whereupon he in deed left his frigat, and came aboord him, whom hee intertained in friendly ſort, and cauſed a cuppe of wine to be drawne for him, which he tooke and beganne, with his cap in his hand, and with reuerend termes to drinke to the health of the Queene of England, ſpeaking very honourably of her Maieſtie, and giuing good ſpeeches of the courteous vſage and intertainement that he himſelfe had receiued in London, at the time that the duke of Alenſon, brother to the late French king was laſt in England: and after he had well drunke, hee tooke his leaue, ſpeaking well of the ſufficiencie and goodneſſe of our ſhippes, and eſpecially of the Marchant Royal, which he confeſſed to haue ſeene before, riding in the Thames neere London. He was no ſooner come to Don Pedro de Leiua the Spaniſh general, but he was ſent off againe, and returned to the Engliſh Admirall, ſaying that the pleaſure of the Generall was this, that either their Captaines, Maſters and Purſers ſhould come to him with ſpeed, or elſe hee would ſet vpon them, and either take them or ſinke them. The reply was made by M. Wilkinſon aforeſaid, that not a man ſhould come to him: and for the bragge and threat of Don Pedro, it was not that Spaniſh brauado that ſhould make them yeeld a iot to their hinderance, but they were as ready to make reſiſtance, as he to offer an iniurie. Whereupon Cauallero the meſſenger left bragging, and began to perſwade them in quiet ſort, and with many wordes, but all his labour was to no purpoſe, and as his threat did nothing terrifie them, ſo his perſwaſion did nothing mooue them to doe that which hee required. At the laſt he intreated to haue the Marchant of the Admirall caried by him as a meſſenger to the Generall, that ſo he might be ſatiſfied, and aſſured of their mindes by one of their owne company. But M. Wilkinſon would agree to no ſuch thing, although Richard Rowit the marchant himſelfe ſeemed willing to bee imployed in that meſſage, and laboured by reaſonable perſwaſions to induce M. Wilkinſon to graunt it, as hoping to be an occaſion by his preſence and diſcreet anſweres to ſatiſfie the Generall, and thereby to ſaue the effuſion of Chriſtian blood, if it ſhould grow to a battel. And he ſeemed ſo much the more willing to be ſent, by how much deeper the othes and proteſtations of this Cauallero were, that he would (as hee was a true knight and a ſouldier) deliuer him backe againe in ſafetie to his company. Albeit, M. Wilkinſon, which by his long experience had receiued ſufficient triall of Spaniſh inconſtancie and periurie, wiſhed him in no caſe to put his life and libertie in hazard vpon a Spaniards othe. But at laſt, vpon much intreatie, hee yeelded to let him go to the General, thinking in deed, that good ſpeeches and anſweres of reaſon would haue contented him, whereas otherwiſe refuſall to do ſo, might peraduenture haue prouoked the more diſcontentment.

M. Rowit therefore paſſing to the Spaniſh Generall, the reſt of the Gallies hauing eſpied him, thought in deed that the Engliſh were rather determined to yeelde, then to fight, and therefore came flocking about the frigat, euery man crying out, Que nueuas, que nueuas, Haue theſe Engliſh men yeelded? the frigat anſwered, Not ſo, they neither haue, nor purpoſe to yeeld, onely they haue ſent a man of their company to ſpeake with our Generall: and being come to the Gallie wherein he was, he ſhewed himſelfe to M. Rowit in his armour, his guard of ſouldiers attending vpon him in armour alſo, and began to ſpeake very proudly in this ſort: Thou Engliſhman, from whence is your fleete, why ſtand ye aloofe off, knowe ye not your duetie to the Catholique King, whoſe perſon I here repreſent? Where are your billes of lading, your letters, paſports, and the chiefe of your men? Thinke ye my attendance in theſe ſeas to be in vaine, or my perſon to no purpoſe? Let al theſe things be done out of hand as I command, vpon paine of my further diſpleaſure and the ſpoyle of you all? These wordes of the Spaniſh Generall were not ſo outragiouſly pronounced, as they were mildly anſwered by M. Rowit, who tolde him that they were al Marchantmen, vſing trafique in honeſt ſort, and ſeeking to paſſe quietly, if they were not vrged further then reaſon. As for the king of Spaine, he thought (for his part) that there was amitie betwixt him and his ſoueraigne the Queene of England, ſo that neither he nor his officers ſhould goe about to offer any ſuch iniurie to Engliſh Marchants, who as they were farre from giuing offence to any man, ſo they would be loath to take an abuſe at the handes of any, or ſit downe to their loſſe, where their abilitie was able to make defence. And as touching his commandement aforeſaide, for the acknowledging of dutie, in ſuch particular ſort, he told him, that where there was no dutie owing, there none ſhould be performed, aſſuring him that their whole company and ſhippes in generall, ſtood reſolutely vpon the negatiue, and would not yeeld to any ſuch vnreaſonable demaund, ioyned with ſuch imperious and abſolute maner of commanding. Why then, ſaid he, if they wil neither come to yeeld, nor ſhew obedience to me in the name of my king, I wil either ſinke them or bring them to harbor, and ſo tell them from me. With that the frigat came away with M. Rowit, and brought him aboord the Engliſh Admiral againe according to promiſe: who was no ſooner entred in, but by and by defiance was ſounded on both ſides: the Spaniards hewed off the noſes of the Gallies, that nothing might hinder the leuell of the ſhot, and the Engliſh on the other ſide couragiouſly prepared themſelues to the combat, euery man according to his roome, bent to performe his office with alacritie and diligence. In the meane time a Cannon was diſcharged from the Admirall of the gallies, which being the onſet of the fight, was preſently anſwered by the Engliſh Admiral with a Culuering: ſo the ſkirmiſh began, and grew hot and terrible, there was no powder nor ſhot ſpared: ech Engliſh ſhip matched it ſelfe in good order againſt two Spaniſh Gallies, beſides the inequalitie of the frigats on the Spaniards ſide: and although our men performed their parts with ſingular valure, according to their ſtrength, inſomuch that the enemie as amaſed therewith would oftentimes pauſe and ſtay, and conſult what was beſt to be done, yet they ceaſed not in the midſt of their buſineſſe to make prayer to Almighty God the reuenger of al euils, and the giuer of victories, that it would pleaſe him to aſſiſt them in that good quarell of theirs, in defending themſelues againſt ſo proud a tyrant, to teach their handes to warre, and their fingers to fight, that the glory of the victory might redound to his Name, and to the honor of true Religion, which the inſolent enemie ſought ſo much to ouerthrowe. Contrariwiſe, the fooliſh Spaniardes cried out according to their maner, not to God, but to our Lady (as they terme the virgin Mary) ſaying, O Lady helpe, O bleſſed Lady giue vs the victory, and the honor thereof ſhalbe thine. Thus with blowes & prayers on both ſides the fight continued furious and ſharpe, and doubtful a long time to which part the victory would incline: til at the laſt the Admiral of the Gallies of Sicilie began to warpe from the fight, and to holde vp her ſide for feare of ſinking, and after her went alſo two others in like caſe, whom al the ſort of them incloſed, labouring by all their meanes to keepe them aboue water, being ready by the force of Engliſh ſhot which they had receiued, to periſh in the ſeas: & what ſlaughter was done among the Spaniards themſelues, the Engliſh were vncertaine, but by a probable coniecture apparant afar off, they ſuppoſed their loſſe was ſo great, that they wanted men to continue A fight of fiue houres. the charging of their pieces: whereupon with ſhame and diſhonor, after 5. houres ſpent in the battel, they withdrew themſelues: and the Engliſh contented in reſpect of their deepe lading, rather to continue their voyage then to follow the chaſe, ceaſed from further blowes, with the loſſe onely of two men ſlaine amongſt them all, and another hurt in his arme, whom M. Wilkinſon with his good words and friendly promiſes did ſo comfort, that he nothing eſteemed the ſmart of his wound in reſpect of the honour of the victory, and the ſhamefull repulſe of the enemy.

Thus with duetiful thankes to the mercy of God for his gracious aſſiſtance in that danger, the Engliſh ſhips proceeded in their Nauigation, and comming as high as Alger, a port towne vpon the coaſt of Barbary, they fell with it, of purpoſe to refreſh themſelues after their wearineſſe, and to take in ſuch ſupply of freſh water & victuals, as they needed: they were no ſooner entred into the port, but immediatly the king thereof ſent a meſſenger to the ſhips to knowe what they were, with which meſſenger the chiefe maſter of ech ſhippe repaired to the king, and acquainted him not onely with the ſtate of their ſhips, in reſpect of marchandize, but with the late fight which they had paſſed with the Spaniſh Gallies, reporting euery particular circumſtance in word as it fell out in action: whereof the ſaid king ſhewed himſelfe maruellous glad, interteining them in the beſt ſort, and promiſing abundant reliefe of all their wants, making generall proclamation in the city vpon paine of death, that no man of what degree or ſtate ſoeuer he were, ſhould preſume either to hinder them in their affaires, or to offer them any maner of iniury in body or goods. By vertue whereof they diſpatched al things in excellent good ſort, with al fauor & peaceableneſſe: only ſuch priſoners and captiues of the Spaniards as were in the Citie, ſeeing the good vſage which they receiued, and hearing alſo what ſeruice they had performed againſt the foreſaide Gallies, grudged exceedingly againſt them, and ſought as much as they could to practiſe ſome miſchiefe againſt them: and one amongſt the reſt ſeeing an Engliſhman alone in a certaine lane of the Citie, came vpon him ſudденly, and with his knife thruſt him in the ſide, yet made no ſuch great wound, but that it was eaſily recouered. The Engliſh company hearing of it, acquainted the king with the fact, who immediatly ſent both for the party that had receiued the wound, and the offender alſo, and cauſed an executioner in the preſence of himſelfe and the Engliſh, to chaſtiſe the ſlaue euen to death, which was performed to the ende that no man ſhould preſume to commit the like part, or to doe any thing in contempt of his royal commandement.

The Engliſh hauing receiued this good iuſtice at the kings hands, and al other things that they wanted, or could craue for the furniſhing of their ſhippes, tooke their leaue of him, and of the reſt of their friendes, that were reſident in Alger, and put out to Sea, looking to meete with the ſecond army of the Spaniſh king, which waited for them about the mouth of the Straights of Gibraltar, which they were of neceſſitie to paſſe. But comming neere to the ſaid Streight, it pleaſed God to raiſe at that inſtant a very darke and miſtie fogge, ſo that one ſhip coulde not diſcerne another, if it were 40. paces off: by meanes whereof, together with the notable faire Eaſterne winds that then blewe moſt fit for their courſe, they paſſed with great ſpeed through the Streight, and might haue paſſed with that good gale, had there bene 500. Gallies to withſtand them, and the aire neuer ſo cleare for euery ſhip to be ſeene. But yet the Spaniſh Gallies had a ſight of them when they were come within 3. Engliſh miles of the towne, and made after them in all poſſible haſte, and although they ſaw that they were farre out of their reach, yet in a vaine fury and fooliſh pride, they ſhot off their Ordinance, and made a ſtirre in the Sea as if they had bene in the midſt of them, which vanitie of theirs miniſtred to our men notable matter of pleaſure and mirth, ſeeing men to fight with ſhadowes, and to take ſo great paines to ſo ſmall purpoſe.

The ſecond Spaniſh fleete lying in waite for the Engliſh.

But thus it pleaſed God to deride, and delude all the forces of that proud Spaniſh king, which he had prouided of purpoſe to diſtreſſe the Engliſh, who notwithſtanding paſſed through both his Armies, in the one, little hurt, and in the other nothing touched, to the glory of his immortall Name, the honour of our Prince and Countrey, and the iuſt commendation of ech mans ſeruice performed in that voyage.

The returne of Maſter VVilliam Harborne from Conſtantinople ouer land to London, 1588.

I Departed from Conſtantinople with 30. perſons of my ſuit and family the 3. of Auguſt. Paſſing through the Countries of Thracia, now called Romania the great, Valachia & Moldauia, where ariuing the 5. of September I was according to the Grand Signior his commandement very courteouſly interteined by Peter his poſitiue prince, a Greeke by profeſſion, with whom was concluded that her Maieſties ſubiects there traffiquing ſhould pay but three vpon the hundreth, which as well his owne Subiects as all other nations anſwere: whoſe letters to her Maieſtie be extant. Whence I proceeded into Poland, where the high Chanceler ſent for mee the 27. of the ſame moneth. And after moſt honorable intertainment imparted with me in ſecret maner the late paſſed and preſent occurrents of that kingdome, & alſo he writ to her Maieſtie.

The letters of the Prince of Moldauia to the Queene.

Letters of the Chanceler of Poland to the Queene.

Thence I haſted vnto Elbing, where the 12. of October I was moſt friendly welcomed by the Senate of that City, whom I finde and iudge to be faithfully deuoted to her Maieſties ſeruice, whoſe letters likewiſe vnto the ſame were preſented me. No leſſe at Dantzik the 27. of that moneth I was courteouſly receiued by one of the Buroughmaſters accompanied with two others of the Senate, & a Ciuil doctor their Secretarie. After going through the land of Pomer I reſted one day at Stetin, where, for that ẏ duke was abſent, nothing enſued. At Roſtoke I paſſed through the Citie without any ſtay, and at Wiſmar receiued like friendly greeting as in the other places: but at Lubeck, for that I came late and departed early in the morning, I was not viſited. At Hamburg the 19. of Nouember, and at Stoad the ninth of December in like maner I was ſaluted by a Boroughmaſter and the Secretarie, and in all theſe places they preſented mee ſundry ſorts of their beſt wine and freſh fiſh, euery of them with a long diſcourſe, congratulating, in the names of their whole Senate, her Maieſties victory ouer the Spaniard, and my ſafe returne, concluding with offer of their ready ſeruice to her future diſpoſing. Yet the Dantziks after my departure thence cauſed the Marchants to pay cuſtome for the goods they brought with them in my company, which none other towne neither Infidels nor Chriſtians on ẏ way euer demanded. And notwithſtanding the premiſſes, I was moſt certainly informed of ſundry of our nation there reſident that moſt of the Hanſe-towns vpon the ſea coaſts, eſpecially Dantzik, Lubeck, and Hamborough haue laden and were ſhipping for Spaine, great prouiſion of corne, cables, ropes, powder, ſaltpeter, hargubuſſes, armour, iron, leade, copper, and all other munition ſeruing for the warre. Whereupon I gather their fained courteſie proceeded rather for feare then of any good affection vnto her Maieſties ſeruice, Elbing and Stoad onely excepted, which of duetie for their commoditie I eſteemed well affected.

The priuilege of Peter the Prince of Moldauia graunted to the Engliſh Marchants.

PEtrus Dei gratia princeps Valachiæ & Moldauiæ; ſignificamus præſentibus, vniuerſis & ſingulis quorum intereſt ac intererit, quòd cum magnifico domino Guilielmo Hareborne oratore Sereniſsimæ ac potentiſsimæ dominæ, dominæ Elizabethæ Dei gratia Angliæ, Franciæ, ac Hiberniæ Reginæ apud Sereniſsimum ac potentiſsimum Turcarum Imperatorem hanc conſtitutionem fecerimus: Nimirùm vt dehinc ſuę Serenitatis ſubditis, omnibuſqúe mercatoribus integrum ſit hìc in prouincia noſtra commorandi, conuerſandi, mercandi, vendendi, contrahendíque, imo omnia exercendi, quæ mercaturæ ac vitæ humanæ ſocietas vſuſqúe requirit, ſine vlla alicuius contradictione, aut inhibitione: ſaluo ac integro tamen iure Telonij noſtri; hoc eſt, vt a ſingulis rebus centum ducatorum pretij, tres numerent. Quod ratum ac firmum conſtitutione noſtra haberi volumus. In cuius rei firmius teſtimonium, ſigillum noſtrum appreſſum eſt. Actum in caſtris noſtris die 27. menſis Auguſti, anno Domini 1588.

The ſame in Engliſh.

PEter by the grace of God prince of Valachia and Moldauia; we ſignifie by theſe preſents to all and ſinguler perſons, whom it doth or ſhall concerne, that we haue made this agreement with the worthy gentleman William Hareborne Ambaſſador of the right high and mighty prince, the Lady Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, with the moſt puiſſant and mightie Emperour of the Turkes: To witte, that from henceforth it ſhalbe lawfull for her highneſſe ſubiects and all her Marchants, to remaine, conuerſe, buy, ſel, bargaine and exerciſe all ſuch things, as the trade of marchandiſe, and humane ſocietie and vſe requireth, without any hinderance or let: the right of our Cuſtome alwayes reſerued; That is, that they pay three ducats vpon all ſuch things as amount to the price of one hundred ducats. Which by this our ordinance we command to be ſurely and firmely obſerued; For the more aſſured teſtimony whereof, our ſeale is hereunto annexed. Giuen in our Campe the 27. of the moneth of Auguſt in the yeere of our Lord 1588.

Ambaſſadors allowances.

THe Ambaſſadour of the Emperor is allowed one thouſand Aſpers the day.

The Ambaſſadour of the French king heretofore enioyed the like: but of late yeeres by meanes of diſpleaſure conceiued by Mahumet then Viceroy, it was reduced to ſixe crownes the day, beſide the prouiſion of his Eſquier of his ſtable.

The Ambaſſadours of Poland, and for the ſtate of Venice are not Ligiers as theſe two aboueſaid. The ſaid Polack is allowed 12. French crownes the day during his abode, which may be for a moneth. Very ſeldome do the ſtate of Venice ſend any Ambaſſador otherwiſe, then enforced of vrgent neceſſity: but in ſtead thereof keepe there their Agent, preſident ouer other Marchants, of them termed a bailife, who hath none allowance of the Grand Signior, although his port & ſtate is in maner as magnifical as the other aforeſaid ambaſſadors. The Spaniſh Ambaſſador was equall with others in Ianizaries: but for ſo much as he would not according to cuſtome folow the liſt of other ambaſſadors in making preſents to ẏ Grand Signior, he had none alowance. His abode there was 3. yeres, at the end wherof, hauing cōcluded a truce for 6. yeres, taking place frō his firſt comming in Nouember laſt paſt 1580, he was not admitted to the preſence of the Grand Signior.

The letters of Sinan Baſſa chiefe counſellour to Sultan Murad Can the Grand Signior, to the ſacred Maieſtie of Elizabeth Queene of England, ſhewing that vpon her requeſt, and for her ſake eſpecially, hee graunted peace vnto the King and kingdome of Poland.

The ſame in Engliſh.

MOſt glorious, and the moſt reſplendent of women, moſt ſelect Princeſſe, moſt gratious Elizabeth Queene of the valiant followers of Ieſus in the famous kingdom of England, moſt wiſe gouerneſſe of all the affaires and buſineſſes of the people and family of the Nazarens, moſt ſweet fountaine of brightneſſe and glory, moſt acceptable cloud of raine, inheritreſſe & Ladie of the bleſſedneſſe and glory of the renowmed kingdome of England, to whom in humble wiſe all men offer their petitions: wiſhing of the almightie Creator moſt happie increaſe and proſperous ſucceſſe vnto all your Maieſties affaires and actions, and offering vp mutuall & perpetuall vowes worthy of our familiarity, with eternall prayſes: In moſt friendly manner we ſignifie vnto your princely Highneſſe, that certaine yeeres paſt the moſt mightie Ceſarlike maieſtie of the Grand Signor waged vnſpeakeable warres with Caſul-bas the Prince of the Perſians, in regarde of which warres he would not goe in battell againſt any other places; and for that cauſe certaine theeues in the partes of Polonia called Coſacks, and other notorious perſons liuing in the ſame partes ceaſed not to trouble and moleſt the ſubiects of our moſt mightie Emperour. But now hauing finiſhed and brought to ſome good iſſue his affaires in Perſia, determining to puniſh the ſaide malefactors of Poland, and for that purpoſe committing an army vnto the Beglerbeg of Grecia, and the yeere laſt paſt, ſending his imperiall commaundement vnto the Prince of the Tartars, he hath forraged, moleſted, and layed waſte ſome part of the kingdome of Poland, and the Coſacks and other notorious offenders haue receiued condigne puniſhment. Which the king of Poland perceiuing ſent two Embaſſadours to his imperiall Highneſſe ſignifying, that he would hunt out the ſaid malefactors, and inflict moſt ſeuere puniſhments vpon them, and alſo that he would better his gift, which he hath for many yeeres heretofore ordinarily ſent vnto the porch of his imperiall Highneſſe. Howbeit his imperiall maieſtie (vpon whom the almightie creator hath beſtowed ſo great power, and who vouchſafeth to giue eare vnto all humble ſuppliants) reiecting the ſupplication of the King of Poland, determined againe to ſend his armie againſt the ſaid king, and by the helpe of the Almightie creator, vtterly to ſubuert and ouerthrowe his kingdome. But your Maieſties Embaſſadour reſident in the bleſſed and glorious porch of his imperiall Highneſſe interpoſing himſelfe as a mediatour, ſignifying that from the partes of Poland you were furniſhed with corne, gun-powder, maſtes of ſhips, guns, and other neceſſaries, and crauing peace on the behalfe of the kingdome and king of Poland, and making interceſſion, that the ſaid king might not be moleſted nor troubled by the meanes of the Grand Signor, & declaring that this was your Maieſties moſt earneſt deſire; ſo ſoone as the report and interceſſion of your Maieſties Embaſſadour was ſignified vnto the Grand Signor, for your ſake, vnto whom all honour and fauourable regard is due, vpon the condition aforeſaid, namely, that the wicked Coſacks might be ſought out and grieuouſly puniſhed, or that their offences might be remitted for the value of ſome ſmall gift, vpon this condition (I ſay) the letters of his imperiall Highneſſe were ſent vnto the king of Poland. Howbeit had not this concluſion of league and amitie beene ſollicited on the behalfe of your Maieſtie, his imperiall Highneſſe would neuer haue vouchſafed the ſame vnto the kingdome of Poland. But for your Maieſties ſake his imperiall Highneſſe hath exhibited this ſo ſingular a fauour vnto the ſaid king and kingdome of Poland. And hereof your Maieſtie and the king of Poland ought certainely to be perſwaded. We wiſh your Maieſtie moſt happily and well to fare. Giuen at Conſtantinople in the ende of the moneth called Sabaũ, in the yeare of our ſacred prophet Mahomet 998, and in the yeere of Ieſus 1590, the 12 of Iune.

The ſecond letters Patents graunted by the Queenes Maieſtie to the Right worſhipfull companie of the Engliſh Marchants for the Leuant, the ſeuenth of Ianuarie 1592.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Irelande, defender of the faith &c. To all our Officers, miniſters and ſubiects, and to all other people aſwell within this our Realme of England, as elſe where vnder our obeyſance and iuriſdiction or otherwiſe vnto whom theſe our letters ſhalbe ſeene, ſhewed, or read, greeting.

Where our welbeloued ſubiects Edward Osborne knight Alderman of our citie of London, William Hareborne Eſquire, and Richard Staper of our ſaide citie Marchant, haue by great aduenture and induſtrie with their great coſt and charges by the ſpace of ſundry late yeeres trauelled, and cauſed trauell to be taken aſwell by ſecrete and good meanes, as by daungerous wayes and paſſages both by lande and ſea to finde out and ſet open a trade of marchandize and traffike into the landes, Ilandes, Dominions, and territories of the great Turke, commonly called the Grand Signor, not before that time in the memorie of any man now liuing knowen to be commonly vſed and frequented by way of marchandize by any the marchantes or other ſubiectes of vs or our progenitors: And alſo haue by their like good meanes and induſtrie and great charges procured of the ſayde Grand Signor in our name, amitie, ſafetie and freedome for trade and traffike of marchandize to be vſed and continued by our ſubiects within his ſayd dominions, whereby we perceiue and finde that both many good actions haue beene done and performed, and hereafter are likely continually to be done and performed for the peace of Chriſtendome: Namely by the reliefe and diſcharge of many Chriſtians which haue beene, and which hereafter may happen to be in thraldome and bondage vnder the ſayde Grand Signor and his vaſſals or ſubiects. And alſo good and profitable vent and vtterance of the commodities of our Realme, and ſundrie other great benefites to the aduancement of our honour and dignitie Royall, the maintenance of our Nauie, the encreaſe of our cuſtomes, and the reuenues of our Crowne, and generally the great wealth of our whole Realme.

And whereas we are enformed of the ſayd Edward Osborne knight, William Hareborne, and Richard Staper, that George Barne, Richard Martine, Iohn Harte knights, and other marchants of our ſayd Citie of London haue by the ſpace of eight or nine yeeres paſt ioyned themſelues in companie, trade and traffike with them the ſayd Edward Osborne knight, William Hareborne and Richard Staper, into the ſayde dominions of the ſayd great Turke, to the furtherance thereof and the good of the Realme.

And whereas further it is made knowen vnto vs, that within fewe yeeres now paſt our louing and good ſubiects Thomas Cordall, Edward Holmeden, William Garraway and Paul Banning, and ſundry other marchants of our ſaid Citie of London, haue likewiſe at their great coſtes and charges, builded and furniſhed diuerſe good and ſeruiceable ſhippes and therewith to their like coſts and charges haue traded and frequented, and from time to time doe trade and frequent and traffike by ſea with the commodities of our Realme to Venice, Zante, Candie, and Zephalonia and other the dominions of the Segniorie and State of Venice, and thereby haue made and mainteyned, and doe make and continually maintaine diuers good ſhippes with mariners ſkilfull and fitte and neceſſarie for our ſeruice: and doe vent out of our Realme into thoſe partes diuerſe commodities of our Realme, and returne hither into our ſayde Realme many good and neceſſarie commodities for the common wealth thereof: All which traffike, as well inward as outward vntill it hath beene otherwiſe brought to paſſe by the ſayde endeuours, coſts, and charges of our ſayde ſubiects, was in effect by our ſubiectes wholy diſcontinued.

Knowe yee, that hereupon we greatly tendring the wealth of our people and the encouragement of them and other our louing ſubiects in their good enterpriſes for the aduancement of lawfull traffike to the benefite of our common wealth, haue of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heyres, and ſucceſſours, doe giue and graunt vnto our ſayd truſtie and welbeloued ſubiectes Edwarde Osborne Knight, George Barne Knight, George Bonde knight, Richard Martine knight, Iohn Harte knight, Iohn Hawkins knight, William Maſſam, Iohn Spencer, Richard Salconſtall, Nicholas Moſley Aldermen of our ſayde Citie of London, William Hareborne, Edwarde Barton, William Borrough Eſquires, Richard Staper, Thomas Cordall, Henrie Paruis, Thomas Laurence, Edwarde Holmeden, William Garraway, Robert Dowe, Paul Banning, Roger Clarke, Henrie Anderſon, Robert Offley, Philip Grimes, Andrewe Banning, Iames Staper, Robert Sadler, Leonarde Power, George Salter, Nicholas Leate, Iohn Eldred, William Shales, Richard May, William Wilkes, Andrewe Fones, Arthur Jackſon, Edmund Anſell, Ralph Aſhley, Thomas Farrington, Roberte Sandie, Thomas Garraway, Edwarde Lethlande, Thomas Dalkins, Thomas Norden, Robert Bate, Edward Sadler, Richard Darſall, Richard Martine Iunior, Ralph Fitch, Nicholas Pearde, Thomas Simons, and Francis Dorrington, that they and euery of them by the name of Gouernour and company of Marchants of the Leuant ſhall from hence foorth for the terme of twelue yeeres next enſuing the date hereof bee one bodie, fellowſhippe and companie of themſelues both in deede and in name: And them by the name of Gouernour and companie of marchantes of the Leuant wee doe ordayne, incorporate, name, and declare by theſe preſentes, and that the ſame fellowſhippe and companie from hence foorth ſhall and may haue one Gouernour. And in conſideration that the ſayde Edwarde Osborne Knight hath beene of the

The marchāts aboue named be made a felowſhip and companie for 12 yeeres by the name of the Gouernor and companie of the marchants of the Leuant.

the chiefe ſetters foorth and actors in the opening and putting in practiſe of the ſayde trade to the dominions of the ſayde Gand Signor: Wee doe therefore ſpecially make, ordaine, and conſtitute the ſayde Edwarde Osborne Knight, to bee nowe Gouernour during the time of one whole yeere nowe next following, if hee ſo long ſhall liue: And after the expiration of the ſayde yeere, or deceaſe of the ſayde Edward Osborne the choyſe of the next Gouernour, and ſo of euery Gouernour from time to time during the ſayde terme of twelue yeeres to be at the election of the ſayde fellowſhippe or companie of marchantes of the Leuant or the more part of them yeerely to be choſen, and that they the ſayde Sir Edwarde Osborne, and all the reſidue of the ſayde fellowſhippe or companie of Marchantes of the Leuant and euerie of them, and all the ſonnes of them and of euery of them, and all ſuch their apprentiſes and ſeruants of them and of euery of them, which haue beene or hereafter ſhall be imployed in the ſayde trade by the ſpace of foure yeeres or vpwardes by themſelues, their ſeruantes, factors or deputies, ſhall and may by the ſpace of twelue yeeres from the day of the date of theſe our letters Patents freely traffike, and vſe the trade of Marchandize as well by ſea as by lande into and from the dominions of the ſayde Grand Signor, and into and from Venice, Zante, Candie and Zephalonia, and other the dominions of the Signiorie and State of Venice, and alſo by lande through the Countries of the ſayde Grand Signor into and from the Eaſt India, lately diſcouered by Iohn Newberie, Ralph Fitch, William Leech, and Iames Storie, ſent with our letters to that purpoſe at the proper coſts and charge of the ſayde Marchants or ſome of them: and into and from euerie of them in ſuch order, manner, forme, libertie and condition to all intentes and purpoſes as ſhall be betweene them of the ſayde fellowſhippe or companie of Marchantes of the Leuant or the more part of them for the time being limited and agreed, and not otherwiſe, without any moleſtation, impeachment, or diſturbance; any lawe, ſtatute, vſage, or diuerſitie of Religion or faith, or any other cauſe or matter whatſoeuer to the contrarie notwithſtanding.

Sir Edward Osborne appointed the firſt Gouernour.

A priuiledge for the Eaſt Indies.

And that the ſayde Gouernour and companie of Marchantes of the Leuant, or the greater part of them for the better gouernement of the ſayde fellowſhippe and companie, ſhall and may within fortie dayes next and immediatly following after the date heereof, and ſo from thence foorth yeerely during the continuance of this our graunt, aſſemble themſelues in ſome conuenient place, and that they or the greater parte of them being ſo aſſembled, ſhall and may elect, ordaine, nominate, and appoint twelue diſcreete and honeſt perſons of the ſayde companie to be aſſiſtants to the ſayde Gouernour, and to continue in the ſayde office of aſſiſtants, vntill they ſhall die or bee remooued by the ſayde Gouernour and companie or the greater part of them. And if it happen the ſayde aſſiſtantes or any of them to die, or be remooued from their ſayde office at anie time during the continuance of this our graunt: that then and ſo often it ſhall and may bee lawfull to and for the ſayde Gouernour and companie of marchantes of the Leuant, or the greater part of them to elect and chuſe one or more other perſons of the ſayd companie into the place or places of euery ſuch perſon or perſons ſo dying or happening to be remooued, as is aforeſayde. And wee will and ordaine that the ſame perſon or perſons ſo as is aforeſayde to be elected ſhall be of the ſayd number of aſſiſtants of the ſayde companie. And this to be done ſo often as the caſe ſhall ſo require. And that it ſhall and may be lawfull to and for the ſayde Edwarde Osborne Knight, George Barne Knight, George Bonde knight, Richard Martine knight, Iohn Hart knight, Iohn Hawkins knight, William Maſſam, Iohn Spencer, Richard Saltonſtall, Nicholas Moſley, William Hareborne, Edwarde Barton, William Borrough, Richard Staper, Thomas Cordall, Henrie Paruis, Thomas Laurence, Edwarde Holmeden, William Garraway, Robert Dowe, Paul Banning, Roger Clarke, Henrie Anderſon, Robert Offley, Philip Grimes, Andrewe Banning, Iames Staper, Robert Sadler, Leonarde Power, George Salter, Nicholas Leate, Iohn Eldred, William Shales, Richard May, William Wilkes, Andrewe Fones, Arthur Iackſon, Edmund Anſell, Ralph Aſhley, Thomas Farrington, Roberte Sandie, Thomas Garraway, Edwarde Lethlande, Thomas Dalkins, Thomas Norden, Robert Bate, Edward Sadler, Richard Darſall, Richard Martine Iunior, Ralph Fitch, Nicholas Pearde, Thomas Simons, and Francis Dorrington aforeſayde, or any of them to aſſemble themſelues for or about any the matters, cauſes or affaires or buſineſſes of the ſayde trade in any place or places for the ſame conuenient from time to time during the ſayde terme of twelue yeeres within our dominions or elſe where. And that alſo it ſhall and may bee lawfull for them or the more part of them to make, ordaine and conſtitute reaſonable lawes and orders for the good gouernement of the ſayde companie, and for the better aduauncement and continuance of the ſayde trade and traffike: the ſame lawes and ordinances not being contrarie or repugnant to the lawes, ſtatutes or cuſtomes of our Realme: And the ſame lawes and ordinances ſo made to put in vre, and execute accordingly, and at their pleaſures to reuoke and alter the ſame lawes and ordinances or any of them as occaſion ſhall require.

And we doe alſo for vs, our heyres and ſucceſſors of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion graunt to and with the ſayd Gouernour and companie of marchantes of the Leuant, that when and as often at any time during the ſayde terme and ſpace of twelue yeeres as any cuſtome, pondage, ſubſidie or other duetie ſhall be due and payable vnto vs, our heires, or ſucceſſors for any goods or marchandize whatſoeuer, to be carried or tranſported out of this our port of London into any the dominions aforeſayde, or out of or from any the ſayde dominions vnto our ſayde port of London, that our Cuſtomers, and all other our Officers for receites of cuſtome, pondage, ſubſidie or other duetie vnto whom it ſhall appertaine, ſhall vpon the requeſt of the ſayde Gouernour for the time being, giue vnto the ſayde companie three monethes time for the payment of the one halfe, and other three monethes for the payment of the other halfe of their ſayde cuſtome, pondage, or other ſubſidie or duetie for the ſame, receiuing good and ſufficient bonde and ſecuritie to our vſe for the payment of the ſame accordingly. And vpon receipt of the ſayde bonde to giue them out their cockets or other warrants to lade out and receiue in the ſame their goods by vertue hereof without any diſturbance. And that alſo as often as at any time during the ſayde terme of twelue yeeres any goods or marchandize of any of the ſayde companie laden from this our port of London in any the dominions beforeſayde ſhall happen to miſcarie before their ſafe diſcharge in the partes for and to the which they be ſent: That then and ſo often ſo much cuſtome, pondage, and other ſubſidie as they anſwered vs for the ſame, ſhall after due proofe made before the Treaſurour of England for the time being of the ſayde loſſe, and the iuſt quantitie thereof, be by the vertue hereof allowed vnto them, by warrant of the ſayde Treaſurour to the ſayde Cuſtomers in the next marchandize that they ſhall or may ſhippe for thoſe partes, according to the true rates of the cuſtomes, pondage, or ſubſidies heretofore payde for the goods ſo loſt or any part or parcell thereof.

And for that the ſayde companie are like continually to bring into this our Realme a much greater quantitie of forren commodities from the forren Countreyes, places, or territories aforeſaide, then here can be ſpent for the neceſſarie vſe of the ſame, which of neceſſitie muſt be tranſported into other countreyes, and there vented, we for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion doe graunt to and with the ſayd Gouernour and companie that at all times from time to time during the ſpace of thirteene moneths next after the diſcharge of any the ſayde goods ſo brought in, and the ſubſidies, pondage, cuſtomes and other duties for the ſame being before hande payde or compounded for as aforeſayd, it ſhall be lawfull for them or any of them or any other perſon or perſons whatſoeuer being naturall ſubiects of the Realme which may or ſhall buy the ſame of them or any of them to tranſport the ſame in Engliſh bottomes freely out of this Realme without payment of any further cuſtome, pondage, or other ſubſidie to vs, our heires or ſucceſſors for the ſame, whereof the ſayde ſubſidies, pondage, or cuſtomes or other duties ſhall be ſo formerly payde and compounded for, as aforeſayd, and ſo proued. And the ſayd cuſtomer by vertue hereof ſhall vpon due and ſufficient proofe thereof made in the cuſtome houſe giue them ſufficient cocket or certificate for the ſafe paſſing out thereof accordingly. And to the ende no deceipt be vſed herein to vs our heires, and ſucceſſors, certificate ſhall be brought from our collector of cuſtome inwardes to our cuſtomer outwardes that the ſayd marchandizes haue within the time limited aunſwered their due cuſtome, ſubſidie, pondage and other duties for the ſame inwards.

And furthermore we of our ample and aboundant grace, meere motion, and certaine knowledge haue graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs our heyres and ſucceſſours doe graunt vnto the ſaid Gouernours and companie of marchantes of the Leuant, that they and ſuch onely as be and ſhall be of that companie, ſhall for the ſayd terme of twelue yeeres haue, vſe, and enioy the whole and onely trade and traffike, and the whole entire and onely libertie, vſe, and priuiledge of trading and trafficking, and vſing feate of marchandiſe by and through the Leuant ſeas otherwiſe called the Mediterran ſeas into and from the ſayd dominions of the Grand Signor, and dominions of the ſtate of Venice; and by and through the ſayd Grand Signiors dominions to and from ſuch other places in the Eaſt Indies diſcouered as aforeſayd. And that they the ſayd Gouernour and companie of marchants of the Leuant and euery particular and ſeuerall perſon of that companie their and euery one of their ſeruants, factors, and deputies ſhall haue full and free authoritie, libertie, facultie, licence, and power to trade and trafficke by and through the ſayd Leuant ſeas into and from all and euery the ſayd dominions of the ſayde Grand Signor, and the dominions of the ſtate of Venice, and the ſayde Indies, and into and from all places where by occaſion of the ſayd trade they ſhall happen to arriue or come, whither they be Chriſtians, Turkes, Gentiles, or others: And by and through the ſayd Leuant ſeas into and from all other ſeas, riuers, portes, regions, territories, dominions, coaſtes and places with their ſhips, barkes, pinaſes and other veſſels, and with ſuch mariners and men as they will leade or haue with them, or ſende for the ſayde trade as they ſhall thinke good at their owne proper coſtes and expenſes.

And for that the ſhippes ſayling into the ſayde Countreyes muſt take their due and proper times to proceede in theſe voyages, which otherwiſe as wee well perceiue can not be performed in the reſt of the yeere following: Therefore we of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion for vs our heyres and ſucceſſors doe graunt to and with the ſayd Gouernour and companie of Marchantes of the Leuant, that foure good ſhippes well furniſhed with ordinance and other munition for their defence, and two hundred marriners Engliſh men to guide and ſayle in the ſame foure ſhippes at all times during the ſayde twelue yeeres ſhall quietly bee permitted and ſuffered to depart and goe in the ſayde voyages, according to the purport of theſe preſents, without any ſtay or contradiction by vs our heyres and ſucceſſors, or by the Lorde high Admirall or any other officer or ſubiect of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours in any wiſe: Any reſtraint, lawe, ſtatute, vſage or matter whatſoeuer to the contrarie notwithſtanding.

Prouided neuertheleſſe, that if wee ſhall at any time within the ſayde twelue yeeres haue iuſt cauſe to arme our Nauie in warrelike manner in defence of our Realme, or for offence of our enemies: and that it ſhall be founde needefull and conuenient for vs to ioyne to our Nauie the ſhippes of our ſubiects to be alſo armed for warres to ſuch number as cannot bee ſupplied if the ſayd foure ſhippes ſhould be permitted to depart as aboue is mentioned; then vpon knowledge giuen by vs or our Admirall to the ſayde Gouernour or companie about the fifteenth day of the moneth of March, or three monethes before the ſaide companie ſhall beginne to make readie the ſame foure ſhippes that we may not ſpare the ſayd foure ſhips and the marriners requiſite for them to be out of our Realme during the time that our Nauie ſhall be vpon the ſeas, that then the ſayde companie ſhall forbeare to ſend ſuch foure ſhippes for their trade of marchandiſe vntill that we ſhall retake our ſayd Nauie from the ſayd ſeruice.

And further our will and pleaſure is, and wee doe by theſe preſentes graunt that it ſhall be lawfull to and for the ſayd Gouernour and companie of Marchantes of the Leuant to haue and vſe in and about the affaires of the ſayde companie a common ſeale for matters concerning the ſayde companie and trade. And that alſo it ſhall be lawfull for the Marchants, Mariners, and Sea-men, which ſhall be vſed and imployed in the ſayde trade and voyage to ſet and place in the toppes of their ſhips or other veſſels the Armes of England with the redde-croſſe in white ouer the ſame as heretofore they haue vſed.

And we of our further Royall fauour and of our eſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion haue graunted and by theſe preſents for vs our heyres and ſucceſſors doe graunt to the ſayd Gouernour and companie of Marchants of the Leuant, that the ſayde landes, territories, and dominions of the ſayde Grand Signor, or the dominions of the Signiorie of Venice, or any of them within the ſayde Leuant or Mediterran ſeas ſhall not be viſited, frequented, or haunted by the ſayde Leuant ſea by way of marchandize by any other our ſubiects during the ſaide terme of twelue yeeres contrarie to the true meaning of theſe preſences. And by vertue of our prerogatiue Royall, which wee will not in that behalfe haue argued or brought in queſtion, wee ſtraightly charge, commaunde and prohibite for vs our heyres and ſucceſſours all our ſubiects of what degree or qualitie ſoeuer they bee, that none of them directly or indirectly doe viſite, haunt, frequent, trade, traffike or aduenture by way of marchandiſe into or from any of the ſayd dominions of the ſayd Grand Signor, or the dominions of the ſaide Segniorie of Venice, by or through the ſayde Leuant ſea other then the ſayd Gouernour and companie of marchants of the Leuant, and ſuch particular perſons as be or ſhall be of that companie, their factors, agents, ſeruants and aſſignes. And further for that wee plainely vnderſtande that the States and Gouernours of the citie and Segniorie of Venice haue of late time ſet and rayſed a newe impoſt and charge ouer and beſides their auncient impoſt, cuſtome, and charge of and vpon all manner of marchandize of our Realme brought into their dominions, and alſo of and vpon all marchandiſe caried or laden from their ſayd Countrey or dominions by our ſubiects or in the ſhips or bottoms of any of our ſubiectes to the great and intollerable charge and hinderance of our ſayd ſubiects trading thither, wee therefore minding the redreſſe thereof, doe alſo by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors further ſtraightly prohibite and forbid not onely the ſubiects of the ſayde State and Segniorie of Venice, but alſo of all other Nations or Countries whatſoeuer other then the ſayd Gouernour and companie of marchants of the Leuant, and ſuch onely as be or ſhall be of that companie, their factors, agents, ſeruantes, and aſſignes: That they or any of them during the ſayde terme of twelue yeeres, ſhall bring or cauſe to be brought into this our Realme of Englande, or any part thereof anie manner of ſmall fruites called corrants, being the rayſins of Corinth, or wine of Candie, vnleſſe it be by and with the licence, conſent, and agreement of the ſayde Gouernour and companie in writing vnder their ſayd common ſeale firſt had and obteyned vpon paine vnto euery ſuch perſon and perſons that ſhall trade and traffike into any the ſayde dominions of the State and Segnio[illegible] of Venice by ſea, or that ſhall bring or cauſe to be brought into our ſaide Realme any of the ſaid corrants being the rayſins of Corinth, or wines of Candia, other then the ſayd companie in paine of our indignation, and of forfaiture and loſſe aſwell of the ſhippe and ſhips with the furniture thereof, as alſo of the goods, marchandize, and thinges whatſoeuer they be of thoſe which ſhall attempt or preſume to commit or doe any matter or thing contrarie to the prohibition aforeſayd. The one halfe of all the ſaide forfeitures to be to vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, and the other halfe of all and euery the ſayde forfeitures we doe by theſe preſents, of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion clearely and wholie for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, giue and graunt vnto the ſaide Gouernour and companie of marchantes of the Leuant.

And further all and euery the ſayde offendours for their ſayde contempt to ſuffer impriſonment during our pleaſures, and ſuch other puniſhment as to vs for ſo high a contempt ſhall ſeeme meete and conuenient, and not to be in any wiſe deliuered vntill they and euery of them ſhall be come bounde vnto the ſayd Gouernour for the time being in the ſumme of one thouſand poundes or leſſe at no time, then after to ſayle or traffike by ſea into any the dominions aforeſaide, or to bring or cauſe to be brought from any the places aforeſayde any corrants, rayſins of Corinth, or wines of Candia contrarie to our expreſſe commaundement in that behalfe herein ſet downe and publiſhed.

Prouided alwayes, and our expreſſe will is notwithſtanding the premiſſes that if our ſayde ſubiectes ſhall at any time hereafter be recompenſed of and for all ſuch newe impoſtes and charges as they and euery of them ſhall pay, and likewiſe be freely diſcharged of and from the payment of all manner of newe impoſte or taxe for any of their marchandiſe which they hereafter ſhall bring into or from any the dominions of the ſayde State or Segniorie of Venice, and from all bondes and other aſſurances by them or any of them to be made for or in that behalfe, that then immediatly from and after ſuch recompence and diſcharge made as aforeſayde our ſayde prohibition and reſtraint in theſe preſentes mentioned, ſhall not be of any ſtrength or force againſt the ſayde Citie or State of Venice, or any the ſubiects thereof, but for and during ſuch time onely and in ſuch caſe when hereafter the ſayde State of Venice ſhall againe beginne to taxe or leuie any manner of newe impoſte within the ſayde dominions vpon any the goods or marchandizes of our ſayde ſubiectes heereafter to be brought into any the dominions of the ſaid State or Segniorie of Venice. Any thing in theſe our letters Patents contayned to the contrarie thereof in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

And further wee ſtraightly charge and commaunde, and by theſe preſentes prohibite all and ſingular Cuſtomers and Collectors of our Cuſtomes, pondage, and ſubſidies, and all other Officers within our Porte and Citie of London and elſe where, to whom it ſhall appertaine and euery of them, That they or any of them by themſelues, their clarkes, or ſubſtitutes ſhall not receiue or take, or ſuffer to be receiued or taken for vs or in our name, or to our vſe, or in the name, or vnto the vſe of our heires or ſucceſſors of any perſon or perſons, any ſumme or ſummes of money, or other conſideration during the ſayde terme of twelue yeeres for any cuſtome, pondage, taxe or ſubſidie of any corrants, rayſins of Corinth, or wines of Candie aforeſayd ſaue onely of and in the name of the ſayde Gouernour and companie of marchantes of the Leuant, or of ſome of that companie without the conſent of the ſayde Gouernour and companie in writing vnder their ſayd common ſeale, firſt had and obteyned, and vnto them ſhewed for the teſtifying their ſayd conſent. And for the better and more ſure obſeruation thereof wee will and graunt for vs, our heires or ſucceſſors by theſe preſentes, that our Treaſurour and Barons of the Exchequer for the time being by force of theſe preſentes, and the inrollment thereof in the ſayde Court of our Exchequour, at all and euery time and times during the ſayde terme of twelue yeeres, at and vpon the requeſt of the ſayde Gouernour and companie, their Attourney or Attourneys, Deputies or aſſignes, ſhall and may make and direct vnder the ſeale of the ſayde Court one or more ſufficient writte or writtes cloſe or patent, vnto euery or any of the ſayd Cuſtomers or other Officers to whom it ſhall appertaine, commaunding them and euery of them thereby, that neither they nor any of them at any time or times during the ſayd ſpace of twelue yeeres ſhall take entrie of any corants , raiſins of Corinth, or wines of Candia, or take or make any agreement for any cuſtome, pondage, or other ſubſidie for any of the ſayd corants, raiſins of Corinth, or wines of Candie, with any perſon or perſons whatſoeuer, other then with, or in the name and by the priuitie of the ſayd gouernour and company or ſome of the ſame company.

And further of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion we haue condeſcended and graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs our heires and ſucceſſours doe condeſcend and graunt to the ſayd Gouernour and company of marchants of Leuant, that wee our heires and ſucceſſours, during the ſayd terme, will not graunt libertie, licence, or power to any perſon or perſons whatſoeuer contrary to the tenour of theſe our letters patents, to ſaile, paſſe, trade, or traffique by the ſayde Leuant Sea, into, or from the ſayde dominions of the ſayd Grand Signior or the dominions of the State of Venice or any of them, contrary to the true meaning of theſe preſents, without the conſent of the ſayd Gouernour and Companie or the moſt part of them.

And whereas Henry Farrington and Henry Hewet haue not yet aſſented to bee incorporated into the ſayd ſocietie of Gouernour and companie of marchants of Leuant, neuertheleſſe ſithence, as we be informed, they haue bene traders that way heretofore ; our will and pleaſure is, and we doe hereby expreſſely command and charge that if it happen at any time within two moneths next following after the date hereof, the ſayd Henry Farrington and Henry Hewet or either of them, to ſubmit themſelues to be of the ſayd companie, and doe giue ſuch aſſurance as the ſayd Gouernour and companie, or the more part of them ſhall allow of, to beare, pay, and performe ſuch orders, conſtitutions, paiments and contributions, as other of the ſayd company ſhall be ordered to beare, pay, and performe, that then euery of the ſayd Henry Farrington and Henry Hewet ſo doing and ſubmitting himſelfe, ſhall vpon his or their requeſt vnto the ſayd Gouernour bee admitted into the ſayd companie and corporation of Gouernour and companie of marchants of Leuant , and haue and enioy the ſame , and as great liberties, priuileges, and preheminences, as the reſt of the ſayde corporation or companie may, or ought to haue by vertue of this our graunt . Any thing in theſe preſents contained to the contrary notwithſtanding.

And our will and pleaſure is, and hereby wee doe alſo ordaine that it ſhall and may bee lawfull, to, and for the ſayde Gouernour and company of marchants of Leuant or the more part of them, to admit into, and to be of the ſayd companie, any ſuch as haue bene or ſhall bee employed as ſeruants, factors, or agents in the trade of marchandiſe by the ſayd Leuant ſeas, into any the countries, dominions or territories of the ſayd Grand Signior or Signiorie or State of Venice, according as they or the moſt part of them ſhall thinke requiſite.

And where Anthony Ratcliffe, Steuen Some, and Robert Brooke Aldermen of the ſaide Citie of London, Simon Laurence, Iohn Wattes, Iohn Newton, Thomas Middleton, Robert Coxe, Iohn Blunt, Charles Faith, Thomas Barnes, Alexander Danſey, Richard Aldworth, Henry Cowlthirſte , Cæſar Doſſie, Martine Bonde , Oliuer Stile and Nicolas Stile Marchants of London for their abilities and ſufficiencies haue bene thought fit to be alſo of the ſayd Company of the ſaide gouernour and Company of Marchants of Leuant: Our will and pleaſure and expreſſe commaundement is, and wee doe hereby eſtabliſh and ordeine , that euery ſuch of the ſame Anthony Radcliffe, Steuen Some, Robert Brooke, Simon Laurence, Iohn Wattes, Iohn Newton, Thomas Midleton, Robert Coxe, Iohn Blunt, Charles Faith, Thomas Barnes, Alexander Danſey, Richard Aldworth, Henry Cowlthirſt, Cæſar Doſſie , Martine Bonde, Oliuer Style, and Nicolas Style, as ſhall pay vnto the ſaide Gouernour and company of Marchants of Leuante the ſumme of one hundred and thirtie poundes of lawfull Engliſh money within two monethes next after the date hereof towards the charges that the ſame Company haue already bene at in and about the eſtabliſhing of the ſayde trades ſhall from thenceforth bee of the ſame company of Marchants of Leuant as fully and amply and in like maner, as any other of that ſocietie or Company.

Prouided alſo, that wee our heires and ſucceſſours at any time during the ſayd twelue yeeres may lawfully appoynt and authorize two other perſons exerciſing the lawfull trade of marchandize, and being fit men to bee of the ſayd companie of Gouernour and companie of marchants of Leuant, ſo that the ſayd perſons to bee nominated or authorized, ſhall aide, doe, beare, and paie ſuch paymentes and charges touching and concerning the ſame trade and Companie of marchants of Leuant, ratablie as other of the ſayd Companie of marchants of Leuant ſhall, and doe, or ought to beare and pay: and doe alſo performe and obſerue the orders of the ſayd Companie allowable by this our graunt, as others of the ſame doe or ought to doe. And that ſuch two perſons ſo to bee appoynted by vs our heires or ſucceſſours, ſhall and may with the ſayd Company vſe the trade and feate of marchandiſe aforeſayd, and all the liberties and priuileges herein before granted, according to the meaning of theſe our letters patents, any thing in theſe our letters patents contained to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Prouided alſo, that if any of the marchants before by theſe preſents named or incorporated, to bee of the ſayd fellowſhip of Gouernour and companie of the merchants of Leuant, ſhall not bee willing to continue or bee of the ſame Companie, and doe giue notice thereof, or make the ſame knowen to the ſayd Gouernour within two moneths next after the date hereof, that then ſuch perſon ſo giuing notice, ſhall no further or any longer be of that companie, or haue trade into thoſe parties, nor be at any time after that of the ſame corporation or companie, or vſe trade into any the territories or countries aforeſayd.

Prouided alwayes neuertheleſſe, that euery ſuch perſon ſo giuing notice and hauing at this preſent any goods or marchandiſes in any the Territories or countreys of the ſayd Grand Signior, or Segniorie or State of Venice, may at any time within the ſpace of eighteene moneths next, and immediately following after the date hereof, haue free libertie, power, and authoritie to returne the ſame or the value thereof into this Realme, without vſing any traffique there, but immediately from thence hither, paying, bearing, anſwering, and performing all ſuch charges, duties and ſummes of money ratably as other of the ſame corporation or company doe or ſhall pay, beare, anſwere, or performe for the like.

Prouided alſo, that if any of the perſons before by theſe preſents named or incorporated to bee of the ſayd fellowſhip of Gouernour and Companie of the marchants of Leuant, or which hereafter ſhall bee admitted to bee of the ſayde Corporation or Companie, ſhall at any time or times hereafter refuſe to bee of the ſayd Corporation or Companie, or to beare, pay, or be contributorie to, or not beare and pay ſuch ratable charges and allowances, or to obſerue or performe ſuch ordinances to bee made as is aforeſayd, as other of the ſame company are, or ſhall bee ordered, to beare, paie, or performe, that then it ſhall and may bee lawfull for the reſt of the ſayd Gouernour and companie of marchants of Leuant, preſently to expell, remooue, and diſplace euery ſuch perſon ſo refuſing, or not bearing or paying out, of, and from the ſayd Corporation and companie, and from all priuilege, libertie, and preheminence which any ſuch perſon ſhould, or might claime, or haue by vertue of this our graunt, and in place of them to elect others exerciſing the lawfull trade of marchandiſe to bee of the ſayd Companie. And that euery ſuch perſon ſo expelled, remooued, or diſplaced by conſent of the ſayd Gouernour and companie of marchants of Leuant, or the more part of them, ſhall bee from thenceforth vtterly diſabled to take any benefite by vertue of this priuilege, or any time after to bee admitted or receiued againe into the ſame, any thing in theſe preſents contained to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Prouided alwayes, that if it ſhall hereafter appeare to vs our heires and ſucceſſours, that this graunt or the continuance thereof in the whole or in any part thereof, ſhall not bee profitable to vs our heires and ſucceſſours, or to this our realme, that then and from thenceforth, vpon and after eighteene moneths warning to bee giuen to the ſayd companie by vs our heires and ſucceſſours, this preſent graunt ſhall ceaſe, bee voyd, and determined to all intents, conſtructions and purpoſes.

And further of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, wee haue condeſcended and graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs our heires and ſucceſſours, doe condeſcend and graunt to the ſayde Gouernour and companie of marchants of Leuant, that if at the ende of the ſayd terme of twelue yeeres it ſhall ſeeme meete and conuenient to the ſayde Gouernour and Companie, or any the parties aforeſayd, that this preſent graunt ſhall bee continued: And if that alſo it ſhall appeare vnto vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, that the continuance thereof ſhall not bee preiudiciall or hurtfull to this our realme, but that wee ſhall finde the further continuance thereof profitable for vs our heires and ſucceſſours and for our realme with ſuch conditions as are herein mentioned, or with ſome alteration or qualification thereof, that then wee our heires and ſucceſſours at the inſtance and humble petition of the ſayde Gouernour and Companie, or any of them ſo ſuing for the ſame, and ſuch other perſon and perſons our ſubiectes as they ſhall nominate and appoint, or ſhall bee by vs, our heires and ſucceſſours newly nominated, not exceeding in number twelue, new letters patents vnder the great ſeale of England in due forme of lawe with like couenants, graunts, clauſes, and articles, as in theſe preſents are contained, or with addition of other neceſſarie articles or changing of theſe in ſome partes, for, and during the full terme of twelue yeeres then next following. Willing now hereby, and ſtraightly commaunding and charging all and ſingular our Admirals, Vice-admirals, Juſtices, Maiors, Shiriffes, Eſcheators, Conſtables, Bailiffes, and all and ſingular other our Officers, Miniſters, Liege men and ſubiects whatſoeuer, to bee aiding, fauouring, helping, and aſſiſting vnto the ſayd Companie and their ſucceſſours, and to their Deputies, Officers, Factors, ſeruaunts, aſſignes and miniſters, and euery of them, in executing and enioying the premiſſes as well on land as on Sea, from time to time, & at all times when you or any of you ſhal thereto bee required, any Statute, Acte, ordinance, Prouiſo, Proclamation or reſtraint heretofore had, made, ſet foorth, ordained or prouided, or any other matter, cauſe or thing whatſoeuer to the contrary in any wiſe not withſtanding.

Although expreſſe mention of the true yeerely value or certaintie of the premiſſes, or any of them, or of any other gifts or graunts by vs, or any of our progenitours to the ſayde Gouernour and Companie of the marchants of Leuant before this time made, in theſe preſents is not made: Or any Statute, Acte, Ordinance, prouiſion, proclamation or reſtraint to the contrary thereof before this time had, made, done, or prouided, or any other matter, thing or cauſe whatſoeuer, in any wiſe notwithſtanding. In witneſſe whereof wee haue cauſed theſe our letters to be made patents. Witneſſe our ſelfe at Weſtminſter the ſeuenth day of Januarie in the foure and thirtieth yeere of our raigne.

To the Worſhipfull and his very louing Vncle M. Rowland Hewiſh Eſquier, at Sand in Deuonſhire.

Sir, conſidering the goodneſſe of your Nature which is woont kindely to accept from a friend, euen of meane things being giuen with a good heart, I haue preſumed to trouble you with the reading of this rude diſcourſe of my trauailes into Turkie, and of the deliuerie of the preſent with ſuch other occurrents as there happened woorthie the obſeruation: of all which proceedings I was an eie-witneſſe, it pleaſing the Ambaſſadour to take mee in with him to the Grand Signior. If for lacke of time to put it in order I haue not performed it ſo well as it ought, I craue pardon, aſſuring you that to my knowledge I haue not miſſed in the trueth of any thing. If you aske mee what in my trauels I haue learned, I anſwere as a noble man of France did to the like demaund, Hoc vnum didici, mundi contemptum: and ſo concluding with the wiſe man in the booke of the Preacher, that all is vanitie, and one thing onely is neceſſarie, I take my leaue and commit you to the Almightie. From London the 16. March 1597.

Your louing Nephew
Richard Wrag.

A deſcription of a Voiage to Conſtantinople and Syria, begun the 21. of March 1593. and ended the 9. of Auguſt, 1595. wherein is ſhewed the order of deliuering the ſecond Preſent by Maſter Edward Barton her maieſties Ambaſſador, which was ſent from her Maieſtie to Sultan Murad Can, Emperour of Turkie.

Wee ſet ſaile in the Aſcenſion of London, a new ſhippe very well appointed, of two hundred and three ſcore tunnes (whereof was maſter one William Broadbanke, a prouident and ſkilfull man in his facultie) from Graueſend the one and twentie of March 1593. And vpon the eight of Aprill following wee paſſed the ſtreights of Gibraltar, and with a ſmall Weſterne gale, the 24. of the ſame, we arriued at Zante an Iland vnder the Venetians. The fourth of May wee departed, and the one and twentie wee arriued at Alexandretta in Cilicia in the very bottome of the Mediterrane ſea, a roade ſome 25. miles diſtant from Antioch, where our marchants land their goods to bee ſent for Aleppo.

Candie.

The Aſcenſion arriued at the 7 towers.

The ſhip ſaluteth the grand Signior.

From thence wee ſet ſaile the fift of Iune, and by contrary windes were driuen vpon the coaſt of Caramania into a road neere a litle Iland where a caſtle ſtandeth, called Caſtle Roſſo, ſome thirtie leagues to the Eaſtwards of the Rhodes, where after long ſearch for freſh water, we could finde none, vntil certaine poore Greekes of the Iland brought vs to a well where we had 5 or 6 tuns. That part of the country next the ſea is very barren & full of mountains, yet found we there an olde tombe of marble, with an epitaph of an ancient Greeke caracter, by antiquity neere worne out and paſt reading; which to the beholders ſeemed a monument of the greatneſſe of the Grecian monarchy. From thence we went to the Rhodes, and by contrary windes were driuen into a port of Candy, called Sittia: this Iland is vnder the Venetians, who haue there 600 ſouldiers, beſide certaine Greeks, continually in pay. Here with contrary winds we ſtayed ſix weeks, and in the end, hauing the winde proſperous, we ſailed by Nicaria, Pharos, Delos, and Andros, with ſight of many other Ilands in the Archipelago, and arriued at the two caſtles in Helleſpont the 24 of Auguſt. Within few dayes after we came to Galipoli ſome thirty miles from this place, where foure of vs tooke a Parma or boat of that place, with two water men, which rowed vs along the Thracian ſhore to Conſtantinople, which ſometime ſailing and ſometime rowing, in foure dayes they performed. The firſt of September we arriued at the famous port of the Grand Signior, where we were not a litle welcome to M. Edward Barton vntill then her Maieſties Agent, who (with many other great perſons) had for many dayes expected the preſent. Fiue or ſixe dayes after the ſhippe arriued neere the Seuen towers, which is a very ſtrong hold, and ſo called of ſo many turrets, which it hath, ſtanding neere the ſea ſide, being the firſt part of the city that we came vnto. Heere the Agent appointed the maſter of the Aſcenſion to ſtay with the ſhippe vntill a fitte winde and opportunity ſerued to bring her about the Seraglio to ſalute the Grand Signior in his moskyta or church: for you ſhall vnderſtand that he hath built one neere the wall of his Seraglio or pallace adioyning to the Sea ſide; whereunto twiſe or thriſe a weeke hee reſorteth to performe ſuch religious rites as their law requireth: where hee being within few dayes after, our ſhippe ſet out in their beſt maner with flagges, ſtreamers and pendants of diuers coloured ſilke, with all the mariners, together with moſt of the Ambaſſadours men, hauing the winde faire, and came within two cables length of this his moskita, where (hee to his great content beholding the ſhippe in ſuch brauery) they diſcharged firſt two volies of ſmall ſhot, and then all the great ordinance twiſe ouer, there being ſeuen and twentie or eight and twentie pieces in the ſhip. Which performed, he appointed the Buſtangi-Baſſa or captaine of the great and ſpacious garden or parke, to giue our men thankes, with requeſt that ſome other day they would ſhew him the like ſporte when hee would haue the Sultana or Empreſſe a beholder thereof, which few dayes after at the ſhippes going to the Cuſtome-houſe they performed.

The cauſe of ſtaying the Preſent.

An Arz to the grand Signior.

The grand Signiors ſalutation thus ended, the maſter brought the ſhip to an anker at Rapamat neere the ambaſſadors houſe, where hee likewiſe ſaluted him with all his great ordinance once ouer, and where he landed the Preſent, the deliuerie whereof for a time was ſtaied: the cauſe of which ſtaie it ſhall neither be diſhonorable for our nation, or that worthie man the ambaſſador to ſhew you. At the departure of Sinan Baſſa the chiefe Vizir, and our ambaſſadors great friend toward the warres of Hungarie there was another Baſſa appointed in his place, a churliſh and harſh natured man, who vpon occaſion of certaine Genouezes, eſcaping out of the caſtles ſtanding toward the Euxine Sea, nowe called the blacke Sea, there impriſoned, apprehended and threatened to execute one of our Engliſhmen called Iohn Field, for that hee was taken thereabouts, and knowen not many dayes before to haue brought a letter to one of them: vpon the ſolliciting of whoſe libertie there fell a iarre betweene the Baſſa (being nowe chiefe Vizir) and our ambaſſador, and in choler he gaue her maieſties ambaſſador ſuch words, as without ſuſtaining ſome great indignitie hee could not put vp. Whereupon after the arriuall of the Preſent, he made an Arz, that is, a bill of Complaint to the grand Signior againſt him, the maner in exhibiting whereof is thus performed.

The plaintifes expect the grand Signiors going abroad from his pallace, either to Santa Sophia or to his church by the ſea ſide, whither, with a Perma (that is one of their vſuall whirries) they approch within ſome two or three ſcore yards, where the plaintife ſtandeth vp, and holdeth his petition ouer his forehead in ſight of the grand Signior (for his church is open to the Sea ſide) the reſt ſitting ſtill in the boat, who appointeth one of his Dwarfes to receiue them, and to bring them to him. A Dwarfe, one of the Ambaſſadors fauorites, ſo ſoone as he was diſcerned, beckned him to the ſhore ſide, tooke his Arz, and with ſpeed caried it to the grand Signior. Now the effect of it was this; that except his highneſſe would redreſſe this ſo great an indignitie, which the Vizir his ſlaue had offered him and her maieſtie in his perſon, he was purpoſed to detaine the Preſent vntill ſuch time as he might by letters ouer-land from her maieſtie bee certified, whither ſhe would put vp ſo great an iniurie as it was. Whereupon he preſently returned anſwere, requeſting the ambaſſador within an houre after to goe to the Douan of the Vizir, vnto whom himſelfe of his charge would ſend a gowne of cloth of gold, and commaund him publikely to put it vpon him, and with kind entertainment to embrace him in ſigne of reconciliation. Whereupon our ambaſſador returning home, tooke his horſe, accompanied with his mē, and came to the Vizirs court, where, according to the grand Signiors commaund, he with all ſhew of kindneſſe embraced the ambaſſador, and with curteous ſpeeches reconciled himſelfe, and with his own hands put the gowne of cloth of gold vpon his backe. Which done, hee with his attendants returned home, to the no ſmall admiration of all Chriſtians that heard of it, eſpecially of the French and Venetian ambaſſadors, who neuer in the like caſe againſt the ſecond perſon of the Turkiſh Empire durſt haue attempted ſo bold an enterpriſe with hope of ſo friendly audience, and with ſo ſpeedie redreſſe. This reconciliation with the great Vizir thus made, the ambaſſador prepared himſelfe for the deliuerie of the Preſent, which vpon the 7 of October 1593, in this maner he performed.

The great hall of Iuſtice.

Reconciliation with the Vizir made.

The Aſcenſion with her flags and ſtreamers, as aforeſaid, repaired nigh vnto the place where the ambaſſador ſhould land to go vp to the Seraglio: for you muſt vnderſtand that all Chriſtian ambaſſadors haue their dwelling in Pera where moſt Chriſtians abide, from which place, except you would go 4 or 5 miles about, you cannot by land go to Conſtantinople, whereas by Sea it is little broder then the Thames. Our Ambaſſador likewiſe apparelled in a ſute of cloth of ſiluer, with an vpper gowne of cloth of gold, accompanied with 7 gentlemen in coſtly ſutes of Sattin, with 30 other of his men very well apparelled, and all in one liuerie of ſad French ruſſet cloth gownes, at his houſe tooke boate: at whoſe landing the ſhip diſcharged all her ordinance, where likewiſe attended 2 Baſſas, with 40 or 50 Chauſes to accompany þ ambaſſador to the court, & alſo horſes for the ambaſſador & his gentlemen, very richly furniſhed, with Turkiſh ſeruants attendāt to take the horſes whē they ſhould light. The ambaſſador thus honorably accompanied, the Chauſes foremoſt, next his men on foote all going by two and two, himſelfe laſt with his Chauſe and Drugaman or Interpreter, and 4 Ianiſaries, which he doeth vſually entertaine in his houſe to accompany him continually abroad, came to the Seraglio about an Engliſh mile from the water ſide, where firſt hee paſſed a great gate into a large court (much like the ſpace before White hall gate) where he with his gentlemen alighted and left their horſes. From hence they paſſed into an other ſtately court, being about 6 ſcore in breadth, and ſome 10 ſcore yards long, with many trees in it; where all the court was with great pompe ſet in order to entertaine our ambaſſador. Vpon the right hand all the length of the court was a gallerie arched ouer, and borne vp with ſtone pillars, much like the Roiall Exchange, where ſtood *moſt of his guard in rankes from the one end to the other in coſtly aray, with round head pieces on their heads of mettall and gilt ouer, with a great plume of fethers ſomewhat like a long bruſh ſtanding vp before. On the left hand ſtood the Cappagies or porters, and the Chauſes. All theſe courtiers being about the number of 2000. (as I might well geſſe) moſt of them apparelled in cloth of gold, ſiluer, veluet, ſattin and ſcarlet, did together with bowing their bodies, laying their hands vpon their breſts in curteous maner of ſalutation, entertain the Ambaſſador: who likewiſe paſſing between them, & turning himſelfe ſomtime to the right hand and ſometime to the left, anſwered them with the like. As he thus paſſed along, certaine Chauſes conducted him to the Douan, which is the ſeat of Iuſtice, where certaine dayes of the weeke the grand Vizir, with the other Vizirs, the Cadi-leſker or lord chiefe Iuſtice, & the Mufti or high prieſt do ſit to determine vpon ſuch cauſes as be brought before them, which place is vpon the left ſide of this great court, whither the ambaſſador with his gentlemen came, where hee found the Vizir thus accompanied as aforeſaid, who with great ſhew of kindnes receiued him: and after receit of her maieſties letters, & conference had of the Preſent, of her maieſties health, of the ſtate of England, and ſuch other matters as concerned our peaceable traffique in thoſe parts: dinner being prepared was by many of þ Courtiers brought into another inner roome next adioining, which conſiſted of an hundred diſhes or thereabouts, moſt boiled & roſted, where the ambaſſador accompanied with the Vizirs went to dinner, his gentlemen likewiſe with the reſt of his men hauing a dinner with the like varietie prepared vpon þ ſame ſide of the court, by thēſelues ſate downe to their meat, 40 or 50 Chauſes ſtanding at the vpper end attending vpon the gentlemē to ſee them ſerued in good order: their drinke was water mingled with roſe water & ſugar brought in a Luthro (that is a goates ſkinne) which a man carieth at his backe, and vnder his arme letteth it run out at a ſpout into cups as men wil call for it. The dinner thus with good order brought in, and for halfe an houre with great ſobrietie and ſilence performed, was not ſo orderly taken vp: for certaine Moglans officers of the kitchin (like her maieſties blacke guard) came in diſordered maner and tooke away the diſhes, and he whoſe hungry eie one diſh could not ſatiſfie, turned two or three one into the other, and thus of a ſudden was a cleane riddance made of all. The ambaſſador after dinner with his gentlemen, by certaine officers were placed at the vpper ende vpon the left ſide of the court, nere vnto a great gate which gaue entrance to a third court being but litle, paued with ſtone. In the midſt whereof was a litle houſe built of marble, as I take it, within which ſate the grand Signor, according to whoſe commandement giuen there were gownes of cloth of gold brought out of the wardrope, and put vpon the ambaſſador and 7 of his gentlemen, the ambaſſador himſelfe hauing 2, one of gold, and the other of crimoſin veluet, all the reſt one apiece. Then certaine Cappagies had the Preſent, which was in trunks there ready, deliuered them by the ambaſſadors men, it being 12 goodly pieces of gilt plate, 36 garments of fine Engliſh cloth of al colors, 20 garments of cloth of gold, 10 garments of ſattin, 6 pieces of fine Holland, and certaine other things of good value; al which were caried round about the court, each man taking a piece, being in number very neere 100 parcels, and ſo 2 and 2 going round that all might ſee it, to the greater glory of the preſent, and of him to whom it was giuen: they went into the innermoſt court paſſing by the window of that roome, where the grand Signior ſate, who, as it went by to be laid vp in certaine roomes adioining, tooke view of all. Preſently after the preſent followed the ambaſſador with his gentlemen; at the gate of which court ſtoode 20 or 30 Agaus which be eunuchs. Within the court yard were the Turkes Dwarfes and Dumbe men, being moſt of them youths. At the doore of his roome ſtood the Buſtangi-baſſa, with another Baſſa to lead the ambaſſador and his folowers to the grand Signior who ſate in a chaire of eſtate, apparelled in a gowne of cloth of ſiluer. The floore vnder his feete, which part was a foote higher then the reſt, was couered with a carpet of green ſattin embrodered moſt richly with ſiluer, orient perles & great Turkeſes; ỹ other part of the houſe was couered with a carpet of Carnation ſattin imbrodered with gold, none were in the roome with him, but a Baſſa who ſtood next the wall ouer againſt him hanging down his head, & looking ſubmiſſely vpon the ground as all his ſubiects doe in his preſence. The ambaſſador thus betwixt two which ſtood at the doore being led in, either of them taking an arme, kiſſed his hand, and ſo backward with his face to the Turke they brought him nigh the dore againe, where he ſtood vntill they had likewiſe done ſo with all the reſt of his gentlemen. Which ended, the ambaſſador, according as it is the cuſtome when any preſent is deliuered, made his three demaunds, ſuch as he thought moſt expedient for her maieſties honor, & the peaceable traffique of our natiõ into his dominions: whereunto he anſwered in one word, Nolo, which is in Turkiſh as much as, it ſhal be done: for it is not the maner of the Turkiſh emperor familiarly to conferre with any Chriſtian ambaſſador, but he appointeth his Vizir in his perſon to graunt their demaunds if they be to his liking; as to our ambaſſador he granted all his demands, & gaue order that his daily allowance for his houſe of mony, fleſh, wood, & haie, ſhould be augmented with halfe as much more as it had bene before. Hereupon the ambaſſador taking his leaue, departed with his gentlemen the ſame way he came, the whole court ſaluting him as they did at his comming in; & comming to the ſecond court to take our horſes, after we were mounted, we ſtaied halfe an houre, vntill the captain of the guard with 2000 horſmen at the leaſt paſſed before, after whom folowed 40 or 50 Chauſes next before the ambaſſador to accompany him to his houſe. And as before at his landing, ſo now at his taking boat, the ſhip diſcharged all her great ordinance, where arriuing, he likewiſe had a great banquet prepared to entertaine thoſe which came to bring him home. The pompe & ſolemnitie of the Preſent, with the day thus ended, he ſhortly after preſented the Sultana or empreſſe who (by reaſon that ſhe is mother to him which was heire to the crowne Imperial) is had in far greater reuerence then any of his other Queens or concubines. The Preſent ſent her in her maieſties name was a iewel of her maieſties picture, ſet with ſome rubies and diamants, 3 great pieces of gilt plate, 10 garments of cloth of gold, a very fine caſe of glaſſe bottles ſiluer & gilt, with 2 pieces of fine Holland, which ſo gratefully ſhe accepted, as that ſhe ſent to know of the ambaſſador what preſent he thought ſhe might returne ỹ would moſt delight her maieſtie: who ſent word that a ſute of princely attire being after the Turkiſh faſhion would for the rareneſſe thereof be acceptable in England. Whereupon ſhe ſent an vpper gowne of cloth of gold very rich, an vnder gowne of cloth of ſiluer, and a girdle of Turkie worke, rich and faire, with a letter of gratification, which for the rareneſſe of the ſtile, becauſe you may be acquainted with it, I haue at the ende of this diſcourſe hereunto annexed, which letter and preſent, with one from the grand Signior, was ſent by M. Edward Buſhell, and M. William Aldridge ouer-land the 20 of March, who paſſed through Valachia and Moldauia, & ſo through Poland, where Michael prince of Valachia, and Aron Voiuoda prince of Moldauia receiuing letters from the ambaſſador, entertained thẽ with al curteſie, through whoſe meanes by the great fauour which his lordſhip had with the grand Signior, they had not long before both of them bene aduanced to their princely dignities. He likewiſe preſented Sigala the Admirall of the Seas, with Abraim Baſſa, who married the great Turkes daughter, and all the other Vizirs with diuers pieces of plate, fine Engliſh cloth & other coſtly things: the particulars whereof whereof, to auoid tediouſneſſe, I omit. All the preſents thus ended, the ſhip ſhooting ten pieces of ordinance at the Seraglio point, as a laſt farewell, departed on her iourney for England the firſt of Nouember, my ſelfe continuing in Conſtantinople vntill the laſt of Iuly after. This yere in the ſpring there was great preparation for the Hungarian warres; and the great Turke threatened to goe himſelfe in perſon: but like Heliogabalus, his affections being more ſeruiceable to Venus then to Mars, he ſtayed at home. Yet a great army was diſpatched this yere; who, as they came out of Aſia to goe for Hungary, did ſo peſter the ſtreets of Conſtantinople for the ſpace of two moneths in the ſpring time, as ſcarſe either Chriſtian or Iew could without danger of loſing his money paſſe vp and downe the city. What inſolencies, murders and robberies were committed not onely vpon Chriſtians but alſo vpon Turks I omit to write, and I pray God in England the like may neuer be ſeene: and yet I could wiſh, that ſuch amongſt vs as haue inioyed the Goſpel with ſuch great and admirable peace and proſperity vnder her Maieſties gouernment this forty yeeres, and haue not all this time brought forth better fruits of obedience to God, and thankfulneſſe to her Maieſty, were there but a ſhort time to beholde the miſerable condition both of Chriſtians and others liuing vnder ſuch an infidell prince, who not onely are wrapped in moſt palpable & groſſe ignorance of mind, but are cleane without the meanes of the true knowledge of God: I doubt not but the ſight hereof (if they be not cleane void of grace) would ſtirre them vp to more thankefulneſſe to God, that euer they were borne in ſo happy a time, and vnder ſo wiſe and godly a prince profeſſing the true religion of Chriſt.

Great preparation for the Hungarian warres.

The number of ſouldiours which went to the warres of Hungary this yere were 470000, as by the particulars giuen by the Admirall to the Ambaſſadour hereunder do appeare. Although all theſe were appointed and ſuppoſed to goe, yet the victories which the Chriſtians in the ſpring had againſt the Turks ſtrooke ſuch a terrour in many of the Turkiſh ſouldiours, as by report diuers vpon the way thither left their Captaines and ſtole away.

Of Tartars there be about 100000.

Thus you may ſee that the great Turke maketh warre with no ſmall numbers. And in anno 1597, when Sultan Mahomet himſelfe went in perſon into Hungary, if a man may beleeue report, he had an army of 600000.

For the city of Conſtantinople you ſhall vnderſtand that it is matchable with any city in Europe, aswell in bigneſſe as for the pleaſant ſituation thereof, and commodious traffike and bringing of all maner of neceſſary prouiſion of victuals, and whatſoeuer els mans life for the ſuſtentation thereof ſhall require, being ſeated vpon a promontory, looking toward Pontus Euxinus vpon the Northeaſt, and to Propontis on the Southweſt, by which two ſeas by ſhipping is brought great ſtore of all maner of victuals. The city it ſelfe in forme repreſenteth a triangular figure, the ſea waſhing the walles vpon two ſides thereof, the other ſide faceth the continent of Thracia; the grand Signiors ſeraglio ſtandeth vpon that point which looketh into the ſea, being cut off from the city by a wall; ſo that yͤ wall of his pallace conteineth in circuit about two Engliſh miles: the ſeuen towers ſpoken of before ſtand at another corner, & Conſtantines olde pallace to the North at the third corner. The city hath a threefolde wall about it; the innermoſt very high, the next lower then that, and the third a countermure, and is in circuit about ten Engliſh miles: it hath foure and twenty gates: and when the empire was remoued out of the Weſt into the Eaſt, it was inriched with many ſpoiles of olde Rome by Veſpaſian and other emperours, hauing many monuments and pillars in it worthy the obſeruation; amongſt the reſt in the midſt of Conſtantinople ſtandeth one of white marble called Veſpaſians pillar, of 38 or 40 yards high, which hath from the baſe to the top proportions of men in armour fighting on horſebacke: it is likewiſe adorned with diuers goodly buildings & ſtately Meſquitas, whereof the biggeſt is Sultan Solimans a great warriour, which liued in the time of Charles the fifth; but the faireſt is Santa Sophia, which in the time of the Chriſtian emperours was the chiefe cathedrall church, and is ſtill in greateſt account with the great Turke: it is built round like other Greekiſh churches, the pauements and walles be all of marble, it hath beneath 44 pillars of diuers coloured marble of admirable heigth and bigneſſe, which ſtand vpon great round feet of braſſe, much greater then the pillars, and of a great heigth, ſome ten yards diſtant from the wall: from which vnto theſe pillars is a great gallery built, which goeth round about the church; and vpon the outſide of the gallery ſtand 66 marble pillars which beare vp the round roofe being the top of the church: it hath three pulpits or preaching places, and about 2000 lampes brought in by the Turke. Likewiſe vpon one ſide in the top is the picture of Chriſt with the 12 Apoſtles, but their faces are defaced, with two or three ancient tombs of Chriſtians: to the Weſt ſticketh an arrow in the toppe of the church, which, as the Turks report, Sultan Mahomet ſhot when he firſt tooke the city. Neere adioyning be two chapels of marble, where lie buried moſt of the emperours with their children & ſultanas. The 16 of July, accompanied with ſome other of our nation we went by water to the Blacke ſea, being 16 miles diſtant frõ Conſtantinople, the ſea al the way thither being little broader then the Thames; both ſides of the ſhore are beautified with faire & goodly buildings. At the mouth of this Boſphorus lieth a rocke ſome foureſcore yards from the maine land, whereupon ſtandeth a white marble pillar called Pompeys pillar, the ſhadow whereof was 23 foote long at nine of the clocke in the forenoone: ouer againſt it is a turret of ſtone vpon the maine land 120 ſteps high, hauing a great glaſſe-lanthorne in the toppe foure yards in diameter and three in heigth, with a great copper pan in the midſt to holde oile, with twenty lights in it, and it ſerueth to giue paſſage into this ſtraight in the night to ſuch ſhips as come from all parts of thoſe ſeas to Conſtantinople: it is continually kept by a Turke, who to yͤ end hath pay of the grand Signior. And thus hauing ſpent eleuen moneths in Conſtantinople, accompanied with a chauſe, & carying certaine mandates from the grand Signior to the Baſſa of Aleppo for the kinde vſage of our nation in thoſe parts, the 30 of July I tooke paſſage in a Turkiſh carmoſale or ſhippe bound for Sidon; and paſſing thorow Propõtis, hauing Salimbria with Heraclia moſt pleaſantly ſituated on the right hand, and Proconeſus now called Marmora on the left, we came to Gallipoly, and ſo by Helleſpont, betweene the two caſtles before named called Seſtos and Abydos, famous for the paſſages made there both by Xerxes and great Alexander, the one into Thracia, the other into Aſia, and ſo by the Sigean Promontory, now called Cape Ianitzary, at the mouth of Helleſpont vpon Aſia ſide, where Troy ſtood, where are yet ruines of olde walles to be ſeene, with two hils riſing in a piramidall forme, not vnlikely to be the tombs of Achilles and Aiax. From thence we ſailed along, hauing Tenedos and Lemnos on the right hand, and the Troian field on the left: at length we came to Mitylen and Sio long time inhabited by the Genoueſes, but now vnder the Turke. The Iland is beautified with goodly buildings and pleaſant gardens, and aboundeth with fruits, wine, and the gum maſticke. From thence ſailing alongſt the gulfe of Epheſus with Nicaria on the right hand, Samos and Smirna on the left, we came to Patmos, where S. Iohn wrote the Reuelation. The Iland is but ſmall, not aboue ſixe miles in compaſſe: the chiefe thing it yeeldeth is corne: it hath a port for ſhipping, wherein is an ancient abbey of Greekiſh Caloieros. From thence by Cos (now called Lango) where Hipocrates was borne: & paſſing many other Ilands and rocks, we arriued at Rhodes, one of the ſtrongeſt and faireſt cities of the Eaſt: here we ſtayed three or foure dayes: and by reaſon of a By which went in the ſhip to Paphos in Cyprus, who vſed me with all kindneſſe, I went about the city, and tooke the view of all: which city is ſtill with all the houſes and walles thereof maintained in the ſame order as they tooke it from the Rhodian knights. Ouer the doores of many of the houſes, which be ſtrongly built of ſtone, do re-maine vndefaced, the armes of England, France, Spaine, and many other Chriſtian knights, as though the Turkes in the view thereof gloried in the taking of all Chriſtendome, whoſe armes there they beholde. From thence we ſailed to Paphos an olde ruinous towne ſtanding vpon the Weſterne part of Cyprus, where S. Paul in the Acts conuerted the gouernor. Departing hence, we came to Sidon, by the Turks called Saytoſa, within tenne or twelue miles of the place where Tirus ſtood, which now being eaten in by the ſea, is, as Ezekiel prophecied, a place for the ſpreading out of a net. Sidon is ſituated in a ſmall bay at the foot of mount Libanus, vpon the ſide of an hill looking to the North: it is walled about, with a caſtle nigh to the ſea, and one toward the land which is ruinated, but the walle thereof ſtandeth. Some halfe mile vp toward the mountaine be certaine ruines of buildings, with marble pillars, remaining: heere for three dayes we were kindly entertained of the captaine of the caſtle: and in a ſmall barke we ſailed from hence along the ſhore to Tripoli, & ſo to Alexandretta, where the 24 of Auguſt we arriued. From thence with a Venetian carauan we went by land to Aleppo, paſſing by Antioch, which is ſeated vpon the ſide of an hill, whoſe walles ſtill ſtand with 360 turrets vpon them, and neere a very great plaine which beareth the name of the city, thorow which runneth the riuer Orontes, in Scripture called Farfar. In Aleppo I ſtayed vntill February following; in this city, as at a mart, meete many nations out of Aſia with the people of Europe, hauing continuall traffike and interchangeable courſe of marchandiſe one with another: the ſtate and trade of which place, becauſe it is ſo well knowen to moſt of our nation, I omitte to write of. The 27 of February I departed from Aleppo, and the fifth of March imbarked my ſelfe at Alexandretta in a great ſhip of Venice called the Nana Ferra, to come for England. The 14 we put into Salino in Cyprus, where the ſhip ſtaying many dayes to lade cotton wooll and other commodities, in the meane time accompanied with M. William Barret my countrey man, the maſter of the ſhip a Greeke, and others, we tooke occaſion to ſee Nicoſia, the chiefe city of this Iland, which was ſome twenty miles frõ this place, which is ſituated at the foot of an hill: to the Eaſt is a great plaine, extending it ſelfe in a great length from the North to the South: it is walled about, but of no ſuch ſtrength as Famaguſta (another city in this Iland neere the Sea ſide) whoſe walles are cut out of the maine rocke. In this city be many ſumptuous and goodly buildings of ſtone, but vninhabited; the cauſe whereof doth giue me iuſt occaſion to ſhew you of a rare iudgement of God vpon the owners ſometime of theſe houſes, as I was credibly informed by a Cipriot a marchant of good wealth in this city. Before it came in ſubiection to the Turks, while it was vnder the Venetians, there were many barons and noblemen of the Cipriots, who partly by vſurping more ſuperiority ouer the common people then they ought, and partly through their great reuenues which yeerely came in by their cotton wooll and wines, grew ſo inſolent and proud, and withall ſo impiouſly wicked, as that they would at their pleaſure command both the wiues and children of their poore tenants to ſerue their vncleane luſts, & holding them in ſuch ſlauery as though they had beene no better then dogges, would wage them againſt a grayhound or ſpaniell, and he who woon the wager ſhould euer after holde them as his proper goods and chattels, to do with them as he liſted, being Chriſtians aſwell as themſelues, if they may deſerue ſo good a name. As they behaued themſelues moſt vnchriſtianly toward their brethren, ſo and much more vngodly (which I ſhould haue put in the firſt place) did they towards God; for as though they were too great, ſtanding on foot or kneeling to ſerue God, they would come riding on horſebacke into the church to heare their maſſe: which church now is made a publike baſiſtane or market place for the Turkes to ſell commodities in: but beholde the iudgement of the righteous God, who payeth the ſinner meaſure for meaſure. The Turkes the yeere before the ouerthrowe giuen them at Lepanto by Don Iohn tooke Cyprus. Theſe mighty Nimrods fled ſome into holes & ſome into mountaines to hide themſelues; whereupon the Turkes made generall proclamation, that if they would all come in and yeeld themſelues, they would reſtore them to their former reuenues and dignities: who not miſtruſting the miſchieuous pretenſe of the Turkes, aſſembled together to make themſelues knowen; whom after the Turkes had in poſſeſſion, they (as the Lords executioners) put them with their wiues and children all to the ſword, pretending thereby to cut off all future rebellion, ſo that at this day is not one of the noble race knowen aliue in the Iland, onely two or three remaine in Venice but of litle wealth, which in the time of the warres eſcaped. After we had ſtayed in this Iland ſome thirty dayes, we ſet ſaile in the foreſayd ſhippe being about the burthen of 900 tunnes, hauing in her paſſingers of diuers nations, as Tartars, Perſians, Iewes, and ſundry Chriſtians. Amongſt all which I had often conference with a Iew, who by reaſon of his many yeeres education at Safet a place in Iudea neere Ieruſalem, where they ſtudy the Rabbines with ſome other arts as they thinke good, as alſo for his trauels into Perſia and Ormus, he ſeemed to be of good experience in matters abroad, who related vnto me ſuch conference as he had with a Baniane at Ormus, being one of the Indians inhabiting the countrey of Cambaia. This Baniane being a Gentile had ſkill in Aſtronomie, as many of that nation haue, who by his books written in his owne tongue and Characters, could tell the time of Eclipſes both of Sunne and Moone, with the Change and Full, and by iudgement in Aſtrologie gaue anſwere to any queſtion demanded. Being aſked concerning his opinion in religion, what he thought of God: he made anſwere, that they held no other god but the ſun, (to which planet they pray both at the riſing and ſetting) as I haue ſeene ſundry doe in Aleppo: his reaſon was drawen from the effects which it worketh in giuing light to the moone & other ſtarres, and cauſing all things to grow and encreaſe vpon the earth: anſwere was made, that it did mooue with the reſt, as the wheeles of a clocke, and therefore of force muſt haue a moouer. Likewiſe in the Eclipſe being darkened it is manifeſtly prooued that it is not god, for God is altogether goodneſſe and brigheneſſe, which can neither be darkened nor receiue detriment or hurt: but the Sun receiueth both in the Eclipſe, as it is apparant: to which hee could not anſwere; but ſo they had receiued from their anceſtors, that it was without beginning or ende, as in any Orbicular or round body neither beginning or end could be found. He likewiſe ſayd, that there were other Gentiles in yͤ Indies which worſhip the moone as chiefe, and their reaſon is. The moone when ſhe riſeth goeth with thouſands of ſtarres accompanied like a king, and therefore is chiefe: but the Sunne goeth alone, and therefore not ſo great. Againſt whom the Banianes reaſon, that it is not true, becauſe the Moone and ſtarres receiue their light from the Sunne, neither doth the Sunne vouchſafe them his company but when he liſt, and therefore like a mighty prince goeth alone, yet they acknowledge the Moone as Queene or Viceroy. Law they hold none, but onely ſeuen preceſts which they ſay were giuen them from their father Noe, not knowing Abraham or any other. Firſt, to honor father and mother; ſecondly, not to ſteale; thirdly, not to commit adultery; fourthly, not to kill any thing liuing; fiftly, not to eate any thing liuing; ſixtly, not to cut their haire; ſeuenthly, to go barefoot in their churches. Theſe they hold moſt ſtrictly, & by no meanes will breake them: but he that breaketh one is puniſhed with twenty ſtripes: but for the greateſt fault they will kill none, neither by a ſhort death nor a long, onely he is kept ſome time in priſon with very little meat, and hath at the moſt not aboue twenty or fiue & twenty ſtripes. In the yere they haue 16 feaſts, and then they go to their church, where is pictured in a broad table the Sun, as we vſe to paint it, the face of a man with beames round about, not hauing any thing els in it. At their feaſt they ſpot their faces in diuers parts with ſaffron all yellow, and ſo walke vp and downe the ſtreets; and this they doe as a cuſtome. They hold, there ſhalbe a reſurrection, and all ſhall come to iudgement, but the account ſhalbe moſt ſtreight, inſomuch that but one of 10000 ſhalbe receiued to fauor, and thoſe ſhall liue againe in this world in great happineſſe: the reſt ſhalbe tormented. And becauſe they will eſcape this iudgement, when any man dieth, he and his wife be both burnt together euen to aſhes, and then they are throwen into a riuer, and ſo diſperſed as though they had neuer bene. If the wife will not burne with her dead huſband, ſhee is holden euer after as a whore. And by this meanes they hope to eſcape the iudgement to come. As for the ſoule, that goeth to the place from whence it came, but where the place is they know not. That the body ſhould not be made againe, they reaſon vd the phyloſophers, ſaying, that of nothing nothing can be made (not knowing that God made the whole world and their god the Sun of nothing) but beholding the courſe of nature, that nothing is made but by a meanes, as by the ſeed of a man is made another, and by corne caſt into the ground there commeth vp new corne: ſo, ſay they, man cannot be made except ſome part of him be left, and therefore they burne the whole: for if he were buried in the earth, they ſay there is a ſmall bone in the necke which would neuer be conſumed: or if he were eaten by a beaſt, that bone would not conſume, but of that bone would come another man; and then the ſoule being reſtored againe, he ſhould come into iudgement, whereas now, the body being deſtroyed, the ſoule ſhall not be iudged: for their opinion is, that both body and ſoule muſt be vnited together, as they haue ſinned together, to receiue iudgement; and therfore the ſoule alone cannot. Their ſeuen precepts which they keepe ſo ſtrictly are not for any hope of reward they haue after this life, but onely that they may be bleſſed in this world, for they thinke that he which breaketh them ſhall haue ill ſucceſſe in all his buſineſſe.

The ſeuen precepts of Banianes.

They ſay, the three chiefe religions in the world be of the Chriſtians, Iewes, & Turks, & yet but one of them true: but being in doubt which is the trueſt of the three, they will be of none: for they hold that all theſe three ſhall be iudged, and but few of them which be of the true ſhall be ſaued, the examination ſhall be ſo ſtraight: and therefore, as I haue ſayd before, to preuent this iudgement, they burne their bodies to aſhes. They ſay, theſe three religions haue too many precepts to keepe them all wel, & therfore wonderful hard it wil be to make account, becauſe ſo few doe obſerue all their religion aright. And thus paſſing the time for the ſpace of three moneths in this ſea voyage, we arriued at Venice the tenth of Iune: and after I had ſeene Padua, with other Engliſh men, I came the ordinary way ouer the Alpes, by Auguſta, Noremberg, and ſo for England; where to the praiſe of God I ſafely arriued the ninth of Auguſt 1595.

A letter written by the moſt high and mighty Empreſſe the wife of the Grand Signior Sultan Murad Can to the Queenes Maieſty of England, in the yeere of our Lord, 1594.

IL principio del ragionamento noſtro ſia ſcrittura perfetta nelle quatro parte del mondo, in nome di quello che ha creato indifferentemente tante infinite creature, che non haueuano anima ni perſona, & di quello che fa girar gli noue cieli, & che la terra ſette volte vna ſopra l'altra fa firmar; Signor & Re ſenza vicere, & che non ha comparacion alla ſua creatione ne opera, & vno ſenza precio, adorato incomparabilmente, l'altiſſimo Dio creatore; che non ha ſimilitudine, ſi come e deſcrito dalli propheti: a la cui grandeſſa non ſi arriua, & alla perfettione ſua compiuta non ſi oppone, & quel omnipotente creatore & cooperatore; alla grandeſſa del quale inchinano tutti li propheti; fra quali il maggior & che ha ottenuto gracia, horto del paradiſo, ragi dal ſole, amato del altiſſimo Dio è Mahomet Muſtaffa, al qual & ſuoi adherenti & imitatori ſia perpetua pace: alla cui ſepultura odorifera ſi fa ogni honore. The ſame in Engliſh.

LEt the beginning of our diſcourſe be a perfect writing in the foure parts of the world, in the name of him which hath indifferently created ſuch infinite numbers of creatures, which had neither ſoule nor body, and of him which mooueth the nine heauens, and ſtabliſheth the earth ſeuen times one aboue another, which is Lord and king without any deputy, who hath no compariſon to his creation and worke, and is one ineſtimable, worſhipped without all compariſon, the moſt high God, the creator, which hath nothing like vnto him, according as he is deſcribed by the Prophets, to whoſe power no man can attaine, and whoſe abſolute perfection no man may controll; and that omnipotent creatour and fellow-worker, to whoſe Maieſty all the Prophets ſub-mit themſelues, among whom the greateſt, and which hath obtained greateſt fauour, the garden of Paradiſe, the beame of the Sunne, the beloued of the moſt high God is Mahomet Muſtaffa, to whom and to his adherents and followers be perpetuall peace, to whoſe fragrant ſepulture all honour is performed. He which is emperour of the ſeuen climats and of the foure parts of the world, the inuincible king of Græcia, Agiamia, Hungaria, Tartaria, Valachia, Roſſia, Turchia, Arabia, Bagdet, Caramania, Abeſſis, Giouaſir, Siruan, Barbaria, Alger, Franchia, Coruacia, Belgrade, &c. alwayes moſt happy, and poſſeſſour of the crowne from twelue of his anceſtours; and of the ſeed of Adam, at this preſent emperour, the ſonne of an emperour, preſerued by the diuine prouidence, a king worthy of all glory and honour, Sultan Murad, whoſe forces the Lord God alwayes increaſe, and father of him to whom the imperiall crowne is to deſcend, the paradiſe and woonderfull tall cypreſſe, worthy of the royall throne, and true heire of the imperiall authority, moſt worthy Mehemet Can, the ſonne of Sultan Murad Can, whoſe enterpriſes God vouchſafe to accompliſh, and to prolong his happy dayes: on the behalfe of whoſe mother this preſent letter is written to the moſt gracious and moſt glorious, the wiſeſt among women, and choſen among thoſe which triumph vnder the ſtandard of Ieſus Chriſt, the moſt mighty and moſt rich gouernour, and moſt rare among womankinde in the world, the moſt gracious Queene of England, which follow the ſteps of the virgine Mary, whoſe end be proſperous and perfect, according to your hearts deſire. I ſend your Maieſty ſo honorable and ſweet a ſalutation of peace, that al the flocke of Nightingales with their melody cannot attaine to ye like, much leſſe this ſimple letter of mine. The ſingular loue which we haue conceiued one toward the other is like to a garden of pleaſant birds: and the Lord God vouchſafe to ſaue and keepe you, and ſend your Maieſty an happy end both in this world and in the world to come. After the arriuall of your honourable preſents from the Court of your Maieſty, your Highneſſe ſhall vnderſtand that they came in ſuch a ſeaſon that euery minute miniſtred occaſion of long cõſolation by reaſon of the comming of your Maieſties Ambaſſadour to the triumphant Court of the Emperour, to our ſo great contentment as we could poſſibly wiſh, who brought a letter from your Maieſty, which with great honour was preſented vnto vs by our eunuks, the paper whereof did ſmell moſt fragrantly of camfor and ambergriele, and the incke of perfect muſke; the contents whereof we haue heard very attentiuely from point to point. I thinke it therefore expedient, that, according to our mutuall affection, in any thing whatſoeuer may concerne the countreys which are ſubiect to your Maieſty, I neuer faile, hauing information giuen vnto me, in whatſoeuer occaſion ſhall be miniſtred, to gratifie your Maieſty to my power in any reaſonable and conuenient matter, that all your ſubiects buſineſſes and affaires may haue a wiſhed and happy end. For I will alwayes be a ſollicitour to the moſt mighty Emperour for your Maieſties aſſires, that your Maieſty at all times may be fully ſatiſfied. Peace be to your Maieſty, and to all ſuch as follow rightly the way of God. Written the firſt day of the Moone of Rabie Liuol in the yere of the Prophet, 1002.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS Second volume containing the principall Nauigations, Voyages, Traffiques, and Diſcoueries of the Engliſh nation, made to the South and Southeaſt quarters of the world without the Straights of Gibraltar, namely to the Ilands of Madera, and of the Canaries, to the kingdome of Barbarie, to the Iles of Capo Verde, to the riuer of Senega, to the coaſt of Ghinea and Benin, about the cape of Buona Eſperanſa, and ſo to Goa in the Eaſt Indies, and likewiſe beyond cape Comori to the Iles of Nicubar, to Sumatra, to the chanell of Sincapura ouer againſt the city of Malacca, and to diuers other places.

The voyage of Macham an Engliſh man, wherein he firſt of any man diſcouered the Iland of Madera, recorded verbatim in the Portugall hiſtory, written by Antonio Galuano.

IN the yeere 1344, King Peter the fourth of that name reigning in Aragon, the Chronicles of his age write that about this time the Iland of Madera, ſtanding in 32 degrees, was diſcouered by an Engliſh man, which was named Macham, who ſailing out of England into Spaine, with a woman that he had ſtollen, arriued by tempeſt in that Iland, and did caſt anker in that hauen or bay, which now is called Machico after the name of Macham. And becauſe his louer was ſea-ſicke, he went on land with ſome of his company, and the ſhippe with a good winde made ſaile away, and the woman died for thought. Macham, which loued her dearely, built a chapell, or hermitage, to bury her in, calling it by the name of Ieſus, and cauſed his name and hers to be written or grauen vpon the ſtone of her tombe, and the occaſion of their arriuall there. And afterward he ordeined a boat made of one tree (for there be trees of a great compaſſe about) and went to ſea in it, with thoſe men that he had, and were left behinde with him, and came vpon the coaſt of Afrike, without ſaile or oare. And the Moores which ſaw it tooke it to be a maruellous thing, and preſented him vnto the king of that countrey for a woonder, and that king alſo ſent him and his companions for a miracle vnto the king of Caſtile.

Madera firſt diſcouered by one Macham an Engliſhman.

Macham made there a chapel, naming it Ieſus chapell.

In the yeere 1395, King Henry the third of that name reigning in Caſtile, the information which Macham gaue of this Iland, and alſo the ſhip of his company, mooued many of France and Caſtile to go and diſcouer it, and alſo the great Canaria, &c.

In the yeere 1417, King Iohn the ſecond reigning in Caſtile, and his mother Lady Katherine being Regent, one Monſieur Ruben of Bracamont, which was Admirall of France, demanding the conqueſt of the Ilands of the Canaries, with the title of King, for a kinſman of his named Monſieur Iohn Betancourt, after that the Queene had giuen him them, and holpen him, he departed from Siuil with a good army. And they affirme alſo, that the principall cauſe which moued him to this, was to diſcouer the Iland of Madera, which Macham had found, &c. ibidem pag. 2. of Anthonio Galuano.

This note following, concerning the ayde and aſſiſtance of the Engliſh Marchants, giuen to King Iohn the firſt of Portugall, for the winning of Ceuta in Barbarie, which was the firſt occaſion of all the Portugall diſcoueries, is taken out of Thomas Walſingham his Latine Chronicle. Anno 1415.

HOc anno Ioannes primus Rex Portugalliæ fretus auxilio Mercatorum Angliæ quàm maximè, & Alemannorum, vicit Agarenos in terra Regis Betinarinorum, multis eorum millibus ad generum Cereris deſtinatis: cepitque ciuitatem eorum quàm ampliſſimam ſupra mare ſitam, vocatam Ceut eorum lingua.

This yere Iohn the firſt king of Portugall, being principally aſſiſted by the helpe of the Engliſh Marchants, and Almaines, ouercame the Moores in the dominion of the king of Barbary, putting many thouſands of them to the ſword, and he tooke their city which was very mighty, ſeated vpon the ſea, which is called Ceuta in their language.

The Ambaſſage which king Iohn the ſecond, king of Portugall, ſent to Edward the fourth king of England, which in part was to ſtay one Iohn Tintam, and one William Fabian Engliſh men, from proceeding in a voyage which they were preparing for Guinea, 1481, taken out of the booke of the workes of Gracias de Reſende, which intreateth of the life and acts of Don Iohn the ſecond, king of Portugall. Chap. 33.

AND afterwards the king ſent as Ambaſſadours from the towne of Monte maior to king Edward the fourth of England, Ruy de Souſa, a principall perſon, and a man of great wiſedome and eſtimation, and in whom the king repoſed great truſt, with doctor Iohn d'Eluas, and Ferdinand de Pina, as ſecretarie. And they made their voyage by ſea very honourably, being very well accompanied. Theſe men were ſent on the behalfe of their king, to confirme the ancient leagues with England, wherein it was conditioned that the new king of the one and of the other kingdome, ſhould be bound to ſend to confirme the olde leagues. And likewiſe they had order to ſhew and make him acquainted with the title which the king held in the ſegneury of Ginnee, to the intent that after the king of England had ſeene the ſame, he ſhould giue charge thorow all his kingdomes, that no man ſhould arme or ſet foorth ships to Ginnee: and alſo to requeſt him, that it would pleaſe him to giue commandement to diſſolue a certaine fleet, which one Iohn Tintam and one William Fabian, Engliſh men, were making, by commandement of the duke of Medina Sidonia, to goe to the aforeſayd parts of Ginnee. With which ambaſſage the king of England ſeemed to be very well pleaſed, and they were receiued of him with very great honour, and he condeſcended vnto all that the ambaſſadours required of him, at whoſe hands they receiued authenticall writings of the diligence which they had performed, with publication thereof by the heralds: and alſo prouiſoes of thoſe confirmations which were neceſſary. And hauing diſpatched all things well, and with the kings good will, they returned home into their countrey.

A briefe note concerning an ancient trade of the Engliſh Marchants to the Canarie-ilands, gathered out of an olde ligier booke of M. Nicolas Thorne the elder a worſhipfull marchant of the city of Briſtoll.

IT appeareth euidently out of a certaine note or letter of remembrance, in the cuſtody of me Richard Hakluyt, written by M. Nicolas Thorne the elder a principall marchant of Briſtoll, to his friend and factour Thomas Midnall and his owne ſeruant William Ballard at that time reſident at S. Lucar in Andeluzia; that in the yeere of our Lord 1526 (and by all circumſtances and probabilities long before) certaine Engliſh marchants, and among the reſt himſelfe with one Thomas Spacheford exerciſed vſuall and ordinary trade of marchandiſe vnto the Canarie Ilands. For by the ſayd letter notice was giuen to Thomas Midnall and William Ballard aforeſayd, that a certaine ſhip called The Chriſtopher of Cadiz bound for the Weſt Indies had taken in certaine fardels of cloth both courſe and fine, broad and narrow of diuers ſorts and colours, ſome arouas of packthreed, ſixe cerons or bagges of ſope with other goods of M. Nicolas Thorne, to be deliuered at Santa Cruz the chiefe towne in Tenerifa one of the ſeuen Canary-ilands. All which commodities the ſayd Thomas and William were authoriſed by the owner in the letter before mentioned to barter & ſell away at Santa Cruz. And in lieu of ſuch mony as ſhould ariſe of the ſale of thoſe goods they were appointed to returne backe into England good ſtore of Orchell (which is a certaine kinde of moſſe growing vpon high rocks, in thoſe dayes much vſed to die withall) ſome quantity of ſugar, and certaine hundreds of kid-ſkinnes. For the procuring of which and of other commodities at the beſt and firſt hand the ſayd Thomas and William were to make their abode at Santa Cruz, and to remaine there as factours for the aboueſayd M. Nicolas Thorne.

The Engliſh had an ordinary trade to the Canaries 1526.

And here alſo I thought good to ſignifie, that in the ſayd letters mention is made of one Thomas Tiſon an Engliſh man, who before the foreſayd yere 1526 had found the way to the Weſt Indies, and was there reſident, vnto whom the ſayd M. Nicolas Thorne ſent certaine armour and other commodities ſpecified in the letter aforeſayd.

A deſcription of the fortunate Ilands, otherwiſe called the Ilands of Canaria, with their ſtrange fruits and commodities: compoſed by Thomas Nicols Engliſh man, who remained there the ſpace of ſeuen yeeres together.

MIne intent is particularly to ſpeake of the Canaria Ilands, which are ſeuen in number, wherein I dwelt the ſpace of ſeuen yeres and more, becauſe I finde ſuch variety in ſundry writers, and eſpecially great vntruths, in a booke called The New found world Antarctike, ſet out by a French man called Andrew Theuet, the which his booke he dedicated to the Cardinall of Sens, keeper of the great ſeale of France.

It appeareth by the ſayd books that he had read the works of ſundry Phyloſophers, Aſtronomers, and Coſmographers, whoſe opinions he gathered together. But touching his owne trauell, which he affirmeth, I refer to the iudgement of the expert in our dayes, and therefore for mine owne part I write of theſe Canaria Ilands, as time hath taught me in many yeres.

The Iland of Canaria.

THe Iland of Canaria is almoſt equal in length and bredth, containing 12 leagues in length, touching the which as principall and the reſidue, the Spanyards holde opinion, that they diſcouered the ſame in their nauigation toward America, but the Portugals ſay, that their nation firſt found the ſayd Ilands in their nauigation toward Aethiopia and the Eaſt Indies.

But truth it is that the Spanyards firſt conquered theſe Ilands, with diuers Engliſh gentlemen in their company, whoſe poſterity this preſent day inioyeth them. Some write that this Iland was named Canaria by meane of the number of dogs which there were found: as for example, Andrew Theuet ſayth, that one Iuba carried two dogs from thence: but that opinion could I neuer learne by any of the naturall people of the countrey, although I haue talked with many in my time, and with many of their children. For trueth it is, that there were dogs, but ſuch as are in all the Northweſt lands, and ſome part of the Weſt India, which ſerued the people in ſtead of ſheepe for victuall. But of ſome of the conquerors of thoſe Ilands I haue heard ſay that the reaſon why they were called the Canaria Ilands is, becauſe there grow generally in them all fouresquare canes in great multitude together, which being touched will caſt out a liquour as white as milke, which liquor is ranke poiſon, and at the firſt entry into theſe Ilands ſome of the diſcouerers were therewith poiſoned: for many yeeres after that conqueſt the inhabitants began to plant both wine and ſugar, ſo that Canaria was not ſo called by ſugar canes.

The people which firſt inhabited this land were called Canaries by the conquerors, they were clothed in goat ſkinnes made like vnto a looſe caſſocke, they dwelt in caues in the rocks, in great amity and brotherly loue. They ſpake all one language: their chiefe feeding was gelt dogges, goates, and goates milke, their bread was made of barley meale and goates milke, called Gofia, which they vſe at this day, and thereof I haue eaten diuers times, for it is accounted exceeding holeſome.

Touching the originall of theſe people ſome holde opinion, that the Romans which dwelt in Africa exiled them thither, aſwell men as women, their tongues being cut out of their heads, for blaſphemy againſt the Romane gods. But howſoeuer it were, their language was ſpeciall, and not mixed with Romane ſpeech or Arabian.

This Iland is now the principalleſt of all the reſt, not in fertility, but by reaſon it is the ſeat of iuſtice and gouernment of all the reſidue. This Iland hath a ſpeciall Gouernour for the Iland onely, yet notwithſtanding there are three Iudges called Auditours, who are ſuperiour Iudges, and all in one ioyntly proceed as the Lord Chanceller of any realme.

Ciuitas Palmarum.

To this city from all the other Ilands come all ſuch by appeale, as haue ſuſtained any wrong, and theſe good Iudges do remedy the ſame. The city is called Ciuitas Palmarum, it hath a beautifull Cathedrall church, with all dignities thereunto pertaining. For the publike weale of the Iland there are ſundry Aldermen of great authority, who haue a councell houſe by themſelues. The city is not onely beautifull, but the citizens curious and gallant in apparell. And after any raine or foule weather a man may goe cleane in Veluet ſlippers, becauſe the ground is ſandy, the aire very temperate, without extreame heat or colde.

They reape wheat in February, and againe in May, which is excellent good, and maketh bread as white as ſnow. This Iland hath in it other three townes, the one called Telde, the ſecond Galder, and the third Guia. It hath alſo twelue ſugar houſes called Ingenios, in which they make great quantity of good ſugar.

The planting and growth of ſugar canes.

The maner of the growth of ſugar is in this ſort, a good ground giueth foorth fruit nine times in 18 yere: that is to ſay, the firſt is called Planta, which is layd along in a furrow, ſo that the water of a ſluce may come ouer euery roote being couered with earth: this root bringeth foorth ſundry canes, and ſo conſequently all the reſt. It groweth two yeeres before the yeelding of profit, and not ſixe moneths, as Andrew Theuet the French man writeth.

The making of ſugar.

Then are they cut euen with the ground, and the tops & leaues called Coholia cut off, and the canes bound into bundels like faggots, and ſo are caried to the ſugar houſe called Ingenio, where they are ground in a mill, and the iuyce thereof conueyed by a conduct to a great veſſell made for the purpoſe, where it is boiled till it waxe thicke, and then is it put into a fornace of earthen pots of the molde of a ſugar loafe, and then is it carried to another houſe, called a purging houſe where it is placed to purge the blackneſſe with a certaine clay that is layd thereon. Of the remainder in the cauldron is made a ſecond ſort called Eſcumas, and of the purging liquor that droppeth from the white ſugar is made a third ſort, and the remainder is called Panela or Netas, the refuſe of all the purging is called Remiel or Malaſſes: and thereof is made another ſort called Refinado.

When this firſt fruit is in this ſort gathered, called Planta, then the Cane-field where it grew is burned ouer with ſugar ſtraw to the ſtumps of the firſt canes, and being huſbanded, watred and trimmed, at the end of other two yeeres it yeeldeth the ſecond fruit called Zoca. The third fruit is called Tertia Zoca, the fourth Quarta Zoca, and ſo orderly the reſt, til age cauſeth the olde Canes to be planted againe.

Wine.

Plantano.

This Iland hath ſingular good wine, eſpecially in the towne of Telde, and ſundry ſorts of good fruits, as Batatas, Mellons, Peares, Apples, Orenges, Limons, Pomgranats, Figs, Peaches of diuers ſorts, and many other fruits; but eſpecially the Plantano which groweth neere brooke ſides, it is a tree that hath no timber in it, but groweth directly vpward with the body, hauing maruelous thicke leaues, and euery leafe at the toppe of two yards long and almoſt halfe a yard broad. The tree neuer yeeldeth fruit but once, and then is cut downe; in whoſe place ſpringeth another, and ſo ſtill continueth. The fruit groweth on a branch, and euery tree yeeldeth two or three of thoſe branches, which beare ſome more and ſome leſſe, as ſome forty and ſome thirty, the fruit is like a Cucumber, and when it is ripe it is blacke, and in eating more delicate then any conſerue.

This Iland is ſufficiently prouided of Oxen, Kine, Camels, Goats, Sheepe, Capons, Hens, Ducks, and Pidgeons, and great Partridges. Wood is the thing that moſt wanteth: and becauſe I haue particularly to intreat of the other ſixe Ilands, I leaue further inlarging of Canaria, which ſtandeth in 27 degrees diſtant from the Equator.

The Ile of Tenerif.

The Iland of Tenerif ſtandeth in 27 degrees and a halfe from the equator, and is diſtant from Canaria 12 leagues Northward. This Iland conteineth 17 leagues in length, and the land lieth high in forme of a ridge of ſowen land in ſome part of England, and in the midſt of the ſayd place ſtandeth a round hill called Pico Dereithe, ſituated in this ſort. The top of this pike conteineth of heigth directly vpward 15 leagues & more, which is 45 Engliſh miles, out of the which often times proceedeth fire and brimſtone, and it may be about halfe a mile in compaſſe: the ſayd top is in forme or likeneſſe of a caldron. But within two miles of the top is nothing but aſhes & pumiſh ſtones: yet beneath that two miles is the colde region couered all the yere with ſnow, and ſomwhat lower are mighty huge trees growing, called Vinatico, which are exceeding heauy, and will not rot in any water, although they lie a thouſand yeeres therein. Alſo there is a wood called Barbuſano, of like vertue, with many Sauine trees and Pine trees. And beneath theſe ſorts of trees are woods of Bay trees of 10 & 12 miles long, which is a pleaſant thing to trauell thorow, among the which are great numbers of ſmall birds, which ſing exceeding ſweet, but eſpecially one ſort that are very litle, and of colour in all reſpects like a Swallow, ſauing that he hath a litle blacke ſpot on his breaſt as broad as a peny. He ſingeth more ſweetly then all the reſt, but if he be taken and impriſoned in a cage, he liueth but a ſmall while. This Iland bringeth foorth all ſorts of fruits, as Canaria doth: and alſo all the other Ilands in generall bring foorth ſhrubs or buſhes, out of the which iſſueth a iuice as white as milke, which after a while that it hath come out waxeth thicke, and is exceeding good birdlime, the buſh is called Taybayba. This Iland alſo bringeth foorth another tree called Drago, which groweth on high among rocks, and by inciſion at the foot of the tree iſſueth out a liquor like blood, which is a commō drug among Apothecaries. Of the wood of this tree are made targets greatly eſteemed, becauſe if any ſword or dagger hit thereon, they ſticke ſo faſt that it is hard plucking them out.

Lime.

This is the moſt fruitfull Iland of all the reſt for corne, and in that reſpect is a mother or nurſe to all the others in time of need. There groweth alſo a certaine moſſe vpon the high rocks called Orchel, which is bought for Diars to die withall. There are 12 ſugar houſes called Ingenios, which make great quantity of ſugar. There is alſo one league of ground which ſtandeth betweene two townes, the one called Larotaua, and the other Rialeio, and it is thought that the like plot of ground is not in all the world. The reaſon is, that this one league of ground produceth ſweet water out of the cliffes or rocky mountaines, corne of all ſortes, fruites of all ſortes, and excellent good ſilke, flaxe, waxe, and hony, and very good wines in abundance, with great ſtore of ſugar and fire-wood. Out of this Iland is laden great quantity of wines for the Weſt India, and other countreys. The beſt groweth on a hill ſide called the Ramble.

Orchel good for dying.

There is in that Iland a faire city, ſtanding three leagues from the ſea, nere vnto a lake called Laguna, wherein are two faire pariſh churches, there dwelleth the gouernour who ruleth all that Iland with iuſtice. There are alſo aldermen for the publike weale, who buy their offices of the king: the moſt of the whole inhabitants of this city are gentlemen, merchants, and huſband men,

There are other foure townes called Santa Cruz, Larotaua, Rialeio, and Garachico.

Santa Cruz.

In this Iland before the conqueſt dwelt ſeuen kings, who with all their people dwelt in caues, and were clothed in goat ſkinnes, as the Canaria people were, and vſed ſuch like order of diet as they had. Their order of buriall was, that when any died, he was carried naked to a great caue, where he was propped vp againſt the wall ſtanding on his feet. But if he were of any authority among them, then had he a ſtaffe in his hand, and a veſſell of milke ſtanding by him. I haue ſeene caues of 300 of theſe corpſes together, the fleſh being dried vp, the body remained as light as parchment. Theſe people were called Guanches, naturally they ſpake another language cleane contrary to the Canarians, and ſo conſequently euery Iland ſpake a ſeuerall language.

Note (gentle reader) that the Iland of Canaria, the Ile of Tenerif, and the Ile of Palma appertaine to the king of Spaine, vnto whom they pay fifty thouſand duckats yeerely for cuſtome and other profits. All theſe Ilands ioyntly are one biſhopricke, which pay to the biſhop twelue thouſand duckats yeerely. And thus I conclude of the Ile of Tenerif, which ſtandeth in 27 degrees and a halfe, as I haue before declared.

Gomera.

The Iland of Gomera ſtandeth Weſtward from Tenerif, in diſtance ſixe leagues: this is but a ſmall Iland conteining eight leagues in length. It is an Earledome, & the Lord thereof is called the earle of Gomera. But in caſe of any controuerſie the vaſſals may appeale to the kings ſuperior Iudges which reſide in Canaria.

This Iland hath one proper towne called Gomera, which hath an excellent good port or harbour for ſhips, where often times the Indian fleet take refreſhing for their voyage.

There is alſo ſufficient graine and fruit for the maintenance of themſelues.

There is one Ingenio or Sugar-houſe, with great plenty of wine and other ſorts of fruits, as Canaria and Tenerif hath.

This Iland yeeldeth no other commodity but onely orchell; it ſtandeth in 27 degrees diſtant from the Equator toward the pole Arcticke.

The Ile of Palma.

The Ile of Palma ſtandeth twelue leagues diſtant from the Ile of Gomera Northweſtward. This Iland is fruitfull of wine and ſugar: it hath a proper city called the city of Palma, where is great contraction for wines, which are laden for the Weſt India & other places. This city hath one faire church, and a gouernour, and aldermen to maintaine and execute iuſtice. It hath alſo another pretty towne, called S. Andrewes. It hath alſo foure Ingenios which make excellent ſugar, two of the which are called Zauzes, and the other two, Taſſacort.

This Iland yeeldeth but little bread-corne; but rather is thereof prouided from Tenerif and other places.

Their beſt wines grow in a ſoile called the Brenia, where yerely is gathered twelue thouſand buts of wine like vnto Malmſies. This Iland ſtandeth round, and containeth in circuit neere fiue and twenty leagues. It hath plenty of all ſorts of fruits, as Canaria and Tenerif haue, it ſtandeth in twenty ſeuen degrees and a halfe.

The Iland of Yron, called Hierro.

This Iland ſtandeth ten leagues diſtant from the Iland of Palma Weſtward: it is but a little Iland, which containeth ſixe leagues in circuit, and hath but ſmall extenſion. It appertaineth to the earle of Gomera. The chiefeſt commodity of this Iland is goats fleſh and orchell. There is no wine in all that Iland, but onely one vineyard that an Engliſh man of Taunton in the Weſt countrey planted among rocks, his name was Iohn Hill.

The only vineyard in Hierro planted by Ioh. Hill of Taunton.

This Iland hath no kind of freſh water, but onely in the middle of the Iland groweth a great tree with leaues like an Oliue tree, which hath a great ciſterne at the foot of the ſayd tree. This tree continually is couered with clouds, and by meanes thereof the leaues of the ſayd tree continually drop water, very ſweet, into the ſayd ciſterne, which commeth to the ſayd tree from the clouds by attraction. And this water ſufficeth the Iland for all neceſſities, aſwell for the cattell, as for the inhabitants. It ſtandeth in 27 degrees.

The Iland of Lanzarota.

The Iland of Lanzarota ſtandeth eighteene leagues diſtant from grand Canaria Southeaſtward. The onely commodity of this Iland is goats fleſh and orchell. It is an earledome, and doth appertaine to Don Auguſtine de Herrera, with title of earle of Fortauentura and Lanzarota. But the vaſſals of theſe earledomes may in any cauſe of wrong appeale to the Kings Iudges, which reſide in Canaria, as I haue ſayd before: becauſe although the king hath reſerued to himſelfe but onely the three fruitfull Ilands, called Canaria, Tenerif, and Palma, yet he alſo reſerued the rod of iuſtice to himſelfe, becauſe otherwiſe the vaſſals might be euill intreated of their Lords.

From this Iland do weekly reſort to Canaria, Tenerif, & Palma, boats laden with dried goats fleſh, called Tuſsinetta, which ſerueth in ſtead of bacon, and is very good meat. This Iland ſtandeth in 26 degrees, and is in length twelue leagues.

The Ile of Forteuentura.

The Ile of Forteuentura ſtandeth fifty leagues from the promontory of Cabo de Guer, in the firme land of Africa, and foure & twenty leagues diſtant from Canaria Eaſtward. This Iland doth appertaine to the lord of Lanzarota. It is reaſonable fruitfull of wheat and barley, and alſo of kine, goats, and orchel: this Ile is fifteene leagues long and ten leagues broad. On the North ſide it hath a little Iland about one league diſtant from the maine Iland, betweene both of the which it is nauigable for any ſhips, and is called Gracioſa.

Both Forteuentura and Lanzarota haue very little wine of the growth of thoſe Ilands. It ſtandeth in 27 degrees.

Thus much haue I written of theſe ſeuen Ilands by experience, becauſe I was a dweller there, as I haue ſayd before, the ſpace of ſeuen yeeres in the affaires of maſter Thomas Locke, maſter Anthonie Hickman, and maſter Edward Caſtelin, who in thoſe dayes were worthy merchants, and of great credite in the citie of London.

A deſcription of the Iland of Madera.

THe Iland of Madera ſtandeth in 32 degrees diſtant from the equinoctiall line, and ſeuentie leagues from the Ile of Tenerif Northeaſtward and Southweſt from Hercules pillars. This Iland was firſt diſcouered by one Macham an Engliſhman, and was after conquered and inhabited by the Portugall nation. It was firſt called the Iland of Madera, by reaſon of the great wilderneſſe of ſundry ſortes of trees that there did growe, and yet doe, as Cedars, Cypres, Vinatico, Barbuzano, Pine trees, and diuers others, and therefore the ſayd Iland continueth ſtill with the ſame name. Howbeit they hold opinion, that betweene the ſayd Iland and the Ile of Palma is an Iland not yet diſcouered, which is the true Iland Madera called ſaint Brandon. This Iland yeeldeth a great ſumme of money to the king of Portugall yeerely: it hath one faire citie called Fouchall, which hath one faire port or harbour for ſhippes, and a ſtrong bulwarke, and a faire Cathedrall church, with a biſhop and other dignities thereunto appertaining. There is alſo iuſtice and gouernment according to the Portugall vſe. But cauſes of appellation are remitted to the citie of Lisbone in Portugall to the kings ſuperior iudges there. This Iland hath another towne called Machico, which hath likewiſe a good road for ſhips, which towne and road were ſo called after the name of Macham the Engliſhman, who firſt diſcouered the ſame. There are alſo ſixteene ſugar houſes called Ingenios, which make excellent good ſugar.

There is beſides the goodly timber before declared, great ſtore of diuers ſortes of fruites, as Peares, Apples, Plummes, wild Dates, Peaches of diuers ſortes, Mellons, Batatas, Orenges, Lemmons, Pomgranates, Citrons, Figges, and all maner of garden herbes. There are many Dragon trees, ſuch as grow in the Canarie Ilands, but chiefly this land produceth great quantitie of ſingular good wines which are laden for many places. On the North ſide of this land three leagues diſtant from the maine Iland ſtandeth another litle Iland called Porto ſanto: the people thereof liueth by huſbandrie, for the Iland of Madera yeeldeth but litle corne, but rather is thereof prouided out of France and from the Iland of Tenerif. On the Eaſt ſide of the Ile of Madera ſixe leagues diſtant ſtandeth another litle Iland called the Deſert, which produceth onely Orchell, and nouriſheth a great number of Goates, for the prouiſion of the maine Iland, which may be thirtie leagues in circuit: and the land is of great heigth where the foreſayd trees growe. It is woonder to ſee the conueyance of the water to the Ingenios by Mines through the mountaines.

In the mid way betweene Tenerif and the Iland of Madera ſtandeth a litle ſolitarie Iland called the Saluages, which may bee about one league in compaſſe, which hath neither tree nor fruit, but is onely food for Goates.

The orginall of the firſt voyage for traffique into the kingdom of Marocco in Barbarie, begun in the yeere 1551. with a tall ſhip called the Lion of London, whereof went as captaine Maſter Thomas Windam, as appeareth by this extract of a letter of Iames Aldaie, to the worſhipfull maſter Michael Locke, which Aldaie profeſſeth himſelfe to haue bene the firſt inuenter of this trade.

WOrſhipfull Sir, hauing lately bene acquainted with your intent to proſecute the olde intermitted diſcouerie for Catai, if therein with my knowledge, trauell or induſtrie I may doe you ſeruice, I am readie to doe it, and therein to aduenture my life to the vttermoſt point. Trueth it is, that I haue bene by ſome men (not my friends) euill ſpoken of at London, ſaying that although I be a man of knowledge in the Arte of Nauigation and Coſmographie, and that I haue bene the inuenter of ſome voyages that be now growen to great effect; yet ſay they maliciouſly and without iuſt cauſe, that I haue not bene willing at any ſeaſon to proceed in thoſe voyages that I haue taken in hand, taking example eſpecially of two voyages. The one was when I was maſter in the great Barke Aucher for the Leuant, in which voyage I went not, but the cauſes they did not know of my let from the ſame, nor of the other. But firſt the very trueth is, that I was from the ſame voyage letted by the Princes letters, which my Maſter Sebaſtian Gabota had obtained for that purpoſe, to my great griefe. And as touching the ſecond voyage which I inuented for the trade of Barbarie, the liuing God knoweth that I ſay moſt true, that when the great ſweate was, (whereon the chiefe of thoſe with whom I ioyned in that voyage died, that is to ſay, Sir Iohn Lutterell, Iohn Fletcher, Henry Oſtrich and others) I my ſelfe was alſo taken with the ſame ſweate in London, and after it, whether with euill diet in keeping, or how I know not, I was caſt into ſuch an extreame feuer, as I was neither able to ride nor goe: and the ſhippe being at Porteſmouth, Thomas Windam had her away from thence, before I was able to ſtand vpon my legges, by whom I loſt at that inſtant fourеſcore pound. Beſides I was appointed by them that died (if they had liued) to haue had the whole gouernment both of ſhippe and goods, becauſe I was to them the ſole inuenter of that trade.

In the firſt voyage to Barbary there were two Moores, being noble men, whereof one was of the Kings bloud, conuayed by the ſaid Maſter Thomas Windham into their Countrey out of England.

Yours humble at your commandement,
Iames Alday.

The ſecond voyage to Barbary in the yeere 1552. Set foorth by the right worſhipfull Sir Iohn Yorke, Sir William Gerard, Sir Thomas Wroth, Maſter Frances Lambert, Maſter Cole, and others; Written by the relation of Maſter Iames Thomas then Page to Maſter Thomas Windham chiefe Captaine of this voyage.

The ſhippes that went on this voyage were three, whereof two were of the Riuer of Thames, That is to ſay, the Lyon of London, whereof Maſter Thomas Windham was Captaine and part owner, of about an hundred & fiftie tunnes: The other was the Buttolfe about fourеſcore tunnes, and a Portugall Carauel bought of certaine Portugals in Newport in Wales, and fraighted for this voyage, of ſumme ſixtie tunnes. The number of men in the Fleete were an hundred and twentie. The Maſter of the Lyon was one Iohn Kerry of Mynhed in Somerſetſhire, his Mate was Dauid Landman. The chiefe Captaine of this ſmall Fleete was Maſter Thomas Windham a Norffolke gentleman borne, but dwelling at Marſhfield-parke in Somerſet ſhire. This Fleete departed out of King-rode neere Briſtoll about the beginning of May 1552. being on a Munday in the morning: and the Munday fortnight next enſuing in the euening came to an ancker at their firſt port in the roade of Zafia, or Aſafi on the coaſt of Barbarie, ſtanding in 32. degrees of latitude, and there put on land part of our marchandiſe to be conueied by land to the citie of Marocco: which being done, and hauing refreſhed our ſelues with victuals and water, we went to the ſecond port called Santa Cruz, where we diſcharged the reſt of our goods, being good quantitie of linnen and woollen cloth, corall, amber, Iet, and diuers other things well accepted of the Moores. In which road we found a French ſhip, which not knowing whether it were warre or peace betweene England and France, drew her ſelfe as neere vnder the towne wals as ſhe could poſſible, crauing aide of the towne for her defence, if need were, which in deed ſeeing vs draw neere, ſhot at vs a piece from the wals, which came ouer the Lion our Admirall, betweene the maine maſte & her foremaſt. Whereupon we comming to an anker, preſently came a pinnes aboord vs to know what we were, who vnderſtanding that we had bene there the yere before, & came with the good leaue of their king in marchant wiſe, were fully ſatiſfied, and gaue vs good leaue to bring our goods peaceably on ſhore, where the Viceroy, whoſe name was Sibill Manache, within ſhort time after came to viſite vs, and vſed vs with all curteſie. But by diuers occaſions we ſpent here very neere three moneths before we could get in our lading, which was Sugar, Dates, Almonds, and Malaſſos or ſugar Syrrope. And for all our being here in the heate of the Sommer, yet none of our company periſhed by ſickneſſe. Our ſhips being laden, wee drew into the Sea for a Weſterne wind for England. But being at ſea, a great leake fell vpon the Lion, ſo that we were driuen to Lancerota, and Forteuentura, where, betweene the two Ilands, we came to a road, whence wee put on land out of our ſayd ſhip 70. cheſtes of Sugar vpon Lancerota, with ſome dozen or ſixteene of our company, where the inhabitants ſuppoſing we had made a wrongfull prize of our carauell, ſuddenly came with force vpon our people, among whom I my ſelfe was one, tooke vs priſoners, and ſpoiled the ſugars: which thing being perceiued from our ſhips, they manned out three boates, thinking to reſcue vs, and draue the Spaniards to flight, whereof they ſlew eighteene, and tooke their gouernour of the Iland priſoner, who was a very aged gentleman about 70. yeeres of age. But chaſing the enemie ſo farre, for our recouerie, as pouder and arrowes wanted, the Spaniardes perceiuing this, returned, and in our mens retire they ſlew ſixe of them. Then a Parle grew, in the which it was agreed, that we the priſoners ſhould be by them reſtored, and they receiue their olde gouernour, giuing vs a teſtimonie vnder his and their hands, what damages wee had there receiued, the which damages were here reſtored, and made good by the king of Spaine his marchants vpon our returne into England. After wee had ſearched and mended our leake, being returned aboord, we came vnder ſaile, and as wee were going to the ſea on the one ſide of the Iland, the Cacafuego and other ſhips of the king of Portugals Armada entered at the other, and came to anker in the road from whence we were but newly departed, and ſhot off their great ordinance in our hearing. And here by the way it is to bee vnderſtood that the Portugals were much offended with this our new trade into Barbarie, and both in our voiage the yeere before, as alſo in this they gaue out in England by their marchants, that if they tooke vs in thoſe partes, they would vſe vs as their mortall enemies, with great threates and menaces. But by God and good prouidence wee eſcaped their handes. From this Iland ſhaping our courſe for England, we were ſeuen or eight weekes before we could reach the coaſt of England. The firſt port wee entered into was the hauen of Plimmouth, from whence within ſhort time wee came into the Thames, and landed our marchandiſe at London, about the ende of the moneth of October, 1552.

A voiage made out of England vnto Guinea and Benin in Affrike, at the charges of certaine marchants Aduenturers of of the Citie of London, in the yeere of our Lord 1553.

I Was deſired by certaine of my friends to make ſome mention of this Voiage, that ſome memorie thereof might remaine to our poſteritie, if either iniquitie of time conſuming all things, or ignorance creeping in by barbarouſneſſe and contempt of knowledge ſhould hereafter bury in obliuion ſo worthie attempts, ſo much the greatlier to bee eſteemed, as before neuer enterpriſed by Engliſhmen, or at the leaſt ſo frequented, as at this preſent they are, and may bee, to the great commoditie of our marchants, if the ſame be not hindered by the ambition of ſuch, as for the conquering of fortie or fiftie miles here and there, and erecting of certaine fortreſſes, thinke to be Lordes of halfe the world, enuying that other ſhould enioy the commodities, which they themſelues cannot wholy poſſeſſe. And although ſuch as haue bene at charges in the diſcouering and conquering of ſuch landes ought by good reaſon to haue certaine priuileges, preheminences, and tributes for the ſame, yet (to ſpeake vnder correction) it may ſeeme ſomewhat rigorous, and agaynſt good reaſon and conſcience, or rather agaynſt the charitie that ought to be among Chriſtian men, that ſuch as inuade the dominions of other ſhould not permit other friendly to vſe the trade of marchandiſe in places neerer, or ſeldome frequented of them, whereby their trade is not hindered in ſuch places, where they themſelues haue at their owne election appointed the Martes of their traffike. But forasmuch as at this preſent it is not my intent to accuſe or defend, approoue or improoue, I will ceaſe to ſpeake any further hereof, and proceed to the deſcription of the firſt voyage, as briefly and faithfully as I was aduertiſed of the ſame, by the information of ſuch credible perſons, as made diligent inquiſition to know the trueth thereof, as much as ſhall be requiſite, omitting to ſpeake of many particular things, not greatly neceſſarie to be knowen: which neuertheleſſe, with alſo the exact courſe of the nauigation, ſhall be more fully declared in the ſecond voiage. And if herein fauour or friendſhip ſhall perhaps cauſe ſome to thinke that ſome haue bene ſharply touched, let them lay apart fauour and friendſhip, and giue place to trueth, that honeſt men may receiue prayſe for well doing, and lewd perſons reproch, as the iuſt ſtipend of their euill deſertes, whereby other may be deterred to doe the like, and vertuous men encouraged to proceed in honeſt attempts.

But that theſe voyages may be more plainly vnderſtood of all men, I haue thought good for this purpoſe, before I intreat hereof, to make a briefe deſcription of Africa, being that great part of the world, on whoſe Weſt ſide beginneth the coaſt of Guinea at Cabo Verde, about twelue degrees in latitude, on this ſide the Equinoctiall line, and two degrees in longitude from the meaſuring line, ſo running from the North to the South, and by Eaſt in ſome places, within 5,4, and 3 degrees and a halfe vnto the Equinoctiall, and ſo forth in maner directly Eaſt and by North, for the ſpace of 36 degrees or thereabout, in longitude from the Weſt to the Eaſt, as ſhall more plainly appeare in the deſcription of the ſecond voyage.

A briefe deſcription of Afrike gathered by Richard Eden.

Tunis.
Bugia.
Tripoli.
Numidia.
Ilands of Tunis.
Malta.
The deſerts of Lybia.
Barbarie.

IN Africa the leſſe are theſe kingdoms: the kingdom of Tunis and Conſtantina, which is at this day vnder Tunis, and alſo the region of Bugia, Tripoli, and Ezzah. This part of Afrike is very barren by reaſon of the great deſerts, as the deſerts of Numidia and Barca. The principall ports of the kingdome of Tunis are theſe: Goletta, Bizerta, Potofarnia, Bona, and Stora. The chiefe cities of Tunis are Conſtantina and Bona, with diuers other. Vnder this kingdom are many Ilands, as Zerbi, Lampadola, Pantalarea, Limoſo, Beit, Gamelaro, and Malta, where at this preſent is the great maſter of the Rhodes. Vnder the South of this kingdom are the great deſerts of Lybia. All the nations in this Africa the leſſe are of the ſect of Mahomet, and a ruſticall people, liuing ſcattred in villages. The beſt of this part of Afrike is Barbaria lying on the coaſt of the ſea Mediterraneum.

Mauritania.
The kingdom of Fes & Marocco.

Mauritania (now called Barbaria) is diuided into two parts, as Mauritania Tingitana, and Cæſarienſis. Mauritania Tingitana is now called the kingdom of Fes, and the kingdom of Marocco. The principall citie of Fes is called Feſſa: and the chiefe citie of Marocco is named Marocco.

Tremiſen.
Oram.
Merſalquiber.
Sala.

Mauritania Cæſarienſis is at this day called the kingdom of Tremiſen, with alſo the citie called Tremiſen or Telenſin. This region is full of deſerts, and reacheth to the Sea Mediterraneum, to the citie of Oram, with the port of Merſalquiber. The kingdom of Fes reacheth vnto the Ocean Sea, from the Weſt to the citie of Argilla: and the port of the ſayd kingdom is called Sala.

Azamor.
The Ilands of Canaria.
Guinea.
Aethiopians.

The kingdom of Marocco is alſo extended aboue the Ocean Sea, vnto the citie of Azamor and Azafi, which are vpon the Ocean Sea, toward the Weſt of the ſayd kingdom. Nere Mauritania Tingitana (that is to ſay, by the two kingdoms of Fes, and Marocco) are in the Sea, the Ilands of Canarie, called in old time, The fortunate Ilands. Toward the South of this region is the kingdom of Guinea, with Senega, Ialofo, Gambra, and many other regions of the Blacke Moores, called Aethiopians or Negros, all which are watered with the riuer Negro called in old time Niger. In the ſayd regions are no cities, but onely certaine lowe cottages made of boughes of trees, plaſtered with chalke, and couered with ſtrawe. In theſe regions are alſo very great deſerts.

Marocco.
Fes.
Tremiſen.
Guinea.

The kingdom of Marocco hath vnder it theſe ſeuen kingdoms: Hea, Sus, Guzula, the territorie of Marrocco, Duccala, Hazchora, and Tedle. The kingdom of Fes hath as many: as Fes, Temeſne, Azgar, Elabath, Errif, Garet, and Elcair. The kingdom of Tremiſen hath theſe regions: Tremiſen, Tenez, and Elgazair, all which are Machometiſts. But all the regions of Guinea are pure Gentiles, and idolatrous, without profeſſion of any religion, or other knowledge of God, then by the law of nature.

Africa yͤ great.
Africa the leſſe.
Carthage.

Africa the great is one of the three parts of the world, knowen in old time, and ſeuered from Aſia, on the Eaſt by the riuer Nilus, on the Weſt from Europe by the pillars of Hercules. The hither part is now called Barbarie, and the people Moores. The inner part is called Lybia and Aethiopia. Afrike the leſſe is in this wiſe bounded. On the Weſt it hath Numidia: On the Eaſt Cyrenaica: On the North, the ſea called Mediterraneum. In this countrey was the noble city of Carthage.

Preſter Iohn.
Cape de Bona Speranza.
Alcair.

In the Eaſt ſide of Afrike beneath the red ſea, dwelleth the great and mighty Emperour and Chriſtian king Preſter Iohn, well knowen to the Portugales in their voyages to Calicut. His dominions reach very farre on euery ſide: and hath vnder him many other Kings both chriſtian and heathen that pay him tribute. This mightie prince is called Dauid the Emperour of Aethiopia. Some write that the king of Portugall ſendeth him yeerely eight ſhips laden with marchandize. His kingdom confineth with the red Sea, and reacheth far into Afrike toward Aegypt and Barbarie. Southward it confineth with the Sea toward the Cape de Bona Speranza: and on the other ſide with the ſea of ſand, called Mare de Sabione, a very dangerous ſea lying betweene yͤ great citie of Alcair, or Cairo in Aegypt, and the country of Aethiopia: In the which way are many vnhabitable habitable deſerts, continuing for the ſpace of fiue dayes iourney. And they affirme, that if the ſayd Chriſtian Emperor were not hindered by thoſe deſerts (in the which is great lacke of victuals, & eſpecially of water) he would or now haue inuaded the kingdom of Egypt, and the citie of Alcair. The chiefe city of Ethiopia, where this great emperor is reſident, is called Amacaiz, being a faire citie, whoſe inhabitants are of the colour of an Oliue. There are alſo many other cities, as the city of Saua vpon the riuer of Nilus, where the Emperour is accuſtomed to remaine in the Sommer ſeaſon. There is likewiſe a great city named Barbaregaf, and Aſcon, from whence it is ſaid that the Queene of Saba came to Hieruſalem to heare the wiſedom of Salomon. This citie is but litle, yet very faire, and one of the chiefe cities in Ethiope. In this prouince are many exceeding high mountains, vpon the which is ſaid to be the earthly paradiſe: and ſome ſay that there are the trees of the Sunne and Moone, whereof the antiquitie maketh mention: yet that none can paſſe thither by reaſon of great deſerts of an hundred daies iourney. Alſo beyond theſe mountains is the Cape of Bona Speranza. And to haue ſaid thus much of Afrike it may ſuffice.

The firſt voiage to Guinea and Benin.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1553. the twelfth day of Auguſt, ſailed from Portſmouth two goodly ſhips, the Primeroſe and the Lion, with a pinnas called the Moone, being all well furniſhed aſwell with men of the luſtieſt ſort, to the number of ſeuen ſcore, as alſo with ordinance and victuals requiſite to ſuch a voiage: hauing alſo two captaines, the one a ſtranger called Anthonie Anes Pinteado, a Portugall, borne in a towne named The Port of Portugall, a wiſe, diſcreet, and ſober man, who for his cunning in ſailing, being as well an expert Pilot as a politike captaine, was ſometime in great fauour with the king of Portugall, and to whom the coaſts of Braſile and Guinea were committed to be kept from the Frenchmen, to whom he was a terrour on the Sea in thoſe parts, and was furthermore a gentleman of the king his maſters houſe. But as fortune in maner neuer fauoureth but flattereth, neuer promiſeth but deceiueth, neuer raiſeth but caſteth downe againe: and as great wealth & fauour haue alwaies companions, emulation and enuie, he was after many aduerſities & quarels made againſt him, inforced to come into England: where in this golden voyage he was euil matched with an vnequal companion, and vnlike match of moſt ſundry qualities & conditions, with vertues few or none adorned. Thus departed theſe noble ſhips vnder ſaile on their voyage: But firſt captaine Windam putting forth of his ſhip at Portſmouth a kinſman of one of the head marchants, and ſhewing herein a muſter of the tragicall partes hee had conceiued in his braine, and with ſuch ſmall beginnings nouriſhed ſo monſtrous a birth, that more happy, yea and bleſſed was that yong man being left behind, then if he had bene taken with them, as ſome do wiſh he had done the like by theirs. Thus ſailed they on their voyage, vntill they came to the Iland of Madera, where they tooke in certaine wines for the ſtore of their ſhips, and paid for them as they agreed of the price. At theſe Ilands they met with a great Galion of the king of Portugall, full of men and ordinance: yet ſuch as could not haue preuailed if it had attempted to withſtand or reſiſt our ſhips, for the which cauſe it was ſet foorth, not onely to let and interrupt theſe our ſhippes of their purpoſed voiage, but al other that ſhould attempt the like: yet chiefly to fruſtrate our voiage. For the king of Portugall was ſiniſterly informed, that our ſhips were armed to his caſtle of Mina in thoſe parties, whereas nothing leſſe was ment.

After that our ſhips departed from the Iland of Madera forward on their voiage, began this worthy captaine Pinteados ſorow, as a man tormented with the cōpany of a terrible Hydra, who hitherto flattred with him, & made him a faire countenance and ſhew of loue. Then did he take vpō him to command all alone, ſetting nought both by captain Pinteado, and the reſt of the marchants factors, ſometimes with opprobrious words, and ſomtimes with threatnings moſt ſhamfully abuſing them, taking from Pinteado the ſeruice of the boies and certain mariners that were aſſigned him by the order and direction of the worſhipful merchants, and leauing him as a commō mariner, which is the greateſt deſpite and grief that can be to a Portugale or Spaniard, to be diminiſhed of their honor, which they eſteem aboue all riches. Thus ſailing forward on their voiage, they came to the Ilands of Canarie, continuing their courſe frō thence vntil they arriued at the Iland of S. Nicholas, where they victualled thēſelues with freſh meat, of the fleſh of wild goats, whereof is great plenty in that Iland, & in maner of nothing els. From hence folowing on their courſe and tarying here & there at the deſert Ilands in the way, becauſe they would not come too timely to the countrey of Guinea for the heat, and tarying ſomwhat too long (for what can be well miniſtred in a commō wealth, where inequalitie with tyrannie wil rule alone) they came at the length to the firſt land of the country of Guinea, where they fel with the great riuer of Seſto, where they might foꝛ their marchandizes haue laden their ſhips with the graines of that countrey, which is a very hote fruit, and much like vnto a fig as it groweth on the tree. Foꝛ as the figs are full of ſmall ſeeds, ſo is the ſaid fruit full of graines, which are looſe within the cod, hauing in the mids thereof a hole on euery ſide. This kind of ſpice is much vſed in cold countries, & may there be ſold foꝛ great aduantage, foꝛ exchange of other wares. But our men, by the perſwaſion oꝛ rather infoꝛcement of this tragicall captaine, not regarding and ſetting light by that commoditie, in compariſon of ẏ fine gold they thirſted, ſailed an hundꝛed leagues further, vntil they came to the golden land: where not attempting to come neere the caſtle pertaining to the king of Portugall, which was within the riuer of Mina, they made ſale of their ware only on this ſide & beyond it, foꝛ the gold of that cōtry, to the quantitie of an hundꝛed and fiftie pounds weight, there being in caſe that they might haue diſpatched all their ware foꝛ gold, if the vntame bꝛaine of Windam had, oꝛ could haue giuen eare to the counſell and experience of Pinteado. Foꝛ when that Windam not ſatiſfied with the gold which he had, and moꝛe might haue had if he had taried about the Mina, commanding the ſaid Pinteado (foꝛ ſo he tooke vpon him) to lead the ſhips to Benin, being vnder the Equinoctial line, and an hundꝛed and fifty leagues beyond the Mina, where he looked to haue their ſhips laden with pepper: and being counſelled of the ſaid Pinteado, conſidering the late time of the yeere, foꝛ that time to go no further, but to make ſale of their wares ſuch as they had foꝛ gold, wherby they might haue bene great gainers: Windam not aſſenting hereunto, fell into a ſudden rage, reuiling the ſayd Pinteado, calling him Iew, with other oppꝛobꝛious woꝛds, ſaying, This whoꝛeſon Iew hath pꝛomiſed to bꝛing vs to ſuch places as are not, oꝛ as he cannot bꝛing vs vnto: but if he do not, I will cut off his eares and naile them to the maſte. Pinteado gaue the foꝛeſaid counſell to go no further foꝛ the ſafegard of the men and their liues, which they ſhould put in danger if they came too late, foꝛ the Roſſia which is their Winter, not foꝛ cold, but foꝛ ſmothering heate, with cloſe and cloudie aire and ſtoꝛming weather, of ſuch putrifying qualitie, that it rotted the coates of their backs: oꝛ els foꝛ comming to ſoone foꝛ the ſcoꝛching heat of the ſunne, which cauſed them to linger in the way. But of foꝛce and not of will bꝛought he the ſhips befoꝛe the riuer of Benin, where riding at an Anker, they ſent their pinnas vp into the riuer 50 oꝛ 60 leagues, from whence certaine of the marchants with captaine Pinteado, Franciſco a Portugale, Nicholas Lambart gentleman, and other marchants were conducted to the court where the king remained, ten leagues from the riuer ſide, whither when they came, they were bꝛought with a great company to the pꝛeſence of the king, who being a blacke Mooꝛe (although not ſo blacke as the reſt) ſate in a great huge hall, long and wide, the wals made of earth without windowes, the roofe of thin boꝛds, open in ſundꝛy places, like vnto louers to let in the aire.

Reuerence toward the king.

And here to ſpeake of the great reuerence they giue to their king, it is ſuch, that if we would giue as much to our Sauioꝛ Chꝛiſt, we ſhould remooue from our heads many plagues which we daily deſerue foꝛ our contempt and impietie.

So it is therfoꝛe, that when his noble men are in his pꝛeſence, they neuer looke him in the face, but ſit cowꝛing, as we vpon our knees, ſo they vpon their buttocks, with their elbowes vpon their knees, and their hands befoꝛe their faces, not looking vp vntil the king command them. And when they are comming toward the king, as far as they do ſee him, they do ſhew ſuch reuerence, ſitting on the ground with their faces couered as befoꝛe. Likewiſe when they depart from him, they turn not their backs toward him, but goe creeping backward with like reuerence.

The communication betweene the king of Benin and our men.

Pepper.

The kings gentlenes towards our men.

And now to ſpeake ſomewhat of the communication that was between the king and our men, you ſhall firſt vnderſtand that he himſelfe could ſpeake the Portugall tongue, which he had learned of a child. Therefoꝛe after he had commanded our men to ſtand vp, and demanded of them the cauſe of their comming into that countrey, they anſwered by Pinteado, that they were marchants trauelling into thoſe parties foꝛ the commodities of his countrey, foꝛ exchange of wares which they had bꝛought from their countries, being ſuch as ſhould be no leſſe commodious foꝛ him and his people. The king thē hauing of old lying in a certaine ſtoꝛe-houſe 30 oꝛ 40 kintals of Pepper (euery kintall being an hundꝛed weight) willed them to looke vpon the ſame, and againe to bꝛing him a ſight of ſuch merchandizes as they had bꝛought with them. And thereupon ſent with the captaine and the marchants certaine of his men to conduct them to the waters ſide, with other to bꝛing the ware from the pinnas to the court. Who when they were returned and the wares ſeen, the king grew to this ende with the merchants to pꝛouide in 30 dayes the lading of al their ſhips with pepper. And in caſe their merchandizes would not extend to the value of ſo much pepper, he pꝛomiſed to credite them to their next returne, and thereupon ſent the country round about to gather pepper, cauſing the ſame to be bꝛought to the court: So that within the ſpace of 30 dayes they had gathered foureſcoꝛe tunne of pepper.

In the meane ſeaſon our men partly hauing no rule of themſelues, but eating without meaſure of the fruits of the countrey, and drinking the wine of the Palme trees that droppeth in the night from the cut of the branches of the ſame, and in ſuch extreme heate running continually into the water, not vſed before to ſuch ſudden and vehement alterations (then the which nothing is more dangerous) were thereby brought into ſwellings and agues: inſomuch that the later time of the yeere comming on, cauſed them to die ſometimes three & ſometimes 4 or 5 in a day. Then Windam perceiuing the time of the 30 daies to be expired, and his men dying ſo faſt, ſent to the court in poſt to Captaine Pinteado, & the reſt to come away and to tary no longer. But Pinteado with the reſt, wrote backe to him againe, certifying him of the great quantity of pepper they had already gathered & looked daily for much more: deſiring him furthermore to remẽber the great praiſe and name they ſhould win, if they came home proſperouſly, and what ſhame of the contrary. With which anſwere Windam not ſatiſfied, and many of their men dying dayly, willed and commaunded them againe either to come away forthwith, or els threatened to leaue them behinde. When Pinteado heard this anſwere, thinking to perſwade him with reaſon, hee tooke his way from the court toward the ſhips, being conducted thither with men by the kings commandement.

In the meane ſeaſon Windam all raging, brake vp Pinteados Cabin, brake open his cheſtes, ſpoiled ſuch prouiſion of cold ſtilled waters and ſuckets as he had prouided for his health, and left him nothing, neither of his inſtruments to ſaile by, nor yet of his apparell: and in the meane time falling ſicke, himſelfe died alſo. Whoſe death Pinteado comming aboord, lamented as much as if he had bene the deereſt friend he had in the world. But certaine of the mariners and other officers did ſpit in his face, ſome calling him Iewe, ſaying that he had brought them thither to kill them: and ſome drawing their ſwords at him, making a ſhew to ſlay him. Then he perceiuing that they would needs away, deſired them to tary that he might fetch the reſt of the marchants that were left at the court, but they would not grant this requeſt. Then deſired he them to giue him the ſhipboate, with as much of an old ſaile as might ſerue for the ſame, promiſing them therwith to bring Nicholas Lambert and the reſt into England, but all was in vaine. Then wrote he a letter to the court to the marchants, informing them of all the matter, and promiſing them if God would lend him life to returne with all haſte to fetch thẽ. And thus was Pinteado kept aſhipboord againſt his will, thruſt among the boyes of the ſhip, not vſed like a man, nor yet like an honeſt boy, but glad to find fauour at the cookes hand. Then departed they, leauing one of their ſhips behind them, which they ſunke for lacke of men to cary her. After this, within 6 or 7 dayes ſayling, dyed alſo Pinteado for very penſiueneſſe & thought that ſtroke him to the heart. A man worthy to ſerue any prince, and moſt vilely vſed. And of ſeuenſcore men came home to Plimmouth ſcarcely forty, and of them many died. And that no man ſhould ſuſpect theſe words which I haue ſaide in commendation of Pinteado, to be ſpoken vpon fauour otherwiſe then trueth, I haue thought good to adde hereunto the copie of the letters which the king of Portugall and the infant his brother wrote vnto him to reconcile him, at ſuch time as vpon the king his maſters diſpleaſure (and not for any other crime or offence, as may appeare by the ſaid letters) he was only for pouertie inforced to come into England, where he firſt perſwaded our marchants to attempt the ſaid voyages to Guinea. But as the king of Portugall too late repented him that he had ſo puniſhed Pinteado, vpon malicious informations of ſuch as enuied the mans good fortune: euen ſo may it hereby appeare that in ſome caſes euen Lions themſelues may either be hindered by the contempt, or aided by the help of the poore miſe, according vnto the fable of Eſope.

The copie of Anthonie Anes Pinteado his letters patents, whereby the king of Portugall made him knight of his houſe, after all his troubles and impriſonment, which, by wrong information made to the king, he had ſuſteined of long time, being at the laſt deliuered, his cauſe knowen and manifeſted to the king by a gray Frier the kings Confeſſor.

I The king doe giue you to vnderſtand lord Francis Deſſeaſo, one of my counſell and ouerſeer of my houſe, that in cõſideration of the good ſeruice which Anthony Anes Pinteado, the ſonne of Iohn Anes, dwelling in the towne called the Port, hath done vnto me, my will and pleaſure is, to make him knight of my houſe, allowing to him in penſion ſeuen hundred reis monethly, and euery day one alcayre of barly, as long as he keepeth a horſe, & to be paid according to the ordinãce of my houſe. Prouiding alwaies that he ſhall receiue but one marriage gift. And this alſo in ſuch cõdition, that the time which is accepted in our ordinance, forbidding ſuch men to marry for getting ſuch children as might ſucceede them in this allowance, which is 6 yeres after the making of this patent, ſhalbe firſt expired before he do marry. I therfore command you to cauſe this to be entred in the booke called the Matricula of our houſhold, vnder the title of knights. And when it is ſo entred, let let the clarke of the Matricula, for the certeintie therof, write on the backſide of this Aluala, or patent, the number of the leafe wherein this our grant is entred. Which done, let him returne this writing vnto the ſaid Anthonie Anes Pinteado for his warrant.

I Diego Henriques haue written this in Almarin the two and twentie day of September, in the yeere of our Lord 1551. And this beneuolence the king gaue vnto Anthonie Anes Pinteado, the fiue and twentie day of Iuly this preſent yeere.

The Secretaries declaration written vnder the kings grant.

YOur Maieſtie hath vouchſafed, in reſpect and conſideration of the good ſeruice of Athony Anes Pinteado, dwelling in the port, and ſonne of Iohn Anes, to make him knight of your houſe, with ordinarie allowance, of ſeuen hundred reis penſion by the moneth, and one alcaire of barley by the day, as long as he keepeth a horſe: and to be paide according to the ordinance of your houſe, with condition that hee ſhall haue but one marriage gift: and that not within the ſpace of ſixe yeres after the making of theſe letters Patents. The Secretaries note. Entred in the booke of the Matricula. Fol. 683.

The copie of the letter of Don Lewes the infant, and brother to the king of Portugall, ſent into England to Anthonie Anes Pinteado.

ANthony Anes Pinteado, I the infant brother to the king, haue me heartily commended vnto you. Peter Gonſalues is gone to ſeeke you, deſiring to bring you home again into your countrey. And for that purpoſe he hath with him a ſafe cõduct for you, granted by the king, that therby you may freely and without all feare come home. And although the weather be foule and ſtormie, yet faile not to come: for in the time that his Maieſtie hath giuen you, you may doe many things to your contentation and gratifying the king, whereof I would be right glad: and to bring the ſame to paſſe, I will do all that lieth in me for your profite. But foraſmuch as Peter Gonſalues will make further declaration hereof vnto you, I ſay no more at this preſent. Written in Lisbone, the eight day of December. Anno 1552.

The infant Don Lewes.

ALl theſe foreſaid writings I ſaw vnder ſeale, in the houſe of my friend Nicholas Lieſe, with whom Pinteado left them, at his vnfortunate departing to Guinea. But, notwithſtanding all theſe friendly letters and faire promiſes, Pinteado durſt not attempt to goe home, neither to keepe companie with the Portugals his countrey men, without the preſence of other: foraſmuch as he had ſecrete admonitions that they intended to ſlay him, if time and place might haue ſerued their wicked intent.

The ſecond voyage to Guinea ſet out by Sir George Barne, Sir Iohn Yorke, Thomas Lok, Anthonie Hickman and Edward Caſtelin, in the yere 1554. The Captaine whereof was M. Iohn Lok.

AS in the firſt voiage I haue declared rather the order of the hiſtory, then the courſe of the nauigation, whereof at that time I could haue no perfect information: ſo in the deſcription of this ſecond voyage, my chiefe intent hath beene to ſhew the courſe of the ſame, according to the obſeruation and ordinarie cuſtome of the mariners, and as I receiued it at the handes of an expert Pilot, being one of the chiefe in this voyage, who alſo with his owne hands wrote a briefe declaration of the ſame, as he found and tried all things, not by coniecture, but by the art of ſayling, and inſtruments perteining to the mariners facultie. Not therefore aſſuming to my ſelfe the commendations due vnto other, neither ſo bold as in any part to change or otherwiſe diſpoſe the order of this voyage ſo well obſerued by art and experience, I haue thought good to ſet forth the ſame, in ſuch ſort and phraſe of ſpeech as is commonly vſed among them, and as I receiued it of the ſaid Pilot, as I haue ſaid. Take it therefore as followeth.

In the yeere of our Lord 1554 the eleuenth day of October, we departed the riuer of Thames with three goodly ſhips, the one called the Trinitie, a ſhip of the burden of ſeuenſcore tunne, the other called the Bartholomew, a ſhip of the burden of ninetie, the third was the Iohn Euangeliſt, a ſhip of ſeuen ſcore tunne. With the ſayd ſhips and two pinneſſes (whereof the one was drowned on the coaſt of England) we went forward on our voyage, and ſtayed at Douer fourteene dayes. We ſtaied alſo at Rie three or foure dayes. Moreouer laſt of all we touched at Dartmouth.

Robert Gainſh was maſter of the Iohn Euangeliſt.

The firſt day of Nouember at nine of the clocke at night, departing from the coaſt of England, we ſet off the Start, bearing Southweſt all that night in the ſea, and the next day all day, and the next night after, vntill the third day of the ſaid moneth about noone, making our way good, did runne threeſcore leagues.

The 17 day in the morning we had ſight of the Ile of Madera, which doth riſe to him that commeth in the Northnortheaſt part vpright land in the weſt part of it, and very high: and to the Southſoutheaſt a low long land, and a long point, with a ſaddle thorow the middeſt of it, ſtanding in two and thirtie degrees: and in the Weſt part, many ſprings of water running downe from the mountaine, and many white fieldes like vnto corne fields, & ſome white houſes to the Southeaſt part of it: and the toppe of the mountaine ſheweth very ragged, if you may ſee it; and in the Northeaſt part there is a bight or bay as though it were a harborow: Alſo in the ſaid part, there is a rocke a little diſtance from the ſhoare, and ouer the ſayd bight you ſhall ſee a great gappe in the mountaine.

The Ile of Madera.

The 19 day at twelue of the clocke we had ſight of the iſle of Palmes and Teneriffa and the Canaries. The Ile of Palme riſeth round, & lieth Southeaſt and Northweſt, and the Northweſt part is loweſt. In the South is a round hill ouer the head land, and another round hill aboue that in the land. There are betweene the Southeaſt part of the Ile of Madera & the Northweſt part of the Ile of Palme ſeuen and fiftie leagues. This Iſle of Palme lieth in eight and twenty degrees. And our courſe from Madera to the Ile of Palme was South and South and by Weſt, ſo that we had ſight of Teneriffa and of the Canaries. The Southeaſt part of the Ile of the Palme, & the Northnortheaſt of Teneriffa lie Southeaſt and Northweſt, and betweene them are 20 leagues. Teneriffa and the great Canary called Gran Canaria, and the Weſt part of Forteuentura ſtande in ſeuen and twenty degrees and a halfe. Gomera is a faire Iſland but very ragged, & lieth Weſt-ſouthweſt off Teneriffa. And whoſoeuer wil come betwene them two Iſlands muſt come South and by Eaſt, and in the South part of Gomera is a towne and a good rode in the ſaid part of the Iland: and it ſtandeth in ſeuen and twentie degrees and three terces. Teneriffa is an high land, with a great high pike like a ſugar loafe, and vpon the ſaid pike is ſnow throughout all the whole yeere. And by reaſon of that pike it may be knowen aboue all other Iſlands, and there we were becalmed the twentieth day of Nouember, from ſixe of the clocke in the morning, vntill foure of the clocke at afternoone.

The two and twentieth day of Nouember, vnder the Tropike of Cancer the Sunne goeth downe Weſt and by South. Vpon the coaſt of Barbarie fiue and twentie leagues by North Cape blanke, at three leagues off the maine, there are fifteene fadomes and good ſhelly ground, and ſande among and no ſtreames, and two ſmall Iſlands ſtanding in two and twentie degrees and a terce.

The coaſt of Barbarie.
Cape Blanke.

From Gomera to Cape de las Barbas is an hundred leagues, and our courſe was South and by Eaſt. The ſaid Cape ſtandeth in two and twentie and a halfe: and all that coaſt is flatte, ſixteene or ſeuenteene fadome deepe. Seuen or eight leagues off from the riuer del Oro to Cape de las Barbas, there vſe many Spaniardes and Portugals to trade for fiſhing, during the moneth of Nouember: and all that coaſt is very low lands. Alſo we went from Cape de las Barbas Southſouthweſt, and Southweſt and by South, till we brought our ſelues in twentie degrees and a halfe, reckoning our ſelues ſeuen leagues off: and there were the leaſt ſholes of Cape Blanke.

The riuer del Oro.

Then we went South vntill we brought our ſelues in 13 degrees, reckoning our ſelues fiue and twentie leagues off. And in 15 degrees we did reare the Croſſiers, and we might haue reared them ſooner if we had looked for them. They are not right a croſſe in the moneth of Nouember, by reaſon that the nights are ſhort there. Neuertheleſſe we had the ſight of them the 29 day of the ſaid moneth at night.

The croſſiers or croſſe ſtars.

The firſt of December, being in 13 degrees we ſet our courſe South and by Eaſt, vntill the fourth day of December at 12 of the clocke the ſame day. Then we were in nine degrees and a terce, reckoning our ſelues 30 leagues off the ſholes of the riuer called Rio Grande, being Weſtſouthweſt off them, the which ſholes be 30 leagues long.

Rio Grande.

The fourth of December we beganne to ſet our courſe Southeaſt, we being in ſixe degrees and a halfe.

The ninth day of December we ſet our courſe Eaſtſoutheaſt: the fourteenth day of the ſayde moneth we ſet our courſe Eaſt, we being in fiue degrees and a halfe, reckoning our ſelues thirty and ſixe leagues from the coaſt of Guinea.

Cape Mēſurado.
The riuer of Seſto.

The nineteenth of the ſaid moneth we ſet our courſe Eaſt and by North, reckoning our ſelues ſeuenteene leagues diſtant from Cape Menſurado, the ſaid Cape being Eaſtnortheaſt of vs, and the riuer of Seſto being Eaſt.

The one and twentith day of the ſaid moneth, we fell with Cape Menſurado to the Southeaſt, about two leagues off. This Cape may be eaſily knowen, by reaſon yͭ the riſing of it is like a Porpoſe-head. Alſo toward the Southeaſt there are three trees, whereof the Eaſtermoſt tree is the higheſt, and the middlemoſt is like a hie ſtacke, & the Southermoſt like vnto a gibet: and vpon the maine are foure or fiue high hilles riſing one after another like round hommocks or hillocks. And the Southeaſt of the three trees, brandiernwiſe: and all the coaſt along is white ſand. The ſaid Cape ſtandeth within a litle in ſixe degrees.

The two and twentieth of December we came to the riuer of Seſto, & remained there vntill the nine and twentieth day of the ſaid moneth. Here we thought it beſt to ſend before vs the pinneſſe to the riuer Dulce, called Rio Dulce, that they might haue the beginning of the market before the comming of the Iohn Euangeliſt.

The riuer of Seſto.

Cape de Monte.
Cape de las Palmas.

At the riuer of Seſto we had a tunne of graines. This riuer ſtandeth in ſixe degrees, lacking a terce. From the riuer of Seſto to Rio Dulce are fiue and twentie leagues. Rio Dulce ſtandeth in fiue degrees and a halfe. The riuer of Seſto is eaſie to be knowen, by reaſon there is a ledge of rockes on the Southeaſt part of the Rode. And at the entring into the hauen are fiue or ſixe trees that beare no leaues. This is a good harborow, but very narow at yͤ entrance into the riuer. There is alſo a rocke in the hauens mouth right as you enter. And all that coaſt betweene Cape de Monte, and cape de las Palmas, lieth Southeaſt & by Eaſt, Northweſt & by Weſt, being three leagues off the ſhore. And you ſhal haue in ſome places rocks two leagues off: and that, betweene the riuer of Seſto and cape de las Palmas.

The land of Cakeado.
Shauo.
Croke.
S. Vincents harborow.
The riuer Dulce.

Betweene the riuer of Seſto and the riuer Dulce are fiue and twentie leagues: & the high land that is betweene them both, is called Cakeado, being eight leagues from the riuer of Seſto. And to the Southeaſtwarde of it is a place called Shawgro, and an other called Shyawe or Shauo, where you may get freſh water. Off this Shyawe lieth a ledge of rockes: and to the Southeaſtward lieth a hedland called Croke. Betweene Cakeado and Croke are nine or ten leagues. To the Southeaſtward off, is a harborow called S. Vincent: Right ouer againſt S. Vincent, is a rocke vnder the water, two leagues & a halfe off the ſhore. To the Southeaſtward of that rocke you ſhal ſee an iſland about three or foure leagues off: this iſland is not paſt a league off the ſhore. To the Eaſtſoutheaſt of the iſland, is a rocke that lieth aboue the water, and by that rocke goeth in the riuer Dulce, which you ſhall know by the ſaid riuer and rocke. The Northweſt ſide of the hauen is flat ſand, and the Southeaſt ſide therof is like an Iſland, and a bare plot without any trees, and ſo is it not in any other place.

In the Rode you ſhall ride in thirteene or fourteene fadomes, good oaze and ſand, being the markes of the Rode to bring the Iſland and the Northeaſt land together, and here we ankered the laſt of December.

The third day of Ianuarie, we came from the riuer Dulce.

Cape de las Palmas.
The coaſt of Guinea.

Note that Cape de las Palmas is a faire high land, but ſome low places thereof by the water ſide looke like red cliffes with white ſtrakes like hie wayes, a cable length a piece, and this is the Eaſt part of the cape. This cape is the Southermoſt land in all the coaſt of Guinea, and ſtandeth in foure degrees and a terce.

The coaſt from Cape de las Palmas to Cape Trepointes, or de Tres Puntas, is faire & cleare without rocke or other danger.

The caſtle of Arra.

Twentie and fiue leaues from Cape de las Palmas, the land is higher then in any place, vntill we come to Cape Trepointes: And about ten leagues before you come to Cape Trepointes, the land riſeth ſtill higher and higher, vntill you come to Cape Trepointes. Alſo before you come to the ſaid Cape, after other 5 leagues to the Northweſt part of it, there is certaine broken ground, with two great rockes, and within them in the bight of a bay, is a caſtle called Arra, pertaining to the king of Portugall. You ſhall know it by the ſaid rockes that lie off it: for there is none ſuch from Cape de las Palmas to Cape Trepointes. This coaſt lieth Eaſt and by North, Weſt and by South. From Cape de las Palmas to the ſaid caſtle is foureſcore and fifteene leagues. And the coaſt lieth from the ſaid caſtle to the Weſtermoſt point of Trepoyntes, Southeaſt and by South, Northweſt and by North. Alſo the Weſtermoſt point of Trepoyntes is a low lande, lying halfe a mile out in the ſea: and vpon the innermoſt necke, to the land-ward, is a tuft of trees, and there we arriued the eleuenth day of January.

The 12 day of January we came to a towne called Samma or Samua, being 8 leagues from Cape Trepointes toward Eaſtnortheaſt. Betweene Cape Trepointes and the towne of Samua is a great ledge of rockes a great way out in the ſea. We continued foure dayes at that Towne, and the Captaine thereof would needs haue a pledge a ſhore. But when they receiued the pledge, they kept him ſtill, and would traffike no more, but ſhot off their ordinance at vs. They haue two or three pieces of ordinance and no more.

The towne of Samma.

The pledge was ſir Iohn Yorke his Nephew.

The ſixteenth day of the ſaid month we made reckoning to come to a place called Cape Corea, where captaine Don Iohn dwelleth, whoſe men entertained vs friendly. This Cape Corea is foure leagues Eaſtwarde of the caſtle of Mina, otherwiſe called La mina, or Caſtello de mina, where we arriued the 18 day of the moneth. Here we made ſale of all our cloth, ſauing two or three packes.

Cape Corea.

The caſtle of Mina perteining to the king of Portugall.

The 26 day of the ſame moneth we weighed anker, and departed from thence to the Trinitie, which was ſeuen leagues Eaſtward of vs, where ſhe ſolde her wares. Then they of the Trinitie willed vs to go Eaſtward of that eight or nine leagues, to ſell part of their wares, in a place called Perecow, and another place named Perecow Grande, being the Eaſtermoſt place of both theſe, which you ſhal know by a great round hill neere vnto it, named Mōte Rodondo, lying Weſtward from it, and by the water ſide are many high palme trees. From hence did we ſet forth homeward the thirteenth day of February, & plied vp alongſt till we came within ſeuen or eight leagues to Cape Trepointes. About eight of the clocke the 15 day at afternoone, wee did caſt about to ſeaward: and beware of the currants, for they will deceiue you ſore. Whoſoeuer ſhall come from the coaſt of Mina homeward, let him be ſure to make his way good Weſt, vntill he reckon himſelfe as farre as Cape de las Palmas, where the currant ſetteth alwayes to the Eaſtward. And within twentie leagues Eaſtward of Cape de las Palmas is a riuer called De los Potos, where you may haue freſh water and balaſt enough, and plenty of iuory or Elephants teeth. This riuer ſtandeth in foure degrees, and almoſt two terces. And when you reckon your ſelfe as farre ſhot as Cape de las Palmas, being in a degree, or a degree and a halfe, you may go Weſt, and Weſt by North, vntill you come in three degrees: and then you may go Weſtnorthweſt, and Northweſt and by Weſt, vntill you come in fiue degrees, and then Northweſt. And in ſixe degrees, we met Northerly windes, and great ruffling of tides. And as we could iudge, the currants went to the Northnorthweſt. Furthermore betweene Cape de Monte, and Cape verde, go great currants which deceiue many men.

Currants.

The 22 day of Aprill, we were in 8 degrees and two terces: and ſo we ran to the Northweſt, hauing the winde at Northeaſt and Eaſtnortheaſt, and ſometimes at Eaſt, vntill we were at 18 degrees and a terce, which was on May day. And ſo from 18 and two terces, we had the winde at Eaſt and Eaſtnortheaſt, and ſometimes at Eaſtſoutheaſt: and then we reckoned the Iſlands of Cape verde Eaſtſoutheaſt of vs, we iudging our ſelues to be 48 leagues off. And in 20 and 21 degrees, we had the winde more Eaſterly to the Southward then before. And ſo we ran to the Northweſt and Northnorthweſt, and ſometimes North and by Weſt and North, vntill we came into 31 degrees, where we reckoned our ſelues a hundred and fourescore leagues Southweſt and by South of the Iſland de los Flores, and there wee met with the winde at Southſoutheaſt, and ſet our courſe Northeaſt.

The Iſle de Flores.

In 23 degrees we had the winde at the South and Southweſt, and then we ſet our courſe Northnortheaſt, and ſo we ran to 40 degrees, and then we ſet our courſe Northeaſt, the winde being at the Southweſt, and hauing the Iſle de Flores Eaſt of vs, and 17 leagues off.

In the 41 degrees we met with the winde at Northeaſt, and ſo we ran Northweſtward, then we met with the winde Weſtnorthweſt, and at the Weſt within 6 leagues, running toward the Northweſt, and then we caſt about, and lay Northeaſt, vntill we came in 42 degrees, where we ſet our courſe Eaſtnortheaſt, iudging the Iſle of Coruo South and by Weſt of vs, and ſixe and thirtie leagues diſtant from vs.

The Iſle of Coruo.

A remembrance, that the 21 day of May we communed with Iohn Raſe, and he thought it beſt to goe Northeaſt, and iudged himſelfe 25 leagues Eaſtward to the Iſle de Flores, and in 39 degrees and a halfe.

Note, that on the fourth day of September, vnder nine degrees, we loſt the ſight of the North ſtarre.

Where they loſt the ſight of the North ſtarre.

Note alſo, that in 45 degrees, the compaſſe is varied 8 degrees to the Weſt.

Item, in 40 degrees the compaſſe did varie 15 degrees in the whole.

Item, in 30 degrees and a halfe, the compaſſe is varied 5 degrees to the Weſt.

How the compaſſe doeth varie.

Be it alſo in memory that two or three daies before we came to Cape de 3 puntas, the pinneſſe went alongſt the ſhore, thinking to ſell ſome of our wares, and ſo we came to anker three or foure leagues Weſt and by South of the Cape de 3 puntas, where we left the Trinitie.

The Primroſe.

Then our pinneſſe came aboord with all our men, the pinneſſe alſo tooke in more wares. They told me moreouer that they would goe to a place where the Primroſe was, and had receiued much gold at the firſt voyage to theſe parties, and tolde me furthermore that it was a good place: but I fearing a brigantine that was then vpon the coaſt, did wey and follow them, and left the Trinitie about foure leagues off from vs, and there we rode againſt that towne foure dayes: ſo that Martine by his owne deſire, and aſſent of ſome of the Commiſſioners that were in the pinneſſe, went a ſhoare to the towne, and there Iohn Berin went to traffique from vs, being three miles off traffiquing at an other towne. The towne is called Samma or Samua, for Samma and Sammaterra, are the names of the two firſt townes, where we did traffique for gold, to the Northeaſt of Cape de 3 puntas.

The towne of Samma.
Golde.

Hitherto continueth the courſe of the voyage, as it was deſcribed by the ſayde Pilot. Nowe therefore I will ſpeake ſomewhat of the countrey and people, and of ſuch things as are brought from thence.

Gold foure hundreth weight.
Graines.
Elephants teeth.

They brought from thence at the laſt voiage foure hundred pound weight and odde of gold, of two and twentie carrats and one graine in fineneſſe: alſo ſixe and thirtie buts of graines, & about two hundred and fifty Elephants teeth of all quantities. Of theſe I ſaw & meaſured ſome of nine ſpans in length, as they were crooked. Some of them were as bigge as a mans thigh aboue the knee, and weyed about foureſcore and ten pound weight a peece. They ſay that ſome one hath bin ſeene of an hundred and fiue & twentie pound weight. Other there were which they call the teeth of calues, of one or two or three yeeres, whereof ſome were a foot and a halfe, ſome two foot, and ſome 3 or more, according to yͤ age of the beaſt. Theſe great teeth or tuſks grow in the vpper iaw downeward, and not in the nether iaw vpward, wherein the Painters and Arras workers are deceiued. At this laſt voyage was brought from Guinea the head of an Elephant, of ſuch huge bigneſſe, that onely the bones or cranew thereof, beſide the nether iaw & great tuſks, weighed about two hundred weight, and was as much as I could well lift from the ground: inſomuch that conſidering alſo herewith the weight of two ſuch great teeth, the nether iaw with the leſſe teeth, the tongue, the great hanging eares, the bigge & long ſnout or troonke, with all the fleſh, braines, and ſkinne, with all other parts belonging to the whole head, in my iudgement it could weigh litle leſſe then fiue hundred weight. This head diuers haue ſeene in the houſe of the worthy marchant ſir Andrew Iudde, where alſo I ſaw it, and beheld it, not only with my bodily eyes, but much more with the eyes of my mind and ſpirit, conſidering by the worke, the cunning and wiſedome of the workemaiſter: without which conſideration, the ſight of ſuch ſtrange and wonderfull things may rather ſeeme curioſities, then profitable contemplations.

The contemplations of Gods works.

The deſcription and properties of the Elephant.

The Elephant (which ſome call an Oliphant) is the biggeſt of all foure footed beaſts, his forelegs are longer then his hinder, he hath ancles in the lower part of his hinder legges, and fiue toes on his feete vndiuided, his ſnout or tronke is ſo long, and in ſuch forme, that it is to him in the ſtead of a hand: for he neither eateth nor drinketh but by bringing his tronke to his mouth, therewith he helpeth vp his Maſter or keeper, therewith he ouerthroweth trees. Beſide his two great tuſks, he hath on euery ſide of his mouth foure teeth, wherewith he eateth and grindeth his meate: either of theſe teeth are almoſt a ſpan in length, as they grow along in the iaw, and are about two inches in height, and almoſt as much in thickneſſe. The tuſkes of the male are greater then of the female: his tongue is very litle, and ſo farre in his mouth, that it cannot be ſeene: of all beaſtes they are moſt gentle and tractable, for by many ſundry wayes they are taught, and doe vnderſtand: inſomuch that they learne to doe due honor to a king, and are of quicke ſenſe and ſharpeneſſe of wit. When the male hath once ſeaſoned the female, he neuer after toucheth her. The male Elephant liueth two hundreth yeeres, or at the leaſt one hundred and twentie: the female almoſt as long, but the floure of their age is but threeſcore yeeres, as ſome write. They cannot ſuffer winter or cold: they loue riuers, and will often go into them vp to the ſnout, wherewith they blow and ſnuffe, and play in the water: but ſwimme they cannot, for the weight of their bodies. Plinie and Soline write, that they vſe none adulterie. If they happen to meete with a man in wilderneſſe being out of the way, gently they wil go before him, & bring him into the plaine way. Ioyned in battel, they haue no ſmall reſpect vnto them that be wounded: for they bring them that are hurt or weary into the middle of the army to be defended: they are made tame by drinking the iuiſe of barley. They haue continual warre againſt Dragons, which deſire their blood, becauſe it is very cold: and therefore the Dragon lying awaite as the Elephant paſſeth by, windeth his taile (being of exceeding length) about the hinder legs of the Elephant, & ſo ſtaying him, thruſteth his head into his tronke and exhauſteth his breath, or elſe biteth him in the eare, whereunto he cannot reach with his tronke, and when the Elephant wareth faint, he falleth downe on the ſerpent, being now full of blood, and with the poiſe of his body breaketh him: ſo that his owne blood with the blood of the Elephant runneth out of him mingled together, which being colde, is congealed into that ſubſtance which the Apothecaries call Sanguis Draconis, (that is) Dragons blood, otherwiſe called Cinnabaris, although there be an other kinde of Cinnabaris, commonly called Cinoper or Vermilion, which the Painters vſe in certaine colours.

Sanguis Draconis.

Three kinds of Elephants.

They are alſo of three kinds, as of the Marſhes, the plaines, and the mountaines, no leſſe differing in conditions, Philoſtratus writeth, that as much as the Elephant of Libya in bignes paſſeth the horſe of Nyſea, ſo much doe the Elephants of India exceed them of Libya: for the Elephants of India, ſome haue bene ſeene of the height of nine cubits: the other do ſo greatly feare theſe, that they dare not abide the ſight of them. Of the Indian Elephants onely the males haue tuſkes, but of them of Ethiopia and Libya both kindes are tuſked: they are of diuers heights, as of twelue, thirteene, and fourteene dodrants, euery dodrant being a meaſure of nine inches. Some write that an Elephant is bigger then three wilde Oxen or Buffes. They of India are black, or of yͤ colour of a mouſe, but they of Ethiope or Guinea are browne: the hide or ſkinne of them all is very hard, and without haire or briſtles: their eares are two dodrants broad, and their eyes very litle. Our men ſaw one drinking at a riuer in Guinea, as they ſailed into the land.

Of other properties & conditions of the Elephant, as of their maruellous docilitie, of their fight and vſe in the warres, of their generation and chaſtitie, when they were firſt ſeene in the Theaters and triumphes of the Romanes, how they are taken & tamed, and when they caſt their tuſks, with the vſe of the ſame in medicine, who ſo deſireth to know, let him reade Plinie, in the eight booke of his naturall hiſtory. He alſo writeth in his twelft booke, that in olde time they made many goodly workes of iuory or Elephants teeth: as tables, treſſels, poſtes of houſes, railes, latteſſes for windowes, images of their gods, and diuers other things of iuory, both coloured and vncoloured, and intermixt with ſundry kindes of precious woods, as at this day are made certaine chaires, lutes, and virginals. They had ſuch plenty thereof in olde time, that (as far as I remember) Ioſephus writeth, that one of the gates of Hieruſalem was called Porta Eburnea, (that is) the Iuory gate. The whiteneſſe thereof was ſo much eſteemed, that it was thought to repreſent the natural faireneſſe of mans ſkinne: inſomuch that ſuch as went about to ſet forth (or rather corrupt) naturall beautie with colours and painting, were reproued by this prouerbe, Ebur atramento candefacere; that is, To make iuory white with inke. The Poets alſo deſcribing the faire necks of beautifull virgins, call them Eburnea colla, that is, Iuory necks. And to haue ſaid thus much of Elephants and Iuory, it may ſuffice.

Workes of Iuorie.

The people of Africa.

Now therefore I will ſpeake ſomewhat of the people and their maners, and maner of liuing, with an other briefe deſcription of Africa alſo. It is to be vnderſtood, that the people which now inhabite the reigons of the coaſt of Guinea, and the midle parts of Africa, as Libya the inner, and Nubia, with diuers other great & large regions about the ſame, were in old time called Æthiopes and Nigritæ, which we now call Moores, Moorens, or Negroes, a people of beaſtly liuing, without a God, lawe, religion, or common wealth, and ſo ſcorched and vexed with the heat of the ſunne, that in many places they curſe it when it riſeth. Of the regions and people about the inner Libya (called Libya interior) Gemma Phryſius writeth thus.

Libya interior.

Libya interior is very large and deſolate, in the which are many horrible wilderneſſes & mountaines, repleniſhed with diuers kinds of wilde and monſtrous beaſtes and ſerpents. Firſt from Mauritania or Barbary toward the South is Getulia, a rough and ſauage region, whoſe inhabitants are wilde and wandering people. After theſe follow the people called Melanogetuli and Pharuſij, which wander in the wilderneſſe, carrying with them great gourdes of water. The Ethiopians called Nigritæ occupy a great part of Africa, and are extended to the Weſt Ocean. Southward alſo they reach to the riuer Nigritis, whoſe nature agreeth with the riuer of Nilus, foraſmuch as it is increaſed and diminiſhed at the ſame time, and bringeth forth the like beaſts as the Crocodile. By reaſon whereof, I thinke this to be the ſame riuer which the Portugals call Senega: For this riuer is alſo of the ſame nature. It is furthermore maruellous and very ſtrange that is ſaid of this riuer: And this is, that on the one ſide thereof, the inhabitants are of high ſtature and black, and on the other ſide, of browne or tawnie colour, and low ſtature, which thing alſo our men confirme to be true.

Getulia.

Æthiopes. Nigritæ.

The riuer Nigritis or Senega.

A ſtrange thing.

There are alſo other people of Libya called Garamantes, whoſe women are common: for they contract no matrimonie, neither haue reſpect to chaſtitie. After theſe are the nations of the people called Pyrei, Sathiodaphnitæ, Odrangi, Mimaces, Lynxamatæ, Dolopes, Aganginæ, Leuci Ethiopes, Xilicei Ethiopes, Calcei Ethiopes, and Nubi. Theſe haue the ſame ſituation in Ptolome that they now giue to the kingdome of Nubia. Here are certaine Chriſtians vnder the dominion of the great Emperour of Æthiopia, called Preſter Iohn. From theſe toward the Weſt is a great nation of people called Aphricerones, whoſe region (as farre as may be gathered by coniecture) is the ſame that is now called Regnum Orguene, confining vpon the Eaſt parts of Guinea. From hence Weſtward, and ſomewhat toward the North, are the kingdoms of Gambra and Budomel, not farre from the riuer of Senega. And from hence toward the inland regions, and along by the ſea coaſt, are the regions of Ginoia or Guinea, which we commonly call Ginnee. On the Weſtſide of theſe regions toward the Ocean, is the cape or point called Cabo verde, or Caput viride, (that is) the greene cape, to the which the Portugals firſt direct their courſe when they ſaile to America, or the land of Braſile. Then departing from hence, they turne to the right hand toward the quarter of the winde called Garbino, which is betweene the Weſt and the South. But to ſpeake ſomewhat more of Æthiopia: although there are many nations of people ſo named, yet is Aethiopia chiefly diuided into two parts, whereof the one is called Aethiopia vnder Aegypt, a great & rich region. To this perteineth the Iſland Meroe, imbraced round about with the ſtremes of the riuer Nilus. In this Iſland women reigned in old time. Ioſephus writeth, that it was ſometime called Sabea: and that the Queene of Saba came from thence to Ieruſalem, to heare the wiſedom of Salomon. Frō hence toward the Eaſt reigneth the ſaid Chriſtian Emperor Preſter Iohn, whom ſome cal Papa Iohannes, & other ſay that he is called Pean Iuan (that is) great Iohn, whoſe Empire reacheth far beyond Nilus, and is extended to the coaſts of the Red ſea & Indian ſea. The middle of the region is almoſt in 66. degrees of longitude, and 12. degrees of latitude. About this region inhabite the people called Clodi, Riſophagi, Babylonij, Axiunitæ, Molili, and Molibæ. After theſe is the region called Troglodytica, whoſe inhabitants dwel in caues and dennes: for theſe are their houſes, & the fleſh of ſerpents their meat, as writeth Plinie, and Diodorus Siculus. They haue no ſpeach, but rather a grinning and chattering. There are alſo people without heads, called Blemines, hauing their eyes and mouth in their breaſt. Likewiſe Strucophagi, and naked Ganphaſantes: Satyrs alſo, which haue nothing of men but onely ſhape. Moreouer Oripei, great hunters. Mennones alſo, and the region of Smyrnophora, which bringeth foorth myrrhe. After theſe is the region of Azania, in the which many Elephants are found. A great part of the other regions of Africke that are beyond the Aequinoctiall line, are now aſcribed to the kingdome of Melinde, whoſe inhabitants are accuſtomed to trafique with the nations of Arabia, and their king is ioyned in friendſhip with the king of Portugal, and payeth tribute to Preſter Iohn.

Aethiopia interior. White Elephants. Habaſia. Ichthiophagi. Anthropophagi. Montes Lunæ. Gazatia. Cap. bonæ Spei.

The other Ethiope, called Æthiopia interior (that is) the inner Ethiope, is not yet knowne for the greatneſſe thereof, but onely by the ſea coaſtes: yet is it deſcribed in this maner. Firſt from the Aequinoctiall toward ỷ South, is a great region of Aethiopians, which bringeth forth white Elephants, Tygers, and the beaſtes called Rhinocerotes. Alſo a region that bringeth foorth plenty of cynamome, lying betweene the branches of Nilus. Alſo the kingdome of Habech or Habaſia, a region of Chriſtian men, lying both on this ſide and beyond Nilus. Here are alſo the Aethiopians, called Ichthiophagi (that is) ſuch as liue onely by fiſh, and were ſometimes ſubdued by the warres of great Alexander. Furthermore the Aethiopians called Rhapſij, & Anthropophagi, ỷ are accuſtomed to eat mans fleſh, inhabite the regions neere vnto the mountains called Montes Lunæ (that is) the mountaines of the Moone. Gazatia is vnder the Tropike of Capricorne. After this followeth the front of Afrike, the Cape of Buena Speranza, or Caput Bonæ Spei, that is, the Cape of good hope, by the which they paſſe that ſaile from Lisbon to Calicut. But by what names the Capes and gulfes are called, foraſmuch as the ſame are in euery globe and card, it were here ſuperfluous to rehearſe them.

Africa without colde. The winter of Africa. Flames of fire and noiſe in the aire. The middle region of the aire is cold.

Some write that Africa was ſo named by the Grecians, becauſe it is without colde. For the Greeke letter Alpha or A ſignifieth priuation, voyd, or without: and Phrice ſignifieth colde. For in deed although in the ſtead of Winter they haue a cloudy and tempeſtuous ſeaſon, yet is it not colde, but rather ſmoothering hote, with hote ſhowres of raine alſo, and ſomewhere ſuch ſcorching windes, that what by one meanes and other, they ſeeme at certaine times to liue as it were in fornaces, and in maner already halfe way in Purgatorie or hell. Gemma Phriſius writeth, that in certaine parts of Africa, as in Atlas the greater, the aire in the night ſeaſon is ſeene ſhining, with many ſtrange fires and flames riſing in maner as high as the Moone: and that in the element are ſometime heard as it were the ſound of pipes, trumpets and drummes: which noiſes may perhaps be cauſed by the vehement and ſundry motions of ſuch firie exhalations in the aire, as we ſee the like in many experiences wrought by fire, aire and winde. The hollowneſſe alſo, and diuers reflexions and breaking of the cloudes may be great cauſes hereof, beſide the vehement colde of the middle region of the aire, whereby the ſaid fiery exhalations, aſcending thither, are ſuddenly ſtricken backe with great force: for euen common and dayly experience teacheth vs, by the whiſſing of a burning torch, what noiſe fire maketh in the aire, and much more where it ſtriueth when it is incloſed cloſed with aire, as appeareth in gunnes, and as the like is ſeene in onely aire incloſed, as in Organ pipes, and ſuch other inſtruments that go by winde. For winde (as ſay the Philoſophers) is none other then aire vehemently moued, as we ſee in a paire of bellowes, and ſuch other.

The heate of the Moone.

The nature of the ſtarres.

Some of our men of good credit that were in this laſt voiage to Guinea, affirme earneſtly that in the night ſeaſon they felt a ſenſible heat to come from the beames of the moone. The which thing, although it be ſtrange and inſenſible to vs that inhabite cold regions, yet doeth it ſtand with good reaſon that it may ſo be, foraſmuch as the nature of ſtarres and planets (as writeth Plinie) conſiſteth of fire, and conteineth in it a ſpirit of life, which cannot be without heat.

And, that the Moone giueth heate vpon the earth the Prophet Dauid ſeemeth to confirme in his 121. Pſalme, where ſpeaking of ſuch men as are defended from euils by Gods protection, hee ſaith thus: Per diem Sol non exuret te, nec Luna per noctem. That is to ſay, In the day the Sunne ſhall not burne thee, nor the Moone by night.

Spoutes of water falling out of the aire.

Cataracts of heauen.

Vehement motions in the Sea.

A ſtrange thing.

The power of nature.

They raſe their ſkinnes.

Fine iewels.

A bracelet.

Shackles.

Rings.

They ſay farthermore, that in certaine places of the ſea they ſaw certaine ſtreames of water, which they call ſpouts, falling out of the aire into the ſea, & that ſome of theſe are as bigge as the great pillars of Churches: inſomuch that ſometimes they fall into ſhippes, and put them in great danger of drowning. Some faine that theſe ſhould be the Cataracts of heauen, which were all opened at Noes floud. But I thinke them rather to be ſuch fluxions and eruptions as Ariſtotle in his booke de Mundo ſaith, to chance in the ſea. For ſpeaking of ſuch ſtrange things as are ſeene often times in the ſea, he writeth thus. Oftentimes alſo euen in the ſea are ſeene euaporations of fire, and ſuch eruptions and breaking foorth of ſprings, that the mouthes of riuers are opened. Whirlepooles, and fluxions are cauſed of ſuch other vehement motions, not only in the middeſt of the ſea, but alſo in creeks & ſtreights. At certaine times alſo, a great quantity of water is ſuddenly lifted vp and carried about with the Moone, &c. By which wordes of Ariſtotle it doth appeare that ſuch waters be lifted vp in one place at one time, and ſuddenly fall downe in an other place at another time. And hereunto perhaps perteineth it that Richard Chanceller told me that he heard Sebaſtian Cabot report, that (as farre as I remember) either about the coaſts of Braſile or Rio de Plata, his ſhippe or pinneſſe was ſuddenly lifted from the ſea, and caſt vpon land, I wot not howe farre. The which thing, and ſuch other like wonderfull and ſtrange workes of nature while I conſider, and call to remembrance the narrowneſſe of mans vnderſtanding and knowledge, in compariſon of her mightie power, I can but ceaſe to maruell and confeſſe with Plinie, that nothing is to her impoſſible, the leaſt part of whoſe power is not yet knowen to men. Many things more our men ſaw and conſidered in this voyage, woorthy to be noted, whereof I haue thought good to put ſome in memory, that the reader may aſwell take pleaſure in the variety of things, as knowledge of the hiſtorie. Among other things therefore, touching the maners and nature of the people, this may ſeeme ſtrange, that their princes & noble men vſe to pounce and raſe their ſkinnes with pretie knots in diuers formes, as it were branched damaſke, thinking that to be a decent ornament. And albeit they goe in maner all naked, yet are many of them, & eſpecialy their women, in maner laden with collars, bracelets, hoopes, and chaines, either of gold, copper, or iuory. I my ſelfe haue one of their braſlets of Iuory, weighing two pound and ſixe ounces of Troy weight, which make eight and thirtie ounces: this one of their women did weare vpon her arme. It is made of one whole piece of the biggeſt part of the tooth, turned and ſomewhat carued, with a hole in the midſt, wherin they put their hands to weare it on their arme. Some haue on euery arme one, and as many on their legges, wherewith ſome of them are ſo galled, that although they are in maner made lame thereby, yet will they by no meanes leaue them off. Some weare alſo on their legges great ſhackles of bright copper, which they thinke to bee no leſſe comely. They weare alſo collars, bracelets, garlands, and girdles, of certain blew ſtones like beads. Likewiſe ſome of their women weare on their bare armes certaine foreſleeues made of the plates of beaten golde. On their fingers alſo they weare rings, made of golden wires, with a knot or wreath, like vnto that which children make in a ring of a ruſh. Among other things of golde that our men bought of them for exchange of their wares, were certaine dogs-chaines and collers.

Dogs chaines of golde.

A muſke cat.

They are very wary people in their bargaining, and will not loſe one ſparke of golde of any value. They vſe weights and meaſures, and are very circumſpect in occupying the ſame. They that ſhall haue to doe with them, muſt vſe them gently: for they will not trafique or bring in any wares if they be euill vſed. At the firſt voyage that our men had into theſe parties, it ſo chanced, that at their departure from the firſt place where they did trafick, one of them either ſtole a muſke Cat, or tooke her away by force, not miſtruſting that that ſhould haue hindered their bargaining in another place whither they intended to goe. But for all the haſte they coulde make with full ſailes, the fame of their miſuſage ſo preuented them, that the people of that place alſo, offended thereby, would bring in no wares: inſomuch that they were inforced either to reſtore the Cat, or pay for her at their price, before they could traffique there.

Their houſes.

Their houſes are made of foure poſtes or trees, and couered with boughes.

Their feeding.

Their common feeding is of roots, & ſuch fiſhes as they take, whereof they haue great plenty.

Flying fiſhes.

A ſtrange thing.

There are alſo ſuch flying fiſhes as are ſeene in the ſea of the Weſt Indies. Our men ſalted of their fiſhes, hoping to prouide ſtore thereof: but they would take no ſalt, and muſt therfore be eaten forthwith as ſome ſay. Howbeit other affirme, that if they be ſalted immediatly after they be taken, they will laſt vncorrupted ten or twelue dayes. But this is more ſtrange, that part of ſuch fleſh as they caried with them out of England, which putrified there, became ſweete againe at their returne to the clime of temperate regions.

Their bread.

They vſe alſo a ſtrange making of bread, in this maner. They grinde betweene two ſtones with their handes as much corne as they thinke may ſuffice their family, and when they haue thus brought it to floure, they put thereto a certaine quantitie of water, and make thereof very thinne dough, which they ſticke vpon ſome poſt of their houſes, where it is baked by the heate of the Sunne: ſo that when the maſter of the houſe or any of his family will eate thereof, they take it downe and eate it.

Their wheat.

The Sunne.

Their drinke.

They haue very faire wheate, the eare whereof is two handfuls in length, and as bigge as a great Bulruſh, and almoſt foure inches about where it is biggeſt. The ſtemme or ſtraw ſeemeth to be almoſt as bigge as the litle finger of a mans hand, or litle leſſe. The graines of this wheate are as big as our peaſon, round alſo, and very white, and ſomewhat ſhining, like pearles that haue loſt their colour. Almoſt all the ſubſtance of them turneth into floure, & maketh litle bran or none. I told in one eare two hundred & threeſcore graines. The eare is incloſed in three blades longer then it ſelfe, & of two inches broad a piece. And by this fruitfulnes the Sunne ſeemeth partly to recompence ſuch griefes and moleſtations as they otherwiſe receiue by the feruent heate thereof. It is doubtleſſe a worthy cōtemplation to conſider the contrary effects of the ſunne: or rather the contrary paſſions of ſuch things as receiue the influence of his beames, either to their hurt or benefit. Their drinke is either water, or the iuiſe that droppeth from the cut branches of the barren Date trees, called Palmitos. For either they hang great gourdes at the ſaid branches euery euening, and let them ſo hang all night, or elſe they ſet them on the ground vnder the trees, that the droppes may fall therein. They ſay that this kinde of drinke is in taſte much like vnto whey, but ſomewhat ſweeter, and more pleaſant. They cut the branches euery euening, becauſe they are ſeared vp in the day by the heate of the Sunne. They haue alſo great beanes as bigge as cheſtnuts, and very hard, with a ſhell in the ſtead of a huſke.

Many things more might be ſaide of the maners of the people, and of the wonders and monſtrous things that are engendred in Africke. But it ſhall ſuffice to haue ſaide thus much of ſuch things as our men partly ſawe, and partly brought with them.

Graines.

And whereas before ſpeaking of the fruit of graines, I deſcribed the ſame to haue holes by the ſide (as in deede it hath, as it is brought hither) yet was I afterward enfourmed, that thoſe holes were made to put ſtringes or twigges through the fruite, thereby to hang them vp to dry at the Sunne. They grow not paſt a foote and a halfe, or two foote from the ground, and are as red as blood when they are gathered. The graines themſelues are called of the Phiſicions Grana Paradiſi.

Shels that cleaue to ſhips.

Barnacles.

Bromas.

At their comming home the keeles of their ſhippes were marueilouſly ouergrowne with certaine ſhelles of two inches length and more, as thicke as they could ſtand, and of ſuch bigneſſe that a man might put his thumbe in the mouthes of them. They certainely affirme that in theſe there groweth a certaine ſlimie ſubſtance, which at the length ſlipping out of the ſhell and falling in the ſea, becommeth thoſe foules which we call Barnacles. The like ſhelles haue bene ſeene in ſhips returning frō Iſeland, but theſe ſhels were not paſt halfe an inch in length. Of the other that came from Guinea, I ſawe the Primeroſe lying in the docke, and in maner couered with the ſaid ſhels, which in my iudgement ſhould greatly hinder her ſayling. Their ſhips were alſo in many places eaten with the wormes called Bromas or Biſſas, whereof mention is made in the Decades. Theſe creepe betweene the plankes, which they eate through in many places.

A ſecret.

The death of our men.

Fiue blacke Moores brought into England.

Among other things that chanced to them in this voyage, this is worthy to be noted, that whereas they ſailed thither in ſeuen weekes, they could returne in no leſſe ſpace then twentie weekes. The cauſe whereof they ſay to be this: That about the coaſt of Cabo Verde the winde is euer at the Eaſt, by reaſon whereof they were enforced to ſaile farre out of their courſe into the maine Ocean, to finde the winde at the Weſt to bring them home. There died of our men at this laſt voyage about twentie and foure, whereof many died at their returne into the clime of the colde regions, as betweene the Iſlands of Azores and England. They brought with them certaine blacke ſlaues, whereof ſome were tall and ſtrong men, and could wel agree with our meates and drinkes.

The

Colde may be better abiden then heate.

The colde and moyſt aire doth ſomewhat offend them. Yet doubtleſſe men that are borne in hot Regions may better abide colde, then men that are borne in colde Regions may abide heate, foraſmuch as vehement heate reſolueth the radicall moyſture of mens bodies, as colde conſtraineth and preſerueth the ſame.

This is alſo to be conſidered as a ſecret worke of nature, that throughout all Africke, vnder the Æquinoctial line, and neere about the ſame on both ſides, the regions are extreeme hote, and the people very blacke. Whereas contrarily ſuch regions of the Weſt Indies as are vnder the ſame line are very temperate, and the people neither blacke, nor with curlde and ſhort wooll on their heads, as they of Africke haue, but of the colour of an Oliue, with long and blacke heare on their heads: the cauſe of which variety is declared in diuers places in the Decades.

It is alſo worthy to be noted that ſome of them that were at this voyage told me: That is, that they ouertooke the courſe of the Sunne, ſo that they had it North from them at noone, the 14. day of March. And to haue ſaid thus much of theſe voyages, it may ſuffice.

The firſt voyage made by Maſter VVilliam Towrſon Marchant of London, to the coaſt of Guinea, with two Ships, in the yeere 1555.

September.

VPon Munday the thirtieth day of September wee departed from the Iſle of Wight, out of the hauen of Neuport with two good ſhippes, the one called the Hart, the other the Hinde, both of London, and the Maſters of them were Iohn Ralph, and William Carter, for a voyage to bee made vnto the Riuer de Seſtos in Guinea, and to other hauens thereabout.

October.

It fell out by the varietie of windes, that it was the foureteenth day of October before wee coulde fetch Dartmouth: and being there arriued wee continued in that roade ſixe dayes, and the 20. of October we warpt out of the hauen, and ſet ſaile, directing our courſe towards the Southweſt, and the next morning we were runne by eſtimation thirty leagues.

Nouember.

The firſt of Nouember we found our ſelues to be in 31. degrees of latitude by the reckoning of our Maſter. This day we ranne about 40. leagues alſo.

The ſecond day we ranne 36. leagues.

Porto Santo.

The third day we had ſight of Porto Santo, which is a ſmall Iſland lying in the ſea, about three leagues long, and a league & a halfe broad, & is poſſeſſed by Portugals. It riſeth as we came from the Northnorthweſt like two ſmall hilles neere together. The Eaſt end of the ſame Iſland is a high land like a ſaddle with a valley, which makes it to beare that forme. The Weſt ende of it is lower with certaine ſmall round hillocks. This Iſland lyeth in thirty and three degrees. The ſame day at 11. of the clocke we rayſed the Iſle of Madera, which lieth 12. leagues from Porto Santo, towards the Southweſt: that Iſland is a faire Iſland and fruitfull, and is inhabited by Portugals, it riſeth afarre off like a great whole land and high. By three of the clocke this day at after noone we were thwart of Porto Santo, and we ſet our courſe Southweſt, to leaue the Iſle of Madera to the Eaſtward, as we did Porto Santo. Theſe two Iſlands were the firſt land that we ſaw ſince wee left the coaſt of England. About three of the clocke after midnight wee were thwart of Madera, within three leagues of the Weſt ende of it, and by meanes of the high hilles there, we were becalmed: We ſuppoſe we ranne this day and night 30. leagues.

Madera.

The fourth day wee lay becalmed vnder the Iſle of Madera, vntill one of the clocke at afternoone, and then, the winde comming into the Eaſt, wee went our courſe, and ranne that day fifteene leagues.

The 5. day we ranne 15. leagues more.

Tenerif.

The 6. day in the morning we rayſed the Iſle of Tenerif, otherwiſe called the Pike, becauſe it is a very high Iſland, with a pike vpon the top like a loafe of ſuger. The ſame night we raiſed the Iſle of Palma, which is a high land alſo, and to the Weſtward of the Iſle of Tenerif.

Palma.

Gomera.

The 7. day we perceiued the Iſle of Gomera, which is an Iſland ſtanding betwixt Tenerif and Palma, about 12. leagues Eaſtward from Palma, and 8. leagues Weſtward from Tenerif: and for feare of being becalmed with the Iſle of Tenerif, we left both it, and Gomera to the Eaſtward of vs, and went betwixt Palma and Gomera. We ranne this day and night 30. leagues.

Note that theſe Iſlands be 60. leagues from Madera, and that there are 3. Iſlands more to the Weſtward of Tenerif, named the Grand Canaria, Forte-ventura, & Lancerot, of which Iſlands we came not in ſight: they be inhabited by Spaniards.

Ferro.

This day alſo we had ſight of the Iſle of Ferro, which is to the Southwards 13. leagues from the other Iſlands, and is poſſeſſed by Spaniards. All this day and night by reaſon of the winde we could not double the point of the Iſle of Ferro, except we would haue gone to the Weſtward of it, which had bene much out of our courſe: therefore we kept about, and ranne backe fiue houres Eaſtnortheaſt to the ende we might double it vpon the next boord, the winde continuing Southeaſt, which hath not bene often ſeene vpon that coaſt by any trauailers: for the winde continueth there for the moſt part Northeaſt, & Eaſt Northeaſt: ſo vpon the other boord by the next morning we were in a maner with the Iſland, and had roome ynough to double the ſame.

The 8. day we kept our courſe as neere the winde as wee could, becauſe that our due courſe to fetch the coaſt of Barbary was Southeaſt and by Eaſt, but by the ſcant winde wee could not goe our due courſe, but went as neere it as we could, and ranne this day and night 25. leagues.

The 9. day we ranne 30. leagues, the 10, 25. leagues, the 12, 24.

The 12. day we ſawe a ſaile vnder our Lee, which was as we thought a fiſherman, ſo that wee went roome to haue ſpoken with him, but within one houre there fell ſuch a fogge, that wee could not ſee the ſhippe nor one of vs the other: we ſhot off diuers pieces to the Hinde, but ſhe heard them not: at after noone ſhe ſhot off a piece which wee heard, and made her anſwere with another: and within one halfe houre after the fogge brake vp, and we were within 4. leagues of the ſhoare vpon the coaſt of Barbary, and wee ſounded and had 14. fadom water. The Barke alſo came roome with vs and there ankered by reaſon of the contrary winde. When we fell with the land, we could not iudge iuſtly what part of the land it was, becauſe the moſt part of that coaſt is lowe land, and no part to be iudged of it but the forepart of the ſhoare, which is white like chalke or ſand, and very deepe vnto the hard ſhoare: there immediatly we began to fiſh, and found great ſtore of a kinde of fiſh which the Portugals commonly fiſh for vpon that coaſt, which they cal Pergoſſes, the Frenchmen call them Saders, and our men ſalt-water breames. Before the clearing vp of the fogge, the ſhippe which we followed ſhaped vs ſuch a courſe that we could ſee her no more, by reaſon of our ſhooting off to finde the Hinde againe. This part of the coaſt of Barbary, by our Pilots reckoning, is about 16. leagues to the Eaſtwards of the riuer del Oro.

Riuer del Oro.

The 13. day in the afternoone wee ſpyed a ſaile comming towards vs, which wee iudged to be the ſaile that wee ſawe the day before, and as ſoone as we ſpied him, wee cauſed the Hinde to way her ancre and to goe towardes him, and manned out our Skiffe in like caſe to lay him aboorde, or to diſcerne what hee was, and wee our ſelues within halfe an houre after waped alſo: but after the ſaile had eſpied vs, hee kept about, and turned backe againe, and ſhortly after there fell ſuch another fogge, that wee coulde not ſee him: which fogges continued all that night, ſo that we were conſtrained to leaue the chaſe. This afternoone the winde came about, and wee went our courſe Southweſt and by Weſt, to goe cleare off the coaſt, wee ranne that night ſixteene leagues.

A Caruell taken.

The foureteenth day in the morning was very foggie: but about twelue a clocke wee eſpied a Caruell of 60. tunne which was fiſhing, and we ſent our Skiffe to him with fiue men, and all without any weapon ſauing their Oares. The Caruell for haſte let ſlippe her ancre, and ſet ſaile; and they ſeeing that, fearing that they ſhould not fetch her, would tary for no weapons, and in the ende ouertooke the Caruell, and made her to ſtrike ſaile, and brought her away, although they had foureteene or fifteene men aboord, & euery man his weapon, but they had not the hearts to reſiſt our men. After they were come to vs, they let fall their ancre, for wee had caſt ancre becauſe the winde was not good: I cauſed then the Skiffe to come for mee, and I went aboorde of them to ſee that no harme ſhould bee done to them, nor to take any thing but that which they might ſpare vs for our money. So we tooke of them 3. Tapnets of figges, two ſmall pots of oyle, two pipes of water, foure hogſheads of ſaltfiſh which they had taken vpon the coaſt, and certaine freſh fiſh which they did not eſteeme, becauſe there is ſuch ſtore vpon that coaſt, that in an houre and ſometime leſſe, a man may take as much fiſh as will ſerue twentie men a day. For theſe things, and for ſome wine which wee dranke aboorde of them, and three or foure great Cannes which they ſent aboord of our ſhippes, I payed them twentie and ſeuen Piſtolets, which was twiſe as much as they willingly would haue taken: and ſo let them goe to their ancre and cable which they had let ſlippe, and got it againe by our helpe. After this wee ſet ſaile, but the winde cauſed vs to ancre againe about twelue leagues off the riuer del Oro, as the Portugals tolde vs. There were fiue Caruels more in this place, but when they ſawe vs, they made all away for feare of vs.

Great ſtore of fiſh vpon the coaſt of Barbary.

The 15. day we ridde ſtill becauſe of the winde.

The Tropike of Cancer in 23. and a halfe.

The 16. day we ſet ſaile and ranne our courſe 40. leagues. This day, by the reckoning of our Pilots, we were right vnder the Tropike of Cancer. The 17. day we ranne 25. leagues within ſight for the moſt part of the coaſt of Barbary.

The 18. day wee ranne thirtie leagues, and at twelue of the clocke by the reckoning of our Pilots we were thwart of Cape Blanke.

Cape Blanke.

The 22.day our Pilots reckoned vs to be thwart Cape Verde.

Cape Verde.

The 12.day of December we had ſight of land of Guinea, which as ſoone as we ſaw we halled into the land Northeaſt, and about 12.of the clocke at night we were neere the ſhoare within leſſe then 2.leagues: and then we kept about and ſounded, and found 18.fadom water. Afterwards we ſaw a light towards the ſhoare, which we thought to haue bene a ſhip, and thereby iudged it to be the riuer de Seſtos, which light as ſoone as we eſpied, we came to an anker & armed our tops, and made all things ready to fight, becauſe we doubted that it might be ſome Portugal or French man: this night we remained at an anker, but in the morning we ſaw no man, only we eſpied 4.rockes about 2.Engliſh miles from vs, one great rocke, and the 3.other ſmal ones, which when we ſawe, we ſuppoſed that the light came from the ſhore, and ſo wayed and ſet ſaile Eaſt Southeaſt along the ſhoare, becauſe the Maſter did not well know the place, but thought that we were not ſo farre to the Eaſt as the riuer de Seſtos.

The coaſt of Guinea.

This land all along is a low land, and full of very high trees all along the ſhoare, ſo that it is not poſſible to know the place that a man doth fall withall, except it be by the latitude: In theſe 24.houres I thinke we ran 16. leagues, for all the night we had a great gale as we were vnder ſaile, and had withall ſtore of thunder and lightnings.

The 13.day for the moſt part we ran Eaſt Southeaſt all along the ſhoare, within two leagues alwayes of the ſame, and found the land all as at the firſt, ful of woods and great rocks hard aboord the ſhoare, and the billow beating ſo ſore, that the ſeas brake vpon the ſhoare as white as ſnow, and the water mounted ſo high that a man might eaſily diſcerne it 4.leagues off, in ſuch wiſe that no boats could land there. Thus we ran vntil 12.of the clocke, and then they tooke the Sunne and after iudged themſelues to be 24.leagues paſt the riuer de Seſtos to the Eaſtwards, by reaſon whereof we halled into the ſhoare within two Engliſh miles, and there ankered and found fifteene fadom water, and all off from the ſhoare the ſea ſo ſmooth, that we might wel haue rid by an Hawſer. All that after-noone we trimmed our boate and made her a ſaile, to the ende that ſhe might go along by the ſhore to ſeeke ſome place to water in: for wee could not goe backe againe to the riuer de Seſtos, becauſe the winde blowes alwayes contrary, and the Currant runneth alwayes to the Eaſtwards, which was alſo againſt vs.

The Currant ſetting Eaſtward.

The 14.day we ſet ſaile & went back againe along the coaſt, and ſent our boats hard aboord the ſhoare to ſeeke a watering place, which they found about 12.of the clock, and we being farre into the ſea, met with diuers boats of the Countrey, ſmall, long and narrow, & in euery boate one man and no more: we gaue them bread which they did eat, & were very glad of it. About 4 of the clocke our boats came to vs with freſh water: and this night we ankered againſt a Riuer.

The 15.day we wayed and ſet ſaile to goe neere the ſhoare, and with our leade wee ſounded all the way, and found ſometimes rockes, and ſometimes faire ground, and at the ſhalloweſt found 7.fadoms alwayes at the leaſt. So in fine we found 7.fadom and a halfe within an Engliſh mile of the ſhoare, and there we ankered in a maner before the mouth of the Riuer, and then wee ſent our boats into the Riuer for water, which went about a mile within the Riuer, where they had very good water. This Riuer lieth by eſtimation 8.leagues beyond the Riuer de Seſtos, and is called in the Carde Riuer S. Vincent, but it is ſo hard to finde, that a boat being within halfe a mile of it ſhall not be able to diſcerne that it is a Riuer: by reaſon that directly before the mouth of it there lyeth a ledge of rockes, which is much broader then the Riuer, ſo that a boate muſt runne in along the ſhoare a good way betwixt the rockes and the ſhoare before it come to the mouth of the Riuer, and being within it, it is a great Riuer and diuers other Riuers fall into it: The going into it is ſomewhat ill, becauſe that at the entring the ſeas do goe ſomewhat high, but being once within it, it is as calme as the Thames.

Riuer S. Vincent.

There are neere to the Sea vpon this Riuer diuers inhabitants, which are mighty bigge men and go al naked except ſome thing before their priuie parts, which is like a clout about a quarter of a yard long made of the barke of trees, and yet it is like a cloth: for the barke is of that nature, that it will ſpin ſmall after the maner of linnen. Some of them alſo weare the like vpon their heades being painted with diuers colours, but the moſt part of them go bare headed, and their heads are clipped and ſhorne of diuers ſorts, and the moſt part of them haue their ſkin of their bodies raced with diuers workes, in maner of a leather Ierkin. The men and women goe ſo alike, that one cannot know a man from a woman but by their breaſtes, which in the moſt part be very foule and long, hanging downe low like the vdder of a goate.

Cloth made of the barke of trees.

The Negroes race their ſkinnes.

The ſame morning we went into the Riuer with our Skiffe, and caried certaine baſons, manels, &c. And there we tooke that day one hogſ-head and 100.li.waight of Graines, and two Elephants teeth at a reaſonable good reckoning. Wee ſolde them both baſons, and Manellios, and

Graines of Guinea

Elephants teeth.

Margarits, but they deſired moſt to haue baſons: For the moſt part of our baſons wee had by eſtimation about 30. li. for a piece, and for an Elephants tooth of 30. li. waight, we gaue them 6.

The 16. day in the morning we went into the riuer with our Skiffe, and tooke ſome of euery ſort of our marchandize with vs, and ſhewed it to the Negroes, but they eſteemed it not, but made light of it, and alſo of the baſons, Manellios and Margarits, which yeſterday they did buy: howbeit for the baſons they would haue giuen vs ſome graines, but to no purpoſe, ſo that this day wee tooke not by eſtimation aboue one hundreth pound waight of Graines, by meanes of their Captaine, who would ſuffer no man to ſell any thing but through his hands, and at his price: he was ſo ſubtile, that for a baſon hee would not giue 15. pound waight of Graines, and ſometimes would offer vs ſmall diſhfuls, whereas before wee had baſkets full, and when he ſaw that wee would not take them in contentment, the Captaine departed, and cauſed all the reſt of the boates to depart, thinking belike that wee would haue followed them, and haue giuen them their owne aſkings. But after that wee perceiued their fetch, wee wayed our Grapnel and went away, and then wee went on land into a ſmall Towne to ſee the faſhions of the Countrey, and there came a threeſcore of them about vs, and at the firſt they were afraid of vs, but in the ende perceiuing that wee did no hurt, they would come to vs and take vs by the hand and be familiar with vs, and then we went into their Townes, which were like to twentie ſmall houels, all couered ouer with great leaues and baggage, and all the ſides open, and a ſcaffolde vnder the houſe about a yard high, where they worke many pretie things of the barkes of trees, and there they lye alſo. In ſome of their houſes they worke yron and make faire dartes, and diuers other things to worke their boates, and other things withall, and the women worke as well as the men. But when wee were there diuers of the women to ſhew vs pleaſure danced and ſung after their maner, full ill to our eares. Their ſong was thus:

The deſcription of their Townes and houſes.

And with theſe words they leape and dance and clap their hands. Beaſtes we could ſee none that they had, but two goates, ſmall dogges, and ſmall hennes: other beaſtes we ſaw none. After that we had well marked all things we departed and went aboord our ſhips: which thing the Captaine of the other towne perceiuing, ſent two of his ſeruants in a boat with a baſket of Graines, and made vs ſignes that if when we had ſlept wee would come againe into their riuer, wee ſhould haue ſtore of Graines, and ſo ſhewed vs his Graines and departed.

The 17. day in the morning becauſe we thought that the Negroes would haue done ſomething becauſe the Captaine ſent for vs, I required the Maſter to goe on ſhoare, and ſent the reſt of our Marchants with him, and taried aboord my ſelfe by reaſon that the laſt day he eſteemed our things ſo litle: ſo when the Maſter and the reſt came into the riuer, the captaine with diuers others came to them, and brought Graines with them, & after that he ſaw that I was not there, he made ſignes to know where I was, and they made ſignes to him againe that I was in the ſhips: and then hee made ſignes to know who was Captaine by the name of Diago, for ſo they call their Captaine, & they pointed to the maſter of the ſhip: then he began to ſhew his Graines, but he held them ſo vnreaſonably, that there was no profit to be made of them: which things the Maſter perceiuing, and ſeeing that they had no ſtore of Graines, came away, and tooke not aboue 50. pound waight of Graines. Then he went a ſhoare to the litle Towne where we were the day before, & one of them plucked a Gourd, wherewith the Negroes were offended, & came many of them to our men with their darts and great targets, and made ſignes to them to depart: which our men did, hauing but one bow and two or three ſwords, and went aboord the boate and came away from them: and aſſoone as they were come aboord we wayed and ſet ſaile, but the winde was off the Sea, ſo that we could not get out cleare of certaine rocks, and therefore we came to an ancre againe.

Diago the name of a Captaine.

This riuer is called Riuer S. Vincent, ſtanding in 4. degrees and a halfe, and it ebbeth and floweth there euery 12. houres, but not much water when it ebbeth the moſt: while wee were there, it ebbed one fadome and a halfe water.

The latitude of S. Vincent riuer is 4. degrees and a halfe.

This countrey as farre as we could perceiue is altogether woody, and al ſtrange trees, whereof wee knewe none, and they were of many ſorts, with great leaues like great dockes, which bee higher then any man is able to reach the top of them.

Leaues of exceeding length.

There are certaine peaſon by the Sea ſide, which grow vpon great and very long ſtalkes, one of the ſtalkes I meaſured and found it 27. paces long, and they grow vpon the ſand like to trees, and that ſo neere the Sea, that ſometimes the Sea floweth into the woods as we might perceiue by the water markes.

Long peaſe ſtalkes.

The trees and all things in this place grow continually greene. Diuers of the women haue ſuch exceeding long breaſts, that ſome of them wil lay the ſame vpon the ground and lie downe by them, but all the women haue not ſuch breaſts.

Long womens breaſts.

At this place all the day the winde bloweth off the Sea, and all the night off the land, but wee found it to differ ſometimes, which our Maſter marueiled at.

This night at 9. of the clocke the winde came vp at the Eaſt, which ordinarily about that time was wont to come out of the North Northweſt off the ſhoare: yet we wayed and halled off South with that winde all night into the Sea, but the next morning we halled in againe to the lande, and tooke in 6. Tunnes of water for our ſhip, and I thinke the Hinde tooke in as much.

I could not perceiue that here was any gold, or any other good thing: for the people be ſo wilde and idle, that they giue themſelues to ſeeke out nothing: if they would take paines they might gather great ſtore of graines, but in this place I could not perceiue two Tunne.

There are many foules in the Countrey, but the people wil not take the paines to take them.

I obſerued ſome of their words of ſpeach, which I thought good here to ſet downe.

The language about the Riuer of S. Vincent.

Bezow, bezow,	Is their ſalutation.
Manegete afoye,	Graines ynough.
Crocow afoye,	Hennes ynough.
Zeramme afoye,	Haue you ynough?
Begge ſacke,	Giue me a knife.
Begge come,	Giue me bread.
Borke,	Holde your peace.
Coutrecke,	Ye lye.
Veede,	Put foorth, or emptie.
Brekeke,	Rowe.
Diago,	Their Captaine, and ſome call him Dabo.

These and other wordes they ſpeake very thicke, and oftentimes recite one word three times together, and at the laſt time longer then at the two firſt.

The 18. day towards night, as we were ſailing along the coaſt, we met with certaine boats in the ſea, & the men ſhewed vs that there was a riuer thwart of vs, where there were Graines to be ſold, but we thought it not good to tary there, leaſt the other ſhips ſhould get before vs. This riuer hath lying before it three great rockes, and 5. ſmall rocks, one great tree, and a litle tree right by the riuer, which in height exceeded all the reſt: we halled this night along the coaſt 10. leagues.

The 19. day as we coaſted the ſhoare, about twelue of the clocke there came out to vs 3. boates to tell vs that they had graines, & brought ſome with them for a ſhew, but we could not tary there. We proceeded along the coaſt, & ancred by the ſhore all the night, and ran this day 10. leagues.

The 20. day the Hinde hauing ankered by vs amongſt rockes, and foule ground, loſt a ſmall anker. At noone, as we paſſed along the coaſt, there came forth a Negro to vs, making ſignes, that if we would goe a ſhoare, wee ſhould haue Graines, and where wee ankered at night, there came another to vs, and brought Graines, and ſhewed vs them, and made ſignes that wee ſhould tary, and made a fire vpon the land in the night, meaning thereby to tell vs where we ſhould land, and ſo they did in diuers other places vpon the coaſt, where they ſaw vs to anker.

The tides and nature of the ſhoare.

In al the places where we haue ankred, ſince we came from our watring place, we haue found the tide alwayes running to the Weſtwards, and all along the coaſt many rockes hard aboord the ſhoare, and many of them a league off the ſhoare or more, we ran this day 12. leagues.

The 21. day, although we ranne all day with a good gale of winde, yet the tides came ſo ſore out of the coaſt, that we were not able to runne aboue ſixe leagues: and this day there came ſome Negroes to vs, as there had done other times.

The point of Palmas.

The 22. wee ranne all day and night to double a point, called Das palmas, and ranne ſixteene leagues.

The 23. day about 3. of the clocke we were thwart of the point, & before we came to the Weſtermoſt part of it, we ſaw a great ledge of rocks, which lie Weſt from the Cape about 3. leagues and a league or more frō the land. Shortly after we had ſight of the Eaſtermoſt part of the Cape, which lieth 4. leagues from the Weſtermoſt part, and vpon the very corner thereof lie two greene places, as it were cloſes, and to the Weſtwards of the Cape the land parted from the Cape, as it were a Bay, whereby ſo may well be knowen. Foure leagues more beyonde that there lieth a head-land in the ſea, and about two leagues beyond the head-land there goeth in a great Bay, as it were a riuer, before which place we ankered all that night, which wee did, leaſt in the night wee ſhould ouerrunne a riuer, where the * laſt yeere they had all their Elephants teeth.

*That was the yere 1554.

This Cape Das palmas lieth vnder foure degrees and a halfe, and betwixt the ſaid Cape, and the riuer de Seſtos is the greateſt ſtore of Graines to be had, and being paſt the ſaid Cape, there is no great ſtore elſe where.

Where we ankered this night, we found that the tide, which before ran alwayes to the Weſtward, from this Cape runneth all to the Eaſtward: this day we ranne ſome 16. leagues.

The 24. day running our courſe, about eight of the clock there came forth to vs certaine boats, which brought with them ſmall egges, which were ſoft without ſhels, and they made vs ſignes, that there was within the land freſh water, and Goates: and the Maſter thinking that it was the riuer which we ſought, caſt ancker and ſent the boate on ſhoare, with one that knew the riuer, and comming neere the ſhoare, hee perceiued that it was not the riuer, and ſo came backe againe, and went along the ſhoare, with their oares and ſaile, and wee weyed and ranne along the ſhoare alſo: and being thirteene leagues beyond the Cape, the Maſter perceiued a place which he iudged to be the riuer, when wee were in deede two miles ſhot paſt it: yet the boate came from the ſhoare, and they that were in her ſaide, that there was no riuer: notwithſtanding wee came to an ancker, and the Maſter and I tooke fiue men with vs in the boat, and when hee came neere the ſhoare, hee perceiued that it was the ſame riuer which hee did ſeeke: ſo we rowed in, and found the entrance very ill, by reaſon that the ſea goeth ſo high: and being entred, diuers boates came to vs, and ſhewed vs that they had Elephants teeth, and they brought vs one of about eight pound, & a little one of a pound, which we bought: then they brought certaine teeth to the riuer ſide, making ſignes, that if the next day we would come againe, they would ſell vs them: ſo we gaue vnto two Captaines, to either of them a manillio, and ſo we departed, and came aboord, and ſent out the other boate to another place, where certaine boates that came into the ſea, made vs ſignes that there was freſh water: and being come thither, they found a towne, but no riuer, yet the people brought them freſh water, and ſhewed them an Elephants tooth, making ſignes that the next day they would ſel them teeth, and ſo they came aboord.

A Towne.

This riuer lieth by the Carde thirteene leagues from the Cape Das palmas, and there lieth to the Weſtwards of the ſame a rocke about a league in the ſea, and the riuer it ſelfe hath a point of lande comming out into the Sea, whereupon grow fiue trees, which may well bee diſcerned two or three leagues off, comming from the Weſtward, but the riuer cannot bee perceiued vntill ſuch time as a man be hard by it, and then a man may perceiue a litle Towne on ech ſide the riuer, and to ech Towne there belongeth a Captaine. The riuer is but ſmall, but the water is good and freſh.

Two miles beyond the riuer, where the other towne is, there lieth another point into the Sea, which is greene like a cloſe, and not aboue ſixe trees vpon it, which growe one of them from the other, whereby the coaſt may well be knowen: for along all the coaſt that we haue hitherto ſailed by, I haue not ſeene ſo much bare land.

Many Palme trees.

In this place, and three or foure leagues to the Weſtward of it, al along the ſhoare, there grow many Palme trees, whereof they make their wine de Palma. These trees may eaſily be knowen almoſt two leagues off, for they be very high and white bodied, and ſtreight, and be biggeſt in the midſt: they haue no boughes, but onely a round buſh in the top of them: and at the top of the ſame trees they boare a hole, and there they hang a bottell, and the iuyce of the tree runneth out of the ſaid hole into the bottle, and that is their wine.

Cape Tres puntas.

From the Cape das Palmas, to the Cape Tres puntas, there are 100. leagues: and to the port where we purpoſe to make ſales of our cloth beyond the Cape Tres puntas 40. leagues.

Note, that betwixt the riuer De Seſtos, and the Cape Das palmas, is the place where all the graines be gathered.

The language of the people of this place, as far as I could perceiue, differeth not much frō the language of thoſe which dwel where we watred before: but the people of this place be more gentle in nature then the other, and goodlier men: their building & apparel is all one with the others.

Their deſire in this place was moſt of all to haue Manillios and Margarites: as for the reſt of our things, they did litle eſteeme them.

Their maner of ſwearing by the water of the Sea.

About nine of the clocke there came boates to vs foorth, from both of the places aforeſaid, and brought with them certaine teeth, and after they had cauſed me to ſweare by the water of the Sea that I would not hurt them, they came aboord our ſhip three or foure of them, and we gaue them to eate of all ſuch things as we had, and they did eate and drinke of all things, as well as we our ſelues. Afterwards we bought all their teeth, which were in number 14. and of thoſe 14. there were 10. ſmall: afterwards they departed, making vs ſignes that the next day we ſhould come to their Townes.

Two townes.

The 26. day becauſe we would not trifle long at this place I required the Maſter to goe vnto one of the townes, and to take two of our marchants with him, & I my ſelfe went to the other, and tooke one with me, becauſe theſe two townes ſtand three miles aſunder. To theſe places we caried ſomewhat of euery kinde of marchandize that we had: and hee had at the one Towne, nine teeth, which were but ſmall, and at the other towne where I was, I had eleuen, which were alſo not bigge, and we left aboord with the Maſter certaine Manillios, wherewith he bought 12.teeth aboord the ſhip, in our abſence: and hauing bought theſe of them, wee perceiued that they had no more teeth: ſo in that place where I was one brought to me a ſmall goat, which I bought, and to the Maſter at the other place they brought fiue ſmall hennes, which he bought alſo, and after that we ſaw there was nothing elſe to be had, we departed, and by one of the clocke we met aboord, and then wayed, and went Eaſt our courſe 18.leagues ſtill within ſight of land.

The 28. the wind varied, and we ranne into the ſea, and the winde comming againe off the ſea, wee fell with the land againe, and the firſt of the land which we raiſed ſhewed as a great red cliffe round, but not very high, and to the Eaſtward of that another ſmaller red cliffe, and right aboue that into the land a round hummoke and greene, which we tooke to be trees. We ranne in theſe 24.houres, not aboue foure leagues.

The 29. day comming neere to the ſhoare, we perceiued the red cliffe aforeſaide to haue right vpon the top of it a great heape of trees, and all to the Weſtwards of it ful of red cliffes as farre as we could ſee, and all along the ſhoare, as well vpon the cliffes, as otherwiſe, full of wood: within a mile of the ſaid great cliffe there is a riuer to the Eaſtwards, and no cliffes that we could ſee, except one ſmall cliffe, which is hard by it. We ran this day and night 12.leagues.

The windes that wee had in this place by the reports of the people and of thoſe that haue bene there, haue not bene vſuall, but in the night, at North off the lande, and in the day South off the ſea, and moſt commonly Northweſt, and Southweſt.

The 31.day we went our courſe by the ſhoare Northwards: this land is al along a low ſhoare, and full of wood, as all the coaſt is for the moſt part, and no rockes. This morning came out many boates which went a fiſhing, which bee greater boates then thoſe which we ſawe before, ſo that in ſome of them there ſate 5.men, but the faſhion of the boats is all one. In the afternoone about three of the clocke wee had ſight of a Towne by the ſea ſide, which our Pilots iudged to be 25. leagues to the Weſtwards of the Cape Tres puntas.

Cape Tres puntas.

The third of Ianuary in the morning we fell with the Cape Tres puntas, and in the night paſſed, as our Pilots ſaide, by one of the Portugals caſtles, which is 8.leagues to the Weſtwards of the Cape: vpon the firſt ſight of the Cape wee diſcerned it a very high land, and all growen ouer with trees, and comming neere to it, we perceiued two head lands, as it were two Bayes betwixt them, which opened right to the Weſtward, and the vttermoſt of them is the Eaſterne Cape, there we perceiued the middle Cape, and the Eaſtermoſt Cape: the middle Cape ſtandeth not aboue a league from the Weſt Cape, although the Card ſheweth them to be 3.leagues one from the other: and that middle Cape hath right before the point of it a ſmall rocke ſo neere to it, that it cannot be diſcerned from the Cape, except a man be neere to the ſhoare, and vpon the ſame Cape ſtandeth a great heape of trees, and when a man is thwart the ſame Cape to the Eaſtward, there riſeth hard by it a round greene hommoke, which commeth out of the maine.

The thirde Cape is about a league beyond the middle Cape, and is a high land like to the other Capes, and betwixt the middle, and the thirde commeth out a litle head or point of a land out of the maine, and diuers rocks hard aboord the ſhoare.

Before we came to the Capes, being about 8.leagues off them, wee had the land Southeaſt, and by Eaſt, and being paſt the Capes, the land runneth in againe Eaſt Northeaſt.

About two leagues beyond the fartheſt Cape there is a lowe glade about two miles long, and then the land riſeth high againe, and diuers head-lands riſe one beyond another, and diuers rockes lie at the point of the firſt head-land. The middeſt of theſe Capes is the neereſt to the Southwards, I meane, further into the ſea then any of the other, ſo that being to the Eaſtward of it, it may be diſcerned farre off, and being ſo to the Eaſtward it riſeth with two ſmall rockes.

This day we ankered for feare of ouerſhooting a towne called S.Iohns. Wee ran this day not aboue 8.leagues. In the afternoone this day there came a boate of the countrey from the ſhoare, with fiue men in her, and went along by vs, as we thought, to diſcerne our flagges, but they would not come neere vs, and when they had well looked vpon vs, they departed.

The fourth day in the morning, ſailing by the coaſt, we eſpied a ledge of rockes by the ſhoare, and to the Weſtwards of them two great greene hils ioyning together, ſo that betweene them it was hollow like a ſaddle: and within the ſaid rockes the Maſter thought the aforenamed Towne had ſtoode, and therefore we manned our boates, and tooke with vs cloth, and other marchandize, and rowed aſhoare, but going along by the coaſt, we ſawe that there was no towne, therefore wee went aboord againe.

From theſe two hils aforeſaid, about two leagues to the Eaſtward, lie out into the Sea almoſt two miles a ledge of rockes, and beyond that a great Bay, which runneth into the North Northweſtward, and the land in this place lieth North Northeaſt along the ſhoare: but the vttermoſt point of land in that place that we could ſee, lay Northeaſt, and by Eaſt from vs.

After that we were with a ſmall gale of winde runne paſt that vttermoſt head-land, we ſawe a great red cliffe, which the Maſter againe iudged to be the towne of S.Iohns, and then wee tooke our boate with marchandize, and went thither, and when we came thither, we perceiued that there was a towne vpon the toppe of the hill, and ſo wee went toward it, and when we were hard by it, the people of the towne came together a great ſort of them, and waued vs to come in, with a peece of cloth, and ſo we went into a very faire Bay, which lieth to the Eaſtward of the cliffe, whereupon the towne ſtandeth, and being within the cliffe, wee let fall our grapnell, and after that we had taried there a good ſpace, they ſent a boate aboord of vs, to ſhewe vs that they had golde, and they ſhewed vs a peece about halfe a crowne weight, and required to know our meaſure, & our weight, that they might ſhewe their Captaine thereof: and wee gaue them a meaſure of two elles, and a waight of two Angels to ſhew vnto him, which they tooke, and went on ſhoare, and ſhewed it vnto their Captaine, and then they brought vs a meaſure of two elles, one quarter and a halfe, and one Cruſado-weight of gold, making vs ſignes that ſo much they would giue for the like meaſure, and leſſe they would not haue. After this, we taried there about an houre, and when we ſawe that they would doe no otherwiſe, and withall vnderſtood, that all the beſt places were before vs, wee departed to our ſhippes and wayed, and ranne along the ſhoare, and went before with our boate, and hauing ſailed about a league, we came to a point where there lay foorth a ledge of rockes, like to the others before ſpoken of, and being paſt that people, the Maſter ſpied a place which hee ſaide plainely was the towne of Don Iohn: and the night was come vpon vs, ſo that we could not well diſcerne it, but we ankered as neere vnto the place as we could.

The towne of Don Iohn.

The fift day in the morning we perceiued it to be the ſame towne in deede, and we manned our boates and went thither, and becauſe that the laſt yeere the Portugals at that place tooke away a man from them, and after ſhot at them with great baſes, and did beate them from the place, we let fall our grapnel almoſt a baſe ſhot off the ſhoare, and there we lay about two houres, and no boats came to vs. Then certaine of our men with the Hindes boate went into the Bay which lieth to the Eaſtward of the towne, and within that Bay they found a goodly freſh riuer, and afterwards they came and waued to vs alſo to come in, becauſe they perceiued the Negroes to come downe to that place, which we did: and immediatly the Negroes came to vs, and made vs ſignes that they had golde, but none of them would come aboord our boates, neither could wee perceiue any boates that they had to come withall, ſo that we iudged that the Portugals had ſpoiled their boates, becauſe we ſaw halfe of their towne deſtroyed.

Wee hauing ſtayed there a good ſpace, and ſeeing that they would not come to vs, thruſt our boates heads a ſhoare, being both well appointed, and then the Captaine of the Towne came downe, being a graue man: and he came with his dart in his hand, and ſixe tall men after him, euery one with his dart & his target, and their darts were all of yron, faire and ſharpe, and there came another after them which caried the Captaines ſtoole: wee ſaluted him, and put off our caps, and bowed our ſelues, and hee like one that thought well of himſelfe, did not mooue his cap, nor ſcant bowed his body, and ſate him downe very ſolemnly vpon his ſtoole: but all his men put off their caps to vs, and bowed downe themſelues.

He was clothed from the loines downe with a cloth of that Countrey making, wrapped about him, and made faſt about his loynes with a girdle, and his cap of a certaine cloth of the Countrey alſo, and bare legged, and bare footed, and all bare aboue the loynes, except his head.

His ſeruants, ſome of them had cloth about their loines, and ſome nothing but a cloth betwixt their legges, and made faſt before, and behinde to their girdles, and cappes of their owne making, ſome like a baſket, and ſome like a great wide purſe of beaſts ſkinnes.

Their weapons.

All their cloth, cordes, girdles, fiſhing lines, and all ſuch like things which they haue, they make of the bark of certaine trees, and thereof they can worke things very pretily, and yron worke they can make very fine, of all ſuch things as they doe occupy, as darts, fiſhhookes, hooking yrons, yron heads, and great daggers, ſome of them as long as a woodknife, which be on both ſides exceeding ſharpe, and bended after the maner of Turkie blades, and the moſt part of them haue hanging at their left ſide one of thoſe great daggers.

Their targets bee made of ſuch pils as their cloth is made of, and very cloſely wrought, and they bee in forme foure ſquare, and very great, and ſomewhat longer then they bee broad, ſo that kneeling downe, they make their targets to couer their whole body. Their bowes be ſhort, and of a pretie ſtrength, as much as a man is able to draw with one of his fingers, and the ſtring is of the barke of a tree, made flat, and about a quarter of an inch broad: as for their arrowes, I haue not as yet ſeene any of them, for they had wrapped them vp cloſe, and becauſe I was buſie I could not ſtand about it, to haue them open them. Their golde alſo they worke very well.

When the Captaine was ſet, I ſent him two elles of cloth, and two baſons, and gaue them vnto him, and hee ſent againe for a waight of the ſame meaſure, and I ſent him a weight of two Angels, which he would not take, nether would hee ſuffer the towne to buy any thing, but the baſons of braſſe: ſo that wee ſolde that day 74. baſons vnto the men of the towne, for about halfe an Angel weight, one with another, and nine white baſons, which we ſolde for a quarter of an Angell a peece, or thereabouts.

We ſhewed them all our other things which we had, but they did not eſteeme them.

About two of the clocke, the Captaine who did depart in the morning from vs, came againe, and brought with him to preſent mee withall, a henne, and two great rootes, which I receiued, and after made me ſignes that the countrey would come to his towne that night, and bring great ſtore of gold, which in deed about 4. of the clocke they did: for there came about 100. men vnder 3. Captaines, well appointed with their darts and bowes, and when they came to vs, euery man ſticked downe his dart vpon the ſhoare, and the Captaines had ſtooles brought them, and they ſate downe, and ſent a young man aboord of vs, which brought a meaſure with him of an ell, and one fourth part, and one ſixteenth part, and he would haue that foure times for a waight of one Angell and twelue graines: I offered him two elles, as I had done before for two Angels weight, which he eſteemed nothing, but ſtill ſtucke at his foure meaſures aforeſaid: yet in the ende, when it grew very late, and I made him ſignes that I would depart, he came to foure elles for the weight aboueſaid, and otherwiſe he would not deale, and ſo we departed. This day we tooke for baſons ſixe ounces and a halfe and one eight part.

The ſixt day in the morning we manned our boates and the ſkiffe well, for feare of the Portugals which the laſt yeere had taken away a man from the other ſhips, and went on ſhoare, and landed, becauſe they had no boates to come to vs, and ſo the young man which was with vs the night before was ſent aboord, who ſeemed to haue dealt and bargained before with the Portugals for he could ſpeake a litle Portuguiſe, and was perfect in weights and meaſures: at his comming he offered vs, as he had done before, one Angell, and twelue graines for foure elles, and more he would not giue, and made ſignes, that if we would not take that, we ſhould depart, which we did: but before we did indeede depart, I offered him of ſome rotten cloth three elles for his waight of an Angell and twelue graines, which he would not take, and then we departed making ſignes to him that we would go away, as indeede we would haue done, rather then haue giuen that meaſure, although the cloth was ill, ſeeing we were ſo neere to the places, which we iudged to be better for ſale. Then we went aboord our ſhips, which lay about a league off, and came backe againe to the ſhoare for ſand and balaſte: and then the Captaine perceiuing that the boats had brought no marchandize but came onely for water and ſand, and ſeeing that we would depart, came vnto them, making ſignes againe to know whether we would not giue the foure elles, and they made ſignes againe, that we would giue them but three, and when they ſawe that the boates were ready to depart, they came vnto them and gaue them the weight of our Angell and twelue graines, which we required before and made ſignes, that if we would come againe, they would take three elles. So when the boates came aboord, we layde wares in them both, and for the ſpeedier diſpatch I and Iohn Sauill went in one boat, and the Maſter Iohn Makeworth, and Richard Curligin, in the other, and went on ſhoare, and that night I tooke for my part fiftie and two ounces, and in the other boate they tooke eight ounces and a quarter, all by one weight and meaſure, and ſo being very late, we departed and went aboord, and tooke in all this day three pound.

The ſeuenth day we went a ſhoare againe, and that day I tooke in our boate three pound 19 ounces, ſo that we diſpatched almoſt all the cloth that we caried with vs before noone, and then many of the people were departed & thoſe that remained had litle golde, yet they made vs ſignes to fetch them ſome latten baſons, which I would not becauſe I purpoſed not to trifle out yͤ time, but goe thence with ſpeede to Don Iohns towne. But Iohn Sauill and Iohn Makeworth were deſirous to goe againe: and I, loth to hinder them of any profite, conſented, but went not my ſelfe: ſo they tooke eighteene ounces of gold and came away, ſeeing that the people at a certaine crie made, were departed.

While they were at the ſhoare, there came a young fellow which could ſpeake a little Portuguiſe, with three more with him, and to him I ſolde 39 baſons and two ſmall white ſawcers, for three ounces, &c. which was the beſt reckoning that we did make of any baſons: and in the forenoone when I was at the ſhoare, the Maſter ſolde fiue baſons vnto the ſame fellow, for halfe an ounce of golde.

This fellow, as farre as we could perceiue, had bene taken into the Caſtle by the Portugales, and was gotten away from them, for he tolde vs that the Portugales were bad men, and that they made

made them ſlaues if they could take them, and would put yrons vpon their legges, and beſides he told vs, that as many Frenchmen or Engliſhmen, as they could take (for he could name theſe two very well) they would hang them: he told vs further, that there were 60 men in the caſtle, and that euery yeere there came thither two ſhippes, one great, and one ſmall caruell, and further, that Don Iohn had warres with the Portugals, which gaue mee the better courage to goe to his towne, which lieth but foure leagues from the Caſtle, wherehence our men were beaten the laſt yeere.

The Engliſh in anno 1554 tooke away 5 Negroes.

This fellowe came aboord our ſhippe without feare, and aſſoone as he came, he demaunded, why we had not brought againe their men, which the laſt yeere we tooke away, and could tell vs that there were fiue taken away by Engliſhmen: we made him anſwere, that they were in England well vſed, and were there kept till they could ſpeake the language, and then they ſhould be brought againe to be a helpe to Engliſhmen in this Countrey: and then he ſpake no more of that matter.

Our boates being come aboord, we wayed and ſet ſayle and a litle after ſpied a great fire vpon the ſhoare, and by the light of the fire we might diſcerne a white thing, which they tooke to be the Caſtle, and for feare of ouerſhooting the towne of Don Iohn we there ankered two leagues off the ſhoare, for it is hard to fetch vp a towne here, if a ſhip ouerſhoot it. This day we tooke ſeuen pound, and fiue ounces of golde.

This towne lieth in a great Bay, which is very deepe.

The people in this place deſired moſt to haue baſons and cloth. They would buy ſome of them alſo many trifles, as kniues, horſetailes, hornes: and ſome of our men going a ſhoare, ſold a cap, a dagger, a hat, &c.

They ſhewed vs a certain courſe cloth, which I thinke to be made in France, for it was courſe wooll, and a ſmall threed, and as thicke as woſted, and ſtriped with ſtripes of greene, white, yellow &c. Diuers of the people did weare about their neckes great beades of glaſſe of diuerſe colours. Here alſo I learned ſome of their language, as followeth:

This language ſeemeth partly to be corrupt.

Sight of the caſtle of Mina.

The eight day in the morning we had ſight of the Caſtle, but by reaſon of a miſte that then fell we could not haue the perfect ſight of it, till we were almoſt at the towne of Don Iohn, and then it cleared vp, and we ſaw it and a white houſe, as it were a Chappell, vpon the hill about it: then we halled into the ſhoare, within two Engliſh miles of Don Iohns towne, and there ankered in ſeuen fadome water. Here, as in many other places before, we perceiued that the currant went with the winde.

The land here is in ſome places low and in ſome high, and full of wood altogether.

Don Iohns towne deſcribed.

The towne of Don Iohn is but litle, of about twentie houſes, and the moſt part of the towne is walled in with a wall of a mans height, made with reede or ſedge, or ſome ſuch thing. Here we ſtaied two or three houres after we had ankered, to ſee if any man would come vnto vs: and ſeeing that none did come, we manned our boates and put in marchandize, and went and ankered with our boates neere to the ſhoare: then they ſent out a man to vs who made vs ſignes that that was the towne of Don Iohn, and that he himſelfe was in the Countrey, and would be at home at the going downe of the Sunne, and when he had done, he required a reward, as the moſt part of them will doe which come firſt aboord, and I gaue him one ell of cloth and he departed, and that night we heard no more of him.

The ninth day in the morning we went againe with our boates to the ſhoare, and there came foorth a boate to vs, who made ſignes that Don Iohn was not come home, but would be at home this day: and to that place alſo came another boate from the other towne a mile from this, which is called Don Deuis, and brought with him gold to ſhew vs, making ſignes that we ſhould come thither. I then left in this place Iohn Sauill, and Iohn Makeworth, and tooke the Hinde, and went to the other towne and there ankered, and tooke cloth and went to ſhore with the boate, and by and by the boates came to vs and brought a meaſure of foure yards long & a halfe, and ſhewed vs a weight of an angell and twelue graines, which they would giue for ſo much, and not otherwiſe: ſo I ſtaied and made no bargaine. And all this day the barke lay at Don Iohns towne, and did nothing, hauing anſwere that he was not come home.

The tenth day we went againe to the ſhoare, and there came out a boat with good ſtore of gold, and hauing driuen the matter off a long time, and hauing brought the meaſure to a nayle leſſe then three elles, and their weight to an angell and twentie graines, and could not bring them to more, I did conclude with them and ſolde, and within one quarter of an houre I tooke one pound and a quarter of an ounce of golde: and then they made me ſignes to tary, till they had parted their cloth vpon the ſhoare as their manner is, and they would come againe, and ſo they went away, and layde the cloth all abroad vpon the ſande peece by peece, and by and by one came running downe from the towne to them, and ſpake vnto them, and foorthwith euery man made as much haſte as he could away, and went into the woods to hide his golde and his cloth: we miſtruſted ſome knauery, and being waued by them to come a ſhoare, yet we would not, but went aboorde the Hinde, and perceiued vpon the hill 30 men which we iudged to be Portugals: and they went vp to the toppe of the hill and there muſtered and ſhewed themſelues, hauing a flagge with them. Then I being deſirous to knowe what the Hart did, tooke the Hindes boate and went towards her, and when I came neere to them they ſhot off two pieces of ordinance which I marueiled at: I made as much haſte as I could to her, and met her boate and ſkiffe comming from the ſhoare in all haſte, and we met aboord together. They ſhewed me that they had beene a ſhoare all that day, and had giuen to the two ſonnes of Don Iohn, to either of them three yardes and a halfe of cloth, and three baſons betwixt them, and had deliuered him 3 yards of cloth more and the weight of an angell and 12 graines, and being on land did tarie for his anſwere, and in the meane time the Portugals came running from the hill vpon them, whereof the Negroes a litle before had giuen them warning, and bad them to go away but they perceiued it not. The ſonne of Don Iohn conſpired with the Portugales againſt them, ſo that they were almoſt vpon them, but yet they recouered their boate and ſet off from the ſhoare, and the Portugales ſhot their calicuers at them, but hurt no man, and then the ſhip perceiuing it, ſhot off the two peeces aforeſayde among them. Hereupon we layde baſes in both the boates, and in the Skiffe and manned them well, and went a ſhoare againe, but becauſe of the winde we could not land, but lay off in the ſea about ten ſcore and ſhot at them, but the hill ſuccoured them, and they from the rockes and from the hilles ſhotte at vs with their halfe hakes, and the Negroes more for feare then for loue ſtoode by them to helpe them, and when we ſaw that the Negroes were in ſuch ſubiection vnto them that they durſt not ſell vs any thing for feare of them we went aboord, and that night the winde kept at the Eaſt, ſo that we could not with our ſhip fetch the Hinde, but I tooke the boate in the night and went aboord the barke to ſee what was there to be done, and in the morning we perceiued the towne to be in like caſe layde with Portugales, ſo we wayed and went along the coaſt. This towne of Iohn de Viſo ſtandeth vpon an hill like the towne of Don Iohn, but it hath beene burned, ſo that there are not paſſing ſixe houſes in it: the moſt part of the golde that comes thither comes out of the countrey, and no doubt if the people durſt for feare of the Portugals bring forth their gold, there would be had good ſtore: but they dare not ſell any thing, their ſubiection is ſo great to the Portugales. The 11 day running by the ſhoare we had ſight of a litle towne foure leagues from the laſt towne that we came from, and about halfe a league from that, of another towne vpon a hill, and halfe a league from that alſo of another great towne vpon the ſhoare: whither we went to ſee what could there be done: if we could doe nothing, then to returne to the other towne, becauſe we thought that the Portugales would leaue the towne vpon our departure. Along from the caſtle vnto this place are very high hilles which may be ſeene aboue all other hilles, but they are full of wood, and great red cliffes by the ſea ſide. The boates of theſe places are ſomewhat large and bigge, for one of them will carrie twelue men, but their forme is alike with the former boates of the coaſt. There are about theſe townes few riuers: their language differeth not from the language vſed at Don Iohns towne: but euery one can ſpeake three or foure words of Portuguiſe, which they vſed altogether to vs.

The Portugales of the caſtle of Mina inuaded our men.

The towne of Don Iohn de Viſo.

We ſawe this night about 5 of the clocke 22 boates running along the ſhoare to the Weſtward, whereupon we ſuſpected ſome knauery intended againſt vs. The 12 day therefore we ſet ſayle and went further along the coaſt, and deſcried more townes wherein were greater houſes then in the other townes, and the people came out of the townes to looke vpon vs, but we could ſee no boates. Two mile beyond the Eaſtermoſt towne are blacke rocks, which blacke rockes continue to the vttermoſt cape of the land, which is about a league off, and then the land runnes in Eaſtnortheaſt, and a ſandy ſhoare againe: vpon theſe blacke rockes came downe certaine Negroes, which waued vs with a white flagge, but we perceiuing the principall place to be neere, would not ſtay, but bare ſtill along the ſhoare: and as ſoone as we had opened the point of the land, we rayſed another head-land about a league off the point, which had a rocke lying off it into the ſea, and that they thought to be the place which we ſought. When we came thwart the place they knew it, and we put wares into our boate, and the ſhip being within halfe a mile of the place ankered in fiue fadome water and faire ground. We went on ſhoare with our boate, and ankered about ten of the clocke in the forenoone: we ſaw many boates lying vpon the ſhoare, and diuers came by vs, but none of them would come neere vs, being as we iudged afraid of vs: becauſe that foure men were taken perforce the laſt yeere from this place, ſo that no man came to vs, whereupon we went aboord againe, and thought here to haue made no ſale: yet towardes night a great ſort came downe to the water ſide, and waued vs on ſhoare with a white flagge, and afterwarde their Captaine came downe and many men with him, and ſate him downe by the ſhore vnder a tree: which when I perceiued, I tooke things with me to giue him: at laſt he ſent a boat to call to vs, which would not come neere vs, but made vs ſignes to come againe the next day: but in fine, I got them to come aboord in offering them things to giue to their captaine, which were two elles of cloth, one latten baſon, one white baſon, a bottle, a great piece of beefe, and ſixe biſket cakes, which they receiued making vs ſignes to come againe the next day, ſaying, that their Captain was Grand Capitane as appeared by thoſe that attended vpon him with their darts and targets, and other weapons.

A great towne.

This towne is very great and ſtands vpon a hill among trees, ſo that it cannot well be ſeene except a man be neere it: to the Eaſtward of it vpon the hill hard by the towne ſtand 2. high trees, which is a good marke to knowe the towne. And vnder the towne lieth another hill lower then it, whereupon the ſea beates: and that end next the ſea is all great blacke rockes, and beyonde the towne in a bay lieth another ſmall towne.

The like they doe in the countrey of Prete Ianni.

The 13 day in the morning we tooke our boate and went to ſhoare, and ſtayed till ten a clocke and no man came to vs: we went about therefore to returne aboord, and when the Negroes ſaw that, they came running downe with a flagge to waue vs againe, ſo we ankered againe, and then one ſhewed vs that the Captaine would come downe by and by: we ſaw a ſaile in the meane time paſſe by vs but it was ſmall, and we regarded it not. Being on ſhore wee made a tilt with our oares and ſayle, and then there came a boate to vs with fiue men in her, who brought vs againe our bottle, and brought me a hen, making ſignes by the ſunne, that within two houres the marchants of the countrey would come downe and buy all that we had: ſo I gaue them ſixe Manillios to carry to their Captaine, and they made ſignes to haue a pledge of vs, and they would leaue vs another man: and we willing to doe ſo, put one of our men in their boate, but they would not giue vs one of theirs, ſo we tooke our man againe, and there tarried for the marchants: and ſhortly after one came downe arrayed like their Captaine with a great traine after him, who ſaluted vs friendly, and one of the chiefeſt of them went and ſate downe vnder a tree, where the laſt yere the Captaine was wont to ſit: and at laſt we perceiued a great many of them to ſtand at the ende of a hollow way, and behinde them the Portugales had planted a baſe, who ſuddenly ſhotte at vs but ouerſhot vs, and yet we were in a manner hard by them, and they ſhot at vs againe before we could ſhip our oares to get away but did no hurt. Then the Negroes came to the rocks hard by vs, and diſcharged calieuers at vs, and againe the Portugales ſhot off their baſe twiſe more, and then our ſhip ſhot at them, but the rockes and hilles defended them.

Maſter Robert Gainſhes voyage to Guinea in anno 1554.

The Engliſh were offered to build a towne in Guine.

Then we went aboord to goe from this place, ſeeing the Negroes bent againſt vs, becauſe that the laſt yeere M. Gainſh did take away the Captaines ſonne and three others from this place with their golde, and all that they had about them: which was the cauſe that they became friends with the Portugales, whom before they hated, as did appeare the laſt yeere by the courteous intertainement which the Trinitie had there, when the Captaine came aboord the ſhippe, and brought them to his towne, and offered them ground to build a Caſtle in, and there they had good ſales.

The 14 day we wayed and plyed backe againe to ſeeke the Hinde, which in the morning we met, and ſo we turned both backe to the Eaſtwardes to ſee what we could doe at that place where the Trinitie did ſell her eight friſes the laſt yeere. The Hinde had taken eighteene ounces and a halfe more of golde of other Negroes, the day after that we left them. This day about one of the clocke we eſpied certaine boates vpon the ſand and men by them and went to them with marchandizes, and tooke three ounces of gold for 18 fuſſs of cloth, euery fuſſe three yards and a halfe after one angell and 12 graines the fuſſe, and then they made me ſignes that the next day I ſhould haue golde enough: ſo the Maſter tooke the Hinde with Iohn Sauill and Iohn Makeworth, and went to ſeeke the place aforeſaid, & I with Richard Pakeman remained in this place to ſee what we could do the next day: and when the Negroes perceiued our ſhip to go away, they feared that the other would follow, & ſo ſent forth 2 boats to vs with 4 men in them, requiring vs to tary & to giue them one man for a pledge, and 2 of them ſhould tary with vs for him, ſo Edward M. Morleis ſeruant ſeeing theſe men ſo earneſt therein offered himſelfe to be pledge, and we let him goe for two of them, one whereof had his waights and ſcales, and a chaine of golde about his necke, and another about his arme. They did eate of ſuch things as we had and were well contented. In the night the Negroes kept a light vpon the ſhoare thwart of vs, and about one of the clocke we heard and ſaw the light of a baſe which ſhot off twiſe at the ſaid light, and by and by diſcharged two caliuers, which in the end we perceiued to be the Portugals brigandine which followed vs from place to place, to giue warning to the people of the countrey, that they ſhould not deale with vs.

A Portugale Brigandine.

The 15 day in the morning the Captaine came downe with 100 men with him, and brought his wife, and many others brought their wiues alſo, becauſe their towne was 8 miles vp in the countrey, and they determined to lie by the ſea ſide till they had bought what they would. When he was come he ſent our man aboord, and required to haue two men pledges, and he himſelfe would come aboord, and I ſent him two, of whom he tooke but one, and ſo came aboord vs, he and his wife with diuers of his friends, and brought me a goate and two great rootes, and I gaue him againe a latten baſon, a white baſon, 6 manillios, and a bottell of Malmeſie, and to his wife a ſmall caſket. After this we began to make our meaſure and weight: and he had a weight of his owne which held one angell and 14 graines, and required a meaſure of 4 elles and a halfe. In fine we concluded the 8 part for one angell and 20 graines, and before we had done, they tooke mine owne weight and meaſure.

The 16 day I tooke 8 li. 1 ounce of gold: and ſince the departure of the Hinde I heard not of her, but when our pledge went into the countrey the firſt night, he ſaid he ſaw her caſt anker aboue fiue leagues from this place. The 17 day I ſold about 17 pieces of cloth, & tooke 4. li. 4 ounces and a halfe of gold. The 18 day the captaine deſired to haue ſome of our wine, and offered halfe a bucket of gold for a bottell: but I gaue it him freely, and made him and his traine drinke beſides. And this day alſo I tooke 5 li. 5 ounces of gold. The 19 day we ſold about 18 clothes, and tooke 4 li. 4. ounces and one quarter of golde.

The 20 day we tooke 3 li. ſixe ounces and a quarter of golde. The 21 we tooke 8. li. 7. ounces and a quarter. The 22. 3. li. 8. ounces and a quarter. And this night about 4 of the clocke the Captaine who had layen all this while vpon the ſhoare, went away with all the reſt of the people with him.

The 23 day we were waued a ſhoare by other Negroes, and ſold them cloth, caſkets, kniues, and a doſen of bels, and tooke 1. li. 10. ounces of gold. The 24 likewiſe we ſold bels, ſheetes, and thimbles, and tooke two li. one ounce and a quarter of gold. The 25 day we ſold 7 doſen of ſmal bels and other things, and then perceiuing their gold to be done, we wayed and ſet ſayle & went to leeward to ſeeke the Hinde, and about 5 of the clocke at night we had ſight of her, and bare with her, and vnderſtood that ſhee had made ſome ſales. The 26 day wee receiued out of the Hinde 48 li. 3 ounces and one eight part of golde, which they had taken in the time that we were from them. And this day vpon the requeſt of a Negro that came vnto vs from a captaine, we went to ſhoare with our marchandize, and tooke 7 li. and one ounce of gold. At this place they required no gages of vs, but at night they ſent a man aboord vs, which lay with vs all night, becauſe we might knowe that they would alſo come to vs the next day. The 27 day in both our ſhippes we tooke 8. li. one ounce, three quarters and halfe a quarter of golde. The 28 we made ſales for the companie, and tooke one pound and halfe an ounce of gold. The 29 day in the morning we heard two caliuers ſhot off vpon the ſhore, which we iudged to be either by the Portugales or by the Negroes of the Portugales: we manned our boates and armed our ſelues and went to ſhoare, but could finde nothing: for they were gone. The 30 day we made more ſales for the companie and for the Maſters.

The 31 we ſent our boate to ſhoare to take in ſand for balaſt, and there our men met the Negroes, with whom they had made ſale the day before a fiſhing which did helpe them to fill ſand, and hauing no gold, ſold fiſh to our men for their handkerchiefes and nightkerchiefes.

Februarie.

The 1. day of February we wayed and went to another place, and tooke 1. li. 9. ounces 3 quarters of gold. The 2 day we made more ſales: but hauing viewed our victuals, we determined to tarie no long time vpon the coaſt, becauſe the moſt part of our drinke was ſpent, & that which remained grew ſowre. The 3 and 4 dayes we made ſome ſales, though not great, and finding the wind this 4. day to come off the ſhoare, we ſet ſaile and ranne along the ſhoare to the Weſtwards: vpon this coaſt we found by experience that ordinarily about 2 of the clocke in the night the winde comes off the ſhoare at Northnortheaſt, and ſo continueth vntill eight of the clocke in the morning: and all the reſt of the day and night it comes out of the Southweſt: and as for the tide or currant vpon this ſhore, it goeth continually with the winde. The 5 day we continued ſayling and thought to haue met with ſome Engliſh ſhips, but found none.

They returne for England.

The firſt day we went our courſe Southweſt to fetch vnder the line, and ranne by eſtimation 24 leagues.

The 13 day wee thought our ſelues by our reckoning to be cleare off the Cape das Palmas, and ranne 12 leagues.

Cape de Monte. The 22 day we were thwart of the Cape de Monte, which is to the Weſtward of the Riuer de Seſtos, about 30 leagues.

March. The firſt day of March in a Ternado we loſt the Hinde, whereupon we ſet vp a light and ſhot off a piece but could not heare of her, ſo that then we ſtrooke our ſaile and taried for her, and in the morning had ſight of her againe three leagues a ſterne off vs.

Cape Verde in latitude 14 degrees & a halfe. Vpon the 22 day we found our ſelues to be in the height of Cape Verde, which ſtands in 14. degrees and a halfe.

From this day till the 29 day we continued our courſe, and then we found our ſelues to be in 22 degrees. This day one of our men called William King, who had bene long ſicke, died in his ſleepe, his apparell was diſtributed to thoſe that lackt it, and his money was kept for his friends to be deliuered them at his comming home.

The 30 day we found our ſelues to be vnder the Tropike.

The 31 day we went our courſe, and made way 18 leagues.

Aprill. From the firſt day of Aprill to the 20 we went our courſe, and then found our ſelues to bee in the height of the Aſores.

May. The ſeuenth day of May we fell with the South part of Ireland, and going on ſhoare with our boate had freſh drinke, and two ſheepe of the countrey people, which were wilde Kernes, and we gaue them golde for them, and bought further ſuch other victuals as we had neede of, and thought would ſerue vs till we arriued in England.

Their arriuall at Briſtoll. The 14 day with the afternoone tide we went into the Port of Briſtoll called Hungrode, and there ankered in ſafetie and gaue thankes to God for our ſafe arriuall.

The ſecond voyage made by Maiſter VVilliam Towrſon to the coaſt of Guinea, and the Caſtle of Mina, in the yeere 1556. with the Tiger of London, a ſhip of 120 tunnes, the Hart of London of 60 tunnes, and a Pinneſſe of ſixteene tunnes.

The fourteenth day of September, the yeere aboueſayd, we departed from Harwich, and directed our courſe for the Iſle of Sillie, to meete there with the Hart and Pinneſſe, which were rigged and victualed at Briſtoll, but arriuing there the eight and twentieth day we found them not, and therefore after long lying at hull to tarrie for them, but not eſpying them, we turned backe to Plimmouth the 12 day of October, and being there, the Hart and the Pinneſſe came to vs, ſo that the 15 of November. November we all departed together from Plimmouth at one of the clocke in the after noone, and the 28 day we had ſight of the Iſle of Porto Santo, and the next day in the morning of Madera.

December. The third day of December we fell with the Iſle of Palma, and the 9 we were thwart of Cape Blanke, and found there certaine Carauels fiſhing for Pargoes.

Sierra Leona. The 19 we found our ſelues in the height of Sierra Leona, and all this day we ranne thwart of certaine Currants, which did ſet to the West Southweſtward ſo faſt as if it had bene the ouerfall of a ſand, making a great noyſe like vnto a ſtreame or tide-gate when the water is ſhoale: and to prooue whither we could finde ground in this place, we ſounded and had 150 fadome, and no ground, and ſo departed.

The 30 of December we fell with the coaſt of Guinea, and had firſt ſight of it about 4 leagues off. The beſt marke that we could take of the place to knowe it was three hilles, which lay Northeaſt and by Eaſt from vs: betwixt the Northermoſt two hilles there are two high and great trees ſtanding in ſight as it were a ſailes breadth one from another, and a litle more to the Northweſtwards are certaine hommocks. Hauing ſayled ſomewhat into the ſhoare wee tooke our ſelues to be ſhorte ſomewhat paſt the riuer de Seſtos, ſo that we kept about to fetch it. And a litle after we had ſight of three ſayles of ſhippes and two pinneſſes which were in the weather of vs, and hauing ſight of them we made our ſelues readie to meete them, and halled off our ſhips to fetch the winde as neere as we could: and hauing ſayled about an houre or two, they alſo went about, and went as we went to make themſelues readie, and when we had them in chaſe, they went away from vs: but when they had made themſelues readie, they kept about againe, and came with vs verie finely appointed with their ſtreamers, and pendants and enſignes, and noyſe of trumpets very brauely: ſo when we met, they had the weather of vs, and we being determined to fight, if they had bene Portugals, waued them to come vnder our Lee, which they denied ſtoutly: then we demaunded of them whence they were, and they ſayd of France, we told them againe that we were of London in England. They asked of vs what Portugals wee had ſeene, we anſwered, none but Fiſhermen: then they told vs that there were certaine Portugall ſhips gone to the Mina to defend it, and that they met with another at the riuer de Seſtos, which was a ſhip of two hundred which they had burned, and had ſaued none but the maſter and two or three Negros, and certaine others which were ſore burned which they left a ſhore there. Then they deſired to come aboord of vs with their boates to talke with vs, and wee gaue them leaue. Then the captaine of the Admirall and diuers others came aboord very friendly, deſiring vs to keepe them company becauſe of the Portugals, and to goe to the Mina with them: wee told them that we had not watered, and that we were but now fallen with the coaſt, and they ſhewed vs that we were fiftie leagues paſt the riuer de Seſtos: notwithſtanding there was water enough to be had, and they would helpe vs to water with their owne boats becauſe they would haue our companie. And told vs further, that they had bene ſixe weekes vpon the coaſt, and had gotten but three tunnes of graines amongſt them all: and when wee had heard them, we made our reckoning that although the Mina were cleare, yet if they did goe before vs, they would marre our market; and if it were not cleare, then if the Portogals were there and did take them, they would vnderſtand that we were behind, and ſo would waite for vs. And further we made account that if we went with them we ſhould doe as well as they, if the coaſt were cleare: if it were not cleare, then by them we were aſſured to be the ſtronger. Therefore hauing conſidered thus much of their gentle offers, wee told them that the next day wee would conferre more largely of the matter. Whereupon they deſired me to come the next day to dinner to them, and to bring the maſters of our ſhips with me, and ſuch marchants as I thought good, promiſing to giue vs water out of their owne ſhips if we would take it, or els to tarie with vs and helpe vs to water with their own boats and pinnaſſes.

The riuer of Seſtos.

They admit certaine Frenchmen into their companie.

The 31 day in the morning the Admirall ſent his boat aboord for me, and I tooke our maſters and certaine of our marchants and went to him, who had prouided a notable banquet for vs, and intreated vs very friendly, deſiring vs ſtill to keepe his company, promiſing that what victuals were in his ſhips, or other things that might doe vs pleaſure vntill the end, we ſhould haue the one halfe of it, offering vs if we would to furle his Flags, and to bee at our commaundement in all things.

In the ende we agreed to come to an anker, and to ſend our boat on ſhore with the Admirals boat, and one of his pinnaſſes, and an Almaine which they had brought out of France, to ſeeke water, as for our pinnaſſe ſhe came to an anker to ſeaward of vs all, and would not come at vs. All this night the boats continued on ſhore.

The firſt day of January our boats came to vs againe and had found no riuer. Whereupon we weighed and ſet ſaile, and ankred againe at another riuer.

The 2 day we went into the riuer and bargained, and tooke 5 ſmall Elephants teeth.

The 3 day we tooke 5 more.

The fourth day the French Admirall and we tooke fifteene ſmall teeth. This day wee tooke thirtie men with vs and went to ſeeke Elephants, our men being all well armed with harquebuſſes, pikes, long bowes, croſſebowes, partizans, long ſwordes, and ſwordes and bucklers: wee found two Elephants which wee ſtroke diuers times with harquebuſſes and long bowes, but they went away from vs and hurt one of our men. The fift day we ſet ſaile and ranne along the coaſt.

An aſſault vpon elephants.

The 6 day we fell with the riuer de S. Andre, at which place the land is ſomewhat high to the Weſtward of the riuer, and a faire Baie alſo to the Weſtward of it: but to the Eaſtward of it it is lowe land.

Rio de S. Andre.

Captaine Blundel the French Admirall.

The 7 day we went into the Riuer and found no village, but certaine wild Negros not accuſtomed to trade. It is a very great riuer and 7 fadome water in ſome places at the entring. Here we filled water, and after ſet ſaile.

The 8 day we ſailed along the ſhore and came to the Redcliffes, and went forward in ſailing the 9 day alſo.

The 10 day we came together to confer with captaine Blundel Admiral of the French ſhips, Ierom Baudet his vice admiral, and Iohn de Orleans maſter of a ſhip of 70 tunne, and with their marchants, and agreed that when God ſhould ſend vs to any place where wee might make ſale, that we ſhould be of one accord and not one of vs hurt the market of the other, but certaine of our boates to make the price for all the reſt, and then one boate to make ſale for euery ſhippe. This night our boats going to the ſhore met with certaine Negros, who ſaid that they had gold, and therefore we here caſt anker.

Allow.

The 11 day all the day we tooke but one halfe angel weight of 4 graines, which we tooke by hand, for the people of this place had no weight: the Negros called this place Allow.

The 12 day we ran along the coaſt and found but one towne, but no boates would come out to vs, and therefore we went our courſe.

The 13 day I tooke my boat and went along the ſhore, and paſſed by diuers ſmall townes, and was waued to come on ſhore at 3 places, but the ſea went ſo high vpon the ſhore, that it was not poſſible for vs to land, neither could they come to vs if they had had boats, as I could ſee none but at one place, where there was one that would haue come vnto vs, but the Land-waſh went ſo ſore that it ouerthrew his boat, and one of the men was drowned, which the people lamented, and cried ſo ſore, that we might eaſily heare them, and they got his body out of the ſea, and caried it amongſt them to their towne.

Dondon a great towne.

The 14 day we came within Saker-ſhot of the caſtle, & ſtraightway they ſet forth and Almade to deſcry vs, and when they perceiued that we were no Portugals, they ranne within the towne againe: for there is a great towne by the Caſtle which is called by the Negros Dondou. Without this there lie two great rockes like Ilands, and the caſtle ſtandeth vpon a point which ſheweth almoſt like an Iland. Before we came at this caſtle, we found the land for fiue or ſix leagues to be high land, and about ſeuen leagues before we came to the caſtle, lowe land, vntil we came at the caſtle, and then wee found the land high againe. This caſtle ſtandeth about fiue leagues to the Eaſt of Cape de Trespuntas. Here I tooke the boate with our Negros and ranne alongſt the ſhore till I came to the Cape and found two ſmall townes, but no boates at them, neither any traffique to be had. At theſe places our Negros did vnderſtand them well, and one of them went a ſhore at all the places and was well receiued of them. This night we ankred at the Cape de Tres puntas.

The caſtle of Mina.
Cape de Tres puntas.

The 15 day I tooke our boat and went along the ſhore, & about 3 leagues beyond the Eaſtermoſt part of the Cape we found a faire Bay where we ran in, and found a ſmal towne and certaine boates which belonged to the ſame towne, but the Negros in a long time would not come to vs, but at the laſt by the perſwaſion of our owne Negros, one boat came to vs, and with him we ſent George our Negro a ſhore, and after he had talked with them, they came aboord our boates without feare, and I gaue to their captaine a baſon, and two ſtrings of Margarites, and they ſhewed vs about 5 duckats weight of gold, but they required ſo much for it that wee would not take it, becauſe the Frenchmen and we had agreed to make price of our goods all in one boat, and the price being made then euery man to ſell in his owne boat, and no man to giue more thē the price which ſhould be ſet by vs al. This place is called Bulle, and here the Negros were very glad of our Negros, and ſhewed them all the friendſhip they could, when they had told them that they were the men that were taken away being now againe brought by vs.

Bulle.

The Negros here ſhewed vs that a moneth ſince there were 3 ſhips that fought together, & the two ſhippes put the other to flight: and before that at the caſtle of Mina there were 4 ſhips of the Portugals which met with one Frenchman, which Frenchman cauſed them all to flee, which ſhippe we tooke to be the Roebarge: for the Frenchmen of our company iudged her to be thereabout that time with her pinnaſſe alſo. And further, that after her went a ſhippe of twelue ſcore named the Shauuet all alone, and after her a ſhip of fourescore, and both for the Mina. And there were two others alſo which they left, one at Cape Verde called the Leuriere of Diepe, and another at the riuer De Seſtos, beſides theſe 3 which all this time be in our company, whoſe names be theſe:

The Eſpoier of Hableneff which is the Admirall, whoſe captaine is Denis Blundell.
The Leuriere of Roan Viceadmirall, whoſe maſter is Ierome Bauder.
The other is of Hunfleur whoſe maſter is called Iohn de Orleans.

Hanta.

The ſixteenth day I went along the ſhore with two pinnaſſes of the Frenchmen, and found a Baie and a freſh riuer, and after that went to a towne called Hanta, twelue leagues beyond the Cape. At this towne our Negros were well knowen, and the men of the towne wept for ioy when they ſaw them, and demanded of them where Anthonie and Binne had bene: and they told them that they had bene at London in England, and ſhould bee brought home the next voyage. So after this, our Negros came aboord with other Negros which brought a weight with them, which was ſo ſmall that wee could not giue them the halfe of that which they demanded for it.

The Negros here told vs that there were fiue Portugall ſhippes at the Caſtle and one pinnaſſe, and that the Portugals did much harme to their Countrey, and that they liued in feare of them, and we told them againe, that we would defend them from the Portugals whereof they were very glad.

The 17 day we went a ſhore and the Frenchmen with vs, but did no great good, the Negros were ſo vnreaſonable, we ſold 80 Manellios for one ounce of gold.

Then wee departed and went to Shamma, and went into the riuer with fiue boates well appointed with men and ordinance, and with our noiſes of trumpets and drummes, for we thought here to haue found ſome Portugals but there were none: ſo wee ſent our Negros on ſhore, and after them went diuers of vs, and were very well receiued, and the people were very glad of our Negros, ſpecially one of their brothers wiues, and one of their aunts, which receiued them with much ioy, and ſo did all the reſt of the people, as if they had bene their naturall brethren: we comforted the captaine and told him that hee ſhould not feare the Portugals, for wee would defend him from them: whereupon we cauſed our boats to ſhoote off their baſes and harquebuſſes, and cauſed our men to come on ſhore with their long bowes, and they ſhot before the captaine, which he, with all the reſt of the people, wondred much at, ſpecially to ſee them ſhoot ſo farre as they did, and aſſaied to draw their bowes but could not. When it grew to be late, we departed to our ſhips, for we looked euery houre for the Portugals. *And here the Negros ſhewed vs that there was an Engliſh ſhip at the Mina, which had brought one of the Negros againe, which Robert Gaynſh tooke away.

Shamma.

The Negros brought home by our men.

*Note.

Robert Gaynſh.

The 18 day we went into the riuer with no leſſe ſtrength then before, and concluded with the Negros to giue them for euery Fuſſe two yards and three nailes of Cloth, and to take for it one angel-duckat: ſo that we tooke in all 70 Duckats, whereof the Frenchmen had fortie, and wee thirtie.

The nineteenth day wee went a ſhore euery man for himſelfe, and tooke a good quantitie of gold, and I for my part tooke foure pound and two ounces and a halfe of gold, and our Hartes boate tooke one and twentie ounces. At night the Negros ſhewed vs that the next day the Portugals would be with vs by land or by Sea: and when wee were ready to depart, we heard diuers harquebuſſes ſhoote off in the woods by vs which wee knew to bee Portugals, which durſt come no neerer to vs, but ſhot off in the woods to ſee if they could feare vs and ſo make vs to leaue our traffique.

The 20 day we manned our fiue boats, and alſo a great boat of the Frenchmens with our men and the Admirals, 12 of them in their murrians and corſlets, and the reſt all well appoynted, with foure trumpets, a drumme and a Fife, and the boate all hanged with ſtreamers of Silke and pendants very faire, and went into the riuer and traffiqued, our man of warre lying off and on in the riuer to waft vs, but we heard no more of the Portugals. This day the Negros told vs that there were certain ſhips come into Hanta, which towne is about 2 leagues to the Weſtward of this place.

Hanta.

This 21 day we manned our boats againe & went to a place a league from this to the Weſtwards, and there found many Negros with another Captaine, and ſold at the ſame rate that wee had done with the others.

The 22 day we went a ſhore againe and traffiqued in like ſort quietly, and I tooke 4 pound and ſix ounces of gold.

The 23 day about night the Negros with their captaine came to vs and told vs that the king of Portugals ſhips were departed from the Caſtle, meaning the next day to plie to the windward to come to vs, giuing vs warning to take heed to our ſelues: we told them againe that wee were very glad of their comming, and would be ready at all times to meet them, and to aſſure them that we were glad of it, wee ſounded our trumpets, and ſhot off certaine baſes whereof the Negros were very glad; and requeſted vs that if the Portugals ſought to hinder our traffique, to ſhew them all the extremitie that we could, promiſing vs that if they came by land, they would aduertiſe vs thereof.

The 24 we went a ſhore with our trumpets and drummes, and traffiqued, and I bade the captaine of the towne to dinner.

The 25 day we being a ſhore, our ſhips had deſcried fiue ſailes of the king of Portugals, & our ſhips ſhot off ordinance to call vs away, and we threw euery man his caſke a ſhore for water, and went to our ſhips, and by that time we had weighed and giuen order one to another what to do, it was night, ſo ẏ that night nothing was done. We ſet ſaile and lay cloſe all night to get the wind if we could: we were neere ſome of them, and one ſhot off a piece which we iudged to be the Admirall of the Portugals, to cauſe the reſt to come and ſpeake with him: ſo all this night we made our ſelues ready for fight.

Fiue ſailes of Portingals deſcried.

The 26 we came in with the ſhore and had ſight of the Portugals where they rid at anker, and we bare with them, and we gaue all our men white ſcarffes, to the ende that the Frenchmen might know one the other if we came to boording: but the night came vpon vs that we could not fetch them, but we ankered within demie-Culuering ſhot of them.

The 27 day we weighed and ſo did the Portugals, and about eleuen of the clocke wee had the wind of them, and then we went roome with them, which when they perceiued, they kept about to the ſhore againe, and wee after them, and when they were ſo neere the ſhore that they could not well runne any further on that boord, they kept about againe, and lay to the Seaward, and then we kept about with them, and were a head of them, and tooke in our topſailes and taried for them: and the firſt that came vp was a ſmall barke which ſailed ſo well that ſhe cared not for any of vs, and caried good ordinance: and aſſoone as ſhe came vp, ſhe ſhot at vs, and ouerſhot vs, and then ſhe ſhot at the Admirall of the Frenchmen, and ſhot him through in two or three places, and went foorth a head of vs, becauſe we were in our fighting ſailes: then came vp another carauell vnder our Lee in like caſe which ſhot at vs and at the Frenchman, and hurt two of his men and ſhot him through the maine maſte. And after them came vp the Admirall vnder our Lee alſo, but he was not able to doe vs ſo much harme as the ſmall ſhippes, becauſe he caried ordinance higher then they, neither were we able to make a good ſhot at any of them, becauſe our ſhippe was ſo weake in the ſide, that ſhe laid all her ordinance in the Sea: wherefore we thought to lay the great ſhip aboord, and as ſoone as the French Admirall went roome with him, he fell a ſterne and could not fetch him, and after he fell a ſterne of two carauels more and could fetch none of them, but fell to Leeward of them all: and when he was to Leeward, he kept about to the ſhoreward, and left vs, and then we put out our topſailes and gaue them chaſe, and both the other Frenchmen kept the wind, and would not come neere vs, and our owne ſhip was a ſterne ſo that ſhe could not come to vs: and after we had folowed them about two houres to the ſeaward, they kept about againe towards the ſhore, thinking to pay vs as they went along by, and to haue the wind of the French Admirall which before ran in towards the ſhore, and we kept about with them, and kept ſtill the wind of them thinking that our Viceadmiral and the other would haue folowed vs as wee willed them to do: but after that the Portugall was paſt by them, and euery one had ſhot at vs and our Viceadmirall, both our Viceadmirall and the two Frenchmen, & our owne pinnaſſe left vs in the laps, and ran to ſeaward, and we ran ſtill along, and kept the wind of them to ſuccour the French Admirall, who was vnder all of their Lees, and when they met with him, euery one went roome with him, and gaue him the broad ſide, and after they caſt about againe, and durſt not boord him, becauſe they ſawe vs in the weather of them or els without doubt they had taken or ſunke them, for three of them which were the ſmalleſt, went ſo faſt that it was not poſſible for a ſhip to boord them, and caried ſuch ordinance that if they had had the weather of vs, they would haue troubled 3 of the beſt ſhips that we had, and as for their Admirall and Viceadmirall they were both notablie appointed.

The fight with the Portugals.

The French forſake our men.

When the Frenchman was cleare of them, hee laie as neere the winde as hee could, and wee followed them ſtill towardes the ſhore, and then the Admirall ranne to Sea after the reſt, and left vs all alone: and when the Portugals perceiued that we were alone, and gaue them chaſe, they kept about with vs and we with them, to keepe the wind of them, and we ranne ſtill within baſe ſhot of them, but they ſhot not at vs, becauſe we had the weather of them, and ſawe that they could do vs no hurt: and thus we folowed one another vntil night, and in the night we loſt them, but as for all the reſt of our ſhips, they packed on all the ſailes that they could and ranne to ſea, and as they themſelues confeſſe, they praied for vs, but as for helpe at their hands we could haue none.

The 28 day we met with our Viceadmirall, our pinnaſſe, and two of the Frenchmen, and the third was fled which was a ſhip of fourſcore tunne, and belonged to Roan: and when I had the ſight of the reſt of our ſhips, I tooke our ſkiffe and went to them to know why they loſt vs in ſuch a caſe, and Iohn Kire made me anſwere that his ſhip would neither reare nor ſteere, and as for the pinnaſſe, Iohn Dauis made me anſwere that ſhe would doe nothing, and that he could cary her no further, for her rudder was broken, ſo that the Hart was glad to towe her. Then I went to the French Admirall, and found himſelfe to be a man of good ſtomacke, but the one halfe of his men were ſicke and dead: and then I talked with the ſmaller Frenchman, and he made mee anſwere that he could doe nothing, ſaying, that his ſhip would beare no ſaile, and had 16 of his men dead and ſicke, ſo he made vs plaine anſwere that he was able to doe nothing. After this the French men durſt not anker for feare of the Portugales.

The 29 day the maſter of the pinnaſſe came to vs and ſayd that they were not able to keepe her any longer, and then wee viewed her and ſeeing there was no remedie, her rudder with all the iron worke being broken both aloft and belowe, wee agreed to breake her vp and to put the men into the Hart. So we tooke out of her foure baſes,one anker,and certaine fire wood, and ſet her on fire,and afterwards ran along the coaſt.

The thirtie day we went in to the ſhore, and ſpake with certaine Negros, who told vs that ſome French ſhippes had bene there,but wee could not bargaine with them they were ſo vnreaſonable.

The 31 day I went to ſhore but did not traffike.

Februarie.

The 1 day of Februarie we weighed,ſeeing we could not bring the Negros to any reaſon,and came to another place which ſtandeth vpon an hill.

The third day I went to a towne foure leagues from vs,and ſhot off two pieces,and the Captaine came to vs, and I ſent Thomas Rippen a land who knew the Captaine, and aſſoone as he came on ſhore the Captaine knew him and diuers of the Negros who then began to aſke for mee, and hauing told the Captaine that I was in the boate, hee made no longer tarying but by and by cauſed two boates to be put to the Sea,and came to me himſelfe, and when he ſawe me, he cryed to me before hee came to the boat and ſeemed to be the gladdeſt man aliue, and ſo did all the companie that knew mee,and I gaue him a reward as the maner of the Countrey is, and cauſed the Frenchmen to giue another,promiſing the next day to giue him wine: and that night becauſe it was late,he would not talke of any price,but left me a pledge,and tooke another of me and ſo departed.

The 4 day going on ſhore,I found that the ſhips of France which had bin there,had done much hurt to our markets,but yet I tooke fiue ounces and a halfe of gold.

The fift day I tooke eight ounces and one eight part of gold: but I ſaw that the Negros perceiued the difference in Cloth betwixt ours and that which the Frenchmen had, which was better,and broader then ours: and then I told captaine Blundel that I would goe to the Leeward, becauſe I perceiued that being there where his Cloth was ſold,I ſhould do no good, whereof hee was ſorie.

The 6 day there came an Almade & Negros aboord me, requeſting me to come to their towne for they had much gold and many marchants: and ſo I went and found their old Captaine gone, and another in his place: but this night wee did no good, becauſe the marchants were not come downe: ſo he required a pledge which I let him haue,and tooke another of him.

George our Negro.

The 7 day George our Negro came to vs, who had followed vs at the leaſt 30 leagues in a ſmall boat,and when he came,the Negros and we ſoone concluded of price. I tooke this day fiue pound and one ounce,and 3 quarters of gold. This Negro we had left at Shamma at the time of the fight, who ſaid that he ſaw the fight being on ſhore,and that when we were gone from the Portugals, the Portugals came into their riuer, and told them that the Engliſhmen had ſlaine two Portugals with a piece,which was in deed out of our ſhip, and they required harbour there, but the captaine of Shamma would not ſuffer them.

Two Portugals ſlaine by the Engliſh.

The 8 day we tooke nineteene pound three ounces and a halfe.

The 9 day we tooke two pound ſix ounces and a halfe.

The 10 day three pound.

The 11 day came to vs Ierome Bawdet the Viceadmirall of the Frenchmen and his pinnaſſe, and he ſhewed vs that where we left them there was no good to be done, and ſayd he would goe to the Eaſtward, but wee told him hee ſhould not: and thereupon commaunded him to goe to his company which he was appointed to bee with, which hee refuſed to doe vntill wee had ſhot three or foure pieces at their pinnaſſe,and when the ſhip ſawe that, ſhe kept about, and ranne to Seaward,and durſt come no neerer to vs,ſo the pinnaſſe went after her. We tooke this day one pound fiue ounces.

The Frenchmen bridled by the Engliſh.

The 12 day there came one of the Frenchmens pinnaſſes to vs ladē with cloth,and would haue made ſale,but I would not ſuffer him, and therefore tooke him and ſent him aboord of our ſhip, and cauſed him to ride there all day. We tooke fiue pound ſix ounces and a halfe.

The 14 day we tooke of ſome Negros 4 ounces of gold.

The 16 we came to another towne.

The 17 day I went a ſhore and vnderſtood that 3 of the Portugall ſhips were at the Caſtle, and the other two at Shamma. The captaine of this towne was gone to the principall towne, to ſpeake with their king,and would returne ſhortly as they told me,and ſo he did, and brought me a weight and meaſure,and I ſent a man to ſee that principall towne,and their king. The Portugall ſhips rid ſo neere vs, that within 3 houres they might be with vs, yet were all contented to tary for ſales.

The 18 day certaine of the kings ſeruaunts came to vs, and we tooke one pound two ounces, and one eight part of gold.

The 10 day we tooke fiue pound one ounce.

The 20 day one pound and foure ounces.

The 21 I tooke foure pound and one ounce, and the Negroes enquired for fine cloth, and I opened two pieces which were not fine enough, as they ſayd, but ſeeing that we had no other, they bought of them. At night I prouided a gift, or preſent, and ſent one marchant and a mariner with it to the king, to certifie him of our want of victuals, by reaſon whereof we could not ſtay long: for in deed we ſearched our ſhip, and the moſt part of our beere was leaked out of all our barrels.

The 22 day we tooke three ounces and a halfe.

King Abaan.

The offer of the king to the Engliſh to build a Fort.

The 23 our men came from the king Abaan, and told vs, that he had receiued thẽ very friendly, but he had litle gold, but promiſed, if we would tary, to ſend into all his countrey for gold for vs, and he willed our men at their comming home to ſpeake to our king to ſend men and prouiſion into his countrey, to build a caſtle, and to bring Taylors with them, to make them apparell, and good wares, and they ſhould be ſure to ſell them: but for that preſent the Frenchmen had filled them full of cloth.

A towne in circuit as big as London.

A pretie deuiſe to deſcrie the enemie.

This towne ſtandeth about foure leagues vp in the land, and is, by the eſtimation of our men, as big in circuit as London, but the building is like to the reſt of the countrey. They haue about this Towne great ſtore of the wheate of the Countrey, and they iudge, that on one ſide of the towne there were one thouſand rikes of Wheate, and another ſort of Corne which is called Mill, which is much vſed in Spaine. About this towne they keepe good watch euery night, and haue to warne the watchmen certaine cordes made faſt ouer their wayes, which lead into the towne, and certaine bels vpon them, ſo that if any man touch the cordes, the bels ring, and then the watchmen runne foorth of their watch houſes to ſee what they be: and if they be enemies, if they paſſe the cord, they haue prouiſion with certaine nets hanged ouer the wayes, where they muſt paſſe, to let fall vpon them, and ſo take them, and otherwiſe then by the wayes it is not poſſible to enter the towne, by reaſon of the thickets and buſhes which are about the ſame, and the towne is alſo walled round about with long cords, and bound together with ſedge and certaine barkes of trees.

The kings friendly entertainment of our men.

When our men came to the towne, it was about fiue of the clock in the morning, for there they trauell alwayes in the night by reaſon of the heate of the day: and about nine of the clocke, the king ſent for them, for there may no man come to him before he be ſent for, and then they would haue caried their preſent with them: but the Negros told them, that they muſt bee three times brought before him, before they might offer their gift: and when they came to him, he talked with them, and receiued them very friendly, and kept them about halfe an houre, and then they departed, and after that ſent for them againe three times, and laſt of all, they brought him their preſent, which he receiued thankfully, and then cauſed a pot of wine of Palme to be brought foorth, and made them drinke: and before they drinke, both here and in all the Countrey, they vſe certaine ceremonies.

Their ceremonies in drinking.

Firſt, they bring foorth their pot of drinke, and then they make a hole in the ground, & put ſome of the drinke into it, and they caſt the earth vpon it, which they digged forth before, and then they ſet the pot vpon the ſame, then they take a litle thing made of a goord, and with that they take out of the ſame drinke, and put it vpon the ground in three places, and in diuers places they haue certaine bunches of the pils of Palme trees ſet in the groũd before them, and there they put in ſome drinke, doing great reuerence in all places to the ſame Palme trees.

All theſe ceremonies firſt done, the king tooke a cup of gold, and they put him in wine, and hee dranke of it, and when he dranke, the people cried all with one voice, Abaan, Abaan, with certaine other words, like as they cry commonly in Flanders, vpõ the Twelfe night, The kinning drinks: and when he had drunke, then they gaue drinke to euery one, and that done, the king licenſed them to depart, and euery one that departeth from him boweth 3 times towards him, and waueth with both hands together, as they bow, and then do depart. The king hath commonly ſitting by him 8 or 10 ancient men with gray beards.

This day we tooke one pound and 10 ounces of gold.

The 24 day we tooke 3 pound and 7 ounces.

The 25 we tooke 3 ounces and 3 quarters.

The 26 we tooke 2 pound and 10 ounces.

The 27 two pound and fiue ounces.

The 28 foure pound, and then ſeeing that there was no more gold to be had, we weighed and went foorth.

Mowre.

The firſt day of March we came to a towne called Mowre, but we found no boats nor people there: but being ready to depart, there came two Almades to vs from another towne, of whom we tooke two ounces and a halfe of golde: and they tolde vs that the Negroes that dwelled at Mowre were gone to dwell at Lagoua.

Lagoua.

The ſecond day we came thwart of the caſtle, and about two leagues off, and there ſaw all the fiue Portugall ſhips at anker, and this day by night we fetched Shamma.

They returne.

The third day we had ſight of one tall ſhip, of about two hundred tunnes, in the weather of vs, and within leſſe then two leagues of our ſhips, and then we ſaw two more a ſterne of her, the one a ſhip of fiue hundred or more, and the other a pinneſſe: and theſe were a new fleet at that preſent arriued out of Portugall. Whereupon we wayed, and made ſhift to double out of the land, and then the winde comming to the South-ſouthweſt, the Hart going roome with them fell three leagues to the leewards of vs. Theſe Portugals gaue vs the chaſe from nine of the clocke in the morning, till fiue at night, but did no good againſt vs. At laſt, we perceiuing the Admirall to be farre a ſterne of his company, becauſe his maine top-maſt was ſpent, determined to caſt about with them againe, becauſe we were ſure to weather them, and the winde being as it was, it was our beſt courſe: but the Hart was ſo farre to the leeward, that we could not doe it, except we would loſe her company, ſo that we tooke in ſome of our ſailes, and went roome with him: which when he perceiued, he looffed to, and was able to lie as neere as he did before. At night, when we came to him, he would not ſpeake to vs: then we aſked of his company why he went ſo roome; and they made excuſe that they were able to beare no ſaile by, for feare of bearing their foretopmaſt ouer boord: but this was a ſimple excuſe.

Ships of Portugall.

The fourth day, being put from our watring place we began to ſeethe our meat in ſalt water, and to rebate our allowance of drinke, to make it indure the longer: and ſo concluded to ſet our courſe thence, for our owne countrey.

The 12 of March I found my ſelfe thwart of Cape das palmas.

The 16 day we fell with the land, which we iudged to be the Cape Menſurado, about which place is very much high land.

Cape Menſurado.

The 18 day we loſt ſight of the Hart, and I thinke the wilfull Maſter ran in with the ſhore of purpoſe to loſe vs, being offended that I tolde him of his owne folly.

The 27 day we fell in ſight of two ſmall Ilands, which lie by our reckoning ſixe leagues off the headland of Sierra Leona: and before we came in ſight of the ſame Ilands, we made our reckoning to be forty or thirty leagues at the leaſt off them. Therefore all they that ſaile this way are to regard the currents which ſet Northnorthweſt, or els they may be much deceiued.

Two ſmall Ilands by Sierra Leona.
Note.

The 14 of Aprill we met with two great ſhips of Portugall, which although they were in the weather of vs, yet came not roome with vs, whereby we iudged that they were bound for Calicut.

The 18 day we were in the heigth of Cape verde.

The 24 we were directly vnder the tropike of Cancer.

The firſt day of May Henry Wilſon our Steward died: and the next day died Iohn Vnderwood.

The ſixt day we were in the heigth of S. Michael.

The 23 we had ſight of a ſhippe in the weather of vs, which was a Frenchman of 90 tunne, who came with vs as ſtoutly and as deſperately as might be, and comming neere vs perceiued that we had bene vpon a long voyage, and iudging vs to be weake, as in deed we were, came neerer vs, and thought to haue layed vs aboord, & there ſtept vp ſome of his men in armour, and commanded vs to ſtrike ſaile: whereupon we ſent them ſome of our ſtuffe, croſſe barres, and chaineſhot, and arrowes, ſo thicke, that it made the vpper worke of their ſhippe flie about their eares, and we ſpoiled him with all his men, and toare his ſhippe miſerably with our great ordinance, and then he began to fall a ſterne of vs, and to packe on his ſailes, and get away: and we ſeeing that, gaue him foure or fiue good pieces more for his farewell; and thus we were rid of this Frenchman, who did vs no harme at all. We had aboord vs a Frenchman a Trumpetter, who being ſicke, and lying in his bed, tooke his trumpet notwithſtanding, and ſounded till he could ſound no more, and ſo died.

A French bragado.

The 28 we conferred together, and agreed to go into Seuerne, and ſo to Briſtoll, but the ſame night we had ſight of the Lizard, and by reaſon of the winde, we were not able to double the lands end to go into Seuerne, but were forced to beare in with the Lizard.

The 29 day, about nine of the clocke in the morning, we arriued ſafely in Plimmouth, and praiſed God for our good arriuall.

The third and laſt voyage of M. VVilliam Towrſon to the coaſt of Guinie, and the Caſtle de Mina, in the yeere 1577.

The thirtieth day of January, the yeere aboueſayd, we departed out of the ſound of Plimmouth, with three ſhips, and a pinneſſe, whereof the names are theſe:

1 The Minion Admirall of the fleet.
2 The Chriſtopher Viceadmirall.
3 The Tyger.
4 A pinneſſe called the Vnicorne: being all bound for the Canaries, and from thence, by the grace of God, to the coaſt of Guinie.

It is to be vnderſtood, that at this time there was warre betwixt England and France.

The next day, being the laſt of this moneth, we met with two hulks of Dantzick, the one called the Roſe, a ſhip of foure hundred tunnes, and the other called the Vnicorne, of an hundred and fifty tunnes, the Maſter of the Roſe was called Nicholas Maſſe, and the Maſter of the Vnicorne Melchior White, both laden at Bourdeaux, and for the moſt part with wines. When we came to them, we cauſed them to hoiſe foorth their boats, and to come and ſpeake with vs, and we examined euery one of them apart, what French mens goods they had in their ſhippes, and they ſayd they had none: but by the contrarieties of their tales, and by the ſuſpicion which we gathered of their falſe chartar-parties, we perceiued that they had French mens goods in them: we therefore cauſed one of them to fetch vp his bils of lading, and becauſe he denied that he had any, we ſent certaine with him, who cauſed him to goe to the place where he had hid them, and by the differences of his billes of lading, and his talke, we gathered, as before, that they had Frenchmens goods. Whereupon we examined them ſtraightly, and firſt the Purſer of the Vnicorne, which was the ſmaller ſhippe, confeſſed that they had two and thirty tunnes and a hogſhead of a French mans. Then we examined the Maſter in like caſe, and he acknowledged the ſame to be true. Then we examined alſo the Maſter of the great ſhip, and he confeſſed that he had an hundred and eight and twenty tunnes of the ſame French mans, and more they would not confeſſe, but ſayd that all the reſt was laden by Peter Lewgues of Hamburg, to be deliuered to one Henry Summer of Camphire, notwithſtanding all their letters were directed to Hamburg, and written in Dutch without, and within in French.

When they had confeſſed that they had thus much French mens goods within their ſhippes, we conferred together what was beſt to be done with them. William Cretton and Edward Selman were of the opinion, that it ſhould be good either to carry them into Spaine, and there to make ſale of the goods, or els into Ireland, or to returne backe againe into England with them, if the winde would permit it. But I, waying what charge we had of our Maſters, firſt by mouth, and afterwards by writing, that for no ſuch matter we ſhould in any caſe prolong the time, for feare of loſing the voyage, and conſidering that the time of the yeere was very farre ſpent, and the money that we ſhould make of the wines not very much, in reſpect of the commodity which we hoped for by the voyage, perſwaded them that to goe into Ireland, the winde being Eaſterly as it was, might be an occaſion that we ſhould be locked in there with that winde, and ſo loſe our voyage: and to cary them into Spaine, ſeeing they ſailed ſo ill, that hauing all their ſailes abroad, we kept them company onely with our foreſailes, and without any toppe ſailes abroad, ſo that in euery two dayes ſailing they would haue hindered vs more then one; and beſides that (the winde being Eaſterly) we ſhould not be able to ſeaze the coaſt with them: beſides all this the loſſe of time when we came thither was to be conſidered, whereupon I thought it not good to carry them any further.

And as for carying them into England, although the winde had bene good, as it was not, conſidering what charge we had of our Maſters, to ſhift vs out of the way for feare of a ſtay by reaſon of the warres, I held it not in any wiſe conuenient.

The French mens goods ſeazed in the time of the warre vpon the loſſe of Cales.

But notwithſtanding all this, certeine of our company not being herewith ſatiſfied went to our Maſter to know his opinion therein, who made them a plaine anſwere, that to cary them into any place, it was not the beſt way nor the profit of their Maſters. And he tolde them further, that if the time were prolonged one moneth longer before they paſſed the Cape, but a few men would go the voyage. All theſe things conſidered, we all pauſed, and determined at the laſt, that euery man ſhould take out of the hulks ſo much as he could well beſtow for neceſſaries, and the next morning to conclude what ſhould be further done with them. So we tooke out of them for vs foureteene tunnes and a halfe of wine, and one tunne we put into the pinneſſe.

More we tooke out one hogſhead of Aquauitæ.
Sixe cakes of rozzen.
A ſmall halſer for ties: and certeine cheſnuts.

The Chriſtopher tooke out,

Ten tunnes of wine, and one hogſhead.
A quantity of Aquauitæ,
Shall-lines,
Cheſnuts.

Sixe double baſes with their chambers. And their men broke vp the hulks cheſts, and tooke out their compaſſes, and running glaſſes, the ſounding leade and line, and candles: and caſt ſome of their beefe ouer boord, and ſpoiled them ſo much, that of very pity we gaue them a compaſſe, a running glaſſe, a lead and a line, certaine bread and candles, and what apparell of theirs we could finde in their ſhip, we gaue them againe, and ſome money alſo of that which William Crompton tooke for the ranſome of a poore Frenchman, who being their Pilot downe the Riuer of Bordeux, they were not able to ſet him a ſhore againe, by reaſon of the foule weather.

The Tyger alſo tooke out of the ſmaller hulke ſixe or ſeuen tunnes of wine, one hogſhead of Aquauitæ, and certeine rozzen, and two baſes he tooke out of the great hulke.

The firſt day of Februarie in the morning we all came together againe ſauing W. Crompton who ſent vs word that he was contented to agree to that order which we ſhould take.

Now Edward Selman was of this opinion, that it was not beſt to let the ſhips depart, but put men into them to cary them into England, which thing neither we nor our Maſter would agree vnto, becauſe we thought it not good to vnman our ſhips going outward, conſidering how dangerous the time was: ſo that in fine we agreed to let them depart, and giue them the reſt of the wine which they had in their ſhips of the Frenchmens for the fraight of that which we had taken, and for their ordinance, rozzen, aquauitæ, cheſnuts, and other things which the company had taken from them. So we receiued a bill of their handes, that they confeſſed how much Frenchmens goods they had, and then we let them depart.

The 10 day we reckoned our ſelues to be 25 leagues from the Grand Canarie, and this day about nine of the clocke our pinneſſe brake her rudder, ſo that we were forced to towe her at the ſterne of the Minion, which we were able to doe, and yet kept company with the reſt of our ſhips. About eleuen of the clocke this day we had ſight of the Grand Canarie.

The 11 day when we came to the Iland we perceiued that it was the Iſle of Tenerif, & then in deed wee had ſight of the Grand Canarie, which lieth 12 leagues to the Eaſtwards of Tenerif: and becauſe the road of Tenerif is foule ground, and nothing was there to be gotten for the helping of our pinneſſe, hauing the winde large, we agreed to go with the Grand Canarie.

The 12 day we came into the roade of the towne of Canarie, which lieth one league from the ſame towne. And after we had ſhot off diuers pieces of ordinance to ſalute the towne and the caſtle, the gouernour and captaines of the Iland ſent to vs which were the captaines of the ſhips, requiring vs to come a ſhore. And when we came to them they receiued vs very frendly, offering vs their owne Iennets to ride to the towne, and what other friendſhip they could ſhew vs: and we went to the towne with two Engliſh Marchants which lay there, and remained in their houſe that day. The ſecond day following we came aboord to deliuer our marchandiſe, and to get our pinneſſe mended.

Two Engliſh Marchants Ligiers in the Grand Canary.

The 14 day came into the road the Spaniſh fleet which was bound to the Emperours Indies, which were in number nineteene ſails, whereof ſixe were ſhips of foure hundred and fiue hundred a piece, the reſt were of two hundred, an hundred and fifty, and of an hundred. When they were come to an ancre they ſaluted vs with ordinance, and ſo we did them in like caſe. And afterwards the Admirall (who was a knight) ſent his pinneſſe to deſire me to come to him; and when I came to him he receiued me friendly, and was deſirous to heare ſomewhat of the ſtate of England and Flanders. And after he had made me a banquet, I departed; and I being gone vnto the boat, hee cauſed one of his gentlemen to deſire Franciſco the Portugall, which was mine interpreter, to require me to furle my flagge, declaring that hee was Generall of the Emperours fleet. Which thing (being come aboord) Franciſco ſhewed me: and becauſe I refuſed to furle it, and kept it foorth ſtill, certaine of the ſouldiers in the ſhips ſhot diuers harquebuſh ſhot about the ſhip, and ouer the flagge: and at the ſame time there came certaine gentlemen aboord our ſhip to further it: to whom I ſayd, that if they would not cauſe thoſe their men to leaue ſhooting, I would ſhoot the beſt ordinance I had thorow their ſides. And when they perceiued that I was offended, they departed, and cauſed their men of warre and ſouldiers to ſhoot no more, and afterwards they came to me againe, and tolde me that they had puniſhed their men. That done, I ſhewed them the ſhip, and made them ſuch cheere as I could, which they receiued very thankfully: and the day following they ſent for mee to dine with them, and ſent me word that their Generall was very ſory that any man ſhould require me to furle my flagge, and that it was without his conſent: and therefore he requeſted me not to thinke any vngentleneſſe to be in him, promiſing that no man of his ſhould miſdemeane himſelfe.

The 17 day we ſet ſaile in the road of Grand Canarie, and proceeded on our voyage.

Rio del Oro.

The 20 in the morning we had ſight of the coaſt of Barbarie, and running along the ſhore we had ſight of Rio del Oro, which lieth almoſt vnder the tropike of Cancer.

The 21 day we found our ſelues to be in 20 degrees and a halfe, which is the heigth of Cape Blank.

The 25 we had ſight of the land in the bay to the Northward of Cape Verde.

Francis Caſtelin.

Cape verde.

Foure Ilands.

A great trade of the Frenchmen at Cape verde.

The 26 I tooke Franciſco and Francis Caſtelin with me, and went into the pinneſſe, and ſo went to the Tyger which was neerer the ſhore then the other ſhips, and went aboord her, and with her and the other ſhips we ranne Weſt and by South, and Weſt-ſouthweſt, vntill about foure of the clocke, at which time we were hard aboord the Cape; and then we ran in Southweſt, and beyond the Cape about foure leagues we found a faire Iland, and beſides that two or three Ilands, which were of very high rocks, being full of diuers ſorts of ſea-foule, and of pigeons, with other ſorts of land-foules, and ſo many, that the whole Iland was couered with the dung thereof, and ſeemed ſo white as if the whole Iland had bene of chalke; and within thoſe Ilands was a very faire bay, and hard aboord the rocks eighteene fadom water, and faire ground. And when we perceiued the bay, and vnderſtanding that the Frenchmen had a great trade there, which we were deſirous to know, we came to an ancre with the Tyger. And after that the Minion and the Chriſtopher ancred in like caſe: then we cauſed the pinneſſe to runne beyond another Cape of land, to ſee if there were any place to trade in there.

It being neere night I tooke our cocke and the Tygers ſkiffe, and went to the Iland, where we got certaine foules like vnto Gannards: and then I came aboord againe and tooke two of the Gannards which we had taken, and caried them to the captaine of the Chriſtopher, and when I had talked with him, I found him not willing to tary there, neither was I deſirous to ſpend any long time there, but onely to attempt what was to be done. The Maſter of the Chriſtopher tolde me he would not tary, being not bound for that place.

A faire Iland where the French trade.

Elephants teeth, muſke, and hides.

The 27 the Captaine of the Tyger and Edward Selman came to me, and Iohn Makeworth from the Chriſtopher, and then we agreed to take the pinneſſe, & to come along the ſhore, becauſe that where we rid no Negros came to vs, and the night before our pinneſſe brought vs word that there was a very faire Iland. And when I came beyond the point I found it ſo, and withall a goodly bay, and we ſaw vpon the maine certaine Negros which waued vs on ſhore, and then we came to an ancre with the pinneſſe, and went a ſhore with our cocke, and they ſhewed vs where their trade was, and that they had Elephants teeth, muſke, & hides, and offered vs to fetch downe their Captaine, if we would ſend a man with them, and they would leaue a pledge for him: then we asked them when any ſhip had bene there; and ſome of them ſayd not in eight moneths, others, in ſixe moneths, and others in foure, and that they were Frenchmen.

Then we perceiuing the Chriſtopher not willing to tary, departed from them, & ſet ſaile with the pinneſſe and went aboord the Tyger.

Cabo de Monte.

The 10 day of March we fell with the coaſt of Guinea, fiue leagues to the Eaſtward of Cape de Monte, beſide a riuer called Rio das Palmas.

The 11 we went to the ſhore, and found one man that could ſpeake ſome Portuguiſe, who tolde vs that there were three French ſhips paſſed by; one of them two moneths paſt, and the other one moneth paſt. At this place I receiued nineteene Elephants teeth, and two ounces and halfe a quarter of golde.

The riuer de Seſtos.

The 12 we ſet ſaile to go to the riuer de Seſtos.

The 13 at night we fell with the ſame riuer.

The 14 day we ſent in our boats to take water, and romaged our ſhippes, and deliuered ſuch wares to the Chriſtopher and Tyger, as they had need of.

The 15 we came together, and agreed to ſend the Tyger to another riuer to take in her water, and to ſee what ſhe could do for graines. After that we tooke marchandiſe with vs, and went into the riuer, and there we found a Negro which was borne in Liſbone, left there by a ſhip of Portugal which was burned the laſt yere at this riuer in fighting with three Frenchmen; and he told vs further, that two moneths paſt there were three Frenchmen at this place, and ſixe weekes paſt there were two French ſhips at the riuer, and fifteene dayes paſt there was one. All which ſhips were gone towards the Mina. This day we tooke but fewe graines.

The 19 day conſidering that the Frenchmen were gone before vs, and that by reaſon of the vnholeſome aires of this place fourteene of our men in the Minion were fallen ſicke, wee determined to depart, and with all ſpeed to go to the Mina.

The Rio de Potos.

The 21 wee came to the riuer de Potos, where ſome of our boats went in for water, and I went in with our cocke, and tooke 12 ſmall Elephants teeth.

The 23 day, after we had taken as many teeth as we could get, about nine of the clocke we ſet ſaile to go towards the Mina.

The 31 we came to Hanta, and made ſale of certaine Manillios.

They deſcrie fiue ſaile of the Portugals.

The firſt Aprill we hat ſight of fiue ſaile of Portugals, whereupon we ſet ſaile and went off to ſea to get the winde of them, which wee ſhould haue had if the winde had kept his ordinary courſe, which is all the day at the Southweſt, and Weſt-ſouthweſt: but this day with a flaw it kept all the day at the Eaſt, and Eaſt-ſoutheaſt, ſo that the Portugals had the winde of vs, and came roome with the Tyger and vs vntill night, and brought themſelues all ſaue one, which ſailed not ſo well as the reſt, within ſhot of vs: then it fell calme, and the winde came vp to the Southweſt, howbeit it was neere night, and the Chriſtopher, by meanes of her boat, was about foure leagues to the leewards of vs. We tacked and raune into the weather of the Admirall, and three more of his company, and when we were neere him we ſpake to him, but he would not anſwere. Then we caſt about and lay in the weather of him; and caſting about he ſhot at vs, and then wee ſhot at him, and ſhot him foure or fiue times thorow. They ſhot diuers times thorow our ſailes, but hurt no man. The Tyger and the pinneſſe, becauſe it was night, kept out their ſailes, & would not meddle with them. After we had thus fought together 2 houres or more, and would not lay him aboord becauſe it was night, we left ſhooting one at the other, and kept ſtill the weather of them. Then the Tyger and the pinneſſe kept about and came to vs, and afterward being neere the ſhore, we three kept about and lay to the ſea, and ſhot off a piece to giue warning to the Chriſtopher.

The fight.

This night about 12 of the clocke, being very litle winde, and the Maſter of the Tyger aſleepe, by the ill worke of his men the ſhip fel aboord of vs, and with her ſheare-hooks cut our maine ſaile, and her boat being betwixt vs was broken and ſuncke, with certaine marchandiſe in her, and the ſhips wales were broken with her outleger: yet in the end we cleared her without any more hurt, but ſhe was in hazzard to be broken downe to the water.

The ſecond day we had ſight of the Chriſtopher, and were neere vnto her, ſo that I tooke our boat and went to her. And when I came thither, they ſhewed me, that after the Portugals had left vs, they went all roome with him, and about twelue a clocke at night met him, and ſhot at him, and hee at them, and they ſhot him thorow the ſailes in diuers places, and did no other great hurt. And when we had vnderſtood that they had beene with him as well as with vs, we agreed altogether to ſeeke them (if wee might finde them) and keepe a weather our places of traffique.

The third day we ran all day to the Southweſtwards to ſeeke the Portugals, but could haue no ſight of them, and halled into the ſhore.

The fourth day, when we had ſight of land, we found that the currant had ſet vs thirty leagues to the Eaſtwards of our reckoning, which we woondered at: for the firſt land we made was Lagua. Then I cauſed our boat to be manned, and the Chriſtophers alſo, and went to the ſhore and tooke our Negro with vs. And on ſhore we learned that there were foure French ſhips vpon the coaſt; one at Perinnen, which is ſix leagues to the Weſtward of Laguoa: another at Weamba, which is foure leagues to the Eſtward of Laguoa: a third at Perecow, which is foure leagues to the Eaſtward of Weamba: and the fourth at Egrand, which is foure leagues to the Eaſtward of Perecow.

Lagua.

Perinnen.
Weamba.
Perecow.
Egrand.

When we had intelligence of theſe newes we agreed to go to the Eaſtwards with the French men to put them from their traffique, and ſhot off two or three pieces in our boats to cauſe the ſhips to way: and hauing bene about one houre vnder ſaile, we had ſight of one of the French men vnder ſaile, halling off from Weamba to whome we gaue chaſe, and agreed in the night for feare of ouerſhooting them, that the Minion ſhould firſt come to ancre, and after that about three houres, the Tyger and the Chriſtopher to beare along all night.

The 5 day we found three of the French ſhips at ancre: one called La foye de Honfleur, a ſhip of 220 tunnes, another called the Ventereuſe or ſmall Roebarge of Honfleur, of 100 tunnes, both appertaining to Shawdet of Honfleur, the third was called the Mulet de Batuille a ſhip of 120 tunnes, and this ſhip belonged to certaine Marchants of Roan.

When we came to them, we determined to lay the Admiral aboord, the Chriſtopher the Viceadmirall, and the Tyger the ſmalleſt: but when we came neere them they wayed, and the Chriſtopher being the headmoſt & the weathermoſt man, went roome with the Admirall: the Roebarge went ſo faſt that wee could not fetch her. The firſt that we came to was the Mulet, and her wee layed aboord, and our men entred and tooke her, which ſhip was the richeſt except the Admirall:

The Engliſh boord the Frenchmen.

for the Admirall had taken about 80 pound of golde, and the Roeberge had taken but 22 pound; and all this we learned of the Frenchmen, who knew it very well: for they were all in conſort together, and had bene vpon the coaſt of Mina two moneths and odde dayes: howbeit the Roeberge had bene there before them with another ſhip of Diepe, and a carauel, which had beaten all the coaſt, and were departed one moneth before our arriuing there, and they three had taken about 700 pound of golde.

Aſſoone as we had layed the ſhip aboord, and left certaine men in her to keepe her, we ſet ſaile and gaue chaſe to the other two ſhips, and chaſed them all day and night, and the next day vntill three a clocke in the afternoone, but we could not fetch them: and therfore ſeeing that we brought our ſelues very farre to leeward of our place, we left the chaſe, and kept about againe to go with the ſhore.

Fifty pound of golde taken in the French priſe.

The 7 day I ſent for the captaine, marchants & maſters of the other ſhips, and when they came we weighed the golde which we had from the Frenchmen, which weighed fifty pound and fiue ounces of golde: this done, we agreed to put men out of euery ſhip into the priſe to keepe her.

The 12 day we came to the further place of the Mina called Egrand, and being come to an ancre, diſcharged all the marchants goods out of the priſe, and would haue ſold the ſhip with the victuals to the Frenchmen, but becauſe ſhe was leake they would not take her, but deſired vs to ſaue their liues in taking them into our owne ſhips: then we agreed to take out the victuals and ſinke the ſhip, and diuide the men among our ſhips.

The 15 at night we made an end of diſcharging the priſe, and diuided all the Frenchmen except foure which were ſicke and not able to helpe themſelues; which foure both the Chriſtopher and the Tyger refuſed to take, leauing them in their ſhip alone in the night, ſo that about midnight I was forced to fetch them into our ſhip.

Benin.

The 15 of April, mouing our company for the voyage to Benin, the moſt part of them all refuſed it.

The 16, ſeeing the vnwillingneſſe of the company to goe thither, we determined to ſpend as much time vpon the coaſt as we could, to the end we might make our voyage, and agreed to leaue the Minion here at Egrand, the Tyger to go to Pericow which is foure leagues off, and the Chriſtopher to goe to Weamba, which is ten leagues to the weather ward of this place: and if any of them both ſhould haue ſight of more ſailes then they thought good to meddle withall, to come roome with their fellowes; to wit, firſt the Chriſtopher to come with the Tyger, and then both they to come with vs.

Our men die of ſickneſſe.

We remained in this place called Egrand, vntill the laſt day of April, in which time many of our men fell ſicke; and ſixe of them died. And here we could haue no traffique with the Negros but three or foure dayes in the weeke, and all the reſt of the weeke they would not come at vs.

The 3 of May not hauing the pinneſſe ſent vs with cloth from the other ſhips, as they promiſed, we ſolde French cloth, and gaue but three yards thereof to euery fuſſe.

The 5 day the Negros departed, and told vs they would come to vs againe within foure dayes, which we determined there to tary, although we had diuers of our men ſicke.

Sickneſſe.

The 8 day, all our cloth in the Minion being ſold, I called the company together, to know whether they would tary the ſale of the cloth taken in the priſe at this place or no: they anſwered, that in reſpect of the death of ſome of their men, and the preſent ſickneſſe of twenty more, they would not tary, but repaire to the other ſhips, of whom they had heard nothing ſince the 27 of April: and yet they had our pinneſſe with them, onely to cary newes from one to another.

The 9 day we determined to depart hence to our fellowes, to ſee what they had done, and to attempt what was to be done at the towne of Don Iohn.

The 10 day in the morning we ſet ſaile to ſeeke the Chriſtopher and the Tyger.

The 11 day the captaine of the Chriſtopher came to vs, and told vs that they could finde ſmall doings at the places where they had bene.

The 12 William Crompton and I in our ſmall pinneſſe went to the Tyger and the Chriſtopher at Perenine.

The 13 we ſent away the Tyger to Egrand, becauſe we found nothing to doe at Perenine, worth the tarying for.

The 14 our great pinneſſe came to vs, and preſently we put cloth into her, and ſent her backe to Weamba, where ſhe had bene before, and had taken there ten pound of golde.

The 15 the Minion came to vs, and the next day we went a ſhore with our boats, and tooke but one ounce of golde.

Mowre.

The 19 day hauing ſet ſaile we came to an ancre before Mowre, and there we tarried two dayes, but tooke not an ounce of golde.

The 21 we came to an ancre before Don Iohns towne.

The 22 we manned our boats and went to ſhore, but the Negros would not come at vs; then the Captaine of the Chriſtopher and I tooke a ſkiffe and eight men with vs, and went and talked with the Negros, and they ſayd that they would ſend a man to the great towne, where Don Iohn himſelfe lay, to aduertiſe him of our comming.

The great towne of Don Iohn.

The 23 we went a ſhore againe, and the Negros tolde vs that this day the marchants of Don Iohn would come downe: ſo we tarried there vntill night, and no man would come to vs: but diuers of the Negros made vs ſignes to depart.

The 24 the Captaine of the Chriſtopher tooke his boat & went to Mowre, and when he came thither, certaine Negros came to him to know the price of his wares, but in the end there came an Almade, which he iudged came from the caſtle, and cauſed all the Negros to depart from him: and when he ſaw they would come no more to him, he went a ſhore and tooke certaine men with him, and then the Negros caſt ſtones at them, & would not ſuffer them to come vp to their towne. And when they ſaw that, they tooke certaine of the Almades, and put them to the ſea, and afterwards departed. The ſame morning I went a ſhore at Don Iohns towne, and tooke a white flag with me, but none of the Negros could come to me, which cauſed vs to iudge that the Portugals were in the towne. After this, our boat came to vs well manned, and I ſent one man vp to the towne with a white flag in his hand, but when he was come thither, all the Negros went away & would not ſpeake with him. Then I ſent one alone into the woods after them, but they in no caſe would come to vs. When we ſaw that, we tooke twelue goats and fourteene hennes, which we found in the towne, and went aboord without doing any further hurt to the towne: and when I came aboord, I found our pinneſſe come from Cormatin, which had taken there two pound & fiue ounces of golde. Then after much ado with the froward Mariners, we went thitherwards with our ſhip, and the Chriſtopher went to Mowre.

Cormatin.

The 25 day the Maſter of the Chriſtopher ſent his boat to the ſhore for balaſt, and the Negros would haue beaten the company from the ſhore, whereupon the company reſiſted them, and ſlew and hurt diuers of them, and hauing put them to flight, burned their towne, and brake all their boats.

A fight with the Negros.

The 26 day our pinneſſe came to vs from Cormatin, and had taken two pound & eleuen ounces of golde: and Iohn Shiriſe tolde vs that the Negros of that place were very deſirous to haue a ſhip come backe againe to their towne.

The 27 we wayed and went to Cormatin.

The 28 the Chriſtopher came to vs from Mowre, and traffiqued there two dayes.

The ſecond day of Iune the Tyger came to vs from Egrand, and the pinneſſe from Weamba, and they two had taken about fifty pound of golde ſince they departed from vs.

The 4 day we departed from Cormatin to plie vp to Shamma, being not able to tary any longer vpon the coaſt for lacke of victuals, and ſpecially of drinke.

The 7 day we had ſight of fiue of the king of Portugals ſhips, which came to an ancre beſides the caſtle.

The 8 day George and Binny came to vs, and brought with them about two pound of golde.

The 10 day in the morning I tooke our ſmall pinneſſe, and the Captaine of the Chriſtopher with me, and manned her well, and went to the caſtle to view the Portugals ſhips, and there we found one ſhip of about 300 tunne, and foure carauels: when we had well viewed them, we returned backe againe to our ſhips which we found ſeuen leagues at ſea.

The 11 day in the morning we found our ſelues wel ſhot toward Shamma, & the Tyger with vs, but the Minion & the pinneſſe had not wayed that night, ſo that we were out of ſight of them: and hauing brought our ſelues in the weather of the Portugals ſhips, we came to an ancre to tary for the Minion, or els we might haue fetched Shamma. At night the Minion and the pinneſſe came vp to vs, but could not fetch ſo farre to the weatherward as we, and therefore they ancred about a league a weather The caſtle, and we waied in the Chriſtopher, and went roome with her.

The 12 day the Tyger came roome with vs, and ſhe and the Chriſtopher finding themſelues to ſtand in great need of victuals, would haue gone with the Portugals ſhips to haue fetched ſome of them forth: but our maſter and company would in no caſe conſent to goe with them, for feare of hanging when we came home: and the other two ſhips being fully minded to haue gone, and fearing that their owne company would accuſe them, durſt not go to them.

After this, by reaſon of the want of victuals in the pinneſſe, which could receiue no victuals from the other ſhippes, but from vs onely, we tooke out all our men, and put twelue Frenchmen into her, and gaue them victuals to bring them to Shamma.

The 19 day the Tyger and Minion arriued at Shamma, and the Chriſtopher within two leagues off them, but could not fetch the winde by reaſon of the ſcantneſſe of the winde, which hath bene ſo ſcant, that in fifteene dayes we haue plied to the windewards but twelue leagues, which before we did in one day and a night.

The 20 day I tooke our pinneſſe, and went to the towne of Shamma to ſpeake with the captaine, and he tolde me that there was no golde there to be had, nor ſo much as a hen to be bought, and all by reaſon of the accord which he had made with the Portugals, and I ſeeing that departed peaceably from him.

The 21 I put ſuch things as we had into our ſmall pinneſſe, and tooke one marchant of our ſhip, and another of the Tyger, and ſent her to Hanta, to attempt, if ſhe could doe any thing there. That night they could do nothing but were promiſed to haue golde the next day.

The next day (which was the 22) being come, we ſent our pinneſſe to Hanta againe, but there neither the captaine nor the Negros durſt traffike with vs, but intiſed vs from place to place, and all to no purpoſe.

They put the Frenchmen with victuals into the pinneſſe.

This day we put away our pinneſſe, with fiue and twenty Frenchmen in her, and gaue them ſuch victuals as we could ſpare, putting fifteene of them to the ranſome of ſixe crownes a man.

The 23 of Iune our pinneſſe came to vs from Hanta, and tolde vs that the Negros had dealt very ill with them, and would not traffike with them to any purpoſe.

Shamma burnt by the Engliſh.

The 24 we tooke our boat and pinneſſe, and manned them well, and went to the towne of Shamma, and becauſe the Captaine thereof was become ſubiect to the Portugals we burned the towne, and our men ſeeking the ſpoile of ſuch trifles as were there found a Portugals cheſt, wherein was ſome of his apparell, and his weights, and one letter ſent to him from the caſtle, whereby we gathered that the Portugall had bene there of a long time.

Their returne homeward.

The 25 day, about three of the clocke at afternoone, we ſet ſaile, and put into the ſea, for our returne to England.

The laſt day of this moneth we fell with the ſhore againe, and made our reckoning to be eighteene leagues to the weatherward of the place where we ſet off. When we came to make the land, we found our ſelues to be eighteene leagues to the leeward of the place, where we ſet off, which came to paſſe, by reaſon of the extreame currant that runneth to the Eaſtward: when we perceiued our ſelues ſo abuſed, we agreed to caſt about againe, and to lie as neere the winde as we could, to fetch the line.

The currant.

S.Thome Iland

The ſeuenth of Iuly we had ſight of the Ile of S.Thome, and thought to haue ſought the road to haue ancred there: but the next morning the winde came about, and we kept our courſe.

The ninth, the winde varying, we kept about againe, and fell with the Iland of S.Thome, and ſeeking the road, were becalmed neere the Iland, and with the currant were put neere the ſhore, but could haue no ground to ancre: ſo that we were forced to hoiſe out our pinneſſe, and the other ſhips their ſkifs to towe from the Iland, which did litle good, but in the end the winde put vs three leagues off the ſhore..

The tenth day the Chriſtopher and the Tyger caſt about, whereby we iudged them to haue agreed together, to goe ſeeke ſome ſhips in the road, and to leaue vs: our men were not willing to goe after them, for feare of running in with the Iland againe, and of putting our ſelues into the ſame danger that we were in the night before: but we ſhot off a piece, and put out two lights, and they anſwered vs with lights againe: whereupon we kept our courſe, and thought that they had followed vs, but in the morning we could not ſee them, ſo that they left vs willingly, and we determined to follow them no more. But the eleuenth day we altered our opinion and courſe, and conſented to caſt about againe for the Iland, to ſeeke our ſhips; and about foure of the clocke in the afternoone we met with them.

The 13 we fell againe with the Iland of S.Thome; and the ſame night we found our ſelues directly vnder the line.

The deſcription of the Ile of S.Thome.

This Iland is a very high Iland, and being vpon the Weſt ſide of it, you ſhall ſee a very high pike, which is very ſmall, and ſtreight, as it were the ſteeple of a church, which pike lieth directly vnder the line, and at the ſame South end of the Iland to the Weſtward thereof lieth a ſmall Iland, about a mile from the great Iland.

The third of Auguſt we departed frõ the Ile of S.Thome, & met the winde at the Southweſt.

The 12 day we were in the height of Cape verde.

The Iland of Salt.

The 22 day we fell with one of the Iles of Cape verde, called The Ile of Salt, and being informed by a Scottiſh man that we tooke among the Frenchmen vpon the coaſt, that there were freſh victuals to be had, we came to an ancre there.

The 23 day in the morning we manned our ſkiffe, and went a ſhore, and found no houſes, but we ſaw foure men, which kept themſelues alwayes farre from vs, as for cattell we could finde none, but great ſtore of goats, and they were ſo wilde, that we could not take aboue three or foure of them: but there we had good ſtore of fiſh, and vpon a ſmall Iland which lay by the ſame we had great ſtore of ſea-birds.

At night the Chriſtopher brake her cable, and loſt an ancre, ſo that ſhe could tary no longer, ſo we all wayed, and ſet ſaile. Vpon the ſame Iland we left the Scottiſh man, which was the occaſion of our going aland at that place, but how he was left we could not tell: but, as we iudged, the people of the Iland found him ſleeping, and ſo caried him away: for at night I went my ſelfe to the Iland to ſeeke him, but could heare nothing of him.

The 24 day the Maſter of the Tyger came aboord vs, & tolde vs that his men were ſo weake, and the ſhippe ſo leake, that he was not able to keepe her aboue the water, and therefore requeſted vs to go backe againe to the Iland, that we might diſcharge her, and giue her vp: but we intreated him to take paine with her a while, and we put a French Carpenter into her, to ſee if he could finde the leake. This day we tooke a view of all our men, both thoſe that were hole, and the ſicke alſo, and we found that in all the three ſhips, were not aboue thirty ſound men.

The great inconuenience by late ſtaying vpon the coaſt of Guinie.

The 25 we had ſight of the Ile of S. Nicholas, and the day following, of the other Iles, S. Lucia, S. Vincent, and S. Anthony; which foure Iles lie the one from the other Northweſt and by Weſt, Southeaſt and by Eaſt.

The 26 we came againe with the Iland of S. Anthony, and could not double the Cape. This day Philip Iones, the Maſter of the Chriſtopher, came aboord vs, who had beene aboord the Tyger, and tolde vs that they were not able to keepe the Tyger, becauſe ſhe was leake, and the Maſter very weake, and ſayd further, he had agreed with the Maſter and the company, that if the next day we could double the Iland, we ſhould runne to the leeward of it, and there diſcharge her: but if we could not double it, then to put in betwixt the Iland of S. Vincent and S. Anthony, to ſee if we could diſcharge her.

The third day of September I went aboord the Tyger, with the Maſter and marchants with me, to view the ſhippe and men: and we found the ſhippe very leake, and onely ſix labouring men in her, whereof one was the Maſter gunner: ſo that we ſeeing that they were not able to keepe the ſhip, agreed to take in the men, and of the goods what we could ſaue, and then to put the ſhip away.

The ſixt day we went to diſcharge the Tyger.

The eight day, hauing taken out the artillery, goods, victuals, and gold of the Tyger, we gaue her vp 25 degrees by North the line.

The Tyger giuen vp.

The 27 we had ſight of two of the Iles of the Azores, S. Mary, and S. Michael.

The fourth of October we found our ſelues to be 41 degrees and a halfe from the line.

The ſixt day the Chriſtopher came to vs, and willed vs to put with the Cape; for they alſo were ſo weake, that they were not able to keepe the ſea, and we being weake alſo, agreed to goe for Vigo, being a place which many Engliſh men frequent.

The 10 day the Chriſtopher went roome with the Cape, but we hauing a mery wind for England, and fearing the danger of the enemies, which ordinarily lie about the Cape: beſides, not knowing the ſtate of our countrey and Spaine, and although it were peace, yet there was little hope of friendſhip at their hands, conſidering the voyage that we had made, and we alſo being ſo weake, that by force and violence we could come by nothing, and doubting alſo that the King of Portugall knowing of our being there, might worke ſome way with the Councell of Spaine to trouble vs: and further, conſidering that if we did put in with any harbor, we ſhould not be able to come out againe, till we ſent for more men into England, which would be a great charge, and loſſe of time, and meanes of many dangers. All theſe things pondred, we agreed to ſhoot off two pieces of ordinance, to warne the Chriſtopher, and then we went our courſe for England: ſhe hearing our pieces followed vs, and we carried a light for her, but the next day in the morning it was thicke, and we could not ſee her in the afternoone neither, ſo that we ſuſpected that either ſhe was gone with Spaine, or els that ſhe ſhould put foorth more ſailes then we in the night, and was ſhot a head of vs, ſo that then we put forth our top-ſailes, and went our courſe with England.

At the time when the Chriſtopher left vs, we were within 120 leagues of England, and 45 leagues Northweſt and by Weſt from Cape Finiſter: and at the ſame time in our ſhips we had not aboue ſixe Mariners and ſixe Marchants in health, which was but a weake company for ſuch a ſhip to ſeeke a forren harbour.

The 16 day, about ſixe of the clocke at night, we met with a great ſtorme at the Weſt-ſouthweſt, & Weſt, and our men being weake, and not able to handle our ſailes, we loſt the ſame night our maine ſaile, foreſaile, and ſpreetſaile, & were forced to lie a hulling, vntill the eighteenth day, and then we made ready an olde courſe of a foreſaile, and put it to the yard, and therewith finding our ſelues far ſhot into the ſleeue, we bare with our owne coaſt; but that foreſaile continued not aboue two houres, before it was blowen from the yard with a freat, and then we were forced to lie a hull againe, vntill the nineteenth day of October in the morning, and then we put an olde bonnet to our foreyard, which, by the good bleſſing and prouidence of God, brought vs to the Ile of Wight, where we arriued the 20 of October in the afternoone.

Certaine Articles deliuered to M. Iohn Lok, by Sir VVilliam Gerard Knight, M. William Winter, M. Beniamin Genſon, M. Anthony Hickman, and M. Edward Caſtelin the 8 of September 1561, touching a voyage to Guinea.

A remembrance for you M. Lok at your comming to the coaſt of Guinie.

FIrſt, when God ſhal ſend you thither, to procure, as you paſſe alongſt the coaſt, to vnderſtand what riuers, hauens, or harboroughs there be; and to make to your ſelfe a plat thereof, ſetting thoſe places which you ſhall thinke materiall in your ſayd plat, with their true eleuations.

Alſo you ſhall learne what commodities doe belong to the places where you ſhall touch, and what may be good for them.

The Engliſh marchants intend to fortiſie in Ghinea, in the king of Habaans countrey.

It is thought good, that hauing a fort vpon the coaſt of Mina in the king of Habaans countrey, it would ſerue to great purpoſe: wherfore you are eſpecially ſent to conſider where the fort might be beſt placed, and vpon what ground: wherein are to be noted theſe things following.

1 That the ground ſo ſerue, that is ioyne to the ſea on the one part, ſo as ſhippes and boats may come to lade and vnlade.

2 What molde of earth the ground is of.

3 What timber or wood may be had, and how it will be caried.

4 What prouiſion of victuals may be had in the countrey: and what kinde of our victuals will beſt ſerue to continue.

5 The place muſt be naturally ſtrong, or ſuch as may be made ſtrong with a ſmall charge, and afterwards kept with a few men.

6 How water may be prouided, if there be none to be had in the ground where the fort ſhall ſtand, or neere to it.

7 What helpe is to be had from the people of the countrey, either for the building of it, or for the defence thereof.

To mooue the king of Haban a farre off, for the making of a fort, and to note how he will like it; but vſe your communication ſo, that although there might fall out good cauſe for the doing of it, yet he do not vnderſtand your meaning.

The king of Haban.

Search the countrey ſo farre as you may, both alongſt the coaſt, and into the land.

To learne what became of the marchants that were left at Benin.

The matters which ſhall be of importance to be noted we nothing doubt that you will omit, wherefore we referre the order of theſe affaires to your good diſcretion.

Alſo we pray you as occaſion ſhall ſerue that you ayd and helpe our factours, both with your counſell and otherwiſe; and thus God ſend you ſafely to returne.

A letter of M. Iohn Lok to the worſhipfull company of Marchants aduenturers for Guinie, written 1561, ſhewing reaſons for his not proceeding in a voyage then intended to the foreſayd countrey.

WOrſhipfull ſirs; ſince the arriuall of M. Pet and Buttoll Monioy (as I vnderſtand) for the voyage it is concluded that the Minion ſhall proceed on her voyage, if within 20 dayes ſhe may be repaired of thoſe hurts ſhe hath receiued by the laſt ſtorme: or in the moneth of Ianuary alſo, if the wind wil ſerue therfore. Wherefore for that your worſhips ſhall not be ignorant of my determined purpoſe in the ſame, with the reaſons that haue perſwaded me thereunto; I haue thought good to aduertiſe you thereof, truſting that your worſhips will weigh them, as I vprightly and plainly meane them. And not for any feare or diſcouragement that I haue of my ſelfe by the raging of the ſtormes of the ſea, for that (I thanke the Lord) theſe haue not beene the firſt that I haue abiden, neither truſt I they ſhalbe the laſt. Firſt the ſtate of the ſhip, in which, though I thinke not but M. Pet can do more for her ſtrengthening then I can conceiue, yet for all that, it will neither mend her conditions, nor yet make her ſo ſtanch that any cabin in her ſhalbe ſtanch for men to lie drie in: the which ſore, what a weakening it will be to the poore men after their labour, that they neither can haue a ſhift of apparell drie, nor yet a drie place to reſt in, I referre to your diſcretion. For though that at Harwich ſhe was both bound and caulked as much as might be, both within and without, yet for all that ſhe left not, afore this flaw, in other weathers, being ſtreſſed, to open thoſe ſeames, and become in the ſtate ſhe was before; I meane, in wetting her men: notwithſtanding her new worke. And my iudgement, with that little experience I haue had, leadeth me to thinke that the ſhip whoſe water works and footings be ſpent and rotten cannot be but leake for men. Next, the vnſeaſonable time of the yere which is now preſent. And how onely by meanes of the vnſeaſonable times in the returne from the voyage home, many thereby haue decayed, to the great miſery and calamity of the reſt, and alſo to the great ſlander of the voyage (which I much reſpect) the laſt and other voyages haue declared. And what it is to make the voyage in vnſeaſonable time, that hath the ſecond voyage alſo declared. Wherefore weying and foreſeeing this (as I may wel terme it) calamity and vneuitable danger of men, and that by men ſhe muſt be brought home againe (except that God will ſhew an extraordinary miracle) I purpoſe not nor dare I venture with a ſafe conſcience to tempt God herein. Againe, forſomuch as ſhe is alone, and hath ſo little helpe of boat or pinneſſe in her trade, & alſo for her watering, where a long time of force muſt be ſpent, my going, to the accompliſhment of your expectations, will be to ſmall effect for this time, becauſe I ſhall want both veſſell and men to accompliſh it. And I would not gladly ſo ſpend my time and trauell, to my great charges and paine, and after, for not falling out accordingly, to loſe both pot and water, as the prouerbe is. As for the Primroſe, if ſhe be there, her trade will be ended or euer we come there, ſo that ſhe of force, by want of prouiſion, muſt returne: yea, though we ſhould carry with vs a ſupply for her, yet is the meeting of her doubtfull, and though we met her, yet will the men not tarry, as no reaſon is they ſhould: howbeit my opinion of her is that ſhe is put into Ireland. The Flowerdeluce was in Milford. Thus for that your worſhips might vnderſtand the whole cauſe why I doe not proceed, I haue troubled you at this time with this my long Letter. And, as God is my Iudge, not for feare of the Portugals, which there we ſhall meet (and yet alone without ayde) as here is a ſhippe which was in Lisbon, whoſe men ſay that there are in a readineſſe (onely to meet vs) foure great ſhips, of the which one is accounted 700 tunnes, & other pinneſſes: yet not for feare of them, nor raging of the ſeas (whoſe rage God is aboue to rule) but onely for the premiſſes: the ſequell whereof muſt by reaſon turne to a great miſery to the men; the which I for my part (though it might turne me to as much gaine as the whole commeth to) yet would I not be ſo tormented, as the ſight thereof would be a corſiue to my heart, and the more, becauſe foreſeeing the ſame, I ſhould be ſo lewd, as yeelding, to haue runne into the danger thereof, and therefore I haue abſolutely determined with my ſelfe not to goe this voyage. Howbeit if in a ſeaſonable time of the yeere I had but one ſhip ſufficient, though much leſſe by the halfe, I would not refuſe (as triall being made thereof ſhould appeare) or if I had ability of my ſelfe to venture ſo much, it ſhould well be ſeene. And this I ſpeake to giue you to vnderſtand that I refuſe not this for feare: If you purpoſe to proceed heerein, ſend ſome one whom you pleaſe; to whom I will not onely deliuer the articles which I haue receiued, but alſo will giue ſome particular notes which I haue noted in the affaires which you haue committed vnto mee, with the beſt helpe and counſell I can. Thus the liuing God keepe your worſhips all. Briſtoll this 11 of December 1561.

Your worſhips to comand to his power
Iohn Lok.

The relation of one VVilliam Rutter to M. Antony Hickman his maſter touching a voyage ſet out to Guinea in the yeere 1562, by Sir William Gerard, Sir William Cheſter, M. Thomas Lodge, the ſayd Antony Hickman, and Edward Caſtelin: which voyage is alſo written in verſe by Robert Baker.

WOrſhipfull ſir, my duty remembred, this ſhalbe to declare vnto you the diſcourſe of this our voyage, ſince our departure out of England from Dartmouth; at which time I gaue you to vnderſtand of our departure, which was the 25 of February 1562. Then hauing a proſperous winde we departed from thence, and ſailed on our voyage vntill we arriued at Cauo verde the 20 of March, making no abode there, but ſailed along the coaſt to our firſt appointed port Rio de ſeſtos, at which port we arriued the third of Aprill in the morning, hauing the ſight of a Frenchman, who aſſoone as he perceiued vs, ſet ſaile and made to the ſea: in the meane time we came to an anker in the rode: and after that he had eſpied our flag, perceiuing vs to be Engliſhmen, he bare with the ſhore, & hailed our ſhips with his ordinance, at which time we the merchants of both the ſhips were in the riuer in traffike, and had vnderſtanding of the Negros that he had bene there three dayes before our comming: ſo we concluded together, that if he ſent his pinneſſe to traffike, we would not ſuffer him, vntill we had taken further order with their captaine & marchants. In the afternoone the pinneſſe came into the riuer, whoſe men we willed to make no traffike vntill we had talked further with their captaine, whom we willed that night to come aboord our admirall; which was done. At which ſayd time M. Burton and Iohn Munt went aboord the Minion where the Frenchmen were, & there concluded that they ſhould tary by vs eight dayes, and ſuffer vs quietly to traffike, wherewith they were not well pleaſed. Whereupon the next morning they departed from vs, ſailing alongſt the coaſt to the Eaſtward towards Potis, which he did to hinder our traffike that way: wherefore the marchants of the Minion & we concluded (foraſmuch as at that preſent we vnderſtood that there were no ſailes paſt alongſt) that we ſhould go before, to the end we might not be hindred of our traffike by the Frenchmen; which thing we did: and at our comming thither we found the Frenchman in traffike to the Weſt of Potis, by whom we paſſed, & arriued at Rio de Potis the 12 of April, where we remained in traffike vntill the 15 of the ſayd moneth, and then departed from thence along the coaſt toward Sant Andre, where we appointed by agreement to tary for the Minion: and the 17 at night we came to the riuer of S. Andre; in which very day the Minion came vnto vs, telling vs that they met at cauo das Palmas a great ſhip and a caruell of the king of Portugals bound to the Mina, who gaue chaſe vnto them, and ſhot freely at them, and the Minion in her defence returned her the like: but God be praiſed the Minion had no hurt for that time. In the end we concluded to haſten towards cauo de tres puntas to haue put them from the caſtle, if by any meanes wee might; and when wee were come to the Cape, we lay a hull one night and two dayes, and doubting they had bene paſt, the Minion went neere the ſhore, and ſent her merchants to a place called Anta, where before time we had traffike, and the next morning very early being the 21 of the ſayd moneth, we againe had ſight of the ſhip and the carauell a good way to ſea-boord of vs. Then we preſently ſet ſaile, and bare with the formoſt of them, hoping to haue got betweene the caſtle and them, but we came ſhort of our purpoſe, which was no ſmall griefe vnto vs all; and when they had gotten the caſtle to friend, they ſhot at vs freely, and we at them, and the caſtle at vs; but we profited litle. In the afternoone we ſet ſaile & came to the towne of Don Iuan called Equi, where the 22 in the morning we went a ſhore to traffike, but the Negros would not vntill they had newes from Don Luis, for at that time Don Iuan was dead, and the 23 came Don Luis his ſonne and Pacheco minding to traffike with vs, at which ſaid day came two galies rowing along the ſhore from the caſtle, minding to keepe vs from our traffike. The 24 we ſet ſaile and chaſed the galies to the caſtle againe. The Negros being glad of that required vs to goe to Mowre, which is ſome 3 leagues behind, and thither would they come for that they ſtood in feare of the Portugals, and there we remained for the marchants that came out of the countrey which were come with their gold, but Anthonio don Luis his ſonne, and Pacheco were aboord the Minion. And the 25 in the morning came the two galies from the caſtle againe vnto vs, the weather being very calme, they ſhot at vs and hit vs 3 times, and ſhortly after the wind came from the ſhore, at which inſtant we diſcried the ſhip, & the carauell comming towards vs, then we weighed and ſet ſaile, and bare as neere vnto them as we could: but it was night or euer wee met with them, and the night being very darke we loſt them. The next day plying to the ſhore, at night we agreed to go with Cormantin, but the next morning being the 28 we were but a litle diſtant from the great ſhip and the 2 galies, hauing no wind at all, and the carauell hard aboord the ſhore. Then being calme, came the 2 galies rowing to the ſterne of the Minion, and fought with her the moſt part of the forenoone: and in the fight a miſchance hapned in the Minions ſteward-roome by means of a barrell of pouder that tooke fire, wherewith were hurt the maſter gunner, the ſteward, and moſt part of the gunners; which the galies perceiuing, began to be more fierce vpon them, and with one ſhot cut halfe her foremaſt in twaine, that without preſent remedie ſhee was not able to beare ſaile, and preſently vpon this the great ſhip ſent her boat to the galies, who ſuddenly departed from vs. And after their departure we went aboord the Minion to counſell what were beſt to be done, at which time they were ſore diſcomfited. Whereupon we deuiſed what was beſt to be done: and becauſe wee knew that the Negros neither would nor durſt traffike ſo long as the galies were on the coaſt; it was therefore agreed that we ſhould prepare our ſelues to depart to Rio de Seſtos, and ſo we departed that day. The 14 of May in the morning we fell with the land, and when wee came to it, we doubted what place it was, and ſent our boates on land to know the trueth, and we found it to be Rio de Barbos, which is to the Eaſtward of ſant Andre, and there remained in getting of water vntill the 21, where we loſt the day before 5 of our men by meanes of ouerthrowing our blacke pinnaſſe. The 22 we departed from thence to Rio de Seſto, where we arriued the 2 of Iune, and the 4 wee departed from Rio de Seſto, and arriued (God bee thanked) the 6 of Auguſt within ſight of the Stert in the Weſt part of England, our men being very ſicke and weake. We haue not at this preſent aboue 20 ſound men that are able to labour, and we haue of our men 21 dead, and many more very ſore hurt and ſicke. Maſter Burton hath bene ſicke this 6 weekes, and at this preſent (God ſtrengthen him) is ſo weake that I feare he will hardly eſcape. Herein incloſed your worſhip ſhall receiue a briefe of all the goods ſold by vs, & alſo what commodities we haue receiued for the ſame. Thus I leaue to trouble your worſhip, reſeruing all things els to our generall meeting, and to the bringer hereof. From aboord the Primeroſe the 6 of Auguſt 1563.

There are brought home this voiage An. 1563. Elephants teeth 166. weighing 1758 pounds. Graines 22 buts full.

A meeting at Sir VVilliam Gerards houſe the 11 of Iuly 1564. for the ſetting foorth of a voyage to Guinea, with the Minion of the Queens, the Iohn Baptiſt of London, and the Merline of M. Gonſon.

AT this meeting were theſe chiefe aduenturers, Sir William Gerard, ſir William Cheſter, ſir Thomas Lodge, Anthonie Hickman, and Edward Caſtelin. Where it was agreed that Francis Aſhbie ſhould be ſent to Depeford to M. Gonſon for his letters to Peter Pet to goe about the rigging of the Minion vpon the Queenes maieſties charges, and ſo the ſaid Francis to repaire with the ſame letters to Gillingham with money to ſupplie our charge there.

Alſo that euery one of the fiue partners ſhall foorthwith call vpon their partners to ſupply towards this new rigging and victualling, 29 li. 10 s. 6 d. for euery 100 li. value.

Alſo that euery one of the fiue partners ſhall foorthwith bring in 50 li. towards the furniture of the premiſſes.

Likewiſe it is agreed that if M. Gonſon giue his conſent that the Merline ſhall be brought about from Briſtoll to Hampton, that a letter be drawen whereunto his hand ſhall be, before order be giuen for the ſame.

The ſucceſſe of this Voiage in part appeareth by certaine briefe relations extracted out of the ſecond voyage of Sir Iohn Hawkins to the Weſt Indies, made in the ſayd yeere 1564. which I thought good to ſet downe for want of further inſtructions, which hitherto I could not by any meanes come by, albeit I haue vſed all poſſible indeuour for the obtaining of the ſame: Take them therefore in the meane ſeaſon as foloweth.

MAſter Iohn Hawkins, with the Ieſus of Lubeck a ſhip of 700. tunnes, and the Salomon, a ſhip of 7 ſcore, the Tiger a barke of 50, and the Swalow of 30 tunnes, being all well furniſhed with men to the number of one hundred threeſcore and ten, as alſo with ordinance and victuall requiſite for ſuch a voiage, departed out of Plimmouth the 18 day of October in the yeere of our Lord 1564. with a proſperous winde: at which departing, in cutting the foreſaile, a maruellous miſfortune happened to one of the officers in the ſhip, who by the pullie of the ſheat was ſlaine out of hand being a ſorowfull beginning to them all. And after their ſetting out 10 leagues to the Sea, hee met the ſame day with the Minion a ſhip of the Queens Maieſties, whereof was captaine Dauid Carlet, & alſo her conſort the Iohn Baptiſt of London being bound to Guinea likewiſe, who hailed one the other after the cuſtome of the ſea, with certaine pieces of ordinance for ioy of their meeting: which done, the Minion departed from him to ſeeke her other conſort the Merline of London, which was aſterne out of ſight, leauing in M. Hawkins companie the Iohn Baptiſt her other conſort.

The Minion of the Queene.

Thus ſailing forwards on their way with a proſperous wind vntil the 21 of the ſame moneth, at that time a great ſtorme aroſe, the wind being at Northeaſt about 9 of the clocke at night, and continued ſo 23 houres together, in which ſtorme M. Hawkins loſt the company of the Iohn Baptiſt aforeſaid, and of his pinnaſſe called the Swallow, the other 3 ſhips being ſore beaten with the ſtorme. The 23 day the Swalow, to his no ſmall reioiſing, came to him againe in the night 10 leagues to the Northward of Cape Finiſter, hauing put roomer and not being able to double the Cape, in that there roſe a contrary wind at Southweſt. The 25 the wind continuing contrary, he put into a place in Galicia called Ferol, where he remained 5 daies and appointed all the maſters of his ſhips an order for the keeping of good company.

The 26 day the Minion came in alſo where he was, for the reioycing whereof he gaue them certaine pieces of ordinance after the curteſie of the Sea for their welcome, but the Minions men had no mirth becauſe of their conſort the Merline, whō at their departure from M. Hawkins vpon the coaſt of England, they went to ſeeke, and hauing met with her, kept company two dayes together, and at laſt by miſfortune of fire (through the negligence of one of the gunners) the pouder in the gunners roome was ſet on fire, which with the firſt blaſt ſtroke out her poope, and therewithall loſt 3 men, beſides many ſore burned. (which eſcaped by the Brigandine being at her ſterne) and immediatly to the great loſſe of the owners, and moſt horrible ſight of the beholders, ſhe ſunke before their eies. The 30 day of the moneth M. Hawkins with his conſorts and company of the Minion hauing now both the Brigandines at her ſterne, weighed anker, and ſet ſaile on their voiage hauing a proſperous wind thereunto. The 4 of Nouember they had ſight of the Iland of Madera, and the 6 day of Teneriffa, which they thought to haue bene the Canarie, in that they ſuppoſed themſelues to haue bene to the Eaſtward of Teneriffa but were not: but the Minion beyng 3 or 4 leagues a head of vs kept on her courſe to Teneriffa, hauing better ſight thereof then the other had, and by that means they parted company.

The firing and ſinking of the Merline bound for Guinea.

The aforeſaid Sir Iohn Hawkins paſſing on his voiage by Cauo Verde, and Sierra Leona, and afterward croſſing ouer the maine Ocean comming to the towne of Burboroata vpon the coaſt of Terra firma in the Weſt Indies, had further information of the euill ſucceſſe of this Guinean voyage, as in the ſame hereafter is verbatim mentioned.

The 29 of April, we being at anker without the road, a French ſhip called the green Dragon of Newhauen, whereof was captaine one Bon Temps came in, who ſaluted vs after the maner of the ſea, with certaine pieces of ordinance, and we reſaluted him with the like againe: with whom hauing communication, he declared that hee had bene at the Mina in Guinea, and was beaten off by the Portugals gallies, and enforced to come thither to make ſale of ſuch wares as he had: and further that the like was hapned vnto the Minion: alſo, that captaine Dauid Carlet, & a marchant, with a dozen mariners were betraied by the Negros at their firſt arriuall thither, remaining priſoners with the Portugals, beſides other miſaduentures of the loſſe of their men hapned through the great lacke of freſh water, with great doubts of bringing home the ſhips: which was moſt ſorowfull for vs to vnderſtand.

The voyage of M. George Fenner to Guinie, and the Iſlands of Cape Verde, in the yeere 1566. with three ſhips, to wit, the Admirall called The Caſtle of Comfort, the May Flower, and the George, and a Pinnaſſe alſo:

Written by Walter Wren.

The 10 day of December, in the yeere aboueſayd, we departed from Plimmouth; and the 12 day we were thwart of Vſhant.

The 15 day in the morning being Sunday, wee had ſight of Cape Finiſter, and the ſame night we loſt the company of our Admirall, wherefore we ſayled along the coaſt of Portugall, hoping that our Admirall had bene before vs.

The 18 day we met with a French ſhip of whom wee made inquirie for our Admirall, but he could not tell vs newes of him: ſo we followed our courſe to the Ilands of the Canaries.

The 25 day in the morning we fell with a ſmall Iland called Porto Santo, & within 3 houres we had ſight of another Iland called Madera, which is 6 leagues from Porto Santo.

The ſaid 25 day being the day of the Natiuitie, we hoiſed out our boat, and fet maſter Edward Fenner captaine of the May Flower aboord vs, being in the George, with the maſter whoſe name was Robert Cortiſe and others of the ſayd ſhippe, and feaſted them with ſuch cheere as God had ſent vs.

The 28 day we fel with an Iland called Tenerif, which is 27 leagues from the ſaid Iland, and on the Eaſt ſide thereof we came to an anker in 40 fadome water, within a baſe ſhot of the ſhore, in a litle Baie wherein were 3 or 4 ſmall houſes: which Baie and houſes were diſtant from a litle towne called Santa Cruz, a league or thereabout, and as we rode in the ſaid Baie, we might ſee an Iland called The grand Canarie which was 6 or 7 leagues from vs.

The 29 day the May Flower for that ſhe could not fet into yͤ road where we were at an anker, by reaſon the wind was off the ſhore, & becauſe ſhe bare more roomer frõ the land then we did, in the morning came bearing in with the towne of Santa Cruz, thinking to come to an anker in the road againſt the towne, and before ſhe came within the reach of any of their ordinance, they ſhot at her foure pieces, which cauſed her to come roome with vs, and came at laſt to an anker by vs. And about one of the clocke in the after noone, the forenamed captaine of the May Flower wrote a letter a ſhore, directing it to the head officer of the towne of Santa Cruz, to the intent to vnderſtand the pretenſe of the ſhooting off the ſaid ordinance.

The letter being written, Robert Courtiſe maſter of the May Flower, and Walter Wren were appointed to deliuer the ſame a land at 3 or 4 houſes to bee conueied to the foreſayd towne, and ſo went with ſix men in the boate, and rowed to the ſhore as neere as they might, for ſetting the boat on ground, for the ſea went cruelly at the ſhore.

The people ſtood in number 30 perſons with ſuch armour as they had: the foreſayd Wren called to them in Spaniſh, declaring to thẽ that they had a letter which they would very gladly haue conueied vnto the towne, ſhewing that they would traffique with them as marchants, deſiring their helpe for the conueiance of the ſame letter. With that one of the Spaniards willed vs to come on land, and we ſhould be welcome, but doubting the worſt, the ſaid Walter anſwered them that they would not come on land, vntil they had anſwere of their letter which they had brought.

Whereupon one of the Spaniards vnraied himſelfe, and lept into the water, and ſwam to the boat, whom we receiued. And he ſaluted vs, and demaunded what our requeſt was: we made him anſwere, that by misfortune we loſt the companie of our Admirall, and being bound to this Iland to traffique for wines and other things neceſſary for vs, do here mind to ſtay vntill he come.

Concerning our letter he made vs anſwere, that he would with all diligence cary it, and deliuer it according to the direction, and ſo the ſaid Walter knit the letter in a bladder, and deliuered it vnto him, and alſo gaue him foure roials of Spaniſh money for his paines: and promiſing that we ſhould haue anſwere of it, he tooke his leaue and ſwamme againe on ſhore, where the people ſtood ready to receiue him. And after that they had talked with him, and vnderſtood our meaning, ſome of them threw vp their hats, & the other put them off holding them in their hands, and made vs very curteous ſignes, alwaies deſiring that the boat would come a land, but we reſaluting them rowed backe againe aboord.

The 30 day the Gouernours brother of Santa Cruz came aboord the May Flower with ſixe or ſeuen Spaniards with him, who concluded with the Captaine that we might come a ſhore and traffique with them, but that day we did not, for we had no ſufficient pledge of theirs for our aſſurance. Our Captaine entertained them well, and at their departure gaue them foure pieces of ordinance for a farewell, and beſtowed vpon them two cheeſes with other things.

The ſayd Gouernours brother promiſed our Captaine that hee ſhould haue ſufficient pledges the morrow folowing, which was not done, whereupon wee grew ſuſpicious, and went not that day a ſhore.

The firſt day of Ianuary our captaine ſent Nicholas Day and Iohn Sumpter a ſhore, who were very well entertained with as many of our company as went after them.

In the ſaid Iland is a marueilous high hill called the Pike, which is a far off more like a cloud in the aire, then any other thing: the hill is round and ſomewhat ſmall at the top, it hath not bene knowen that euer any man could goe vp to the top thereof. And although it ſtand in 28 degrees which is as hote in Ianuary, as it is in England at Midſommer, yet is the top of the ſaid hil Winter and Sommer ſeldome without ſnow.

In this Iland about two leagues from the ſaid Santa Cruz is a citie called Anagona.

The third day wee departed about the Weſterne point of the Iland, about 12 or 14 leagues from Santa Cruz, into a Baie which is right agaynſt the houſe of one Petro de Souſes, in which Baie we came to an anker the 5 day, where we heard that our Admirall had bene there at an anker 7 dayes before vs, and was gone thence to an Iland called Gomera, whereupon wee ſet ſaile preſently to ſeeke him.

They meet their Admirall againe.

The 6 day we came to an anker againſt the towne of Gomera, where we found our Admirall, which was very ioyfull of our comming, and we alſo of his ſight.

In the ſayd road we found Edward Cooke in a tall ſhip, and a ſhippe of the Copperſmiths of London, which the Portugals had trecherouſly ſurpriſed in the Baie of Santa Cruz, vpon the coaſt of Barbarie, which ſhip we left there all ſpoiled.

Our General & marchants bought in the ſaid towne for our prouiſion, 14 buts of wine, which coſt 15 duckats a but, which were offred vs at Santa Cruz in Tenerif for 8, 9, and 10 duckats.

The 9 day we departed from this road to another Baie, about 3 leagues off, and there tooke in freſh water: & ſo the 10 day we ſet ſaile towards Cape Blanke, which is on the coaſt of Guinea.

The 12 day we fell into a Baie to the Eaſtward of Cape Pargos, which is 35 leagues from Cape Blanke. But hauing no knowledge of that coaſt, we went with Cape Blanke, and at the fall of the land we ſounded and had 16 fadome water two leagues from the ſhore. The land is very lowe and white ſand. Upon the fall of the ſayd coaſt beware how you borow in 12 or 10 fadome, for within 2 or 3 caſts of the lead you may be on ground.

A good caueat.

The 17 day we ſet ſaile from Cape Blanke, directing our courſe South and by Eaſt, & South among, and ſo fell into a Baie to the Eaſtward of Cape Verde, about 16 leagues, and about ſixe leagues from the ſhore. The ſayd land ſeemed vnto vs as if it had bene a great number of ſhippes vnder ſaile, being in deed nothing els but the land which was full of Hammoks, ſome high ſome lowe, with high trees on them. We bare with the ſaid land till we were within 3 leagues of the ſhore, and then we ſounded, and found 28 fadome water, blacke oaſe. This day we ſaw much fiſh in ſundry ſculs ſwimming with their noſes with the brim of the water.

Cape Verde.

Paſſing along this coaſt we might ſee two ſmall round hils, ſeeming to vs about a league one from the other, which is the Cape, and betweene them are great ſtore of trees, and in all our dayes ſailing we ſaw no land ſo high as the ſaid two hils.

The 19 day we came to an anker at the Cape, in a roade faſt by the Weſtermoſt ſide of two hils in 10 fadome of water, where you may ride in fiue or ſixe fadome, for the ground is faire, and alwayes you ſhall haue the winde off the ſhore. And as ſoone as we were all at an anker, our Generall came aboord vs, and with him the maſter of the Admirall, whoſe name was William Bats, and with them the captaine of the Uiceadmirall, whoſe name was maſter Edward Fenner, and Robert Curtiſe the maſter, and dined aboord of vs being in the George, wherein was Captaine Iohn Heiwood, and Iohn Smith of Hampton maſter, and there we concluded to goe aland, which was halfe a mile from vs: and by the counſell of William Bats both Captaine and marchants and diuers of the companie went without armour: for he ſayd, that although the people were blacke and naked, yet they were ciuill: ſo that hee would needs giue the venter without the conſent of the reſt to go without weapon. Thus they rowed to ſhore, where, we being in the ſhippe might ſee a great companie of Negros naked, walking to and fro by the ſea ſide where the landing place was, waiting for the comming of our men, who came too ſoone, and landed to their loſſe as it fell out afterwards.

The fooliſh raſhnes of Wil. Bats perſwading the company to land vnarmed.

There went a ſhore the Admirals ſkiffe, and the May Flowers boate, and in them the number of 20 perſons or thereabouts, as M. George Fenner the Generall, his brother M. Fdward Fenner, Thomas Valentine, Iohn Worme and Francis Leigh marchants, Iohn Haward, William Bats, Nicholas Day, Iohn Tomſon and others.

At their comming to the ſhore there were 100 Negros or vpward, with their bowes and arrowes: our Captaines and merchants talked with them, & according to the vſe of the country, the one demanded pledges of the other, & they were content to deliuer 3 of their Negros for 5 of our men. Our 5 mens names were theſe, John Haward, Wil. Bats, Nich. Day, Ioh. Tomſon, & Iohn Curtiſe: theſe were deliuered them, and we receiued 3 Negros into our Admirals ſkiffe.

Ciuet, muſke, gold & graines, the commodities of Cape Verde.

Our men being a ſhore among the Negros, began to talke with them, declaring what ware and marchandize we had, as woollen cloth, linnen cloth, iron, cheeſe & other things. The Negros anſwered againe, they had ciuet, muſke, gold and graines, which pleaſed our captaines and marchants very well. Then the Negros deſired to haue a ſight of ſome of our wares, to the which our marchants were content, and forthwith ſent aboord one of the boats for part of their marchandiſe, and in the meane time while the boate went to the ſhip, our fiue men were walking on the ſhore with the Negros, and our Generall and marchants ſtaied in the other boat by the ſea ſide, hauing the 3 Negros with them.

Our boate then came againe and brought iron and other marchandize, with bread, wine, and cheeſe which they gaue vnto them. Then two of the Negros (which were the pledges) made themſelues ſicke, deſiring to goe a ſhore, promiſing to ſend other two for them. Captaine Haiward perceiuing that our men had let the Negros come a ſhore, asked what they meant, and doubting the worſt began to drawe toward the boate, and two or three of the Negros folowed him. And when hee came to the boate they began to ſtay him, and he made ſignes vnto them that hee would fetch them more drinke and bread: notwithſtanding, when he was entering into the boate, one of them caught him by the breeches and would haue ſtaied him, but hee ſprang from him and leapt into the boate, and as ſoone as hee was in, one of the Negros a ſhore beganne to blow a pipe, and preſently the other Negro that was in our boate ſitting on the boates ſide, and maſter Wormes ſword by him, ſuddenly drew the ſword out of the ſcabberd, and caſt himſelfe into the Sea and ſwamme a ſhore, and preſently the Negros laied handes on our men that were on ſhore, and tooke three of them with great violence, and tore all their apparell from their backes and left them nothing to couer them, and many of them ſhot ſo thicke at our men in our boates, that they could ſcarſe ſet hand to any Oare to rowe from the ſhore, yet (by the helpe of God) they got from them with their boates, although many of them were hurt with their poyſoned arrowes: and the poiſon is vncurable, if the arrow enter within the ſkin and drawe blood, and except the poiſon bee preſently ſuckt out, or the place where any man is hurt bee foorthwith cut away, hee dieth within foure dayes, and within three houres after they bee hurt or pricked, whereſoeuer it be, although but at the litle toe, yet it ſtriketh vp to the heart, and taketh away the ſtomacke, and cauſeth the partie maruellouſly to vomite, being able to brooke neither meat nor drinke.

The Negros trecherie.

The Negros hauing vſed our men with ſuch crueltie, whoſe names were Nicholas Day, William Bats, and Iohn Tomſon, led them away to a towne which was within a mile of the water ſide, or thereabout.

The 20 day we ſent to land a boate or ſkiffe wherein were eight perſons, and one of them was the foreſayd Iohn Tomſon and our interpreter which was a Frenchman, (for there was one of the Negros which ſpake good French:) and they caried with them two harquebuſſes, two targets and a mantell.

A French interpreter for Cape Verde.

The cauſe of ſending them was to learne what ranſome they demaunded for Bats and Day whom they detained. And when they came to the ſhore and told the Negros what they deſired, they went and fetched them from among the trees, and brought them looſe among fortie or fiftie of them. And being come within a ſtones caſt of the ſea ſide, William Bats brake from them, and ran as faſt as he could into the ſea towards the boat, and he was not ſo ſoone in the water but hee fell downe, either being out of breath or his foote failing him in the ſand being ſoft: ſo that the Negros came and fell on him and tooke him and haled him, that we thought they had torne him in pieces: for they tore againe all the apparell from his backe, ſo that ſome of them caried our men againe to the towne, and the reſt ſhot at vs with their poiſoned arrowes, and hurt one of our men called Androwes in the ſmal of the leg, who being come aboord, (for al that our Surgeons could do) we thought he would haue died.

The danger of poiſoned arrowes.

Our Generall (notwithſtanding all this villanie) ſent agayne to them, and offered them any thing that they deſired for the raunſome of our men, but they would not deliuer them: giuing vs this anſwere: That there was in the foreſayd roade, three weekes before wee came, an Engliſh ſhippe which had taken three of their people, and vntill wee did bring or ſend them againe, wee ſhould not haue our men although wee would giue our three ſhippes with their furniture.

The anſwere of the Negros.

The 21 day a French ſhippe of the burden of 80 tunnes (or thereabouts,) came to the place where we were, being bound to traffique at the Cape: we told them of the detaining of our two men by the Negros: and ſeeing that theſe Frenchmen were very well welcome to the Negros, we wiſhed them to ſee whether they could procure them againe of the Negros, and bring them along with them, and our Generall promiſed the Frenchmen 100 li. to obtaine them. So wee committed the matter to the Frenchmen and departed.

Of our men that were hurt by the Negros arrowes, foure died, and one to ſaue his life had his arme cut off. Androwes that was laſt of all hurt, lay lame not able to helpe himſelfe: onely two recouered of their hurts. So we placed other men in the roomes of thoſe that we loſt, and ſet ſaile.

The 26 day betweene Cape Verde and Bona viſta we ſawe many flying fiſhes of the bigneſſe of herrings, whereof two flew into our boat, which we towed at our ſterne.

Bona viſta.

The 28 day we fell with an Iland called Bona viſta, which is from Cape Verde 86 leagues. The Northſide of the ſayde Iland is full of white ſandie hils and dales, and ſomewhat high land.

The ſayd day wee came to an anker within the Weſtermoſt point, about a league within the point, and found in our ſounding faire ſand in ten fadome water, but you may goe neere till you be in fiue or ſix fadome, for the ground is faire.

As ſoone as we were at an anker, our Generall ſent his pinnaſſe a land, and found fiue or ſixe ſmall houſes, but the people were fled into the mountains: and the next day he ſent a ſhore againe, and met with two Portugals, who willingly went aboord with his men, and at their comming he welcommed them, although they were but poore & ſimple, and gaue each of them a paire of ſhoes, and ſo ſet them a ſhore againe.

The 30 day we weighed & ſailed into a Bay within a ſmal Iland about a league from vs, and tooke plentie of diuers ſortes of fiſhe. The foreſayd Iland lieth in ſixteene degrees. And if you meane to anker in the ſaid Bay, you may borow in foure or fiue fadome of the Southermoſt point of the ſayd Iland, which you may ſee when you ride in the road. But beware of the middle of the Baie, for there lieth a ledge of rocks, which at a lowe water breaketh, yet there is three fadome water ouer them.

A good admonition.

The laſt day of Januarie our Generall with certaine of his men went a ſhore in the Baie to the houſes, where he found 12 Portugals. In all the Iland there were not aboue 30 perſons, which were baniſhed men for a time, ſome for more yeeres, ſome for leſſe, and amongſt them there was one ſimple man which was their captaine.

Baniſhed Portugals.

They liue vpon goats fleſh, cocks, hennes, and freſh water: other victuals they haue none, ſauing fiſh, which they eſteeme not, neither haue they any boats to take them.

They reported that this Iland was giuen by the king of Portagall to one of his gentlemen, who hath let it foorth to rent for one hundreth duckats a yeere, which rent is reared onely in goats ſkinnes. For by their ſpeaches there hath bene ſent foorth of the ſayd Iland into Portugall 40000 ſkins in one yeere.

Great ſtore of goates.

We were to theſe men marueilouſly welcome, and to their powers very wel entertained, and they gaue vs the fleſh of as many hee-goates as wee would haue, and tooke much paines for vs in taking them, and bringing them from the mountains vpon their aſſes.

They haue there great ſtore of the oyle of Tortoiſes, which Tortoiſe is a fiſh which ſwimmeth in the Sea, with a ſhell on his backe as broad as a target. It raineth not in this Iland but in three moneths of the yeere, from the midſt of July to the midſt of October, and it is here alwayes very hote. Kine haue bene brought hither, but by reaſon of the heate and drought they haue died.

The 3 of February wee departed from this Iland, and the ſame day fell with another Iland called the Iland of Maiyo, which is 14 leagues from the other Iland: there is in the midſt of the way between theſe two Ilands a danger which is alwayes to be ſeene.

The Ile of Maiyo.

We ankred in the Northweſt ſide of the ſayd Ile in a faire Baie of eight fadomes water and faire ſand, but here we ſtaied not, but the fourth day weighed and ſailed to another Iland called S. Iago, which lieth off the ſaid Iland of Maiyo Eaſt and by South, and about fiue leagues one from the other. Being come within the Weſtermoſt point, we ſaw a faire road, and a ſmall towne by the water ſide, and alſo a fort or platforme by it: there we purpoſed to come to anker, and our marchants to make ſome ſale. But before we came within their ſhot, they let flie at vs two pieces, whereupon we went roomer and ſailed along the ſhore two or three leagues from the road, where we found a ſmall Baie and two or three ſmall houſes, where we came to an anker in 14 fadome faire ground.

S. Iago.

Within an houre after we had ankered we might ſee diuers horſemen and footmen on the land right againſt vs riding and running to and fro.

The next day being the fift of Februarie, a great companie of their horſemen and footemen appeared on the ſhoare ſide, vnto whom our Generall ſent to vnderſtande whether they would quietly trafike with them: And they ſent him worde againe, deſiring that they might ſpeake with him, promiſing that if he came to trafike as a marchant he ſhould be welcome, and alſo that he ſhould haue any thing that he or the marchants would with reaſon demaund.

When this anſwere was brought vnto our Generall he was very glad thereof and the whole companie, and preſently (with as much ſpeede as he could) he cauſed his boates to be made readie, but doubting the villanie of the Portugales, he armed his boates putting a double baſe in the head of his pinneſſe, and two ſingle baſes in the head of the Skiffe, and ſo ſent to the May-floure and the George, and willed them in like ſort to man their two boates.

These boates being thus manned and well appointed, our Generall entered into his Skiffe, and with the reſt rowed to the ſhoare where were threeſcore horſemen or more, and two hundreth footemen readie to receiue them. Our Generall marueiled that they came in ſo great a number and all armed, and therefore with a flagge of truce ſent to them to knowe their pleaſure: and they anſwered him with many faire promiſes and othes, that their pretence was all true, and that they meant like Gentlemen and Marchantes to trafike with him, declaring alſo that their Captaine was comming to ſpeake with him, and therefore deſired our Generall to come and ſpeake with him himſelfe.

With this anſwere the boate returned, and then our Generall cauſed his pinneſſe to rowe to them, and as he came neere the ſhoare they came in a great companie with much obeyſance, opening their hands and armes abroade, bowing themſelues with their bonnets off, with as much humble ſalutations outwardly as they might: earneſtly deſiring our Generall and Marchants to come on lande to them, whereunto he would not agree without ſufficient gages of Gentlemen and Marchants. At length they promiſed to ſende two gages to our Generals contentment, promiſing freſh water, victuall, money, or Negroes for ware, if it were ſuch as they liked; and therefore deſired our Generall and Marchants to ſende them a ſhoare in writing the quantitie of their wares, and the names of them: all which our Generall departed to performe, looking for their anſwere the morrowe following. And being gone a litle from the ſhoare, he cauſed his baſes, curriers, and harquebuſſes to be ſhot off, and our ſhips in like caſe ſhot off fiue or ſixe pieces of great ordinance, and ſo came aboord to prepare the note. The Portugales moſt of them departed, ſauing thoſe that were left to watch and to receiue the note, which about foure or fiue a clocke in the afternoone was ſent, and it was receiued. But all the purpoſes of the Portugals were villainouſly to betray vs (as ſhal appeare hereafter) although we meant in truth and honeſtie, friendly to trafike with them.

The treaſon of the Portugals in S. Iago to our men.

There was to the Weſtwards of vs and about two leagues from vs, a towne behinde a point faſt by the ſea ſide, where they had certaine Carauels or ſhippes and alſo two Brigandines, whereof they (with all the ſpeede that they might) made readie foure Carauels, and both the brigandines which were like two Gallies, and furniſhed them both with men and ordinance as much as they could carrie, and as ſoone as it was night, they came rowing and falling towardes vs: ſo that the land being high and the weather ſomewhat cloudie or myſtie, and they comming all the way cloſe vnder the ſhoare we could not ſee them till they were right againſt one of our ſhips called the May-floure.

By this time it was about one or two of the clocke in the morning, and the May-floure roade neerer them then the other two by a baſe ſhotte, ſo that they made a ſure account either to haue taken her or burnt her. In the meane time our men that had the watch (litle thinking of ſuch villanous treacheries after ſo many faire wordes) were ſinging and playing one with the other, and made ſuch a noyſe, that (being but a ſmall gale of winde, and riding neere the lande) they might heare vs from the ſhoare: ſo that we ſuppoſed that they made account that we had eſpyed them, which indeede we had not, neither had any one piece of ordinance primed, or any other thing in a readineſſe.

They came ſo neere vs that they were within gunſhot of vs, & then one of our men chanced to ſee a light, & then looking out ſpied the 4 ſhips, and ſuddenly cried out, Gallies, gallies, at which cry we were all amazed, and foorthwith they ſhot at vs all the great ordinance that they had, and their harquebuſſes, and curriers, and ſo lighted certaine troukes or pieces of wilde fire, and all of them with one voice (as well they on the ſhoare as they in the ſhippes) gaue a great ſhoute, and ſo continued hallowing with great noyſes, ſtill approching neerer and neerer vnto the May-floure. We (with all the ſpeede that we might) made readie one piece of ordinance and ſhotte at them, which cauſed them ſomewhat to ſtay, ſo they charged their ordinance and ſhot at vs freſhly againe, and while they ſhotte this ſecond time at vs, we had made readie three pieces which we ſhot at them, but they approched ſtill ſo neere, that at laſt we might haue ſhot a ſheafe arrow to them. Whereupon we hauing a gale of winde off the ſhoare hoyſed our foreſayle, and cut our cable at the hawſe, and went towarde our Admirall, and they continued following and ſhooting at vs, and ſometime at our Admirall, but our Admirall ſhotte one ſuch piece at them, that it made them to retire, and at length to warpe away like traiterous villaines, and although they thus ſuddenly ſhot all their ſhot at vs, yet they hurt neither man nor boy of ours, but what we did to them we know not.

The Iſle of Fuego.

But ſeeing the villanie of theſe men we thought it beſt to ſtay there no longer, but immediatly ſet ſayle towards an Iſland called Fuego, 12 leagues from the ſaid Iſland of S. Iago. At which Iſland of Fuego we came to an anker the 12 day of this moneth, againſt a white chappell in the Weſt end of the ſayd Iſland, within halfe a league of a litle towne, and within a league or thereabout of the vttermoſt point of the ſaid Iſland.

In this Iſland is a marueilleſous high hill which doth burne continually, and the inhabitants reported that about three yeeres paſt the whole Iſland was like to be burned with the abundance of fire that came out of it.

Mill.

About a league from the ſaid chappel to the Weſtward is a goodly ſpring of freſh water, where we had as much as we would. Wheate they haue none growing here, but a certaine ſeede that they call Mill, and certaine peaſon like Guinie peaſon, which Mill maketh good breade, but they haue here good ſtore of rother beaſts and goates. Their marchandize is cotton, which groweth there.

Cotton in Fuego.

The inhabitants are Portugals which haue cõmandement from the king to traffike neither with Engliſhmen nor Frenchmen for victuall or any other thing, except they be forced ſo to doe.

The Iſle of Braua.

There lieth off this Iſland another called Ilha Braua, which is not paſſing two leagues ouer, it hath good ſtore of goates and many trees, but there are not paſſing three or foure perſons dwelling in it.

They returne.
March.

The 25 day of February we departed towardes the Iſlands of Azores: and on the 23 day of March we had ſight of one of them called Flores, and then wee might ſee another Iſland to the Northward of it called Cueruo, lying two leagues or thereabouts off the other.

The 27 we came to an anker in Cueruo ouer againſt a village of about twelue ſimple houſes: but in the night by a gale of winde, which cauſed vs to drawe our anker after vs, we hoyſed ſayle and went to the aforeſayd Iſland of Flores, where we ſawe ſtrange ſtreames of water running downe from the high cliffes by reaſon of the great abundance of raine that had ſuddenly fallen.

The 29 day we came againe to Cueruo and caſt anker, but a ſtorme aroſe and continued ſeuen or eight houres together, ſo that we let ſlip a cable and anker, and after the ſtorme was alayed we came againe thinking to haue recouered the ſame, but the Portugals had either taken it, or ſpoiled it: the cable was new and neuer wet before, and both the cable and anker were better worth then 40 li. So that we accompt our ſelues much beholding to the honeſt Portugales.

Aprill.

The 18 day of Aprill we tooke in water at the Iſland of Flores, and hauing ankered, our cable was fretted in ſunder with a rocke and ſo burſt, where wee loſt that cable and anker alſo, and ſo departed to our coaſt.

Then wee ſet ſayle to an Iſlande named Faial, about the which lie three other Iſlands, the one called Pico, the other Saint George, and the other Gracioſa, which we had ſight of on the eight and twentieth day.

The 29 we came to an anker in the Southweſt ſide of Faial in a faire bay, and 22 fadom water againſt a litle towne where we had both freſh water and freſh victuall. In this Iſland by the report of the inhabitants there groweth certaine greene woad, which by their ſpeeches is farre better then the woad of S. Michael or of Tercera.

Woad.
May.

The 8 day of May we came to Tercera where we met with a Portugall ſhip, and being deſtitute of a cable and anker, our Generall cauſed vs to keepe her companie, to ſee if ſhe could conueniently ſpare vs any. The next morning we might ſee bearing with vs a great ſhippe and two Carauels, which we iudged to be of the king of Portugals Armada, and ſo they were, whereupon we prepared our ſelues for our defence. The ſaid ſhip was one of the kings Galliaſſes, about the burden of foure hundred tunnes, with about three hundred men in her, the ſhippe being well appointed with braſſe pieces both great and ſmall, and ſome of them ſo bigge that their ſhot was as great as a mans head, the other two Carauels were alſo very warlike and well appointed both with men and munition.

A Portugall Galiaſſe of 400 tunnes.

As ſoone as they were within ſhotte of vs, they waued vs amaine with their ſwords, we keeping our courſe, the greateſt ſhippe ſhot at vs freely and the carauell alſo, and we prepared our ſelues, and made all things cleare for our ſafegard as neere as we could. Then the great ſhippe ſhot at vs all her broad ſide, and her foure greateſt pieces that lay in her ſterne, and therewith hurt ſome of our men, and we did the beſt we could with our ſhot to requite it. At laſt two other Carauels came off the ſhoare, and two other pinneſſes full of men, and deliuered them aboord the great ſhippe, and ſo went backe againe with two men in a piece of them. The ſhip and the Carauell gaue vs the firſt day three fights, and when the night was come they left off ſhooting, yet notwithſtanding kept hard by vs all the night. In the meane time we had as much as wee could doe all the night to mende our ropes, and to ſtrengthen our bulwarkes, putting our truſt in God, and reſoluing our ſelues rather to die in our defence then to bee taken by ſuch wretches.

A fight betweene one English ſhip and 7 Portugals

The next day being the 10 of May in the morning, there were come to aide the ſaid Portugals foure great Armadas or Carauels more which made ſeuen, of which 4 three of them were at the leaſt 100 tunnes a piece, the other not ſo bigge, but all well appointed and full of men. All theſe together came bearing with vs being in our Admirall, and one of the great Carauels came to lay vs aboorde (as we iudged) for they had prepared their falſe nettings, and all things for that purpoſe, ſo that the Gallias came vp in our larboord ſide, and the Carauell in our ſtarboord ſide.

Our Captaine and Maſter perceiuing their pretence, cauſed our gunners to make all our ordinance readie with croſſebarres, chaineſhotte and haileſhot: ſo the ſhip and Carauell came vp; and as ſoone as they were right in our ſides, they ſhotte at vs as much ordinance as they could, thinking to haue layde vs preſently aboord: whereupon we gaue them ſuch a heate with both our ſides, that they were both glad to fall afterne of vs, & ſo pauſed the ſpace of two or three houres being a very ſmall gale of winde.

Then came vp the other fiue and ſhot all at vs, and ſo fell all afterne of vs, & then went to counſell together.

Then our ſmall barke named the George came to vs, and wee conferred together a great ſpace. And as the Portugall ſhippes and Carauels were comming to vs againe, our barke minding to fall afterne of vs and ſo to come vp againe, fell quickly vpon the lee, and by reaſon of the litle winde, it was ſo long before ſhe could fill her ſailes againe, that both the ſhippe and Carauels were come vp to vs, and ſhe falling in among them made reaſonable ſhift with them, but they got a head of her, ſo that ſhe could not fetch vs: then 5 of the Carauels followed her, but we ſaw ſhe defended her ſelfe againſt them all.

Then came the great ſhippe and the Carauell to vs, and fought with vs all that day with their ordinance.

The May-floure our other conſort being very good by the winde, tooke the benefite thereof and halde all that day cloſe by the winde, but could not come neere vs. So when night againe was come, they gaue ouer their fight and followed vs all the night.

In theſe many fights it could not otherwiſe be but needes ſome of our men muſt be ſlaine, (as they were indeede) and diuers hurt, and our tackle much ſpoyled: yet for all this we did our beſt indeuour to repaire all things, and to ſtand to it to the death with our aſſured truſt in the mercie and helpe of God.

This night the May-floure came vs to vs, and our Captaine tolde them his harmes and ſpoyles, and wiſhed them if they could ſpare halfe a doſen freſh men to hoyſe out their boate and ſende them to him, but they could not ſpare any, and ſo bare away againe. Which when our enemies ſawe in the next morning that we were one from another, they came vp to vs again and gaue vs a great fight with much hallowing and hooping, making accompt either to boorde vs or els to ſinke vs: but although our companie was but ſmall, yet leaſt they ſhould ſee vs any whit diſmayed, when they hallowed we hallowed alſo as faſt as they, and waued to them to come and boorde vs if they durſt, but that they would not, ſeeing vs ſtill ſo couragious: and hauing giuen vs that day foure fights, at night they forſooke vs with ſhame, as they came to vs at the firſt with pride.

The 7 Portugals depart with ſhame from one English ſhip.

They had made in our ſhip ſome leakes with their ſhot which we againe ſtopped with al ſpeed, and that being done, we tooke ſome reſt after our long labour and trouble.

The next day in the morning the May-floure came to vs, and brought vs ſixe men in her boate which did vs much pleaſure, and we ſent to them ſome of our hurt men.

Then we directed our courſe for our owne countrey, and by the ſecond day of Iune we were neere to our owne coaſt and ſounded being thwart the Lyzard.

Iune.

The third day we had ſight of a ſhippe which was a Portugall, who bare with vs, and at his comming to vs (the weather being calme) our Captaine cauſed him to hoyſe forth his boate to come aboord to ſpeake with him, and at their comming our Captaine and Marchants demanded of them what ware they had, and whither they were bound, and they made anſwere that their lading was ſugar and cotton. Then our Captaine and Marchants ſhewed them fiue Negroes that we had, and aſked them whether they would buy them, which they were very deſirous to doe, and agreed to giue for them 40 cheſts of ſugar, which cheſts were ſmall hauing not aboue 26 loaues in a piece: ſo they with their boate did fetch fiue of the cheſtes and deliuered them and went for more, and when they had laden their boate and were come againe, we might ſee bearing with vs a great ſhip and a ſmall, which our Captaine ſuppoſed to be men of warre or Rouers, and then willed the Portugales to carie their ſugar to their ſhip againe, purpoſing to make our ſelues readie for our defence. But the Portugales earneſtly intreated our Captaine not ſo to forſake them, and promiſed him (if he would ſafegard them) to giue him aboue the bargaine ten cheſts of ſugar: whereupon our Captaine was content, and the Portugall not being good of ſayle, we ſpared our topſayles for her; ſo at laſt the foreſaid ſhip bare with vs, and (ſeeing that we did not feare them) gaue vs ouer. And the next morning came two others bearing with vs, and ſeeing vs not about to flie a iot from them forſooke vs alſo.

A Portugall ſhip (notwithſtanding all their vilanies) defended by our men from Rouers.

The 5 day of Iune we had ſight of the Stert, and about noone we were thwart of the bay of Lime, and ſo ſounded and had 35 fadom water.

The ſixt day we came in at the Needles and ſo came to an anker vnder the Iſle of Wight at a place called Meadhole, and from thence ſayled to Southhampton where we made an ende of this voyage.

The Ambaſſage of M. Edmund Hogan, one of the ſworne Eſquires of her Maieſties perſon, from her Highneſſe to Mully Abdelmelech Emperour of Marocco, and king of Fes and Sus: in the yeere 1577, written by himſelfe.

I Edmund Hogan being appointed Ambaſſadour from the Queenes Maieſtie to the aboue named Emperour and King Mully Abdelmelech, departed with my company and ſeruants from London the two and twentie day of April 1577, being imbarked in the good ſhip called the Gallion of London, and arriued in Azafi a port of Barbarie the one and twentie day of May next following. Immediatly I ſent Leonell Edgerton a ſhoare with my letters directed to Iohn Williams and Iohn Bampton, who diſpatched a Trottero to Marocco to knowe the kings pleaſure for my repaire to the Court, which letters came to their hands on the Thurſday night.

M. Hogan his arriual at Azafi in Barbarie. May.

They with all ſpeede gaue the king vnderſtanding of it, who being glad thereof ſpeeded the next day certaine Captaines with ſouldiers and tents, with other prouiſion to Azafi: ſo that vpon Whitſunday at night the ſaid Captaines with Iohn Bampton, Robert Waſhborne, and Robert Lion, and the kings officers came late to Azafi.

In the meane time I remained aboord, and cauſed ſome of the goods to be diſcharged for lightning of the ſhippe, and I wrote in my letter that I would not lande, till I knewe the Kings pleaſure.

The 22 day being Saturday, the Make-ſpeede arriued in the roade about two of the clocke in the afternoone.

The 27 day, being Whitſunday, came aboord the Gallion Iohn Bampton, and others, giuing me to vnderſtande how much the King reioyced of my ſafe arriuall, comming from the Queenes Maieſtie, and how that for my ſafe conduct to the Court he had ſent foure Captaines and an hundred ſouldiers well appointed, with a horſe furniſhed which he vſed himſelfe to ride on with all other furniture accordingly: they wiſhed mee alſo to come on lande in the beſt order I could, as well for my ſelfe as my men, which I did, hauing to the number of tenne men, whereof three were trumpetters.

The ſhips being foure appointed themſelues in the beſt order they could for the beſt ſhew, and ſhot off all their ordinance to the value of twentie Markes in powder.

At my comming a ſhoare, I found all the ſouldiers well appointed on horſebacke, the Captaines and the Gouernour of the towne ſtanding as neere the water ſide as they could, with a Iennet of the kings, and receiued mee from the boate declaring how glad his Maieſtie was of my ſafe arriuall, comming from the Queenes Maieſtie my Miſtreſſe, and that hee had ſent them to attend vpon me, it being his pleaſure that I ſhould tarie there on ſhoare fiue or ſixe dayes for my refreſhing.

So being mounted vpon the Iennet, they conducted mee through the Towne into a faire fielde vpon the Sea-ſide where was a tent prouided for mee, and all the ground ſpread with Turkie carpets, and the Caſtle diſcharged a peale of ordinance, and all things neceſſarie were brought into my tent, where I both tooke my table and lodging, and had other conuenient tents for my ſeruants.

The ſouldiers enuironed the tents, and watched about vs day and night as long as I lay there, although I ſought my ſpeedier diſpatch.

On the Wedneſday towards night, I tooke my horſe and trauelled ten miles to the firſt place of water that we could finde, and there pitched our tents till the next morning, and ſo trauelled till ten of the clocke, and then pitched our tents till foure, and ſo trauelled as long as day light would ſuffer about 26 miles that day.

In Barbary they haue no Innes but they lodge in open fieldes where they can find water.

The next day being Friday I trauelled in like order but eight and twentie miles at the moſt, and by a Riuer being about ſixe miles within ſight of the Citie of Marocco we pitched our tents.

Immediatly after came all our Engliſh marchants, and the French on horſebacke to meete me, and before night there came an Alcayde from the king with fiftie men, & diuers mules laden with victuall and banket, for my ſupper, declaring vnto me how glad the king ſhewed himſelfe to heare of the Queenes Maieſtie, and that his pleaſure was I ſhould be receiued into his countrey as neuer any Chriſtian the like: and deſired to knowe what time the next day I would come into his citie, becauſe he would that all the Chriſtians as alſo his nobilitie ſhould meete me, and willed Iohn Bampton to be with him early in the morning, which he did.

The ſingular humanitie of the king to our Ambaſſadour.

About ſeuen of the clocke being accompanied with the French and Engliſh marchants, and a great number of ſouldiers, I paſſed towards the citie, and by that time I had trauelled 2 miles, there met me all the Chriſtians of the Spaniards and Portugals to receiue me, which I knowe was more by the kings commandement then of any good wils of themſelues: for ſome of them although they ſpeake me faire hung downe their heads like dogs, and eſpecially the Portugales, and I countenanced them accordingly.

The Spaniards and Portugales were cōmanded by the king in paine of death, to meete the Engliſh Ambaſſadour.

So I paſſed on till I came within two Engliſh miles of the Citie, and then Iohn Bampton returned, ſhewing me that the king was ſo glad of my comming, that hee could not deuiſe to doe too much, to ſhewe the good will that hee did owe to the Queenes Maieſtie, and her Realme.

His counſellers met me without the gates, and at the entrie of the gates, his footmen & guard were placed on both ſides of my horſe, and ſo brought me to the kings palace.

The king ſate in his chaire with his Counſell about him, as well the Moores as the Elchies, and according to his order giuen vnto me before, I there declared my meſſage in Spaniſh, and made deliuerie of the Queenes Maieſties letters, and all that I ſpake at that preſent in Spaniſh, hee cauſed one of his Elchies to declare the ſame to the Moores preſent, in the Larbe tongue.

Which done, he anſwered me againe in Spaniſh, yeelding to the Queenes Maieſtie great thankes, and offering himſelfe and his countrey to bee at her Graces commaundement, and then commaunded certaine of his Counſellers to conduct mee to my lodging, not being farre from the Court.

The houſe was faire after the faſhion of that countrey, being daily well furniſhed with al kind of victuall at the kings charge.

The ſame night he ſent for mee to the Court, and I had conference with him about the ſpace of two houres, where I throughly declared the charge committed vnto mee from her Maieſtie, finding him conformable, willing to pleaſure and not to vrge her Maieſtie with any demaundes, more then conueniently ſhee might willingly conſent vnto, hee knowing that out of his countrey the Realme of England might be better ſerued with lackes, then hee in compariſon from vs.

Further he gaue me to vnderſtand, that the king of Spaine had ſent vnto him for a licence, that an Ambaſſadour of his might come into his countrey, and had made great meanes that if the Queenes maieſty of England ſent any vnto him, that he would not giue him any credit or intertainment, albeit (ſaid he) I know what the king of Spaine is, and what the Queene of England and her Realme is: for I neither like of him nor of his religion, being ſo gouerned by the Inquiſition that he can doe nothing of himſelfe.

The king of Spaine ſought to diſgrace the Queene & her Ambaſſour.

Therefore when he commeth vpon the licence which I haue granted, he ſhall well ſee how litle account I will make of him and Spaine, and how greatly I will extoll you for the Queenes maieſtie of England.

He ſhall not come to my preſence as you haue done, and ſhall dayly: for I minde to accept of you as my companion and one of my houſe, whereas he ſhall attend twentie dayes after he hath done his meſſage.

After the end of this ſpeech I deliuered Sir Thomas Greſhams letters, when as he tooke me by the hand, and led me downe a long court to a palace where there ranne a faire fountaine of water, and there ſitting himſelfe in a chaire, he commanded me to ſit downe in another, and there called for ſuch ſimple Muſicians as he had.

The king of Barbarie ſent into England for Muſicians.

Then I preſented him with a great baſe Lute, which he moſt thankfully accepted, and then he was deſirous to heare of the Muſicians, and I tolde him that there was great care had to prouide them, and that I did not doubt but vpon my returne they ſhould come with the firſt ſhip. He is willing to giue them good intertainment with prouiſion of victuall, and to let them liue according to their law and conſcience wherein he vrgeth none to the contrary.

I finde him to be one that liueth greatly in the feare of God, being well exerciſed in the Scriptures, as well in the olde Teſtament as alſo in the New, and he beareth a greater affection to our Nation then to others becauſe of our religion, which forbiddeth worſhip of Idols, and the Moores called him the Chriſtian king.

A rich gift beſtowed vpon our Ambaſſadour.

The ſame night being the firſt of Iune, I continued with him till twelue of the clocke, and he ſeemed to haue ſo good liking of me, that he tooke from his girdle a ſhort dagger being ſet with 200 ſtones, rubies and turkies, and did beſtow it vpon me, and ſo I being conducted returned to my lodging for that time.

The next day becauſe he knew it to be Sunday & our Sabboth day he did let me reſt. But on the munday in the afternoone he ſent for me, and I had conference with him againe, and muſicke.

Likewiſe on the tueſday by three of the clocke he ſent for me into his garden, finding him layd vpon a ſilke bed complayning of a ſore leg: yet after long conference he walked into another Orchard, whereas hauing a faire banketting-houſe and a great water, and a new gallie in it, he went aboord the gallie and tooke me with him, and paſſed the ſpace of two or three houres, ſhewing the great experience he had in Gallies, wherein (as he ſaid) he had exerciſed himſelfe eighteene yeres in his youth.

After ſupper he ſhewed me his horſes and other commodities that he had about his houſe, and ſince that night I haue not ſeene him, for that he hath kept in with his ſore legge, but he hath ſent to me daily.

Iune.

The 13 of Iune at ſixe of the clocke at night I had againe audience of the king, and I continued with him till midnight, hauing debated as well for the Queenes commiſſion as for the well dealing with her marchants for their traffike here in theſe parts, ſaying, he would do much more for the Queenes maieſty and the Realme, offering that all Engliſh ſhips with her ſubiects may with good ſecuritie enter into his ports and dominions as well in trade of marcandize, as for victuall & water, as alſo in time of warre with any her enemies to bring in priſes and to make ſales as occaſion ſhould ſerue, or elſe to depart againe with them at their pleaſure.

The offers of the king to our Engliſh merchants.

Likewiſe for all Engliſh ſhips that ſhall paſſe along his coaſt of Barbarie, & thorow the ſtraites into the Leuant ſeas, that he would graunt ſafe conduct that the ſaid ſhips and marchants with their goods might paſſe into the Leuant ſeas, and ſo to the Turks dominions, and the king of Argiers, as his owne, and that he would write to the Turke and to the king of Argier his letters for the well vſing of our ſhips and goods.

Alſo that hereafter no Engliſhmen that by any meanes may be taken captiues, ſhall be ſolde within any of his dominions: whereupon I declared that the Queenes maieſty accepting of theſe his offers was pleaſed to confirme the intercourſe & trade of our marchants within this his countrey, as alſo to pleaſure him with ſuch commodities as he ſhould haue need of, to furniſh the neceſſities and wants of his countrey in trade of marchandize, ſo as he required nothing contrarie to her honour and law, and the breach of league with the Chriſtian princes her neighbours.

A good prouiſo.

The ſame night I preſented the king with the caſe of combes, and deſired his maieſtie to haue ſpecial regard that the ſhips might be laden backe againe, for that I found litle ſtore of ſalt-peter in readineſſe in Iohn Bamptons hands. He anſwered me that I ſhould haue all the aſſiſtance therein that he could, but that in Sus he thought to haue ſome ſtore in his houſe there, as alſo that the Mountayners had made much in a readineſſe: I requeſted that he would ſend downe, which he promiſed to doe.

The eighteene day I was with him againe and ſo continued there till night, and he ſhewed me his houſe with paſtime in ducking with water-Spaniels, and baiting buls with his Engliſh dogges.

At this time I mooued him againe for the ſending downe to Sus, which he granted to doe, and the 24. day there departed Alcayde Mammie, with Lionell Edgerton, and Rowland Guy to Sus, and caried with them for our accompts and his company the kings letters to his brother Muly Hammet, and Alcayde Shauan, and the Viceroy.

The 23. day the king ſent me out of Marocco to his garden called Shersbonare, with his gard, and Alcayde Mamoute, and the 24. at night I came to the court to ſee a Morris dance, and a play of his Elchies. He promiſed me audience the next day being Tueſday, but he put it off till Thurſday: and the Thurſday at night I was ſent for to the king after ſupper, and then he ſent Alcayde Rodwan, and Alcayde Gowry to conferre with me, but after a little talke I deſired to be brought to the King for my diſpatch. And being brought to him, I preferred two bils of Iohn Bamptons which he had made for prouiſion of Salt-peter: alſo two bils for the quiet traffique of our Engliſh Marchants, and bils for ſugars to be made by the Iewes, as well for the debts paſt, as hereafter, and for good order in the Ingenios. Alſo I mooued him againe for the Salt-peter, and other diſpatches, which he referred to be agreed vpon by the two Alcaydes. But the Friday being the 20. the Alcaydes could not intend it, and vpon Saturday Alcayde Rodwan fell ſicke, ſo on Sunday we made meanes to the King, and that afternoone I was ſent for to conferre vpon the bargaine with the Alcaydes and others, but did not agree.

Upon Tueſday I wrote a letter to the King for my diſpatch, and the ſame afternoone I was called againe to the Court, and referred all things to the King, accepting his offer of Salt-peter.

That night againe the King had me into his Gallie, and the Spaniels did hunt the ducke.

The Thurſday I was appointed to way the 300. kintals groſſe of Salt-peter, and that afternoone the Tabybe came vnto mee to my lodging, ſhewing mee that the king was offended with Iohn Bampton for diuers cauſes.

The Sunday night late being the 7. of Iuly, I got the King to forgiue all to Iohn Bampton, and the King promiſed me to ſpeake againe with me vpon Munday.

Upon Tueſday I wrote to him againe for my diſpatch, and then hee ſent Fray Lewes to mee, and ſaid that he had order to write.

Upon Wedneſday I wrote againe, and he ſent me word that vpon Thurſday I ſhould come and be diſpatched, ſo that I ſhould depart vpon Friday without faile, being the twelfth of Iuly.

So the friday after according to the kings order & appointment I went to the court, & whereas motion and petition was made for the confirmation of the demaunds which I had preferred, they were all granted, and likewiſe the priuileges which were on the behalfe of our Engliſh marchants requeſted, were with great fauour and readineſſe yeelded vnto. And whereas the Iewes there reſident were to our men in certaine round ſummes indebted, the Emperors pleaſure and commandement was, that they ſhould without further excuſe or delay, pay and diſcharge the ſame. And thus at length I was diſmiſſed with great honour and ſpeciall countenance, ſuch as hath not ordinarily bene ſhewed to other Ambaſſadors of the Chriſtians.

The Emperor of Maroco his priuileges to the Engliſh.

And touching the priuate affaires intreated vpon betwixt her Maieſtie and the Emperour, I had letters from him to ſatiſfie her highneſſe therein. So to conclude, hauing receiued the like honourable conduct from his Court, as I had for my part at my firſt landing, I embarked my ſelfe with my foreſaid company, and arriuing not long after in England, I repaired to her Maieſties court, & ended my Ambaſſage to her highneſſe good liking, with relation of my ſeruice performed.

The voyage of Thomas Stukeley, wrongfully called Marques of Ireland, into Barbary 1578. Written by Iohannes Thomas Freigius in Hiſtoria de cæde Sebaſtiani Regis Luſitaniæ.

VEnerant autem ad regem etiam ſexcenti Itali, quos Papa ſubminiſtrarat, Comiti Irlandiæ: qui cum Vliſſiponem tribus inſtructis nauibus appuliſſet Regi operam ſuam condixit, eumque in bellum ſequi promiſit. Cap. 7.

Totum exercitum diuiſit in quatuor acies quadratas: In dextro latere primum agmen erat Velitum & militum Tingitanorum, eoſque ducebat Aluarus Pereſius de Tauara: ſiniſtram aciem ſeu mediam tenebant Germani & Itali, quibus imperabat Marchio Irlandiæ. &c. Cap. 11.

Inter nobiles qui in hoc pręlio ceciderunt, fuerunt, pręter regem Sebaſtianum, dux de Auero, Epiſcopi Conimbricenſis & Portuenſis, Commiſſarius generalis à Papa miſſus Marchio Irlandiæ, Chriſtophorus de Tauora, & plures alij. Cap. 13.

The ſame in Engliſh.

There came alſo to Don Sebaſtian the King of Portugal 600. Italians, whom the Pope ſent vnder the conduct of the *Marques of Irland: who being arriued at Liſbone with three tall ſhips, ſhips, proffered his ſeruice to the king, and promiſed to attend vpon him in the warres, &c.

Thomas Stukeley was wrongfully indued with this title.

He diuided the whole Armie into 4. ſquadrons: vpon the right wing ſtood the firſt ſquadron, conſiſting of men lightly armed or ſkirmiſhers and of the ſouldiers of Tangier, Generall of whom was Don Aluaro Perez de Tauara: the left or midle ſquadron conſiſted of Germanes and Italians, vnder the command of the Marques of Irland, &c. cap. 7.

Of Noblemen were ſlaine in this battell (beſides Don Sebaſtian the king) the duke de Auero, the two biſhops of Coimbra & of Porto, the Marques of Irland ſent by the Pope as his Commiſſary generall, Chriſtopher de Tauara, and many others. cap. 13.

IT is further alſo to be remembred, that diuers other Engliſh gentlemen were in this battell, whereof the moſt part were ſlaine; and among others M. Chriſtopher Lyſter was taken captiue, and was there long detained in miſerable ſeruitude. Which gentleman although at length he happily eſcaped the cruel hands of the Moores; yet returning home into England, and for his manifold good parts being in the yeere 1586. employed by the honourable the Earle of Cumberland, in a voyage intended by the Streights of Magellan for the South ſea, as Viceadmirall, (wherein he ſhewed ſingular reſolution and courage) and appointed afterward in diuers places of ſpeciall command and credite, was laſt of all miſerably drowned in a great and rich Spaniſh prize vpon the coaſt of Cornwall.

Certaine reports of the prouince of China learned through the Portugals there impriſoned, and chiefly by the relation of Galeotto Perera, a Gentleman of good credit, that lay priſoner in that Countrey many yeeres. Done out of Italian into Engliſh by Richard Willes.

Fuquien. THis land of China is parted into 13. Shires, the which ſometimes were ech one a kingdome by it ſelfe, but theſe many yeeres they haue bene all ſubiect vnto one King. Fuquien is made by the Portugals the firſt Shire, becauſe there their troubles began, & they had occaſion thereby to know the reſt. In this ſhire be 8. cities, but one principally more famous then others called Fuquico, the other ſeuen are reaſonably great, the beſt knowen whereof vnto the Portugals is Cinceo, in reſpect of a certaine hauen ioyning thereunto, whither in time paſt they were wont for marchandiſe to reſort. Cinceo.

Cantan. Cantan is the ſecond ſhire, not ſo great in quantitie, as well accompted of, both by the king thereof, and alſo by the Portugals, for that it lieth neerer vnto Malacca then any other part of China, and was firſt diſcried by the Portugals before any other ſhire in that prouince: this ſhire hath in it ſeuen Cities.

Chequeam. Chequeam is the third ſhire, the chiefeſt Citie therein is Donchion, therein alſo ſtandeth Liampo, with other 13. or 14. boroughes: countrey townes therin are too too many to be ſpoken of.

Xuciamſu. The fourth ſhire is called Xuciamſu, the principall Citie thereof is great Pachin, where the King is alwayes reſident. In it are fifteene other very great Cities: of other townes therein, and boroughes well walled and trenched about, I wil ſay nothing.

Chelim. The fift ſhire hath name Chelim: the great Citie Nanquin chiefe of other fifteene cities was herein of ancient time the royall ſeat of the Chiniſh kings. From this ſhire, & from the aforeſaid Chequeam forward bare rule the other kings, vntil the whole region became one kingdome.

Quianci. or, Quinzi. The 6. ſhire beareth the name Quianci, as alſo the principal City thereof, wherein the fine clay to make veſſels is wrought. The Portugals being ignorant of this Countrey, and finding great abundance of that fine clay to be ſolde at Liampo, and that very good cheape, thought at the firſt that it had bene made there, howbeit in fine they perceiued that the ſtanding of Quinzi more neere vnto Liampo then to Cinceo or Cantan was the cauſe of ſo much fine clay at Liampo: within the compaſſe of Quinci ſhire be other 12. cities.

The 7. ſhire is Quicin, the 8. Quanſi, the 9. Conſu, the 10. Vrnan, the 11. Sichiua. In the firſt hereof there be 16. Cities, in the next 15: how many Townes the other 3. haue, wee are ignorant as yet, as alſo of the proper names of the 12. and 13. ſhires, and the townes therein.

This finally may be generally ſaid hereof, that the greater ſhires in China-prouince may bee compared with mightie kingdomes.

In eche one of theſe ſhires bee ſet Ponchiaſſini and Anchiaſſini, before whom are handled the matters of other Cities. There is alſo placed in ech one a Tutan, as you would ſay, a gouernour, and a Chian, that is a viſiter, as it were: whoſe office is to goe in circuit, and to ſee iuſtice exactly done. By theſe meanes ſo vprightly things are ordered there, that it may be worthily accompted one of the beſt gouerned prouinces in all the world.

Pachin. The king maketh alwayes his abode in the great city Pachin, as much to ſay in our language, as by the name thereof I am aduertiſed, the towne of the kingdome. This kingdome is ſo large, that vnder fiue monethes you are not able to trauaile from the Townes by the Sea ſide to the Court, and backe againe, no not vnder three monethes in poſte at your vrgent buſineſſe. The poſt-horſes in this Countrey are litle of body, but ſwift of foote. Many doe trauelle the greater part of this iourney by water in certaine light barkes, for the multitude of Riuers commodious for paſſage from one Citie to another.

Their monethes.

The King, notwithſtanding the hugeneſſe of his kingdome, hath ſuch a care thereof, that euery Moone (for by the Moones they reckon their monethes) he is aduertiſed fully of whatſoeuer thing happeneth therein, by theſe meanes following.

The whole prouince being diuided into ſhires, and ech ſhire hauing in it one chiefe and principall Citie, whereunto the matters of all the other Cities, Townes and boroughes, are brought, there are drawen in euery chiefe Citie aforeſaid intelligences of ſuch things as doe monethly fall out, and be ſent in writing to the Court. If happely in one moneth euery Poſt be not able to goe ſo long a way, yet doeth there notwithſtanding once euery moneth arriue one Poſte out of the ſhire. Who ſo cōmeth before the new moone ſtayeth for the deliuery of his letters vntil the moone be changed. Then likewiſe are diſpatched other Poſts backe into all the 13. ſhires againe.

Before that we doe come to Cinceo wee haue to paſſe through many places, and ſome of great importance. For this Countrey is ſo well inhabited neere the Sea ſide, that you cannot goe one mile but you ſhal ſee ſome Towne, borough or hoſtry, the which are ſo aboundatly prouided of all things, that in the Cities and townes they liue ciuily. Neuertheleſſe ſuch as dwel abroade are very poore, for the multitude of them euery where is ſo great, that out of a tree you ſhall ſee many times ſwarme a number of children, where a man would not haue thought to haue found any one at all.

From theſe places in number infinite, you ſhall come vnto two Cities very populous, and, being compared with Cinceo, not poſſibly to be diſcerned which is the greater of them. Theſe cities are as well walled as any Cities in all the world. As you come in to either of them, there ſtandeth ſo great and mighty a bridge, that the like thereof I haue neuer ſeene in Portugal nor elſe where. I heard one of my fellowes ſay, that hee tolde in one bridge 40. arches. The occaſion wherefore theſe bridges are made ſo great is, for that the Countrey is toward the ſea very plaine and low, and ouerflowed euer as the ſea water encreaſeth. The breadth of the bridges, although it bee well proportioned vnto the length thereof, yet are they equally built, no higher in the middle then at either ende, in ſuch wiſe that you may ſee directly from the one ende to the other: the ſides are wonderfully well engrauen after the maner of Rome-workes. But that we did moſt marueile at was therewithall the hugeneſſe of the ſtones, the like whereof, as we came in to the Citie, we did ſee many ſet vp in places diſ-habited by the way, to no ſmall charges of theirs, howbeit to little purpoſe, whereas no body ſeeth them but ſuch as doe come by. The arches are not made after our faſhion, vauted with ſundry ſtones ſet together: but paued, as it were, whole ſtones reaching from one piller to an other, in ſuch wiſe that they lye both for the arches heads, and galantly ſerue alſo for the high way. I haue bene aſtonied to beholde the hugeneſſe of the aforeſaid ſtones: ſome of them are xii. paſes long and vpward, the leaſt 11. good paſes long, and an halfe.

The wayes ech where are galantly paued with foureſquare ſtone, except it be where for want of ſtone they vſe to lay bricke: in this voyage wee trauailed ouer certaine hilles, where the wayes were pitched, and in many places no worſe paued then in the plaine ground. This cauſeth vs to thinke, that in all the world there bee no better workemen for buildings, then the inhabitants of China. The Countrey is ſo well inhabited, that no one foote of ground is left vntilled: ſmall ſtore of cattell haue we ſeene this day, we ſaw onely certaine oxen wherewithall the countreymen do plow their ground. One oxe draweth the plough alone, not onely in this ſhire, but in other places alſo, wherein is greater ſtore of cattell. Theſe countreymen by arte do that in tillage, which we are conſtrained to doe by force. Here be ſolde the voydings of cloſe ſtooles, although there wanteth not the dung of beaſtes: and the excrements of man are good marchandiſe throughout all China. The dungfermers ſeek in euery ſtreete by exchange to buy this durtie ware for herbs and wood. The cuſtome is very good for keeping the Citie cleane. There is great aboundance of hennes, geeſe, duckes, ſwine, and goates, wethers haue they none: the hennes are ſolde by weight, and ſo are all other things. Two pound of hennes fleſh, geeſe, or ducke, is worth two foi of their money, that is, v. ob. ſterling. Swines fleſh is ſold at a penie the pound. Beefe beareth the ſame price, for the ſcarcitie thereof, howbeit Northward from Fuquieo and farther off from the ſea-coaſt, there is beefe more plentie and ſolde better cheape. We haue had in all the Cities we paſſed through, great abundance of all theſe victuals, beefe onely excepted. And if this Countrey were like vnto India, the inhabitants whereof eate neither henne, beefe, nor porke, but keepe that onely for the Portugals and Moores, they would be ſold here for nothing. But it ſo falling out, that the Chineans are the greateſt eaters in all the world, they do feed vpon all things, ſpecially on porke, which, the fatter it is, is vnto them the leſſe lothſome. The higheſt price of theſe things aforeſaid I haue ſet downe, better cheape ſhal you ſometimes buy them for the great plentie thereof in this countrey. Frogs are ſolde at the ſame price that is made of hennes, and are good meate amongſt them, as alſo dogs, cats, rats, ſnakes, and all other vncleane meates.

The Cities be very gallant, ſpecially neere vnto the gates, the which are marueilouſly great, and couered with iron. The gatehouſes are built on high with towers, & the lower part thereof is made of bricke & ſtone, proportionally with the walls, from the walls vpward the building is of timber, and many ſtories in it one aboue the other. The ſtrength of their townes is in the mightie walles and ditches, artillerie haue they none.

The ſtreetes in Cinceo, and in all the reſt of the Cities we haue ſeene are very faire, ſo large and ſo ſtraight, that it is wonderfull to behold. Their houſes are built with timber, the foundations onely excepted, the which are layd with ſtone: in ech ſide of the ſtreetes are pentiſes or continuall porches for the marchants to walke vnder: the breadth of the ſtreets is neuertheleſſe ſuch, that in them 15. men may ride commodiouſly ſide by ſide. As they ride they muſt needs paſſe vnder many high arches of triumph that croſſe ouer the ſtreetes made of timber, and carued diuerſly, couered with tiles of fine clay: vnder theſe arches the Mercers do vtter their ſmaller wares, & ſuch as liſt to ſtand there are defended from raine and the heate of the Sunne. The greater gentlemen haue theſe arches at their doores: although ſome of them be not ſo mightily built as the reſt.

Louteas. I ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake of a certaine order of gentlemen that are called Louteas. I wil firſt therefore expound what this word ſignifieth. Loutea is as much to ſay in our language as Sir, and when any of them calleth his name, he anſwereth Sir: and as we do ſay, that the king hath made ſome gentleman, ſo ſay they, that there is made a Loutea. And for that amongſt them the degrees are diuers both in name and office, I will tell you onely of ſome principals, being not able to aduertiſe you of all.

The maner how gentlemen are created Louteas, and do come to that honour and title, is by the giuing of a broad girdle, not like to the reſt, and a cap, at the commaundement of the king. The name Loutea is more generall & common vnto mo, then the equalitie of honour thereby ſignified agreeth withall. Such Louteas as doe ſerue their prince in weightie matters for iuſtice, are created after trial made of their learning: but the other which ſerue in ſmaller affaires, as Captaines, conſtables, ſergeants by land and ſea, receiuers and ſuch like, whereof there be in euery citie, as alſo in this, very many, are made for fauour: the chiefe Louteas are ſerued kneeling.

The whole prouince of China is diuided, as I haue ſaid, into 13. ſhires, in euery ſhire at the leaſt is one gouernour called there Tutan, in ſome ſhires there be two.

Chian, or, Chaen. Chiefe in office next vnto them be certaine other named Chians, that is, high Commiſſioners as you would ſay, or viſiters, with full authoritie in ſuch wiſe, that they doe call vnto an accompt the Tutans themſelues, but their authoritie laſteth not in any ſhire longer then one yere. Neuertheleſſe in euery ſhire being at the leaſt 7. cities, yea, in ſome of them 15. or 16. beſide other boroughes and townes not well to be numbred, theſe viſiters where they come are ſo honoured and feared, as though they were ſome great princes. At the yeres end, their circuit done, they come vnto that Citie which is chiefe of others in the ſhire, to do iuſtice there: finally buſying themſelues in the ſearching out of ſuch as are to receiue the order of Louteas, whereof more ſhalbe ſaid in another place.

Ponchiaſſi. Ouer and beſides theſe officers, in the cheife City of ech one of theſe aforeſaid 13. prouinces, is reſident one Ponchiaſſi, Captaine thereof, and treaſurer of all the kings reuenues. This Magiſtrate maketh his abode in one of the foure greateſt houſes that be in all theſe head Cities. And although the principall part of his function be to be Captaine, to be treaſourer of the reuenues in that prouince, & to ſend theſe reuenues at appointed times to the Court: yet hath he notwithſtanding by his office alſo to meddle with matters appertaining vnto iuſtice.

Anchiaſſi, or, Henſi. In the ſecond great houſe dwelleth an other Magiſtrate called Anchiaſſi, a great officer alſo, for he hath dealings in all matters of iuſtice. Who although he be ſomewhat inferior in dignitie vnto the Ponchiaſſi, yet for his great dealings and generall charge of iuſtice, whoſoeuer ſeeth the affaires of the one houſe and the other might iudge this Anchiaſſi to be the greater.

Tuzi, Tuzi, an other officer ſo called, lieth in the thirde houſe, a magiſtrate of importance, ſpecially in things belonging vnto warfare, for thereof hath he charge.

Taiſſu, There is reſident in the 4. houſe a fourth officer, bearing name Taiſſu. In this houſe is the principall priſon of all the Citie. Ech one of theſe Magiſtrates aforeſaide may both lay euill doers in priſon, & deliuer them out againe, except ẏ fact be heinous & of importance: in ſuch a caſe they can do nothing, except they do meet al together. And if the deed deſerueth death, all they together cannot determine thereof, without recourſe made vnto the Chian whereſoeuer hee be, or to the Tutan: and eftſoones it falleth out, that the caſe is referred vnto higher power. In all Cities, not onely chiefe in ech ſhire, but in the reſt alſo, are meanes found to make Louteas. Many of them do ſtudy at the prince his charges, wherefore at the yeeres ende they reſort vnto the head Cities, whither the Chians doe come, as it hath bene earſt ſaide, as well to giue theſe degrees, as to ſit in iudgement ouer the priſoners.

The Chians go in circuit euery yere, but ſuch as are to be choſen to the greateſt offices meete not but from three yeeres to three yeeres, and that in certaine large halles appointed for them to be examined in. Many things are aſked them, whereunto if they doe anſwere accordingly, and be found ſufficient to take their degree, the Chian by and by granteth it them: but the Cap and girdle, whereby they are knowen to be Louteas, they weare not before that they be confirmed by the king. Their examination done, and triall made of them, ſuch as haue taken their degree wont to be giuen them with all ceremonies, vſe to banquet and feaſt many dayes together (as the Chineans faſhion is to ende all their pleaſures with eating and drinking) and ſo remaine choſen to do the king ſeruice in matters of learning. The other examinates founde inſufficient to proceed are ſent backe to their ſtudie againe. Whoſe ignorance is perceiued to come of negligence and default, ſuch a one is whipped, and ſometimes ſent to priſon, where lying that yeere when this kinde of acte was, we found many thus puniſhed, and demaunding the cauſe thereof, they ſaide it was for that they knew not how to anſwere vnto certaine things aſked them. It is a world to ſee how theſe Louteas are ſerued and feared, in ſuch wiſe, that in publike aſſemblies at one ſhrike they giue, all the ſeruitors belonging vnto iuſtice tremble thereat. At their being in theſe places, when they liſt to mooue, be it but euen to the gate, theſe ſeruitors doe take them vp, and carry them in ſeates of beaten gold. After this ſort are they borne when they goe in the City, either for their owne buſineſſe abroade, or to ſee ech other at home. For the dignitie they haue, and office they doe beare, they be all accompanied: the very meaneſt of them all that goeth in theſe ſeates is vſhered by two men at the leaſt, that cry vnto the people to giue place, howbeit they neede it not, for that reuerence the common people haue vnto them. They haue alſo in their company certaine Sergeants with their Maces either ſiluered or altogether ſiluer, ſome two, ſome foure, other ſixe, other eight, conueniently for ech one his degree. The more principal and chiefe Louteas haue going orderly before theſe Sergeants, many other with ſtaues, and a great many catchpoules with rods of Indiſh canes dragged on the ground, ſo that the ſtreets being paued, you may heare afarre off as well the noyſe of the rods, as the voyce of the criers. Theſe fellowes ſerue alſo to apprehend others, and the better to be knowen they weare liuery red girdles, and in their caps peacocks feathers. Behinde theſe Louteas come ſuch as doe beare certaine tables hanged at ſtaues endes, wherein is written in ſiluer letters, the name, degree, and office of that Loutea, whom they follow. In like maner they haue borne after them hattes agreeable vnto their titles: if the Loutea be meane, then hath he brought after him but one hat, and that may not be yealowe: but if he be of the better ſort, then may he haue two, three, or foure: the principall and chiefe Louteas may haue all their hats yealow, the which among them is accompted great honour. The Loutea for warres, although he be but meane, may notwithſtanding haue yealow hats. The Tutans and Chians, when they goe abroad, haue beſides all this before them ledde three or foure horſes with their guard in armour.

Licentiates.

Doctors.

Furthermore the Louteas, yea and all the people of China, are wont to eate their meate ſitting on ſtooles at high tables as we doe, and that very cleanely, although they vſe neither table-clothes nor napkins. Whatſoeuer is ſet downe vpon the boord is firſt carued before that it be brought in: they feede with two ſticks, refraining from touching their meate with their hands, euen as we do with forkes: for the which reſpect they leſſe do neede any table clothes. Ne is the nation only ciuill at meate, but alſo in conuerſation, and in courteſie they ſeeme to exceede all other. Likewiſe in their dealings after their maner they are ſo ready, that they farre paſſe all other Gentiles and Moores: the greater ſtates are ſo vaine, that they line their clothes with the beſt ſilke that may be found. The Louteas are an idle generation, without all maner of exerciſes and paſtimes, except it be eating and drinking. Sometimes they walke abroad in the fields to make the ſouldiers ſhoot at pricks with their bowes, but their eating paſſeth: they will ſtand eating euen when the other do draw to ſhoot. The pricke is a great blanket ſpread on certaine long poles, he that ſtriketh it, hath of the beſt man there ſtanding a piece of crimſon Taffata, the which is knit about his head: in this ſort the winners be honoured, and the Louteas with their bellies full returne home againe. The inhabitants of China be very great Idolaters, all generally doe worſhip the heauens: and, as wee are wont to ſay, God knoweth it: ſo ſay they at euery word, Tien Tautee, that is to ſay, The heauens doe know it. Some doe worſhip the Sonne, and ſome the Moone, as they thinke good, for none are bound more to one then to another. In their temples, the which they do call Meani, they haue a great altar in the ſame place as we haue, true it is that one may goe round about it. There ſet they vp the image of a certaine Loutea of that countrey, whom they haue in great reuerence for certaine notable things he did. At the right hand ſtandeth the diuel much more vgly painted then we doe vſe to ſet him out, whereunto great homage is done by ſuch as come into the temple to aſke counſell, or to draw lottes: this opinion they haue of him, that he is malicious and able to do euil. If you aſke them what they do thinke of the ſoules departed, they will anſwere that they be immortall, and that as ſoone as any one departeth out of this life, he becommeth a diuel if hee haue liued well in this world, if otherwiſe, that the ſame diuel changeth him into a buffe, oxe, or dogge. Wherefore to this diuel they doe much honour, to him doe they ſacrifice, praying him that he will make them like vnto himſelfe, and not like other beaſtes. They haue moreouer another ſort of temples, wherein both vpon the altars and alſo on the walls do ſtand many idols well proportioned, but bare headed: theſe beare name Omithoſon, accompted of them ſpirits, but ſuch as in heauen do neither good nor euill, thought to be ſuch men and women as haue chaſtly liued in this world in abſtinence from fiſh and fleſh, fed onely with riſe and ſalates. Of that diuel they make ſome accompt: for theſe ſpirits they care litle or nothing at all. Againe they holde opinion that if a man do well in this life, the heauens will giue him many temporall bleſſings, but if he doe euil, then ſhall he haue infirmities, diſeaſes, troubles, and penurie, and all this without any knowledge of God. Finally, this people knoweth no other thing then to liue and die, yet becauſe they be reaſonable creatures, all ſeemed good vnto them we ſpeake in our language, though it were not very ſufficient: our maner of praying eſpecially pleaſed them, and truely they are well ynough diſpoſed to receiue the knowledge of the trueth. Our Lord grant for his mercy all things ſo to be diſpoſed, that it may ſometime be brought to paſſe, that ſo great a nation as this is periſh not for want of helpe.

Our maner of praying ſo well liked them, that in priſon importunately they beſought vs to write for them ſomewhat as cõcerning heauen, the which we did to their contentation wt ſuch reaſons as we knew, howbeit not very cunningly. As they do their idolatry they laugh at themſelues. If at any time this countrey might be ioyned in league with the kingdome of Portugale, in ſuch wiſe that free acceſſe were had to deale with the people there, they might all be ſoone conuerted. The greateſt fault we do finde in them is Sodomie, a vice very common in the meaner ſort, and nothing ſtrange amongſt the beſt. This ſinne were it left of them, in all other things ſo well diſpoſed they be, that a good interpreter in a ſhort ſpace might do there great good: If, as I ſaid, the countrey were ioyned in league with vs.

Furthermore the Louteas, with all the people of China, are wont to ſolemnize the dayes of the new and full Moones in viſiting one an other, and making great banquets: for to that end, as I earſt ſaid, do tend all their paſtimes, and ſpending their dayes in pleaſure. They are wont alſo to ſolemnize ech one his birth day, whereunto their kindred and friends do reſort of cuſtome, with preſents of iewels or money, receiuing againe for their reward good cheare. They keepe in like maner a generall feaſt with great banquets that day their king was borne. But their moſt principall and greateſt feaſt of all, and beſt cheare, is the firſt day of their new yeere, namely the firſt day of the new Moone of February, ſo that their firſt moneth is March, and they reckon the times accordingly, reſpect being had vnto the reigne of their princes: as when any deed is written, they date it thus, Made ſuch a day of ſuch a moone, and ſuch a yeere of the reigne of ſuch a king. And their ancient writings beare date of the yeeres of this or that king.

Now will I ſpeake of the maner which the Chineans doe obſerue in doing of iuſtice, that it may be knowen how farre theſe Gentiles do herein exceed many Chriſtians, that be more bounden then they to deale iuſtly and in trueth. Becauſe the Chiniſh king maketh his abode continually in the City Pachin, his kingdome ſo great, & the ſhires ſo many, as tofore it hath bene ſaid: in it therefore the gouernours and rulers, much like vnto our Shiriffes, be appointed ſo ſuddenly and ſpeedily diſcharged againe, that they haue no time to grow naught. Furthermore to keepe the ſtate in more ſecuritie, the Louteas that gouerne one ſhire are choſen out of ſome other ſhire diſtant farre off, where they muſt leaue their wiues, children and goods, carying nothing with them but themſelues. True it is, that at their comming thither they doe finde in a readineſſe all things neceſſary, their houſe, furniture, ſeruants, and all other things in ſuch perfection and plentie, that they want nothing. Thus the king is well ſerued without all feare of treaſon.

In the principall Cities of the ſhires be foure chiefe Louteas, before whom are brought all matters of the inferiour Townes, throughout the whole Realme. Diuers other Louteas haue the managing of iuſtice, and receiuing of rents, bound to yeelde an accompt thereof vnto the greater officers. Other do ſee that there be no euil rule kept in the Citie: ech one as it behoueth him.

Generally all theſe doe impriſon malefactours, cauſe them to be whipped and racked, hoyſing them vp and downe by the armes with a cord, a thing very vſuall there, and accompted no ſhame. Theſe Louteas do vſe great diligence in the apprehending of theeues, ſo that it is a wonder to ſee a theefe eſcape away in any City, towne or village. Vpon the ſea neere vnto the ſhoare many are taken, and looke euen as they are taken, ſo be they firſt whipped, and afterward layde in priſon, where ſhortly after they all die for hunger and cold. At that time when we were in priſon, there died of them aboue threeſcore and ten. If happely any one, hauing the meanes to get food, do eſcape, he is ſet with the condemned perſons, and prouided for as they be by the King, in ſuch wiſe as hereafter it ſhalbe ſaid.

The Italians call it the ſtrapado.

Their whips be certaine pieces of canes, cleft in the middle, in ſuch ſort that they ſeeme rather plaine then ſharpe. He that is to be whipped lieth grouelong on the ground: vpon his thighes the hangman layeth on blowes mightily with theſe canes, that the ſtanders by tremble at their crueltie. Ten ſtripes draw a great deale of blood, 20. or 30. ſpoile the fleſh altogether, 50. or 60. will require long time to bee healed, and if they come to the number of one hundred, then are they incurable.

The Louteas obſerue moreouer this: when any man is brought before them to be examined, they aſke him openly in the hearing of as many as be preſent, be the offence neuer ſo great. Thus did they alſo behaue themſelues with vs: For this cauſe amongſt them can there be no falſe witneſſe, as dayly amongſt vs it falleth out. This good commeth thereof, that many being alwayes about the Iudge to heare the euidence, and beare witneſſe, the proceſſe cannot be falſified, as it happeneth ſometimes with vs. The Moores, Gentiles, and Iewes haue all their ſundry othes, the Moores do ſweare by their Moſſafos, the Brachmans by their Fili, the reſt likewiſe by the things they do worſhip. The Chineans though they be wont to ſweare by heauen, by the Moone, by the Sunne, and by all their Idoles, in iudgement neuertheleſſe they ſweare not at all. If for ſome offence an othe be vſed of any one, by and by with the leaſt euidence he is tormented, ſo be the witneſſes he bringeth, if they tell not the trueth, or do in any point diſagree, except they be men of worſhip and credit, who are beleeued without any further matter: the reſt are made to confeſſe the trueth by force of torments and whips. Beſides this order obſerued of them in examinations, they do feare ſo much their King, and he where he maketh his abode keepeth them ſo lowe, that that they dare not once ſtirre. Againe, theſe Louteas as great as they be, notwithſtanding the multitude of Notaries they haue, not truſting any others, do write all great proceſſes and matters of importance themſelues. Moreouer one vertue they haue worthy of great praiſe, and that is, being men ſo wel regarded and accompted as though they were princes, yet they be patient aboue meaſure in giuing audience. We poore ſtrangers brought before them might ſay what we would, as all to be lyes and fallaces that they did write, ne did we ſtand before them with the vſuall ceremonies of that Countrey, yet did they beare with vs ſo patiently, that they cauſed vs to wonder, knowing ſpecially how litle any aduocate or Iudge is wont in our Countrey to beare with vs. For whereſoeuer in any Towne of Chriſtendome ſhould be accuſed vnknowen men as we were, I know not what end the very innocents cauſe would haue: but we in a heathen Countrey, hauing our great enemies two of the chiefeſt men in a whole Towne, wanting an interpreter, ignorant of that Countrey language, did in the end ſee our great aduerſaries caſt into priſon for our ſake, and depriued of their Offices and honour for not doing iuſtice, yea not to eſcape death: for, as the rumour goeth, they ſhalbe beheaded. Somewhat is now to be ſaid of the lawes that I haue bene able to know in this Countrey, and firſt, no theft or murther is at any time pardoned: adulterers are put in priſon, and the fact once proued, are condemned to die, the womans husband muſt accuſe them: this order is kept with men & women found in that fault, but theeues and murderers are impriſoned as I haue ſaid, where they ſhortly die for hunger and cold. If any one happely eſcape by bribing the Gailer to giue him meate, his proceſſe goeth further, and commeth to the Court where he is condemned to die. Sentence being giuen, the priſoner is brought in publique with a terrible band of men that lay him in Irons hand and foot, with a boord at his necke one handfull broad, in length reaching downe to his knees, cleft in two parts, and with a hole one handfull downeward in the table fit for his necke, the which they incloſe vp therein, nailing the boord faſt together; one handfull of the boord ſtandeth vp behinde in the necke: The ſentence and cauſe wherefore the fellon was condemned to die, is written in that part of the table that ſtandeth before.

A pillory boord.

This ceremony ended, he is laid in a great priſon in the company of ſome other condemned perſons, the which are found by the king as long as they do liue. The boord aforeſaid ſo made tormenteth the priſoners very much, keeping them both from reſt, & eke letting them to eat cõmodiouſly, their hands being manacled in irons vnder that boord, ſo that in fine there is no remedy but death.

In the chiefe Cities of euery ſhire, as we haue erſt ſaid, there be foure principall houſes, in ech of them a priſon: but in one of them, where the Taiſſu maketh his abode, there is a greater and a more principal priſon then in any of the reſt: and although in euery City there be many, neuertheleſſe in three of them remaine onely ſuch as be condemned to die. Their death is much prolonged, for that ordinarily there is no execution done but once a yeere, though many die for hunger and cold, as we haue ſeene in this priſon. Execution is done in this maner. The Chian, to wit, the high Commiſſioner or Lord chiefe Iuſtice, at the yeres end goeth to the head City, where he heareth againe the cauſes of ſuch as be condemned. Many times he deliuereth ſome of them, declaring yͤ boord to haue bene wronfully put about their necks: the viſitation ended, he choſeth out ſeuen or eight, not many more or leſſe of the greateſt malefactors, the which, to feare and keepe in awe the people, are brought into a great market place, where all the great Louteas meete together, and after many ceremonies and ſuperſtitions, as the vſe of the Countrey is, are beheaded. This is done once a yeere: who ſo eſcapeth that day, may be ſure that he ſhall not be put to death all that yeere following, and ſo remaineth at the kings charges in the greater priſon. In that priſon where we lay were alwayes one hundred and mo of theſe condemned perſons, beſides them that lay in other priſons.

Theſe priſons wherein the condemned caytifes do remaine are ſo ſtrong, that it hath not bene heard, that any priſoner in all China hath eſcaped out of priſon, for in deed it is a thing impoſſible. The priſons are thus builded. Firſt all the place is mightily walled about, the walles be very ſtrong and high, the gate of no leſſe force: within it three other gates, before you come where the priſoners do lye, there many great lodgings are to be ſeene of the Louteas, Notaries, Parthions, that is, ſuch as do there keepe watch and ward day and night, the court large and paued, on the one ſide whereof ſtandeth a priſon, with two mighty gates, wherein are kept ſuch priſoners as haue committed enormious offences. This priſon is ſo great, that in it are ſtreetes and Market places wherein all things neceſſary are ſold. Yea ſome priſoners liue by that kinde of trade, buying and ſelling, and letting out beds to hire: ſome are dayly ſent to priſon, ſome dayly deliuered, wherefore this place is neuer void of 7. or eight hundred men that go at libertie.

Into one other priſon of condemned perſons ſhall you go at three yron gates, the court paued and vauted round about, and open aboue as it were a cloiſter. In this cloiſter be eight roomes with yron doores, and in ech of them a large gallerie, wherein euery night the priſoners do lie at length, their feet in the ſtocks, their bodies hampered in huge wooden grates that keep them from ſitting, ſo that they lye as it were in a cage, ſleepe if they can: in the morning they are loſed againe, that they may go into the court. Notwithſtanding the ſtrength of this priſon, it is kept with a garriſon of men, part whereof watch within the houſe, part of them in the court, ſome keepe about the priſon with lanterns and watch-bels anſwering one another fiue times euery night, and giuing warning ſo lowd, that the Loutea reſting in a chamber not neere thereunto, may heare them. In theſe priſons of condemned perſons remaine ſome 15, other 20. yeres impriſoned, not executed, for the loue of their honorable friends that ſeeke to prolong their liues. Many of theſe priſoners be ſhoomakers, and haue from the king a certaine allowance of riſe: ſome of them worke for the keeper, who ſuffreth them to go at libertie without fetters and boords, the better to worke. Howbeit when the Loutea calleth his checke roll, & with the keeper vieweth them, they all weare their liueries, that is, boords at their necks, yronned hand and foot. When any of theſe priſoners dieth, he is to be ſeene of the Loutea and Notaries, brought out of a gate ſo narrow, that there can but one be drawen out there at once. The priſoner being brought forth, one of the aforeſaid Parthions ſtriketh him thriſe on the head with an yron ſledge, that done he is deliuered vnto his friends, if he haue any, otherwiſe the king hireth men to cary him to his buriall in the fields.

Thus adulterers and theeues are vſed. Such as be impriſoned for debt once knowen, lie there vntil it be paied. The Taiſſu or Loutea calleth them many times before him by the vertue of his office, who vnderſtanding the cauſe wherefore they do not pay their debts, appointeth them a certaine time to do it, within the compaſſe whereof if they diſcharge not their debts being debters in deed, then they be whipped and condemned to perpetuall impriſonment: if the creditors be many, and one is to be paied before another, they do, contrary to our maner, pay him firſt of whom they laſt borrowed, and ſo ordinarily the reſt, in ſuch ſort that the firſt lender be the laſt receiuer. The ſame order is kept in paying legacies: the laſt named receiueth his portion firſt. They accompt it nothing to ſhew fauour to ſuch a one as can do the like againe: but to do good to them that haue litle or nothing, that is worth thanks, therefore pay they the laſt before the firſt, for that their intent ſeemeth rather to be vertuous then gainefull.

Of like the firſt lenders be the more wealthie.

When I ſaid, that ſuch as be committed to priſon for theft and murther were iudged by the Court, I ment not them that were apprehended in the deed doing, for they need no triall, but are brought immediatly before the Tutan, who out of hand giueth ſentence. Other not taken ſo openly, which do need trial, are the malefactors put to execution once a yere in the chiefe cities, to keepe in awe the people: or condemned, do remaine in priſon, looking for their day. Theeues being taken are caried to priſon from one place to another in a cheſt vpon mens ſhoulders, hired therfore by the king, the cheſt is 6. handfuls high, the priſoner ſitteth therein vpon a bench, the couer of the cheſt is two boords, amid them both a pillery-like hole, for the priſoners necke, there ſitteth he with his head without the cheſt, and the reſt of his body within, not able to mooue or turne his head this way or that way, nor to plucke it in: the neceſſities of nature he voydeth at a hole in the bottome of the cheſt, the meate he eateth is put into his mouth by others. There abideth he day and night during his whole iourney: if happily his porters ſtumble, or the cheſt do iogge or be ſet downe careleſly, it turneth to his great paines that ſitteth therein, al ſuch motions being vnto him hanging as it were. Thus were our companions caried frō Cinceo, 7. daies iourney, neuer taking any reſt as afterward they told vs, & their greateſt griefe was to ſtay by the way: as ſoone as they came, being taken out of the cheſts, they were not able to ſtand on their feet, and two of them died ſhortly after. When we lay in priſon at Fuquieo, we came many times abroad, & were brought to the pallaces of noble men, to be ſeene of them & their wiues, for that they had neuer ſeene any Portugale before. Many things they aſked vs of our Country, and our faſhions, & did write euery thing, for they be curious in nouelties aboue meaſure. The gentlemen ſhew great courteſie vnto ſtrangers, and ſo did we finde at their hands, and becauſe that many times we were brought abroad into the City, ſomewhat wil I ſay of ſuch things as I did ſee therein, being a gallant City, and chiefe in one of the 13. ſhires aforeſaid. The City Fuquieo is very great, & mightily walled with ſquare ſtone both within and without, and, as it may ſeeme by the breadth therof, filled vp in the middle with earth, layd ouer with brick & couered with tyle, after the maner of porches or galleries, that one might dwel therein. The ſtaires they vſe are ſo eaſily made, that one may go them vp and downe a horſ-backe, as eftſoones they do: the ſtreets are paued, as already it hath bin ſaid: there be a great number of Marchants, euery one hath written in a great table at his doore ſuch things as he hath to ſel. In like maner euery artiſane painteth out his craft: the market places be large, great abundance of al things there be to be ſold. The city ſtandeth vpō water, many ſtreames run through it, the banks pitched, & ſo broad that they ſerue for ſtreets to the cities vſe. Ouer the ſtreams are ſundry bridges both of timber & ſtone, which being made leuel with the ſtreets, hinder not the paſſage of the barges too and fro, the chanels are ſo deepe. Where the ſtreames come in and go out of the city, be certaine arches in the wal, there go in and out their Parai, that is a kind of barges they haue, & that in the day time only: at night theſe arches are cloſed vp with gates, ſo do they ſhut vp al the gates of the City. Theſe ſtreames and barges do ennobliſh very much the City, and make it as it were to ſeeme another Venice. The buildings are euen, wel made, high, not lofted, except it be ſome wherein marchandize is laid. It is a world to ſee how great theſe cities are, and the cauſe is, for that the houſes are built euen, as I haue ſaid, & do take a great deale of roome. One thing we ſaw in this city that made vs al to wonder, and is worthy to be noted: namely, ouer a porch at the comming in to one of the aforeſaid 4. houſes, which the king hath in euery ſhire for his gouernors, as I haue erſt ſaid, ſtandeth a tower built vpon 40. pillers, echone whereof is but one ſtone, echone 40. handfuls or ſpans long: in bredth or compaſſe 12, as many of vs did meaſure them. Beſides this, their greatneſſe is ſuch in one piece, that it might ſeeme impoſſible to worke them: they be moreouer cornered, and in colour, length and breadth ſo like, that the one nothing differeth from the other. This thing made vs all to wonder very much.

Fuquieo.

Heretofore:

Parai.

We are wont to cal this country China, and the people Chineans, but as long as we were priſoners, not hearing amongſt them at any time that name, I determined to learne how they were called, and aſked ſometimes by them thereof, for that they vnderſtood vs not when we called them Chineans, I anſwered them, that al the inhabitants of India named them Chineans, wherefore I praied them that they would tel me, for what occaſiō they are ſo called, whether peraduenture any city of theirs bare that name. Hereunto they alwayes anſwered me, ẏ they haue no ſuch name, nor euer had. Then did I aſke them what name the whole Country beareth, & what they would anſwere being aſked of other nations what countrymen they were? It was told me that of ancient time in this country had bin many kings, & though preſently it were al vnder one, ech kingdom neuertheles enioyed that name it firſt had, theſe kingdomes are the prouinces I ſpake of before. In concluſion they ſaid, that the whole country is called Tamen, & the inhabitants Tamegines, ſo that this name China or Chineans, is not heard of in ẏ country. I thinke that the neerneſſe of another prouince therabout called Cochinchina, & the inhabitants therof Cochineſſes, firſt diſcouered before China was, lying not far from Malacca, did giue occaſion to ech of the nations, of that name Chineans, as alſo the whole country to be named China. But their proper name is that aforeſaid.

Tamen the proper name of China.

I haue heard moreouer that in the City of Nanquim remaineth a table of gold, and in it written a kings name, as a memory of that reſidence the kings were wont to keepe there. This table ſtandeth in a great pallace, couered alwayes, except it be on ſome of their feſtiuall dayes, at what time they are wont to let it be ſeene, couered neuertheleſſe as it is, all the nobilitie of the City going of duetie to doe it euery day reuerence. The like is done in the head Cities of all the other ſhires in the pallaces of the Ponchiaſſini, wherein theſe aforeſaid tables doe ſtand with the kings name written in them, although no reuerence be done thereunto but in ſolemne feaſtes.

Pochin, or, Pachin.

I haue likewiſe vnderſtood that the City Pachin, where the king maketh his abode, is ſo great, that to go from one ſide to the other, beſides the Suburbs, the which are greater then the City it ſelfe, it requireth one whole day a horſeback, going hackney paſe. In the ſuburbs be many wealthy marchants of all ſorts. They told me furthermore that it was moted about, and in the motes great ſtore of fiſh, whereof the king maketh great gaines.

Their enemies.

Mariage of the kings children.

It was alſo told me that the king of China had no king to wage battel withall, beſides the Tartars, with whom he had concluded a peace more then 80. yeres ago. Neuertheleſſe their friendſhip was not ſo great, that the one nation might marry with the other. And demanding with whom they married, they ſaid, that in olde time the Chiniſh kings when they would marry their daughters, accuſtomed to make a ſolemne feaſt, whereunto came all ſorts of men. The daughter that was to be married, ſtood in a place where ſhe might ſee them all, and looke whom ſhe liked beſt, him did ſhe chuſe to husband, and if happely he were of a baſe condition, hee became by and by a gentleman: but this cuſtome hath bene left long ſince. Now a dayes the king marrieth his daughters at his owne pleaſure, with great men of the kingdome: the like order he obſerueth in the marriage of his ſonnes.

He ſpeaketh not here of all China, but of the Cities, for in other places there be beggers, as you haue ſeene already, ſwarming out of trees.

They haue moreouer one thing very good, and that which made vs all to maruelle at them being Gentiles: namely, that there be hoſpitals in all their Cities, alwayes full of people, we neuer ſaw any poore body begge. We therefore asked the cauſe of this: anſwered it was, that in euery City there is a great circuit, wherein be many houſes for poore people, for blinde, lame, old folke, not able to trauaile for age, nor hauing any other meanes to liue. Theſe folke haue in the aforeſaid houſes euer plentie of rice during their liues, but nothing elſe. Such as be receiued into theſe houſes, come in after this maner. When one is ſicke, blinde or lame, he maketh a ſupplication to the Ponchiaſſi, and prouing that to be true he writeth, he remaineth in the aforeſaid great lodging as long as he liueth: beſides this they keepe in theſe places ſwine and hennes, whereby the poore be relieued without going a begging.

I ſaid before that China was full of riuers, but now I minde to confirme the ſame anew: for the farther we went into the Countrey, the greater we found the riuers. Sometimes we were ſo farre off from the ſea, that where we came no ſea fiſh had bene ſeene, and ſalt was there very deare, of freſh water fiſh yet was there great abundance, and that fiſh very good: they keep it good after this maner. Where the riuers do meete, and ſo paſſe into the ſea, there lieth great ſtore of boats, ſpecially where no ſalt-water commeth, and that in March and April. Theſe boates are ſo many that it ſeemeth wonderfull, ne ſerue they for other then to take ſmall fiſh. By the riuers ſides they make leyres of fine and ſtrong nettes, that lye three handfuls vnder water, and one aboue to keepe and nouriſh their fiſh in, vntill ſuch time as other fiſhers do come with boates, bringing for that purpoſe certaine great cheſts lined with paper, able to holde water, wherein they cary their fiſh vp and downe the riuer, euery day renuing the cheſt with freſh water, and ſelling their fiſh in euery City, towne and village where they paſſe, vnto the people as they neede it: moſt of them haue net leyres to keepe fiſh in alwayes for their prouiſion. Where the greater boates cannot paſſe any further forward, they take leſſer, and becauſe the whole Countrey is very well watered, there is ſo great plenty of diuers ſorts of fiſh, that it is wonderfull to ſee: aſſuredly we were amazed to behold the maner of their prouiſion. Their fiſh is chiefly nouriſhed with the dung of Buffes and oxen, that greatly fatteth it. Although I ſaid their fiſhing to be in March and April at what time we ſaw them do it, neuertheleſſe they told vs that they fiſhed at all times, for that vſually they do feed on fiſh, wherefore it behoueth them to make their prouiſion continually.

Meanes to fat fiſh.

He ſpeaketh of Fuquien ſhire.

When we had paſſed Fuquien, we went into Quicin ſhire, where the fine clay veſſell is made, as I ſaid before: and we came to a City, the one ſide whereof is built vpon the foote of a hill, whereby paſſeth a riuer nauigable: there we tooke boat, and went by water toward the Sea: on ech ſide of the riuer we found many Cities, Townes and villages, wherein we ſaw great ſtore of marchandize, but ſpecially of fine clay: there did we land by the way to buy victuals and other neceſſaries. Going downe this riuer Southward, we were glad that wee drew neere vnto a warmer Countrey, from whence we had bene farre diſtant: this Countrey we paſſed through in eight dayes, for our iourney lay downe the ſtreame. Before that I doe ſay any thing of that ſhire we came into, I will firſt ſpeake of the great City of Quicin, wherein alwayes remaineth a Tutan, that is a gouernour, as you haue ſeene, though ſome Tutans do gouerne two or three ſhires.

That Tutan that was condemned for our cauſe, of whom I ſpake before, was borne in this Countrey, but he gouerned Foquien ſhire: nothing it auailed him to be ſo great an officer. This Countrey is ſo great, that in many places where we went, there had bene as yet no talke of his death, although he were executed a whole yere before. At the Citie Quanche whither we came, the riuer was ſo great that it ſeemed a Sea, though it were ſo litle where we tooke water, that we needed ſmall boats. One day about 9. of the clocke, beginning to row neere the walls with the ſtreame, we came at noone to a bridge made of many barges, ouerlinked al together with two mightie cheines. There ſtayed we vntill it was late, but we ſaw not one go either vp thereon or downe, except two Louteas that about the going downe of the Sunne, came and ſet them downe there, the one on one ſide, the other on the other ſide. Then was the bridge opened in many places, and barges both great and ſmall to the number of ſixe hundred began to paſſe: thoſe that went vp the ſtreame at one place, ſuch as came downe at an other. When all had thus ſhot the bridge, then was it ſhut vp againe. We heare ſay that euery day they take this order in all principall places of marchandize, for paying of the Cuſtome vnto the king, ſpecially for ſalt, whereof the greateſt reuenues are made that the king hath in this Countrey. The paſſages of the bridge where it is opened, be ſo neere the ſhoare, that nothing can paſſe without touching the ſame. To ſtay the barges at their pleaſure, that they goe no further forward, are vſed certaine iron inſtruments. The bridge conſiſteth of 112. barges, there ſtayed we vntill the euening that they were opened, lothſomely oppreſſed by the multitude of people that came to ſee vs, ſo many in number, that we were enforced to go aſide from the banke vntill ſuch time as the bridge was opened: howbeit we were neuertheleſſe thronged about with many boates full of people. And though in other Cities and places where we went, the people came ſo importunate vpon vs, that it was needfull to withdraw our ſelues: yet were we here much more moleſted for the number of people; & this bridge is the principall way out of the Citie vnto another place ſo wel inhabited, that were it walled about, it might be compared to the Citie. When we had ſhot the bridge, we kept along the Citie vntil it was night, and then met we with an other riuer that ioyned with this, we rowed vp that by the walls vntill we came to another bridge gallantly made of barges, but leſſer a great deale then that other bridge ouer the greater ſtreame: here ſtayed we that night, and other two dayes with more quiet, being out of the preaſſe of the people. Theſe riuers do meet without at one corner point of the City. In either of them were ſo many barges great and ſmall, that we all thought them at the leaſt to be aboue three thouſand: the greater number thereof was in the leſſer riuer, where we were. Amongſt the reſt here lay certaine greater veſſels, called in their language Parai, that ſerue for the Tutan, when he taketh his voyage by other riuers that ioyne with this, towards Pachin, where the king maketh his abode. For, as many times I haue erſt ſaid, all this Countrey is full of riuers. Deſirous to ſee thoſe Parai we got into ſome of them, where we found ſome chambers ſet foorth with gilded beds very richly, other furniſhed with tables and ſeats, and all other things ſo neat and in perfection, that it was wonderfull.

Alias Cenchi.

The Kings reuenuse.

Parai.

Quiacim ſhire, as farre as I can perceiue, lieth vpon the South. On that ſide we kept at our firſt entry thereinto, trauayling not farre from the high mountaines we ſaw there. Aſking what people dwelleth beyond thoſe mountaines, it was told me that they be theeues & men of a ſtrange language. And becauſe that vnto ſundry places neere this riuer the mountaines doe approch, whence the people iſſuing downe do many times great harme, this order is taken at the entry into Quiacim ſhire. To guard this riuer whereon continually go to & fro Parai great & ſmall fraught with ſalt, fiſh poudred with peper, and other neceſſaries for that countrey, they do lay in diuers places certaine Parai, and great barges armed, wherin watch and ward is kept day and night on both ſides of the riuer, for the ſafety of the paſſage, & ſecuritie of ſuch Parai as do remaine there, though the trauailers neuer go but many in company. In euery rode there be at the leaſt thirtie, in ſome two hundred men, as the paſſage requireth. This guard is kept vſually vntill you come to the City Onchio, where continually the Tutan of this ſhire, and eke of Cantan, maketh his abode. From that City vpward, where the riuer wareth more narrow, and the paſſage more dangerous, there be alwayes armed one hundred and fiftie Parai, to accompany other veſſels fraught with marchandize, and all this at the Kings charges. This ſeemed to me one of the ſtrangeſt things I did ſee in this Countrey.

Fiſh poudered with peper.

When we lay at Fuquien, we did ſee certaine Moores, who knew ſo litle of their ſecte, that they could ſay nothing elſe but that Mahomet was a Moore, my father was a Moore, and I am a Moore, with ſome other wordes of their Alcoran, wherewithall, in abſtinence from ſwines fleſh, they liue vntill the diuel take them all. This when I ſaw, & being ſure that in many Chiniſh

Cities the reliques of Mahomet are kept, as ſoone as we came to the City where theſe fellowes be, I enfourmed my ſelfe of them, and learned the trueth.

☞ Great ſhips comming from the North.

Theſe Moores, as they tolde me, in times paſt came in great ſhips fraught with marchandiſe from Pachin ward, to a port granted vnto them by the king, as hee is wont to all them that traffique into this Countrey, where they being arriued at a litle Towne ſtanding in the hauens mouth, in time conuerted vnto their ſect the greateſt Loutea there. When that Loutea with all his family was become Mooriſh, the reſt began likewiſe to doe the ſame. In this part of China the people be at libertie, euery one to worſhip and folow what him liketh beſt. Wherefore no body tooke heed thereto, vntill ſuch time as the Moores perceiuing that many followed them in ſuperſtition, and that the Loutea fauoured them, they began to forbid wholy the eating of ſwines fleſh. But all theſe countreymen and women choſing rather to forſake father and mother, then to leaue off eating of porke, by no meanes would yeeld to that proclamation. For beſides the great deſire they all haue to eate that kinde of meate, many of them do liue thereby: and therefore the people complained vnto the Magiſtrates, accuſing the Moores of a conſpiracie pretended betwixt them and the Loutea againſt their king. In this countrey, as no ſuſpition, no not one traiterous word is long borne withall, ſo was the king ſpeedily aduertiſed thereof, who gaue commandement out of hand that the aforeſaid Loutea ſhould be put to death, and with him the Moores of moſt importance: the other to be layde firſt in priſon, and afterward to be ſent abroad into certaine Cities, where they remained perpetuall ſlaues vnto the king. To this City came by happe men and women threeſcore and odde, who at this day are brought to fiue men and foure women, for it is now twenty yeeres ſince this happened. Their offſpring paſſeth the number of two hundreth, and they in this City, as the reſt in other Cities whither they were ſent, haue their *Moſcheas, whereunto they all reſort euery Friday to keepe their holy day. But, as I thinke, that will no longer endure, then whiles they doe liue that came from thence, for their poſteritie is ſo confuſed, that they haue nothing of a Moore in them but abſtinence from ſwines fleſh, and yet many of them doe eate thereof priuily. They tell mee that their natiue Countrey hath name Camarian, a firme land, wherein be many kings, and the Indiſh countrey well knowen vnto them. It may ſo be: for as ſoone as they did ſee our ſeruants (our ſeruants were Preuzaretes) they iudged them to be Indians: many of their wordes ſounded vpon the Perſian tongue, but none of vs coulde vnderſtand them. I aſked them whether they conuerted any of the Chiniſh nation vnto their ſecte: they anſwered mee, that with much a doe they conuerted the women with whom they doe marry, yeelding me no other cauſe thereof, but the difficultie they finde in them to be brought from eating ſwines fleſh and drinking of wine. I am perſwaded therefore, that if this Countrey were in league with vs, forbidding them neither of both, it would be an eaſie matter to draw them to our Religion, from their ſuperſtition, whereat they themſelues do laugh when they do their idolatry.

* That is their temples.

It ſhould ſeeme by their voyage to be Cardandan in Ortelius.

☞ A Northerne Sea.

It ſeemeth they came vp the riuer from the Caſpian ſea. At Cacan.

Riuers ouerfroſen in China.

* I haue learned moreouer that the Sea, whereby theſe Moores that came to China were wont to trauaile, is a very great gulfe, that falleth into this Countrey out from Tartaria and Perſia, leauing on the other ſide all the Countrey of China, and land of the Mogores, drawing alwayes toward the South: and of all likelyhood it is euen ſo, becauſe that theſe Moores, the which we haue ſeene, be rather browne then white, whereby they ſhewe themſelues to come from ſome warmer Countrey then China is neere to Pachin, where the riuers are froſen in the Winter for colde, and many of them ſo vehemently, that carts may paſſe ouer them.

Ali. Auoins Tartars.

Mount Vſont.

Mogores,

Blewes of great price in China.

We did ſee in this Citie many Tartars, Mogores, Brames, and Laoynes, both men and women. The Tartars are men very white, good horſemen and archers, confining with China on that ſide where Pachin ſtandeth, ſeparated from thence by great mountaines that are betwixt theſe kingdomes. Ouer them be certaine wayes to paſſe, and for both ſides, Caſtles continually kept with Souldiers: in time paſt the Tartars were wont alwayes to haue warres with the Chineans, but theſe foureſcore yeeres paſt they were quiet, vntill the ſecond yeere of our impriſonment. The Mogores be in like maner white, and heathen, we are aduertiſed that of one ſide they border vpon theſe Tartars, and confine with the Perſian Tartars on the other ſide, whereof wee ſawe in them ſome tokens, as their maner of clothes, and that kinde of hat the Saracens doe weare. The Moores affirmed, that where the king lyeth, there be many Tartars and Mogores, that brought into China certaine blewes of great value: all we thought it to be Vanil of Cambaia wont to be ſold at Ormus. So that this is the true ſituation of that Countrey, not in the Northparts, as many times I haue heard ſay, confining with Germanie.

Brames.

As for the Brames we haue ſeene in this city Chenchi certaine men & women, amongſt whom there was one that came not long ſince, hauing as yet her haire tied vp after the Pegues faſhion: this woman, and other mo with whom a black Moore damſel in our company had conference, and did vnderſtand them wel ynough, had dwelt in Pegu. This new come woman, imagining that we were

ment to make our abode in that citie, bid vs to be of good comfort, for that her countrey was not diſtant from thence aboue fiue dayes iourney, and that out of her countrey there lay a high way for vs home into our owne. Being aſked the way, ſhe anſwered that the firſt three daies the way lieth ouer certaine great mountaines & wilderneſſe, afterward people are met withall againe. Thence two dayes iourney more to the Brames countrey. Wherefore I doe conclude, that Chenchi is one of the confines of this kingdome, ſeparated by certaine huge mountaines, as it hath bene alreadie ſaid, that lie out towards the South. In the reſidue of theſe mountaines ſtandeth the prouince of Sian, the Laoyos countrey, Camboia, Campaa, and Cochinchina.

Southward from Chenchi to the ſea.

Auoins.

Chenchi.

This citie, chiefe of other ſixteene, is ſituated in a pleaſant plaine abounding in all things neceſſarie, ſea-fiſh onely excepted, for it ſtandeth farre from the ſea: of freſh fiſh ſo much ſtore, that the market places are neuer emptie. The walles of this citie are very ſtrong and high: one day did I ſee the Louteas thereof go vpon the walles to take the view thereof, borne in their ſeates which I ſpake of before, accompanied with a troupe of horſemen that went two and two: It was tolde me they might haue gone three & three. We haue ſeene moreouer, that within this aforeſayde Citie the king hath moe then a thouſande of his kinne lodged in great pallaces, in diuerſe partes of the Citie: their gates be redde, and the entrie into their houſes, that they may be knowen, for that is the kings colour. Theſe Gentlemen, according to their neereneſſe in blood vnto the king, as ſoone as they be married receiue their place in honour: this place neither increaſeth nor diminiſheth in any reſpect as long as the king liueth, the king appointeth them their wiues and familie, allowing them by the moneth all things neceſſarie abundantly, as he doth to his gouernours of ſhires and Cities, howbeit, not one of theſe hath as long as he liueth any charge or gouernement at all. They giue themſelues to eating and drinking, and be for the moſt part burly men of bodie, inſomuch that eſpying any one of them whom we had not ſeene before, we might knowe him to be the King his coſin. They be neuertheleſſe very pleaſant, courteous, and faire conditioned: neither did we find, all the time wee were in that citie, ſo much honour and good intertainement any where as at their hands. They bid vs to their houſes to eate and drinke, and when they found vs not, or we were not willing to go with them, they bid our ſeruants and ſlaues, cauſing them to ſit downe with the firſt. Notwithſtanding the good lodging theſe Gentlemen haue, ſo commodious that they want nothing, yet are they in this bondage, that during life they neuer goe abroad. The cauſe, as I did vnderſtand, wherefore the king ſo vſeth his coſins is, that none of them at any time may rebell againſt him: and thus he ſhutteth them vp in three or foure other cities. Moſt of them can play on the Lute, and to make that kinde of paſtime peculiar vnto them onely, all other in the cities where they doe liue be forbidden that inſtrument, the Curtiſans and blinde folke onely excepted, who be muſicians and can play.

This king furthermore, for the greater ſecuritie of his Realme and the auoyding of tumults, letteth not one in all his countrey to be called Lord, except he be of his blood. Manie great eſtates and gouernours there be, that during their office are lodged Lordlike, and doe beare the port of mightie Princes: but they be ſo many times diſplaced and other placed a new, that they haue not the time to become corrupt. True it is that during their office they be well prouided for, as afterward alſo lodged at the kings charges, and in penſion as long as they liue, payed them monethly in the cities where they dwell by certaine officers appointed for that purpoſe. The king then is a Lord onely, not one beſides him as you haue ſeene, except it be ſuch as be of his blood. A Nephew likewiſe of the king, the kings ſiſters ſonne, lyeth continually within the walles of the citie in a ſtrong pallace built Caſtlewiſe, euen as his other couſins do, remayning alwayes within doores, ſerued by Eunuches, neuer dealing with any matters. On their feſtiuall dayes, new moones, & full moones the magiſtrates make great bankets, and ſo do ſuch as be of the king his blood. The kings Nephew hath to name Vanfuli, his pallace is walled about, the wall is not high but foure-ſquare, and in circuit nothing inferiour to the wals of Goa, the outſide is painted red, in euery ſquare a gate, and ouer each gate a tower made of timber excellently well wrought: before the principall gate of the foure that openeth into the high ſtreete no Loutea, be he neuer ſo great, may paſſe on horſebacke, or carried in his ſeat. Amidſt this quadrangle ſtandeth the pallace where that Nobleman lyeth, doubtleſſe worth the ſight, although we came not in to ſee it. By report the roofes of the towers and houſe are glaſed greene, & the greater part of the quadrangle ſet with ſauage trees, as Okes, Cheſnuts, Cypreſſe, Pineapples, Cedars, and other ſuch like that we do want, after the manner of a wood, wherein are kept Stags, Oxen, and other beaſts, for that Lord his recreation neuer going abroad as I haue ſayd. One preheminence this citie hath aboue the reſt where we haue bene, & that of right, as we do thinke, that beſides the multitude of market places wherein all things are to be ſold through euery ſtreete continually are cryed all things neceſſary, as fleſh of all ſortes, freſh fiſh, hearbes, oyle, vineger, meale, riſe: in ſumma, all things ſo plentifully, that many houſes neede no ſeruants, euery thing being brought to their doores. Moſt part of the marchants remaine in the ſuburbes, for that the cities are ſhut vp euery night, as I haue ſayd. The marchants therefore, the better to attend their buſineſſe, do chuſe rather to make their abode without in the ſuburbes then within the citie. I haue ſeene in this riuer a pretie kinde of fiſhing, not to be omitted in my opinion, and therefore I will ſet it downe. The king hath in many riuers good ſtore of barges full of ſea-crowes that breede, are fedde, and doe die therein, in certaine cages, allowed monethly a certaine prouiſion of riſe. Theſe barges the king beſtoweth vpon his greateſt magiſtrates, giuing to ſome two, to ſome three of them as he thinketh good, to fiſh therewithall after this manner. At the houre appointed to fiſh, all the barges are brought together in a circle, where the riuer is ſhalow, and the crowes tyed together vnder the wings are let leape downe into the water, ſome vnder, ſome aboue, woorth the looking vpon: each one, as he hath filled his bagge, goeth to his owne barge and emptieth it, which done, he returneth to fiſh againe. Thus hauing taken good ſtore of fiſh, they ſet the crowes at libertie, and do ſuffer them to fiſh for their owne pleaſure. There were in that citie where I was, twentie barges at the leaſt of theſe aforeſayd crowes. I went almoſt euery day to ſee them, yet could I neuer be throughly ſatiſfied to ſee ſo ſtrange a kind of fiſhing.

Of the Iland Iapan, and other litle Iles in the Eaſt Ocean.

By R. Willes.

The extreame part of the knowen world vnto vs is the noble Iland Giapan, written otherwiſe Iapon and Iapan. This Iland ſtandeth in the Eaſt Ocean, beyond all Aſia, betwixt Cathayo and the Weſt Indies ſixe and thirtie degrees Northward from the Equinoctial line, in the ſame clime with the South part of Spaine and Portugall, diſtant from thence by ſea ſixe thouſand leagues: the trauaile thither, both for ciuill diſcord, great pyracie, and often ſhipwracks is very dangerous. This countrey is hillie and peſtered with ſnow, wherefore it is neither ſo warme as Portugall, nor yet ſo wealthy, as far as we can learne, wanting oyle, butter, cheeſe, milke, egges, ſugar, honny, vineger, ſaffron, cynamom and pepper. Barley-branne the Ilanders doe vſe in ſtead of ſalt: medicinable things holſome for the bodie haue they none at all. Neuertheleſſe in that Iland ſundry fruites doe growe, not much vnlike the fruites of Spaine: and great ſtore of Siluer mynes are therein to be ſeene. The people are tractable, ciuill, wittie, courteous, without deceit, in vertue and honeſt conuerſation exceeding all other nations lately diſcouered, but ſo much ſtanding vpon their reputation, that their chiefe Idole may be thought honour. The contempt thereof cauſeth among them much diſcord and debate, manſlaughter and murther: euen for their reputation they doe honour their parents, keepe their promiſes, abſteine from adulterie and robberies, puniſhing by death the leaſt robbery done, holding for a principle, that whoſoeuer ſtealeth a trifle, will, if he ſee occaſion, ſteale a greater thing. It may be theft is ſo ſeuerely puniſhed of them, for that the nation is oppreſſed with ſcarcitie of all things neceſſary, and ſo poore, that euen for miſerie they ſtrangle their owne children, preferring death before want. Theſe fellowes doe neither eate nor kill any foule. They liue chiefely by fiſh, hearbes, and fruites, ſo healthfully, that they die very old. Of Rice and Wheat there is no great ſtore. No man is aſhamed there of his pouertie, neither be their gentlemen therefore leſſe honoured of the meaner people, neither will the pooreſt gentleman there match his childe with the baſer ſort for any gaine, ſo much they do make more account of gentry then of wealth. The greateſt delight they haue is in armour, each boy at fourteene yeeres of age, be he borne gentle or otherwiſe, hath his ſword and dagger: very good archers they be, contemning all other nations in compariſon of their manhood and proweſſe, putting not vp one iniurie be it neuer ſo ſmall in worde or deede, among themſelues. They feede moderately, but they drinke largely. The vſe of vines they knowe not, their drinke they make of Rice, vtterly they doe abhorre dice, and all games, accounting nothing more vile in a man, then to giue himſelfe vnto thoſe things that make vs greedy and deſirous to get other mens goods. If at any time they do ſweare, for that ſeldome they are wont to doe, they ſweare by the Sunne: many of them are taught good letters, wherfore they may ſo much the ſooner be brought vnto Chriſtianitie. Each one is contented with one wife: they be all deſirous to learne, & naturally inclined vnto honeſty & courteſie: godly talke they liſten vnto willingly, eſpecially whē they vnderſtand it throughly. Their gouernmēt cōſiſteth of 3 eſtates. The firſt place is due vnto the high Prieſt, by whoſe lawes & decrees all publike and priuate priuate matters appertayning to religion are decided. The ſects of their clergie men, whom they doe call Bonzi, be of no eſtimation or authoritie except the high Prieſt by letters patent doe confirme the ſame: he confirmeth and alloweth of their Tundi, who be as it were Biſhops, although in many places they are nominated by ſundry Princes. Theſe Tundi are greatly honoured of all ſorts: they doe giue benefices vnto inferiour miniſters, and do grant licences for many things as to eate fleſh vpon thoſe dayes they goe in pilgrimage to their Idoles with ſuch like priuileges. Finally, this high Prieſt wont to be choſen in China for his wiſedome and learning, made in Iapan for his gentry and birth, hath ſo large a Dominion and reuenues ſo great, that eftſoones he beardeth the petie Kings and Princes there.

Their ſecond principal Magiſtrate, in their language Vo, is the chiefe Herehaught, made by ſucceſſion and birth, honoured as a God. This Gentleman neuer toucheth the ground with his foote without forfaiting of his office, he neuer goeth abroad out of his houſe, nor is at all times to be ſeene. At home he is either carried about in a litter, or els he goeth in woodden Choppines a foote high from the ground: commonly he ſitteth in his chaire with a ſword in one ſide, and a bow and arrowes in the other, next his bodie he weareth blacke, his outward garments be red, all ſhadowed ouer with Cypreſſe, at his cappe hang certaine Lambeaux much like vnto a Biſhops Miter, his forehead is painted white and red, he eateth his meat in earthen diſhes. This Herehaught determineth in all Iapan the diuerſe titles of honour, whereof in that Iland is great plentie, each one particularly knowen by his badge, commonly ſeene in ſealing vp their letters, and dayly altered according to their degrees. About this Vo euery Nobleman hath his Soliciter, for the nation is ſo deſirous of praiſe and honour, that they ſtriue among themſelues who may bribe him beſt. By theſe meanes the Herehaught groweth ſo rich, that although hee haue neither land nor any reuenues otherwiſe, yet may he be accounted the wealthieſt man in all Iapan. For three cauſes this great Magiſtrate may looſe his office: firſt, if he touch the ground with his foote, as it hath beene alreadie ſaid: next, if he kill any body: thirdly, if he be found an enemie vnto peace and quietneſſe, howbeit neither of theſe aforeſaid cauſes is ſufficient to put him to death.

Their third chiefe officer is a Iudge, his office is to take vp and to end matters in controuerſie, to determine of warres and peace, that which he thinketh right, to puniſh rebels, wherein he may commaund the noble men to aſſiſt him vpon paine of forfeiting their goods: neuertheleſſe at all times he is not obeyed, for that many matters are ended rather by might and armes, then determined by law. Other controuerſies are decided either in the Temporall Court, as it ſeemeth good vnto the Princes, or in the Spirituall conſiſtorie before the Tundi.

Rebelles are executed in this manner, eſpecially if they be noble men or officers. The king looke what day he giueth ſentence againſt any one, the ſame day the partie, whereſoeuer he be, is aduertiſed thereof, and the day told him of his execution. The condemned perſon aſketh of the meſſenger whether it may bee lawfull for him to kill himſelfe: the which thing when the king doeth graunt, the partie taking it for an honour, putteth on his beſt apparell and launcing his body a croſſe from the breaſt downe all the belly, murthereth himſelfe. This kind of death they take to be without infamie, neither doe their children for their fathers crime ſo puniſhed, looſe their goods. But if the king reſerue them to be executed by the hangman, then flocketh he together his children, his ſeruants, and friends home to his houſe, to preſerue his life by force. The king committeth the fetching of him out vnto his chiefe Iudge, who firſt ſetteth vpon him with bow and arrowes, and afterward with pikes and ſwords, vntill the rebell and all his family be ſlaine to their perpetuall ignominie and ſhame.

The Indie-writers make mention of ſundry great cities in this Iland, as Cangoxima a hauen towne in the South part thereof, and Meaco diſtant from thence three hundred leagues northward, the royall ſeat of the king and moſt wealthy of all other townes in that Iland. The people thereabout are very noble, and their language the beſt Iaponiſh. In Meaco are ſayd to be ninetie thouſande houſes inhabited and vpward, a famous Vniuerſitie, and in it fiue principall Colleges, beſides cloſes & cloyſters of Bonzi, Leguixil, and Hamacata, that is, Prieſts, Monks and Nunnes. Other fiue notable Vniuerſities there be in Iapan, namely, Coia, Negru, Homi, Frenoi, and Bandu. The firſt foure haue in them at the leaſt three thouſand & fiue hundred ſchollers: in the fift are many mo. For Bandu prouince is very great and poſſeſſed with ſixe princes, fiue whereof are vaſſals vnto the ſixt, yet he himſelfe ſubiect vnto the Iaponiſh king, vſually called the great king of Meaco: leſſer ſcholes there be many in diuers places of this Ilande. And thus much ſpecially concerning this glorious Iland, among ſo many barbarous nations and rude regions, haue I gathered together in one ſumme, out of ſundry letters written from thence into Europe, by no leſſe faithfull reporters than famous trauellers. For confirmation whereof, as alſo for the knowledge of other things not conteyned in the premiſſes, the curious readers may peruſe theſe 4 volumes of Indian matters written long ago in Italian, and of late compendiouſly made latine, by Petrus Maffeius my olde acquainted friend, entituling the ſame, De rebus Iaponicis. One whole letter out of the fift booke thereof, ſpecially intreating of that countrey, I haue done into Engliſh word for word in ſuch wiſe as followeth.

Aloiſius Froes to his companions in Ieſus Chriſt that remaine in China and India.

THe laſt yeere, deare brethren, I wrote vnto you from Firando, how Coſmus Turrianus had appointed me to trauaile to Meaco to helpe Gaſpar Vilela, for that there the harueſt was great, the labourers few, and that I ſhould haue for my companion in that iourney Aloiſius Almeida. It ſeemeth now my part, hauing by the helpe of God ended ſo long a voiage, to ſignifie vnto you by letter ſuch things ſpecially as I might thinke you would moſt delight to know. And becauſe at the beginning Almeida and I ſo parted the whole labour of writing letters betwixt vs, that he ſhould ſpeake of our voyage, and ſuch things as happened therein, I ſhould make relation of the Meachians eſtate, & write what I could well learne of the Iapans maners and conditions: ſetting aſide all diſcourſes of our voyage, that which ſtandeth me vpon I will diſcharge in this Epiſtle, that you conſidering how artificially, how cunningly, vnder the pretext of religion, that craftie aduerſary of mankind leadeth and draweth vnto perdition the Iapaniſh mindes, blinded with many ſuperſtitions and ceremonies, may the more pitie this Nation.

The inhabiters of Iapan, as men that neuer had greatly to doe with other Nations, in their Geography diuided the whole world into three parts, Iapan, Sian, and China. And albeit the Iapans receiued out of Sian and China their ſuperſtitions and ceremonies, yet do they neuertheleſſe contemne all other nations in compariſon of themſelues, and ſtanding in their owne conceite doe far preferre themſelues before all other ſorts of people in wiſedome and policie.

Touching the ſituation of the countrey and nature of the ſoyle, vnto the things eſtſoones erſt written, this one thing I wil adde: in theſe Ilands, the ſommer to be moſt hot, the winter extreme cold. In the kingdome of Canga, as we call it, falleth ſo much ſnow, that the houſes being buried in it, the inhabitants keepe within doores certaine moneths of the yeere, hauing no way to come foorth except they breake vp the tiles. Whirle windes moſt vehement, earthquakes ſo common, that the Iapans dread ſuch kind of feares litle or nothing at all. The countrey is ful of ſiluer mines otherwiſe barren, not ſo much by fault of nature, as through the ſlouthfulneſſe of the inhabitants: howbeit Oxen they keepe and that for tillage ſake onely. The ayre is holeſome, the waters good, the people very faire and well bodied: bare headed commonly they goe, procuring baldneſſe with ſorrow and teares, eſtſoones rooting vp with pinſars all the haire of their heads as it groweth, except it be a litle behind, the which they knot and keepe with all diligence. Euen from their childhood they weare daggers and ſwords, the which they vſe to lay vnder their pillowes when they goe to bed: in ſhew courteous and affable, in deede haughtie and proud. They delight moſt in warlike affaires, and their greateſt ſtudie is armes. Mens apparell diuerſely coloured is worne downe halfe the legges and to the elbowes: womens attyre made hanſomely like vnto a ſtolle, is ſomewhat longer: all manner of dicing and theft they doe eſchue. The marchant, although he be wealthy, is not accounted of. Gentlemen, be they neuer ſo poore, retaine their place: moſt preciſely they ſtande vpon their honour and worthineſſe, ceremoniouſly ſtriuing among themſelues in courteſies and faire ſpeeches. Wherein if any one happily be leſſe carefull than he ſhould be, euen for a trifle many times he getteth euill will. Want, though it trouble moſt of them, ſo much they doe deteſt, that poore men cruelly taking pittie of their infantes newly borne, eſpecially girles, do many times with their owne feete ſtrangle them. Noble men, and other likewiſe of meaner calling generally haue but one wife a peece, by whom although they haue iſſue, yet for a trifle they diuorſe themſelues from their wiues, and the wiues alſo ſometimes from their huſbands, to marry with others. After the ſecond degree couſins may there lawfully marry. Adoption of other mens children is much vſed among them. In great townes moſt men and women can write and reade.

This Nation feedeth ſparingly, their vſuall meat is rice and ſalets, and neere the ſea ſide fiſh. They feaſt one another many times, wherein they vſe great diligence, eſpecially in drinking one to another, inſomuch that the better ſort, leaſt they might rudely commit ſome fault therein, doe vſe to reade certaine bookes written of duties and ceremonies apperteyning vnto banquets. To be delicate and fine, they put their meate into their mouthes with litle forkes, accounting it great rudeneſſe to touch it with their fingers: winter & ſommer they drinke water as hot as they may poſſibly abide it. Their houſes are in danger of fire, but finely made and cleane, layde all ouer with ſtrawe-pallets, whereupon they doe both ſit in ſtead of ſtooles, and lie in their clothes with billets vnder their heads. For feare of defiling theſe pallets, they goe either barefoote within doores, or weare ſtrawe pantofles on their buſkins when they come abroad, the which they lay aſide at their returne home againe. Gentlemen for the moſt part do paſſe the night in banketting, muſicke, & vaine diſcourſes, they ſleepe the day time. In Meaco and Sacaio there is good ſtore of beds, but they be very litle, and may be compared vnto our pues.

In bringing vp their children they vſe words only to rebuke them, admoniſhing as diligently and aduiſedly boyes of ſixe or ſeuen yeeres of age, as though they were olde men. They are giuen very much to intertaine ſtrangers, of whom moſt curiouſly they loue to aſke euen in trifles what forraine nations doe, and their faſhions. Such arguments and reaſons as be manifeſt, and are made plaine with examples, doe greatly perſwade them. They deteſt all kinde of theft, whoſoeuer is taken in that fault may be ſlaine freely of any bodie. No publike priſons, no common gayles, no ordinary Iuſticers: priuately each houſholder hath the hearing of matters at home in his owne houſe, and the puniſhing of greater crimes that deſerue death without delay. Thus vſually the people is kept in awe and feare.

About foure hundred yeeres paſt (as in their olde recordes we finde) all Iapan was ſubiect vnto one Emperour whoſe royall ſeat was Meaco, in the Iaponiſh language called Cubucama. But the nobilitie rebelling againſt him, by litle and litle haue taken away the greateſt part of his dominion, howbeit his title continually remayneth and the reſidue in ſome reſpect doe make great account of him ſtill, acknowledging him for their ſuperior. Thus the Empire of Iapan, in times paſt but one alone, is now diuided into ſixtie ſixe kingdomes, the onely cauſe of ciuill warres continually in that Iland, to no ſmall hinderance of the Goſpell, whileſt the kings that dwell neare together inuade one another, each one coueting to make his kingdome greater. Furthermore in the citie Meaco is the pallace of the high Prieſt, whom that nation honoureth as a God, he hath in his houſe 366 Idoles, one whereof by courſe is euery night ſet by his ſide for a watchman. He is thought of the common people ſo holy, that it may not be lawfull for him to goe vpon the earth: if happily he doe ſet one foote to the ground, he looſeth his office. He is not ſerued very ſumptuouſly he is maintained by almes. The heads and beards of his miniſters are ſhauen, they haue name Cangues, and their authoritie is great throughout all Iapan. The Cubucama vſeth them for Embaſſadors to decide controuerſies betwixt princes and to end their warres, whereof they were wont to make very great gaine. It is now two yeres ſince or there about, that one of them came to Bungo, to intreate of peace betwixt the king thereof and the king of Amanguzzo. This Agent fauouring the king of Bungo his cauſe more then the other, brought to paſſe that the foreſayd king of Bungo ſhould keepe two kingdomes, the which he had taken in warres from the king of Amanguzzo. Wherefore he had for his reward of the king of Bungo aboue 30000 ducats. And thus farre hereof.

But his almes are very good.

I come now to other ſuperſtitions and ceremonies, that you may ſee, deare brethren, that which I ſaid in the beginning, how ſubtilly the deuill hath deceiued the Iaponiſh nation, and how diligent and readie they be to obey & worſhip him. And firſt, al remembrance and knowledge not onely of Chriſt our Redeemer, but alſo of that one God the maker of all things is cleane extinguiſhed and vtterly aboliſhed out of the Iapans hearts. Moreouer their ſuperſtitious ſects are many, whereas it is lawfull for each one to follow that which liketh him beſt: but the principall ſects are two, namely the Amidans and Xacaians. Wherefore in this countrey ſhall you ſee many monaſteries, not onely of Bonzii men, but alſo of Bonziæ women diuerſly attired, for ſome doe weare white vnder, and blacke vpper garments, other goe apparelled in aſh colour, and their Idole hath to name Denichi: from theſe the Amidanes differ very much. Againe the men Bonzii for the moſt part dwell in ſumptuous houſes, and haue great reuenues. Theſe fellowes are chaſte by commaundement, marry they may not vpon paine of death. In the midſt of their Temple is erected an altar, whereon ſtandeth a wooden Idole of Amida, naked from the girdle vpward, with holes in his eares after the manner of Italian gentlewomen, ſitting on a wooden roſe goodly to behold. They haue great libraries, and halles for them all to dine and ſup together, and bels wherwith they are at certaine houres called to prayers. In the euening the Superintendent giueth each one a theame for meditation. After midnight before the altar in their Temple they do ſay Mattens as it were out of Xaca his laſt booke, one quier one verſe, the other quier an other. Early in the morning each one giueth himſelfe to meditation one houre: they ſhaue their heads and beards. Their cloyſters be very large, and within the precinct thereof, Chappels of the Fotoquiens, for by that name ſome of the Iapaniſh Saints are called: their holydaies yeerely be very many. Moſt of theſe Bonzii be gentlemen, for that the Iapaniſh nobility charged with many children, vſe to make moſt of them Bonzii, not being able to leaue for each one a patrimony good enough. The Bonzii moſt couetouſly bent, know all the wayes how to come by money. They ſell vnto the people many ſcrolles of paper, by the helpe whereof the common people thinketh it ſelfe warranted from all power of the deuils. They borrow likewiſe money to be repayed with great vſury in an other worlde, giuing by obligation vnto the lender an aſſurance thereof, the which departing out of this life he may carry with him to hell.

Inambuxu. There is another great company of ſuch as are called Inambuxu, with curled and ſtaring haire. They make profeſſion to finde out againe things either loſt or ſtolen, after this ſort. They ſet before them a child whom the deuill inuadeth, called vp thither by charmes: of that child then doe they aſke that which they are deſirous to know.

Theſe mens prayers both good and bad are thought greatly to preuaile, inſomuch that both their bleſſings and their curſes they ſell vnto the people. The nouices of this order, before they be admitted, goe together two or three thouſand in a company, vp a certaine high mountaine to doe pennance there, threeſcore dayes voluntarily puniſhing themſelues. In this time the deuill ſheweth himſelfe vnto them in ſundry ſhapes: and they like young graduats, admitted as it were fellowes into ſome certaine companie, are ſet foorth with white taſſels hanging about their neckes, and blacke Bonnets that ſcarcely couer any more then the crowne of their heads. Thus attyred they range abroade in all Iapan, to ſet out themſelues and their cunning to ſale, each one beating his baſon which he carieth alwayes about with him, to giue notice of their comming in al townes where they paſſe.

Genguis. There is alſo an other ſort called Genguis, that make profeſſion to ſhewe by ſoothſaying where ſtollen things are, and who were the theeues. Theſe dwell in the toppe of an high mountaine, blacke in the face: for the continuall heate of the ſunne, for the cold windes, and raines they doe continually endure. They marry but in their owne tribe and line: the report goeth that they be horned beaſts. They climbe vp moſt high rockes and hilles, and go ouer very great riuers by the onely arte of the deuill, who to bring thoſe wretches the more into errour, biddeth them to goe vp a certaine high mountaine, where they ſtande miſerably gazing and earneſtly looking for him as long as the deuill appointeth them. At the length at noonetide or in the euening commeth that deuil, whom they call Amida among them to ſhew himſelfe vnto them: this ſhew breedeth in the braines and hearts of men ſuch a kinde of ſuperſtition, that it can by no meanes be rooted out of them afterward.

The deuill was wont alſo in another mountaine to ſhew himſelfe vnto the Iapaniſh Nation. Who ſo was more deſirous than other to go to heauen and to enioy Paradiſe, thither went he to ſee that ſight, and hauing ſeene the deuill followed him (ſo by the deuill perſwaded) into a denne vntill he came to a deepe pit. Into this pit the deuill was wont to leape, and to take with him his worſhipper whom he there murdred. This deceit was thus perceiued. An old man blinded with this ſuperſtition, was by his ſonne diſſwaded from thence, but all in vaine. Wherefore his ſonne followed him priuily into that denne with his bow ⁊ arrows, where the deuill gallantly appeared vnto him in the ſhape of a man. Whileſt the old man falleth downe to worſhippe the deuill, his ſonne ſpeedily ſhooting an arrow at the ſpirit ſo appearing, ſtrooke a Foxe in ſtead of a man, ſo ſuddenly was that ſhape altered. This olde man his ſonne tracking the Foxe ſo running away, came to that pit whereof I ſpake, and in the bottome thereof he found many bones of dead men, deceiued by the deuill after that ſort in time paſt. Thus deliuered he his father from preſent death, and all other from ſo peſtilent an opinion.

There is furthermore a place bearing name Coia, very famous for yͤ multitude of Abbyes which the Bonzii haue therein. The beginner and founder whereof is thought to be one Combendaxis a ſuttle craftie fellowe, that got the name of holineſſe by cunning ſpeech, although the lawes and ordinances he made were altogether deuilliſh: he is ſaid to haue found out the Iapaniſh letters vſed at this day. In his latter yeeres this Sim ſuttle buried himſelfe in a foureſquare graue, foure cubites deepe, ſeuerely forbidding it to be opened, for that then he died not, but reſted his bodie wearied with continuall buſineſſe, vntill many thouſand thouſands of yeeres were paſſed, after the which time a great learned man named Mirozu ſhould come into Iapan, and then would he riſe vp out of his graue againe. About his tombe many lampes are lighted, ſent thither out of diuerſe prouinces, for that the people are perſwaded that whoſoeuer is liberall and beneficiall towardes the beautifying of that monument, ſhall not onely increaſe in wealth in this world, but in the life to come be ſafe through Combendaxis helpe. Such as giue themſelues to worſhip him, liue in thoſe Monaſteries or Abbyes with ſhauen heads, as though they had forſaken all ſecular matters, whereas in deede they wallow in all ſortes of wickedneſſe and luſt. In theſe houſes, the which are many (as I ſayd) in number, doe remaine 6000 Bonzii, or thereabout beſides the multitude of lay men, women be reſtrained from thence vpon paine of death. Another company of Bonzii dwelleth at Faconochaici. They teach a great multitude of children all tricks & ſleights of guile & theft: whom they do find to be of great towardnes, thoſe do they inſtruct in al the petigrues of princes, and faſhions of the nobilitie, in chiualrie and eloquence, and ſo ſend them abroad into other prouinces, attired like yong princes, to this ende, that faining themſelues to be nobly borne, they may with great ſummes of money borowed vnder the colour and pretence of nobilitie returne againe. Wherefore this place is ſo infamous in all Iapan, that if any ſcholer of that order be happily taken abroad, he incontinently dieth for it. Neuertheleſſe theſe couſiners leaue not daily to vſe their woonted wickedneſſe and knauerie.

A warrelike people 300 leagues to the North of Meaco.

North from Iapan, three hundred leagues out of Meaco, lieth a great countrey of ſauage men clothed in beaſts ſkinnes, rough bodied, with huge beards and monſtrous muchaches, the which they hold vp with litle forkes as they drinke. Theſe people are great drinkers of wine, fierce in warres, and much feared of the Iapans: being hurt in fight, they waſh their wounds with ſalt water, other Surgerie haue they none. In their breaſts they are ſayd to cary looking glaſſes: their ſwordes they tie to their heads, in ſuch wiſe, that the handle doe reſt vpon their ſhoulders. Seruice and ceremonies haue they none at all, onely they are woont to worſhip heauen. To Aquita a great towne in that Iaponiſh kingdom, which we call Geuano, they much reſort for marchandiſe, and the Aquitanes likewiſe doe trauell into their countrey, howbeit not often, for that there many of them are ſlaine by the inhabiters.

The Iapaniſh funerals.

Much more concerning this matter I had to write: but to auoyd tediouſneſſe I will come to ſpeake of the Iapans madneſſe againe, who moſt deſirous of vaine glory doe thinke then ſpecially to get immortall fame, when they procure themſelues to be moſt ſumptuouſly and ſolemnly buried: their burials and obſequies in the citie Meaco are done after this maner. About one houre before the dead body be brought foorth, a great multitude of his friends apparelled in their beſt aray goe before vnto the fire, with them goe their kinſwomen and ſuch as bee of their acquaintance, clothed in white (for that is the mourning colour there) with a changeable coloured vaile on their heads. Each woman hath with her alſo, according to her abilitie, all her familie trimmed vp in white mockado: the better ſort and wealthier women goe in litters of Cedar artificially wrought and richly dreſſed. In the ſecond place marcheth a great company of footemen ſumptuouſly apparelled. Then afarre off commeth one of theſe Bonzii maſter of the ceremonies for that ſuperſtition, brauely clad in ſilkes and gold, in a large and high litter excellently well wrought, accompanied with 30 other Bonzii or thereabout, wearing hats, linnen albes, and fine blacke vpper garments. Then attired in aſhe colour (for this colour alſo is mourning) with a long torch of Pineaple, he ſheweth the dead body the way vnto the fire, leſt it either ſtumble or ignorantly go out of the way. Well neere 200 Bonzii folow him ſinging the name of that deuill the which the partie deceaſſed chiefly did worſhip in his life time, and therewithall a very great baſon is beaten euen to the place of fire in ſtead of a bell. Then follow two great paper baſkets hanged open at ſtaues endes full of paper roſes diuerſly coloured, ſuch as beare them doe march but ſlowly, ſhaking euer now and then their ſtaues, that the aforeſayd flowers may fall downe by litle and litle as it were drops of raine: and be whirled about with wind. This ſhower ſay they is an argument that the ſoule of the dead man is gone to paradiſe. After al this, eight beardles Bonzii orderly two and two drag after them on the ground long ſpeares, the points backward, with flags of one cubite a piece, wherein the name alſo of that idole is written. Then there be caried 10 lanterns trimmed with the former inſcription, ouercaſt with a fine vaile, and candles burning in them. Beſides this, two yoong men clothed in aſhe colour beare pineaple torches, not lighted, of three foote length, the which torches ſerue to kindle the fire wherein the dead corpes is to bee burnt. In the ſame colour follow many other that weare on the crownes of their heads faire, litle, threeſquare, blacke lethren caps tied faſt vnder their chinnes (for that is honorable amongſt them) with papers on their heads, wherein the name of the deuill I ſpake of, is written. And to make it the more ſolemne, after commeth a man with a table one cubite long, one foot broad, couered with a very fine white vaile, in both ſides whereof is written in golden letters the aforeſayd name. At the length by foure men is brought foorth the corps ſitting in a gorgeous litter clothed in white, hanging downe his head and holding his hands together like one that prayed: to the reſt of his apparell may you adde an vpper gowne of paper, written full of that booke the which his God is ſayd to haue made, when he liued in the world, by whoſe helpe and merites commonly they doe thinke to be ſaued. The dead man his children come next after him moſt gallantly ſet foorth, the yongeſt whereof carieth likewiſe a pineaple torch to kindle the fire. Laſt of all foloweth a great number of people in ſuch caps as I erſt ſpake of.

They burne their dead.

When they are al come to ẏ place appointed for the obſequie, al the Bonzii wᵗ the whole multitude for the ſpace of one houre, beating pannes and baſons with great clamours, call vpon the name of that deuill, the which being ended, the Obſequie is done in this maner. In the midſt of a great quadrangle railed about, hanged with courſe linnen, and agreeably vnto the foure partes of the world made with foure gates to goe in and out at, is digged a hole: in the hole is laied good ſtore of wood, whereon is raiſed gallantly a waued roofe: before that ſtand two tables furniſhed with diuers kindes of meates, eſpecially drie Figs, Pomegranates and Tartes good ſtore, but neither Fiſh nor Fleſh: vpon one of them ſtandeth alſo a chafer with coales, and in it ſweete wood to make perfumes. When all this is readie, the corde wherewith the litter was caried, is throwen by a long rope into the fire: as many as are preſent ſtriue to take the rope in their handes, vſing their aforeſayd clamours, which done, they goe in proceſſion as it were round about the quadrangle thriſe. Then ſetting the litter on the wood built vp ready for the fire that Bonzius who then is maſter of the ceremonies, ſaieth a verſe that no bodie there vnderſtandeth, whirling thriſe about ouer his head a torch lighted, to ſignifie thereby that the ſoule of the dead man had neither any beginning, ne ſhall haue at any time an ende, and throweth away the torch. Two of the dead man his children, or of his neere kinne, take it vp againe, and ſtanding one at the Eaſt ſide of the litter, the other at the Weſt, doe for honour and reuerence reach it to each other thriſe ouer the dead corps, and ſo caſt it into the pile of wood: by and by they throw in oyle, ſweete wood, and other perfumes, accordingly as they haue plentie, and ſo with a great flame bring the corpes to aſhes: his children in the meane while putting ſweete wood into the chafer at the table with odours, doe ſolemnly and religiouſly worſhip their father as a Saint: which being done, the Bonzii are paied each one in his degree. The maſter of the ceremonies hath for his part fiue duckats, ſometimes tenne, ſometimes twentie, the reſt haue tenne Iulies a piece, or els a certaine number of other preſents called Caxæ. The meate that was ordained, as ſoone as the dead corps friends and all the Bonzii are gone, is left for ſuch as ſerued at the obſequie, for the poore and impotent lazars.

The next day returne to the place of obſequie the dead man his children, his kinred and friends, who gathering vp his aſhes, bones, and teeth, doe put them in a gilded pot, and ſo carie them home, to bee ſet vp in the ſame pot couered with cloth, in the middeſt of their houſes. Many Bonzii returne likewiſe to theſe priuate funerals, and ſo doe they againe the ſeuenth day: then cary they out the aſhes to bee buried in a place appointed, laying thereupon a foureſquare ſtone, wherein is written in great letters drawen all the length of the ſtone, the name of that deuil the which the dead man worſhipped in his life time. Euery day afterward his children reſort vnto the graue with roſes and warme water that the dead corps thirſt not. Nor the ſeuenth day onely, but the ſeuenth moneth and yeere, within their owne houſes they renue this obſequie, to no ſmall commodities and gaine of the Bonzii: great rich men doe ſpend in theſe their funerals 3000 duckats or thereabout, the meaner ſort two or three hundred. Such as for pouertie be not able to go to that charges, are in the night time darkelong without all pompe and ceremonies buried in a dunghill.

They haue another kinde of buriall, eſpecially neere the Sea ſide, for them that bee not yet dead. Theſe fellowes are ſuch, as hauing religiouſly with much deuotion worſhipped Amida, now deſirous to ſee him, doe ſlay themſelues. And firſt they goe certaine dayes begging almes, the which they thruſt into their ſleeues, then preach they in publique a ſermon vnto the people, declaring what they mind to doe, with the great good liking of all ſuch as doe heare them: for euery body wondreth at ſuch a kinde of holineſſe. Then take they hookes to cut downe briars and thornes that might hinder them in their way to heauen, and ſo embarke themſelues in a new veſſell, tying great ſtones about their neckes, armes, loines, thighes, and feete: thus they launching out into the maine Sea be either drowned there, their ſhippe bouged for that purpoſe, or els doe caſt themſelues ouer-boord headlong into the Sea. The emptie barke is out of hand ſet a fire for honours ſake by their friends that folow them in another boat of their owne, thinking it blaſphemie that any mortall creature ſhould afterward once touch the barke that had bene ſo religiouſly halowed.

Truly when we went to Meaco, eight dayes before we came to the Ile of Hiu at Fore towne, ſixe men and two women ſo died. To all ſuch as die ſo the people erecteth a Chappell, and to each of them a pillar and a pole made of Pineaple for a perpetuall monument, hanging vp many ſhreds of paper in ſtickes all the roofe ouer, with many verſes ſet downe in the walles in commendation of that bleſſed company. Wherefore vnto this place both day and night many come very ſuperſtitiouſly in pilgrimage. It happened euen then as Aloiſius Almeida and I went to chriſten a childe wee traueiled that way at what time foure or fiue olde women came foorth out of the aforeſayd chappell with beades in their handes (for in this point alſo the deuill counterfaiteth Chriſtianitie) who partly ſcorned at vs for follie, partly frowned and taunted at our ſmall deuotion, for paſſing by that holy monument without any reuerence or worſhip done thereunto at all.

It remaineth now we ſpeake two or three wordes of thoſe Sermons the Bonzii are woont to make, not ſo many as ours in number, but aſſuredly very well prouided for. The Pulpit is erected in a great temple with a ſilke Canopie ouer it, therein ſtandeth a coſtly ſeate, before the ſeate a table with a bell and a booke. At the houre of Sermon each ſect of the Iapans reſorteth to their owne doctors in diuers Temples. Up goeth the doctor into the Pulpit, and being ſet downe, after that hee hath lordlike looked him about, ſignifieth ſilence with his bell, and ſo readeth a fewe wordes of that booke we ſpake of, the which he expoundeth afterward more at large. Theſe preachers be for the moſt part eloquent, and apt to drawe with their ſpeach the mindes of their hearers. Wherefore to this ende chieflie(ſuch is their greedineſſe) tendeth all their talke, that the people bee brought vnder the colour of godlineſſe to enrich their monaſteries, promiſing to each one ſo much the more happineſſe in the life to come, how much the greater coſtes and charges they bee at in Church matters and obſequies: notwithſtanding this multitude of ſuperſtitious Sects and companies, and the diuerſities thereof amongſt themſelues: yet in this principally all their Superintendents doe trauell ſo to perſwade their Nouices in their owne tales and lies, that they thinke nothing els trueth, nothing els ſure to come by euerlaſting ſaluation, nothing els woorth the hearing. Whereunto they adde other ſubtleties, as in going grauitie, in countenance, apparell, and in all outward ſhew, comelineſſe. Whereby the Iapans mindes are ſo nouſled in wicked opinions, & doe conceiue thereby ſuch truſt and hope of euerlaſting ſaluation, that not onely at home, but alſo abroad in euery corner of the towne continually almoſt they run ouer their beades, humbly aſking of Amida and Xaca, wealth, honour, good health, and euerlaſting ioyes. Thus then, deare brethren, may you thinke how greatly they need the helpe of God, that either doe bring the Goſpell into this countrey, or receiuing it brought vnto them, doe forſake idolatrie and ioine themſelues with Chriſt, being aſſaulted by ſo many ſnares of the deuill, troubled with the daily diſſuaſions of their Bonzii, and finally, ſo iniuriouſly, ſo hardly, ſo ſharpely vexed of their kinred and friends, that except the grace of God obtained by the ſacrifices and prayers of the Catholique church doe helpe vs, it cannot be choſen but that the faith and conſtancie of many, if not of all, in theſe firſt beginnings of our churches, will greatly be put in ieopardie. So much the more it ſtandeth you vpon that ſo earneſtly long for the health of ſoules, to commend ſpecially theſe Iapaniſh flocks vnto our Lord.

We came to Sacaio the eight and twentie day of Ianuary: Aloiſius Almeida firſt for buſineſſe, but afterward let by ſickneſſe, ſtaied there ſome while, but I parting the next day from thence came thirteene leagues off to Meaco the laſt of Ianuarie. Of my comming all the Chriſtians tooke great comfort, but ſpecially Gaſpar Vilela who in 6 yeres had ſeen none of our companie at Meaco: his yeeres are not yet fortie, but his gray haires ſhew him to be ſeuentie, ſo vehemently is his litle body afflicted and worne with extreme cold. Hee ſpeaketh Iapaniſh ſo ſkilfully after the phraſe of Meaco (the which for the renowme of this people and royal ſeat of the king is beſt accounted of) that hee doeth both confeſſe and preach in that language. Certaine godly bookes alſo he hath done into that ſpeach, not omitting to tranſlate other as laiſure ſuffreth him. To make an ende, our Lord for his goodneſſe vouchſafe to preſerue vs all continually, and to giue vs ayde both rightly to interprete his will, and well to doe the ſame. From Meaco the 19 of February 1565.

Other ſuch like matter is handled both in other his letters, and alſo in the Epiſtles written by his companions to be ſeene at large in the aforeſaid volume. Amongſt the reſt this ſeemed in my iudgement one of the principall, and therefore the rather I tooke vpon me to do it into Engliſh.

Of the Iles beyond Iapan in the way from China to the Moluccas.

AMongſt other Iles in the Aſian ſea betwixt Cantan a Chiniſh hauen in Cathaio & the Moluccas, much ſpoken of in the Indian hiſtories and painted out in Maps, Ainan and Santianum are very famous. Ainan ſtandeth 19 degrees on this ſide of the Equinoctiall line nere China, from whence the Chiniſh nation haue their prouiſion for ſhipping and other neceſſaries requiſite for their Nauie. There ſtaied Balthaſar Gagus a great traueller 5 moneths, who deſcribeth that place after this maner. Ainan is a goodly countrey ful of Indian fruits & all kind of victuals, beſides great ſtore of iewels and pearle, well inhabited, the townes built of ſtone, the people rude in conditions, apparelled in diuers coloured rugs, with two ore hornes, as it were, made of fine cypres hanging downe about their eares, and a paire of ſharpe cyzers at their foreheads.

Ainan.

De reb. Iap. li. 4

The cauſe wherefore they go in ſuch attire I could not vnderſtand, except it bee for that they do counterfeit the deuil in the forme of a brute beaſt, offring themſelues vp to him.

Santianum.

Santianum is an Ile neere vnto the hauen Cantan in the confines likewiſe of China, famous for the death of that worthy traueiler and godly profeſſour and painfull doctor of the Indian nation in matters concerning religion, Francis Xauier, who after great labours, many iniuries, and calamities infinite ſuffred with much patience, ſingular ioy and gladneſſe of mind, departed in a cabben made of bowes and ruſhes vpon a deſert mountaine, no leſſe voyd of all worldly commodities, then endued with all ſpirituall bleſſings, out of this life, the 2 day of December, the yeere of our Lord 1552. after that many thouſand of theſe Eaſterlings were brought by him to the knowledge of Chriſt. Of this holy man, his particular vertues, and ſpecially trauell, and wonderfull works in that region, of other many litle Iles (yet not ſo litle, but they may right wel be written of at laiſure) all the latter hiſtories of the Indian regions are full.

An excellent treatiſe of the kingdome of China, and of the eſtate and gouernment thereof: Printed in Latine at Macao a citie of the Portugals in China, An. Dom. 1590. and written Dialogue-wiſe. The ſpeakers are Linus, Leo, and Michael.

Linus.

Concerning the kingdome of China (Michael) which is our next neighbour, we haue heard and daily do heare ſo many reports, that we are to requeſt at your hands rather a true then a large diſcourſe and narration thereof. And if there be ought in your knowledge beſides that which by continual rumours is waxen ſtale among vs, we will right gladly giue diligent eare vnto it.

The ſituation and limites of China.

Chinian Coſmographers.

The rich reuenues of the king of China.

Fifteene great prouinces in China.

The ſeats roiall of the king of China.

Michael. Becauſe the report of this moſt famous kingdome is growen ſo common among vs, reducing diuers and manifold particulars into order, I will eſpecially aime at the trueth of things receiued from the fathers of the ſocietie, which euen now at this preſent are conuerſant in China. Firſt of all therefore it is not vnknowen, that of all parts of the maine continent this kingdom of China is ſituate moſt Eaſterly: albeit certaine Ilands, as our natiue Iapon, & the Ile of Manilia ſtand more Eaſterly then China it ſelfe. As touching the limites & bounds of this kingdom, we may appoint the firſt towards ẏ Weſt to be a certaine Ile commonly called Hainan, which ſtandeth in 19 degrees of Northerly latitude. For the continent next adioining vnto this Ile trendeth towardes the Eaſt, and that eſpecially, where the promontorie of the citie called Nimpo or Liampo doeth extend it ſelfe. Howbeit, from thet place declining Northward, it ſtretcheth foorth an huge length, inſomuch that the fartheſt Chinian inhabitants that way doe behold the North pole eleuated, at leaſt 50 degrees, and perhaps more alſo: whereupon a man may eaſilie coniecture (that I may ſpeake like an Aſtronomer) how large the latitude of this kingdom is, when as it containeth about more then 540 leagues in direct extenſion towards the North. But as concerning the longitude which is accounted from Eaſt to Weſt, it is not ſo exactly found out, that it may be diſtinguiſhed into degrees. Howbeit certaine it is, that according to the Map wherein the people of China deſcribe the forme of their kingdom, the latitude thereof doeth not much exceed ẏ longitude. This kingdom therfore is, without all peraduenture, of all earthly kingdoms the moſt large and ſpacious: for albeit diuers other kings vnder their iuriſdiction containing in dimenſions more length & breadth then all China, do poſſeſſe very many kingdoms & far diſtant aſunder: yet none of thē all enioieth any one kingdom ſo large and ſo ample, as the moſt puiſſant king of China doeth. Now, if we ſhall make enquirie into his reuenues and tributes, true it is, that this king, of all others, is endued with the greateſt and the richeſt, both in regard of the fertilitie & greatnes of his dominions, & alſo by reaſon of the ſeuere collection and exaction of his duties: yea, tributes are impoſed vpon his ſubiects, not onely for lands, houſes, and impoſt of marchandiſe, but alſo for euery perſon in each family. It is likewiſe to be vnderſtood, that almoſt no lord or potentate in China hath authoritie to leuie vnto himſelfe any peculiar reuenues, or to collect any rents within the precincts of his ſeigniories, al ſuch power belonging onely vnto the king: whereas in Europe the contrary is moſt commonly ſeen, as we haue before ſignified. In this moſt large kingdom are conteined 15 prouinces, euery one of which were in it ſelfe ſufficient to be made one great kingdom. Six of theſe prouinces do border vpon the ſea, namely (ẏ I may vſe the names of the Chinians thēſelues) Coantum, Foquien, Chequiam, Nanquin, Xantum, Paquin: the other 9 be in-land prouinces, namely, Quianſi, Huquam, Honan, Xienſi, Xanſi, Suchuon, Queicheu, Iūnan, Coanſi. Amongſt all the foreſayd prouinces, two are allotted for the kings court and ſeat roial, that is to ſay, Paquin for his court in the North, and Nanquin for his court in the South. For the kings of China were woont to be reſident altogether at the South court: but afterward, by reaſon of the manifold and cruell warres mooued by the Tartars, they were conſtrained to deſire their princely ſeate and habitation in that extreme prouince of the North. Whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that thoſe Northren confines of the kingdom doe abound with many moe fortreſſes, martiall engines, and garriſons of ſouldiers.

The warlike munitions of China, & a marueilous wall.

Leo. I haue heard, amongſt thoſe munitions, a certaine ſtrange and admirable wall reported of, wherewith the people of China doe repreſſe and driue backe the Tartars attempting to inuade their territories. Michael. Certes that wall which you haue heard tell of is moſt woorthie of admiration; for it runneth alongſt the borders of three Northerlie prouinces, Xienſi, Xanſi, and Paquin, and is ſayd to containe almoſt three hundred leagues in length, and in ſuch ſort to bee built, that it hindereth not the courſes and ſtreames of any riuers, their chanels being ouerthwarted and fortified with wonderfull bridges and other defences. Yet is it not vnlikely, that the ſayd wall is built in ſuch ſort, that onely lowe and eaſie paſſages bee therewith ſtopped and enuironed; but the mountaines running betweene thoſe lowe paſſages are, by their owne naturall ſtrength, and inacceſſible heigth, a ſufficient fortification agaynſt the enemie. Linus. Tell vs (Michael) whether the kingdome of China be ſo frequented with inhabitants, as wee haue often bene informed, or no? Michael. It is (Linus) in very deed a moſt populous kingdom, as I haue bene certified from the fathers of the ſocietie: who hauing ſeene ſundry prouinces of Europe renoumed for the multitude of their inhabitants, doe notwithſtanding greatly admire the infinite ſwarmes of people in China. Howbeit theſe multitudes are not pel-mel and confuſiuely diſperſed ouer the land, but moſt conueniently and orderly diſtributed in their townes and famous cities: of which aſſemblies there are diuers kindes among the Chinians. For they haue certaine principal cities called by the name of Fu: other inferior cities called Cheu: and of a third kind alſo named Hien, which be indeed walled townes, but are not priuileged with the dignities and prerogatiues of cities. To theſe may be added two other kindes of leſſer townes, which are partly villages, and partly garriſons of ſouldiers. Of the firſt and principall kind is that moſt noble citie ſtanding neere vnto the port of Macao, called by the Chinians Coanchefu, but by the Portugals commonly termed Cantam, which is rather the common name of the prouince, thē a word of their proper impoſition. Vnto the third kind appertaineth a towne, which is yet nigher vnto the port of Macao, called by the Portugals Anſam, but by the Chinians Hianſanhien. Al the foreſayd prouinces therefore haue their greater cities named Fu, & their leſſer cities called Cheu, vnto both of which the other townes may be added. Moreouer, in euery prouince there is a certain principal city which is called the Metropolitane thereof, wherein the chief magiſtrates haue their place of reſidence, as the principal citie by me laſt mentioned, which is the head of the whole prouince called Coantum. The number of the greater cities throughout the whole kingdom is more then 150, and there is the ſame or rather a greater multitude of inferiour cities. Of walled townes not endued with the priuileges of cities there are mo then 1120: the villages & garriſons can ſcarce be numbred: ouer & beſides the which conuents it is incredible what a number of coūtrie farmes or granges there be: for it is not eaſie to find any place deſert or void of inhabitants in all that land. Now in the ſea, in riuers, & in barks there are ſuch abundance of people, and of whole families inhabiting, that euen the Europæans themſelues doe greatly wonder thereat: inſomuch that ſome (albeit beyond meaſure) haue bene perſwaded that there are as many people dwelling vpon the water as vpon the land. Neither were they induced ſo to thinke altogether without probabilitie: for whereas the kingdom of China is in all parts thereof interfuſed with commodious riuers, & in many places conſiſteth of waters, barges & boats being euery-where very common, it might eaſily bee ſuppoſed, that the number of water-men was equal vnto the land-inhabitants. Howbeit, that is to be vnderſtood by amplification, whereas the cities do ſwarme ſo ful with citizens & the countrie with peaſants. Leo. The abundance of people which you tell vs of ſeemeth very ſtrange: whereupon I coniecture the ſoile to be fertile, the aire to be holeſome, and the whole kingdom to be at peace. Michael. You haue (friend Leo) ful iudicially coniectured thoſe three: for they do all ſo excel, ẏ which of the three in this kingdom be more excellent, it is not eaſie to diſcerne. And hence it is that this common opinion hath bene riſe among the Portugals, namely, that the kingdom of China was neuer viſited with thoſe three moſt heauy & ſharpe ſcourges of mankind, warre, famine, & peſtilence. But that opinion is more common then true: ſithens there haue bene moſt terrible inteſtine and ciuile warres, as in many and moſt autenticall hiſtories it is recorded: ſithens alſo that ſome prouinces of the ſayd kingdom, euen in theſe our dayes, haue bene afflicted with peſtilence and contagious diſeaſes, and with famine. Howbeit, that the foreſaid three benefits do mightily flouriſh and abound in China, it cannot be denied. For (that I may firſt ſpeake of the ſalubritie of the aire) the fathers of the ſocietie themſelues are witneſſes,

Abundance of inhabitants in China.

Cities and townes.

The Chinian riuers greatly inhabited.

Holeſome aire, plenty & peace in China.

Chinian ſtories.

that ſcarcely in any other realme there are ſo many found that liue vnto decrepite and extreme old age: ſo great a multitude is there of ancient and graue perſonages: neither doe they vſe ſo many confections and medicines, nor ſo manifold and ſundry wayes of curing diſeaſes, as wee ſaw accuſtomed in Europe. For amongſt them they haue no Phlebotomie or letting of blood: but all their cures, as ours alſo in Iapon, are atchieued by faſting, decoctions of herbes, & light or gentle potions. But in this behalfe let euery nation pleaſe themſelues with their owne cuſtomes. Now, in fruitfulnes of ſoile this kingdom certes doth excel, far ſurpaſſing all other kingdoms of the Eaſt: yet is it nothing comparable vnto the plentie and abundance of Europe, as I haue declared at large in the former treatiſes. But the kingdom of China is, in this regard, ſo highly extolled, becauſe there is not any region in the Eaſt partes that aboundeth ſo with marchandiſe, and from whence ſo much traffique is ſent abroad.

The city of Coancheſu, aliàs Cantam,

For whereas this kingdome is moſt large & full of nauigable riuers, ſo that commodities may eaſilie be conueyed out of one prouince into antother: the Portugals doe find ſuch abundance of wares within one and the ſame Citie, (which perhaps is the greateſt Mart throughout the whole kingdome) that they are verily perſwaded, that the ſame region, of all others, moſt aboundeth with marchandiſe: which notwithſtanding is to be vnderſtood of the Orientall regions: albeit there are ſome kindes of marchandiſe, wherewith the land of China is better ſtored then any other kingdom.

Great abundance of gold in China.

This region affordeth eſpecially ſundry kinds of mettals, of which the chiefe, both in excellencie & in abundance, is gold, whereof ſo many Pezoes are brought from China to India, and to our countrey of Iapon, that I heard ſay, that in one and the ſame ſhip, this preſent yeere, 2000 ſuch pieces conſiſting of maſſie gold, as the Portugals commonly call golden loaues, were brought vnto vs for marchandiſe: and one of theſe loaues is worth almoſt 100 duckats. Hence it is that in the kingdom of China ſo many things are adorned with gold, as for example, beds, tables, pictures, images, litters wherein nice and daintie dames are caried vpon their ſeruaunts backes. Neither are theſe golden loaues onely bought by the Portugals, but alſo great plentie of gold-twine and leaues of gold; for the Chinians can very cunningly beate and extenuate gold into plates and leaues.

Great ſtore of ſiluer.

There is alſo great ſtore of ſiluer, whereof (that I may omit other arguments) it is no ſmall demonſtration, that euery yeere there are brought into the citie commonly called Cantam by the Portugal marchants to buie wares, at the leaſt 400 Seſtertium thereof, and yet nothing in a maner is conuieed out of the Chinian kingdom: becauſe the people of China abounding with all neceſſaries, are not greatly inquiſitiue or deſirous of any marchandiſe from other kingdomes. I doe here omit the Siluer mines whereof there are great numbers in China, albeit there is much circumſpection vſed in digging the ſiluer thereout: for the king ſtandeth much in feare leaſt it may bee an occaſion to ſtirre vp the couetous and greedie humour of many. Nowe their ſiluer which they put to vſes is for the moſt part paſſing fine, and purified from all droſſe, and therefore in trying it they vſe great diligence. What ſhould I ſpeake of their iron, copper, lead, tinne, and other mettals, and alſo of their quick-ſiluer? Of all which in the realme of China there is great abundance, and from thence they are tranſported into diuers countreys.

Pearles.

Hereunto may bee added the wonderfull ſtore of pearles, which, at the Ile of Hainan, are found in ſhell-fiſhes taken very cunningly by certaine Diuers, and doe much enlarge the kings reuenues.

Great ſtore of ſilke in China.

But now let vs proceed vnto the Silke or Bombycine fleece, whereof there is great plentie in China: ſo that euen as the huſbandmen labour in manuring the earth, and in ſowing of Rice; ſo likewiſe the women doe employ a great part of their time in preſeruing of ſilke-wormes, and in keeming and weauing of Silke. Hence it is that euery yeere the King and Queene with great ſolemnitie come foorth into a publique place, the one of them touching a plough, and the other a Mulberie tree, with the leaues whereof Silke-wormes are nouriſhed: and both of them by this ceremonie encouraging both men and women vnto their vocation and labour: whereas otherwiſe, all the whole yeere throughout, no man beſides the principall magiſtrates, may once attaine to the ſight of the king.

Silke brought into Iapon.

Of this Silke or Bombycine fleece there is ſuch abundance, that three ſhippes for the moſt part comming out of India to the port of Macao, & at the leaſt one euery yeere comming vnto vs, are laden eſpecially with this fraight, and it is vſed not onely in India, but caried euen vnto Portugal. Neither is the Fleet it ſelfe onely tranſported thence, but alſo diuers & ſundry ſtuffes wouen thereof, for the Chinians do greatly excel in the Art of weauing, and do very much reſemble our weauers of Europe.

Spices, Camphire, & muſke.

Moreouer the kingdom of China aboundeth with moſt coſtlie ſpices & odours, and eſpecially with cynamom (albeit not comparable to the cynamom of Zeilan) with camphire alſo & muſke, which is very principal & good. Muſke deriueth his name frō a beaſt of the ſame name (which beaſt reſembleth a Beuer) frō the parts whereof bruſed & putrified proceedeth a moſt delicate & fragrant ſmel which the Portugals highly eſteem, cōmonly calling thoſe parts of the foreſaid beaſts (becauſe they are like vnto the gorges of foules) Papos, & conuey great plenty of them into India, & to vs of Iapon. But who would beleeue, that there were ſo much goſſipine or cotton-wool in China; whereof ſuch variety of clothes are made like vnto linnen; which we our ſelues do ſo often vſe, & which alſo is conueied by ſea into ſo many regions? Let vs now intreat of that earthen or pliable matter commonly called porcellan, which is pure white, & is to be eſteemed the beſt ſtuffe of that kind in the whole world: whereof veſſels of all kinds are very curiouſly framed. I ſay, it is the beſt earthen matter in all the world, for three qualities; namely, the cleanneſſe, the beauty, & the ſtrength thereof. There is indeed other matter to be found more glorious, and more coſtly, but none ſo free from vncleannes, and ſo durable: this I adde, in regard of glaſſe, which indeed is immaculate and cleane, but may eaſily be broken in pieces. This matter is digged, not thorowout the whole region of China, but onely in one of the fifteene prouinces called Quianſi, wherein continually very many artificers are imployed about the ſame matter: neither doe they onely frame thereof ſmaller veſſels, as diſhes, platters, ſalt-ſellers, ewers, and ſuch like, but alſo certaine huge tunnes, and veſſels of great quantity, being very finely and cunningly wrought, which, by reaſon of the danger and difficulty of carriage, are not tranſported out of the realme, but are vſed onely within it, and eſpecially in the kings court. The beauty of this matter is much augmented by variety of picture, which is layed in certaine colours vpon it, while it is yet new, golde alſo being added thereunto, which maketh the foreſayd veſſels to appeare moſt beautifull. It is wonderfull how highly the Portugals do eſteeme thereof, ſeeing they do, with great difficulty, tranſport the ſame, not onely to vs of Iapon and into India, but alſo into ſundry prouinces of Europe. Vnto the marchandize aboue-mentioned may be added diuers and ſundry plants, the rootes whereof be right holeſome for mens bodies, and very medicinable, which are brought vnto our Iles of Iapon, and vnto many other Ilands, amongſt the which that wood may be reckoned, which (by a ſynechdoche) is called The wood of China, being of notable force to expell out of mens bodies thoſe humours, which would breed contagious diſeaſes. To theſe you may adde ſugar-canes (for in the realme of China there is great ſtore of excellent ſugar) which is conueyed by the Portugals very plentifully, both into our countrey, and alſo into India. My ſpeeches vttered immediatly before concerned marchandize onely, in regard whereof this kingdome is beneficiall not to itſelfe alone, but moſt profitable to many other nations alſo. As for thoſe fruits which pertaine to yerely ſuſtenance and common food, they can ſcarſe be numbred: albeit, of thoſe three commodities which they of Europe ſo greatly account of; namely of cornes, vines, and oliues the land of China is not very capable: for the Chinians know not ſo much as the name of an Oliue tree (out of the fruit whereof oile is expreſſed) neither yet the name of a vine. The prouince of Paquin is not altogether deſtitute of wine, but whether it be brought from other places, or there made, I am not able to ſay: although it aboundeth with many other, and thoſe not vnpleaſant liquours, which may ſerue in the ſtead of wine it ſelfe. Now, as touching corne, there is indeed wheat ſowen in all the prouinces, howbeit riſe is in farre more vſe and requeſt then it: and ſo in regard of theſe two commodities profitable for mans life; namely, wine and corne; the kingdome of China and our countrey of Iapon may be compared together.

Leo. You haue diſcourſed (Michael) of the fruitfulneſſe of China, whereof I haue often heard, that it is no leſſe pleaſant then fruitful, and I haue bene eſpecially induced ſo to thinke, at the ſight of the Chinian maps. Michael. The thing it ſelfe agrees right well with the picture: for they that haue ſeene the mediterran or inner parts of the kingdome of China, do report it to be a moſt amiable countrey, adorned with plenty of woods, with abundance of fruits and graſſe, and with woonderfull variety of riuers, wherewith the Chinian kingdome is watered like a garden; diuers of which riuers doe naturally flowe, and others by arte and induſtry are deriued into ſundry places. But now I will intreat of the tranquillity and peace of China, after I haue ſpoken a word or two concerning the maners of the inhabitants. This nation is indued with excellent wit and dexterity for the attaining of all artes, and, being very conſtant in their owne cuſtomes, they lightly regard the cuſtomes or faſhions of other people. They vſe one and the ſame kinde of veſture, yet ſo, that there is ſome diſtinction betweene the apparell of the magiſtrate & of the common ſubiect. They all of them do weare long haire vpon their heads, and, after the maner of women, do curiouſly keame their dainty locks hanging downe to the ground, and, hauing twined and bound them vp, they couer them with calles, wearing ſundry caps thereupon, according to their age and condition. It ſeemeth that in olde time one language was common to all the prouinces: notwithſtanding, by reaſon of variety of pronunciation, it is very much altered, and is diuided into ſundry idiomes or proprieties of ſpeech, according to the diuers prouinces: howbeit, among the magiſtrates, and in publike aſſemblies of iudgement, there is one and the very ſame kinde of language vſed thorowout the whole realme, from the which (as I haue ſayd) the ſpeech of ech prouince differeth not a little. Moreouer this people is moſt loyall and obedient vnto the king king and his magiſtrates, which is the principall cauſe of their tranquillity & peace. For whereas the common ſort doe apply themſelues vnto the diſcretion and becke of inferiour magiſtrates, and the inferiour magiſtrates of the ſuperiour, and the ſuperiour magiſtrates of the king himſelfe, framing and compoſing all their actions and affaires vnto that leuell: a world it is to ſee, in what equability and indifferency of iuſtice all of them do leade their liues, and how orderly the publike lawes are adminiſtred. Which thing notwithſtanding ſhall be handled more at large, when we come to intreat of the gouernment. Linus. Tell vs now (Michael) of the induſtry of that people, whereof we haue heard great reports. Michael. Their induſtry is eſpecially to be diſcerned in manuary artes and occupations, and therein the Chinians do ſurpaſſe moſt of theſe Eaſterly nations. For there are ſuch a number of artificers ingeniouſly and cunningly framing ſundry deuices out of golde, ſiluer, and other mettals, as likewiſe of ſtone, wood, and other matters conuenient for mans vſe, that the ſtreets of cities being repleniſhed with their ſhops and fine workemanſhip, are very woonderfull to beholde. Beſides whom alſo there are very many Painters, vſing either the penſill or the needle (of which the laſt ſort are called Embrotherers) and others alſo that curiouſly worke golde-twine vpon cloth either of linnen or of cotton: whoſe operations of all kinds are diligently conueyed by the Portugals into India. Their induſtry doth no leſſe appeare in founding of gunnes and in making of gun-powder, whereof are made many rare and artificiall fire-works. To theſe may be added the arte of Printing, albeit their letters be in maner infinite and moſt difficult, the portraitures whereof they cut in wood or in braſſe, and with maruellous facilitie they dayly publiſh huge multitudes of books. Vnto theſe mechanicall & illiberall crafts you may adde two more; that is to ſay, nauigation and diſcipline of warre; both of which haue bene in ancient times moſt diligently practiſed by the inhabitants of China: for (as we haue before ſignified in the third dialogue) the Chinians ſailing euen as farre as India, ſubdued ſome part therof vnto their owne dominion: howbeit afterward, leaſt they ſhould diminiſh the forces of their realme by diſperſing them into many prouinces, altering their counſell, they determined to containe themſelues within their owne limits: within which limits (as I haue ſayd) there were in olde time vehement and cruell warres, both betweene the people of China themſelues, and alſo againſt the Tartarian king, who inuaded their kingdome, and by himſelfe and his ſucceſſours, for a long ſeaſon, vſurped the gouernment thereof. Howbeit the kings of the Tartarian race being worne out, and their ſtocke and family being vtterly aboliſhed, the Chinians began to lift vp their heads, and to aduance themſelues, inioying for theſe 200 yeeres laſt paſt exceeding peace and tranquillity, and at this day the poſterity of the ſame king that expelled the Tartars, with great dignity weareth the crowne, and wieldeth the royall ſcepter. Albeit therefore the people of China (eſpecially they that inhabit Southerly from the prouince of Paquin) are, for the moſt part, by reaſon of continuall eaſe and quiet, growen effeminate, and their courage is abated, notwithſtanding they would prooue notable and braue ſouldiers, if they ioyned vſe and exerciſe vnto their naturall fortitude. As a man may eaſily obſerue in them, that maintaine continuall warres againſt the moſt barbarous and cruel Tartars. Howbeit in this kingdome of China there is ſo great regard of military diſcipline, that no city nor towne there is deſtitute of a gariſon, the captaines and gouernours keeping ech man his order; which all of them, in euery prouince, are ſubiect vnto the kings lieutenant generall for the warres, whom they call Chumpin, and yet he himſelfe is ſubiect vnto the Tutan or viceroy. Let vs now come vnto that arte, which the Chinians do moſt of all profeſſe, and which we may, not vnfitly, call literature or learning. For although it be commonly reported, that many liberall ſciences, and eſpecially naturall and morall phyloſophy are ſtudied in China, and that they haue Vniuerſities there, wherein ſuch ingenuous artes are deliuered and taught, yet, for the moſt part, this opinion is to be eſteemed more popular then true: but I will declare, vpon what occaſion this conceit firſt grew. The people of China doe, aboue all things, profeſſe the arte of literature; and learning it moſt diligently, they imploy themſelues a long time and the better part of their age therein. For this cauſe, in all cities and townes, yea, and in pety villages alſo, there are certaine ſchole-maſters hired for ſtipends to inſtruct children: and their literature being (as ours in Iapon is alſo) in maner infinite, their children are put to ſchole euen from their infancy and tender yeeres, from whence notwithſtanding ſuch are taken away, as are iudged to be vnfit for the ſame purpoſe, and are trained vp to marchandiſe or to manuary ſciences: but the reſidue do ſo dedicate themſelues to the ſtudy of learning, that (a ſtrange thing it is to conſider) being conuerſant in the principall books, they will eaſily tel you, if they be aſked the queſtion, how many letters be conteined in euery page, and where ech letter is placed. Now, for the greater progreſſe and increaſe of learning, they (as the maner is in Europe) do appoint three degrees to the attaining of noble ſciences; that is to ſay, the loweſt, the middle degree, and the higheſt. Graduates of the firſt degree are called Siuſai, of the ſecond

Quingin, and of the the third Chinzu. And in ech city or walled towne there is a publique houſe called the Schoole, and vnto that all they doe reſort from all priuate and pety-ſchooles that are minded to obtaine the firſt degree; where they do amplifie a ſentence or theame propounded vnto them by ſome magiſtrate: and they, whoſe ſtile is more elegant and refined, are, in ech city, graced with the firſt degree. Of ſuch as aſpire vnto the ſecond degree triall is made onely in the metropolitan or principall city of the prouince, whereunto, they of the firſt degree, euery third yere, haue recourſe, and, in one publike houſe or place of aſſembly, doe, the ſecond time, make an oration of another ſentence obſcurer then the former, and doe vndergo a more ſeuere examination. Now, there is commonly ſuch an huge multitude of people, that this laſt yere, in the foreſayd famous city of Cantam, by reaſon of the incredible aſſembly of perſons flocking to that publike act or commencement, at the firſt entrance of the doores, there were many troden vnder foot, and quelled to death, as we haue bene moſt certainly informed. Moreouer they that ſue for the higheſt degree are ſubiect vnto a moſt ſeuere and exact cenſure, whereby they are to be examined at the Kings Court onely, and that alſo euery third yere next inſuing the ſayd yere wherein graduates of the ſecond degree are elected in ech prouince, and, a certaine number being preſcribed vnto euery particular prouince, they do aſcend vnto that higheſt pitch of dignity, which is in ſo great regard with the king himſelfe, that the three principall graduates do, for honours ſake, drinke off a cup filled euen with the Kings owne hand, and are graced with other ſolemnities. Out of this order the chiefe magiſtrates are choſen: for after that they haue attained vnto this third degree, being a while trained vp in the lawes of the realme, and in the precepts of vrbanity, they are admitted vnto diuers functions. Neither are we to thinke that the Chinians be altogether deſtitute of other artes. For, as touching morall philoſophy, all thoſe books are fraught with the precepts thereof, which, for their inſtructions ſake, are alwayes conuerſant in the hands of the foreſayd ſtudents, wherein ſuch graue and pithy ſentences are ſet downe, that, in men void of the light of the Goſpell, more can not be deſired. They haue books alſo that intreat of things and cauſes naturall, but herein it is to be ſuppoſed, that aſwell their books as ours do abound with errors. There be other books among them, that diſcourſe of herbs and medicines, and others of chiualry and martiall affaires. Neither can I here omit, that certaine men of China (albeit they be but few, and rare to be found) are excellent in the knowledge of aſtronomy, by which knowledge of theirs the dayes of the new moone incident to euery moneth are truely diſpoſed and digeſted, and are committed to writing and publiſhed: beſides, they doe moſt infallibly foretell the eclipſes of the Sun and Moone: and whatſoeuer knowledge in this arte we of Iapon haue, it is deriued from them. Leo. We doe freely confeſſe that (Michael) ſithens our books intreating of the ſame arte are, a great part of them, written in the characters or letters of China. But now, inſtruct you vs as touching their maner of gouernment, wherein the Chinians are ſayd greatly to excell. Michael. That, that, in very deed, is their chiefe arte, and vnto that all their learning and exerciſe of letters is directed. Whereas therefore, in the kingdome of China, one onely king beares rule ouer ſo many prouinces, it is ſtrange what a number of Magiſtrates are by him created to adminiſter publique affaires. For (to omit them which in ech Towne and City haue iuriſdiction ouer the townſmen and citizens) there are three principall Magiſtrates in euery prouince. The firſt is he that hath to deale in caſes criminall, and is called Ganchaſu: the ſecond is the Kings Foſterer, and is called Puchinſu: the third is the Lieu-tenant generall for the warres, named, as we ſayd before, Chumpin. Theſe three therefore haue their place of reſidence in the chiefe City of the prouince: and the two former haue certaine aſſociates of their owne order, but of inferiour authority, appointed in diuers Cities and Townes, vnto whom, according to the variety of cauſes, the Gouernours of Townes, and the Maiors of Cities doe appeale. Howbeit the three forenamed Magiſtrates are in ſubiection vnto the Tutan, that is, the Vice-roy, ordained in ech prouince. And all theſe Magiſtrates beare office for the ſpace of three yeeres together; yet ſo, that for the gouerning of ech prouince, not any of the ſame prouince, but ſtrangers, that is, men of another prouince, are ſelected: whereof it commeth to paſſe, that the Iudges may giue ſentence with a farre more entire and incorrupt minde, then if they were among their owne kinſefolke and allies. Ouer and beſides all theſe, there is an annuall or yeerely Magiſtrate, which is called Chaien, whoſe duety it is to make inquiſition of all crimes, and eſpecially the crimes of Magiſtrates, and alſo to puniſh common offences: but concerning the faults of the great magiſtrates to admoniſh the king himſelfe. Of this order, euery yere, are ſent out of the Kings Court, for ech prouince, one; and going ouer all the Cities and Townes thereof, they do moſt diligently ranſacke and ſerch out all crimes, and vpon them which are impriſoned they inflict due puniſhment, or, being found not guilty, they diſmiſſe them vnpuniſhed. Hence it is, that all Magiſtrates greatly fearing to be called in queſtion by the Chaien are well kept within the limits of their callings. Beſides all theſe Magiſtrates there is at either Court, namely in the North, and in the South, a Senate or honourable aſſembly of graue counſellours, vnto the which, out of all prouinces, according to the neereneſſe and diſtance of the place, affaires of greater weight and moment are referred, and by their authority diuers Magiſtrates are created: howbeit the managing and expedition of principall affaires is committed vnto the Senate of Paquin. Moreouer there are euery yeere certaine Magiſtrates appointed in ech prouince, to goe vnto the king: and euery third yeere all the Gouernours of Cities and of Townes do viſit him at once, what time triall is made of them that aſpire vnto the third degree: vpon which occaſion there is at the ſame time an incredible number of people at the Kings Court. By reaſon of this excellent order and harmony of Magiſtrates placed one vnder another, it can ſcarſe be imagined, what ſweet peace and tranquility flouriſheth thorowout the whole realme, eſpecially ſithens, after ſpeedy inquiſition, perſons that are guilty be put (as the maner is there) to the puniſhment of the baſtonado: neither yet are ſuits or actions any long time delayed. Alſo it is not to be omitted, that for the obtaining of any dignity or magiſtracy, the way is open, without all reſpect of gentry or blood, vnto all men, if they be learned, and eſpecially if they haue attained vnto the third and higheſt degree aforeſayd. Neither can it be expreſſed how obedient and duetifull the common ſort are vnto their Magiſtrates, and with what magnificence and pompe the ſayd Magiſtrates come abroad: for the moſt part of them haue fiftie or threeſcore Sergeants attending vpon them, and going before them, two and two in a ranke: ſome of them carrying Halberds, Maces, and Battle-axes: ſome trailing iron chaines vpon the ground: others holding great roddes or ſtaues of a certaine kinde of reede, wherewith malefactours are puniſhed, in their hands: and two there are that carry, incloſed in a caſe, the Kings ſeale peculiar for ech office: and many others alſo, that ſhew ſundry ſpectacles vnto the people: whereunto may be added the horrible out-cries and ſhowtes, which betweene whiles they vtter, to ſtrike a terrour into the hearts of all men: and at length come the Magiſtrates themſelues, being carried in a throne vpon the backs of foure men, ſixe men, or eight men, according to the dignity of their office. Now, as concerning their houſes, they are very large and ſtately, being built and furniſhed with all neceſſary ſtuffe, at the Kings owne coſt, in the which, ſo long as their magiſtracy laſteth, they leade a braue and an honourable life. The ſayd houſes are without variety of ſtories one aboue another, which in the kingdome of China and in our Iles of Iapon alſo are not ordinarily vſed for habitation, but either to keepe watch and ward, or els for ſolace and recreations ſake (for the which purpoſes, eight moſt lofty turrets of nine ſtories high are built) or els for the defence of Cities. Howbeit in other regardes theſe buildings doe ſhew foorth no ſmall magnificence: for they haue their ciſternes for the receit of raine-water, which are adorned with beautifull trees, ſet in order, round about them: and they haue alſo their places deſigned for the adminiſtration of iuſtice, and diuers other conuenient roomes to beſtow their wiues and families in. Within the doores of the foreſayd habitations a certaine number of Sergeants and officers, hauing cabbins or little houſes allotted them on both ſides, doe alwayes giue their attendance; and ſo long as matters of iudgement are in deciding, they be alwayes ready at hand, that, at the direction of the Magiſtrates they may either beat malefactours, or by torments conſtraine them to tell the trueth. The ſayd Magiſtrates alſo haue their peculiar barges wherein to take the water; being in breadth and length not much vnlike to the galleys of Europe, but for ſwiftneſſe and multitude of oares, farre inferiour vnto them. The rowers, ſitting vpon galleries without the hatches or compaſſe of the barge, doe mooue it on forward with their oares: whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that the middle part of the barge affoordeth ſufficient roome for the Magiſtrates themſelues to abide in, containing chambers therein almoſt as conuenient and handſome, as in any of their foreſayd publique houſes, together with butteries and kitchins, and ſuch other places neceſſary for the prouiſion and ſtowage of victuals. Leo. All theſe things agree right well with the reports, which we haue heard of the ſtately and renowmed kingdome of China: I would now right gladly know ſomewhat concerning the order which is obſerued in the obtaining of magiſtracies.

The maner of electing magiſtrates in China.

Degrees vnto honour.

Michael. You haue enquired of a matter moſt worthy to be knowen, which I had almoſt omitted to entreat of. The Chinians therefore doe vſe a kinde of gradation in aduancing men vnto ſundry places of authority, which for the moſt part is performed by the Senatours of Paquin. For firſt they are made Iudges of Townes: then of Cities: afterward they are elected to be of that order, which decreeth puniſhments in caſes criminall without further appeale, or of their order, that are the kings foſterers. And in both of theſe Orders, which are very honourable, there are many places and degrees, ſo that from the inferiour place they muſt aſcend vnto the ſuperiour, vntill they haue attained vnto the higheſt dignity of all: and immediatly after that they come to be Vice-royes. Howbeit this gradation is not alwayes accompliſhed in one and the ſame prouince, but in changing their offices they change places and prouinces alſo. Moreouer, next after the office of Vice-roy they are capable to be choſen Senatours of Nanquin, and laſt of all to be elected into the Senate of Paquin. Now, there is ſuch an order and methode obſerued in the aſcending vnto theſe dignities, that all men may eaſily coniecture, what office any one is to vndertake. And there is ſo great diligence and celerity vſed for the ſubſtitution of one into the roome of another, that, for the ſame purpoſe, meſſengers are diſpatched by land, vpon ſwift poſt-horſes, vnto diuers prouinces, almoſt twenty dayes iourney from the Kings Court. And, to be ſhort, there is ſuch diſtrict ſeuerity in degrading thoſe that vniuſtly or negligently demeane themſelues, from an honourable vnto an inferiour and baſe office, or altogether in depriuing them of the kings authority; that all Magiſtrates doe ſtand in feare of nothing in the world more then of that. The ſame order, almoſt, is obſerued among the Captaines and Lieu-tenants generall for the warres: except onely in them, that their birth and offſpring is reſpected: for many there be, who deſcending by parentage from ſuch men as haue in times paſt atchieued braue exploits in warfare, ſo ſoone as they come to ſufficient yeeres, are created Centurions, Colonels, and Gouernours, vntill at laſt they attaine to be Lieu-tenants generall and Protectours of ſome whole prouince: who notwithſtanding (as I haue ſayd) are in all things ſubiect vnto the Vice-roy. All the foreſayd Magiſtrates both of warre and of peace haue a ſet number of attendants allotted vnto them, enioying a ſtipend, and carying certaine enſignes and peculiar badges of their office: and (beſides the ordinary watch, which ſouldiers appointed for the ſame purpoſe doe in the night ſeaſon, after the City gates be ſhut, keepe in their forts) whereſoeuer any Magiſtrate is, either at his houſe or in his barge, the ſayd attendants ſtriking vpon a cymball of braſſe, at certaine appointed times, do keepe moſt circumſpect and continuall watch and ward about his perſon. Linus. You haue (Michael) ſufficiently diſcourſed of the Magiſtrates: informe vs now of the king himſelfe, whoſe name is ſo renowmed and ſpread abroad. Michael. Concerning this matter I will ſay ſo much onely as by certaine rumours hath come to my knowledge; for of matters appertaining vnto the kings Court we haue no eye-witneſſes, ſithens the fathers of the ſociety haue not as yet proceeded vnto Paquin, who ſo ſoone as (by Gods aſſiſtance) they ſhall there be arriued, will by their letters more fully aduertiſe vs. The king of China therefore is honoured with woonderfull reuerence and ſubmiſſion thorowout his whole Realme: and whenſoeuer any of his chiefe Magiſtrates ſpeaketh vnto him, he calleth him VAN-SVI, ſignifying thereby that he wiſheth tenne thouſands of yeeres vnto him. The ſucceſſion of the kingdome dependeth vpon the bloud royall: for the eldeſt ſonne borne of the kings firſt and lawfull wife obtaineth the kingdome after his fathers deceaſe: neither doe they depriue themſelues of the kingly authority in their life time (as the maner is in our Ilands of Iapon) but the cuſtome of Europe is there obſerued. Now, that the ſafety and life of the king may ſtand in more ſecurity, his yonger brethren, and the reſt borne of concubines are not permitted to liue in the kings Court: but places of habitation are by the king himſelfe aſſigned vnto them in diuers prouinces farre diſtant aſunder, where they dwell moſt commodiouſly, being comparable vnto kings for their buildings and reuenues: howbeit they exerciſe no authority ouer the people, but all the gouernment of thoſe Cities wherein they dwell, concerneth the Magiſtrates, who notwithſtanding haue the ſayde Princes in high regard and honour, and doe viſit them twiſe in a moneth, and ſalute them kneeling vpon their knees, and bowing their faces downe to the earth: and yet they communicate nothing vnto them as touching the adminiſtration of the Common-wealth. Theſe are they which may properly be called the Peeres or Princes of the Realme of China: for they deriue their houſes and reuenues vnto their poſterity, and ſo are theſe royall families continually preſerued. But to returne vnto the king himſelfe, hee is moſt chary in obſeruing the Chiniao lawes and cuſtomes, and diligently exerciſeth himſelfe in learning ſo much as concernes his eſtate, ſheweth himſelfe dayly vnto his chiefe Magiſtrates, and communeth of matters appertaining to the publique commodity of the Realme. His palace is of woonderfull largeneſſe and capacity, out of the which he very ſeldome takes his progreſſe; and whenſoeuer he doeth ſo, there are twelue chariots brought foorth, all of them moſt like one to another both in workemanſhip and in value, that no man may diſcerne in which the king himſelfe is placed. He followeth in religion eſpecially the opinions of the Magiſtrates, attributing diuine power vnto heauen and earth as vnto the parents of all, and with great ſolemnity ſacrificing vnto them. He hath diuers moſt ſumptuous Temples dedicated vnto his anceſtours, whereunto likewiſe he aſcribeth diuine honour, and yet ceaſeth hee not to fauour Prieſts of other ſects, yea hee erecteth Temples vnto their Patrons, endowing them with moſt rich reuenues; and ſo often as any vrgent neceſſity requireth, he enioynes continuall faſtings and prayers vnto them: and after this ſort he doeth in a maner patronize all the idolatrous ſects of his Realme, and ſhewing himſelfe ready to embrace any falſe religion whatſoeuer, he liueth in ſundry and manifolde kindes of ſuperſtition. Out of all the former particulars by me alledged, you may eaſily coniecture that the adminiſtration of the kingdome of China doeth, for the moſt part, agree with the inſtinct of nature, authority being committed, not vnto rude and vnſkilfull perſons, but vnto ſuch as haue beene conuerſant in the vſe and exerciſe of learning, yea, and in promoting learned men vnto magiſtracies, great conſideration is had of their wiſedome, iuſtice, and of other vertues eſteemed by the Chinians: wherefore the way being open for all men, without any reſpect of degree or parentage, to obtaine any of the foreſayd dignities, it can not be but that this moſt mighty and famous kingdome muſt needes enioy exceeding peace and tranquillity. Leo. I would nowe (Michael) right gladly vnderſtand, what kinde of vrbanity or ciuill demeanour both the common people and the Magiſtrates doe vſe one towardes another: for it is not likely that where ſuch due adminiſtration of iuſtice is, common ciuility, which ſo well beſeemeth all men, ſhould be wanting. Michael. You haue hit euen the very naile on the head: for among the fiue vertues, which the Chinians principally regard, vrbanity or courteſy is one; the reſt are piety, a thankefull remembrance of benefites, true dealing in contracts or bargaines, and wiſedome in atchieuing of matters: with the praiſes and commendations of which vertues the Chinian bookes are full fraught. Now as touching their vrbanity, it is much vnlike vnto ours in Iapan, and vnto that of Europe: howbeit vnder two principall kindes the rule of their vrbanity or courteſie may be comprehended: whereof one is obſerued betweene equals, and the other betweene ſuperiours and inferiours. For when men of equall dignity meet together, they ſtand bending their backes, and bowing their heads downe to the ground, and this they doe either once or twiſe, or ſometimes thriſe. Now, when the inferiour meets with his ſuperiour, the ſayd inferiour, for the moſt part kneeling lowly on his knees, enclineth his countenance downe to the earth. But how often and when this obeizance is to be performed it is woonderfull what a number of rules and preſcriptions are ſet downe, which to recount would require a long time. Somewhat alſo I will ſay as touching their piety, and eſpecially of the piety which they vſe towards their parents, which verily is ſo exceeding great, that for the ſpace of three whole yeres together, the ſonnes being cladde in mourning veſtures doe bewaile the death of their parents, which duety is performed not onely by the common ſort, but euen by all the Magiſtrates themſelues, and that moſt curiouſly and diligently. And, that all men may wholly giue their attendance vnto this buſineſſe, it is prouided by a moſt inuiolable law among the Chinians, that Magiſtrates, vpon the death of their parents, muſt foorthwith renounce their authority, and three whole yeeres, for the performance of their fathers exequies, muſt betake themſelues vnto a priuate kinde of liuing: which alſo is moſt duely put in practiſe by the Senatours of the Kings owne Councell. For albeit a man be right gracious in the eyes of his Prince, yea, and ſuch an one, as vpon whom the adminiſtration of the Realme doeth principally depend; yet hauing heard of the death of his parents, that is, of his father or his mother, he hies himſelfe immediatly home to ſolemnize their funerals: inſomuch that if the king would retaine him ſtill in his office, he ſhould be eſteemed by the people, as a tranſgreſſour of the lawes and cuſtomes of China: which accident (as it is recorded) in ancient times fel out euen ſo. For whenas a certain king moſt familiarly vſed a certaine Senatour of his about the managing and expedition of publique affaires, and vnderſtanding well how neceſſary the helpe of his foreſayd Senatour was, would gladly, after the death of his father, haue retained him ſtill in his office: yet a certaine other man, being a welwiller vnto the Chinian lawes, could in no caſe abide it, but checking his Prince with ſharpe rebukes, obiected the tranſgreſſion of the law againſt him. The king waxing wroth menaced preſent death vnto the man: but when the party being no whit danted with the terrour of death, perſiſted ſtill in his ſayings, the king changing his determination diſmiſſed the Senatour to mourne for his father, but as for his reprehender he aduanced him vnto an higher dignity. Linus. I perceiue (Michael) that drawing to an end of theſe dialogues, and being weary of your long race, you begin to affect breuity: yet let it not ſeeme troubleſome vnto you to ſpeake ſomewhat of the religion of China, which onely thing ſeemes to be wanting in this preſent dialogue. Michael. I confeſſe indeed that I endeuour to be briefe, not ſo much in regard of weariſomneſſe, as for feare leaſt I haue bene ouer tedious vnto you: howbeit I will not faile but accompliſh that which I haue vndertaken, and (according to your requeſt) adde ſomewhat more concerning religion. Whereas therefore the kingdome of China hath hitherto bene deſtitute of true religion, and now the firſt beginnings thereof are included in moſt narrow bounds, that nation being otherwiſe a people moſt ingenious, and of an extraordinary and high capacity, hath alwayes liued in great errours and ignorance of the trueth, being diſtracted into ſundry opinions, and following manifolde ſects. And among theſe ſects there are three more famous then the reſt: the firſt is of them that profeſſe the doctrine of one Confucius a notable philoſopher. This man (as it is reported in the hiſtory of his life) was one of moſt vpright and incorrupt maners, whereof he wrote ſundry treatiſes very pithily and largely, which aboue all other books, are ſeriouſly read and peruſed by the Chinians. The ſame doctrine do all Magiſtrates embrace, and others alſo that giue their mindes to the ſtudy of letters, a great part whereof Confucius is ſayd to haue inuented: and he is had in ſo great honour, that all his followers and clients, vpon the dayes of the new and full Moone, doe aſſemble themſelues at the common Schoole, which I haue aboue mentioned, and before his image, which is worſhipped with burning of incenſe and with tapers, they doe thriſe bend their knees, and bow their heads downe to the ground; which not onely the common ſcholars, but the chiefe Magiſtrates do performe. The ſumme of the foreſayd doctrine is, that men ſhould follow the light of nature as their guide, and that they ſhould diligently endeuour to attaine vnto the vertues by me before mentioned: and laſtly, that they ſhould employ their labour about the orderly gouernment of their families and of the Common-wealth. All theſe things are in very deed praiſe-worthy, if Confucius had made any mention of almighty God and of the life to come, and had not aſcribed ſo much vnto the heauens, and vnto fatall neceſſity, nor yet had ſo curiouſly intreated of worſhipping the images of their forefathers. In which regard he can very hardly or not at all be excuſed from the crime of idolatry: notwithſtanding it is to be granted, that none other doctrine among the Chinians approcheth ſo neere vnto the trueth as this doeth. The ſecond ſect is of them which follow the inſtructions of Xaquam, or as the Chinians call him Xequiam, whoſe opinions, becauſe they are well knowen amongſt vs, it were bootleſſe for me to repeat; eſpecially ſithens, in the Catechiſme compoſed by our graue viſitour, they are notably refuted. This doctrine doe all they embrace, which are in China called Cen, but with vs at Iapon are named Bonzi. For this I doe briefly and by the way giue you to vnderſtand, that all words of the Chinians language are of one ſillable onely, ſo that if there be any word that conſiſteth of more ſillables then one, it conſiſteth alſo of more wordes then one. Theſe ſectaries called Cen doe ſhaue their beards and their heads, and doe for the moſt part, together with diuers of their aſſociates, inhabit the Temples of Xaquam, or of others which in regard of the ſame profeſſion haue in their Kalenders beene canonized for Saints, and doe rehearſe certaine prayers after their maner, either vpon books or beads, vſing other ceremonies after the maner of our Bonzi. Theſe men haue ſome inckling of the life to come, and of the rewardes of good men, and the puniſhments of the wicked: howbeit all their aſſertions are fraught with errours. The third ſect is of them which are called Tauzu: and thoſe doe imitate a certaine other man, to be adored, as they thinke, for his holineſſe. Theſe alſo are Prieſts after their kinde, howbeit they let their haire grow, and doe in other obſeruations differ from the former. Nowe, becauſe the ſect of Confucius is the moſt famous of all the three, and the two other ſects called Cen and Tauzu are not much addicted vnto learning, their religion preuailing onely among the common ſort, the Prieſts of both the ſayd ſects doe leade a moſt baſe and ſeruile life amongſt the Chinians, inſomuch that they kneele downe before the Magiſtrates, and are not permitted to ſit beſide them, and ſometimes, if the Magiſtrate pleaſe, are abaſed vnto the puniſhment of the baſtonado: whereas in our Iles of Iapon it is farre otherwiſe, Prieſts, euen of falſe religion, being had in ſo great honour among vs. Leo. I heard alſo (Michael) that the Saracens ſuperſtition takes place in China: now, whether it doth or no, you can reſolue vs. Michael. That forren ſuperſtition was brought into China what time the Tartars inuaded the kingdome, and vſurped the gouernment thereof. All the Saracens therefore in China are originally deſcended of the Tartars, who, becauſe they were an infinite number, could not vtterly be expelled and rooted out of the kingdome, but remaining ſtill there, haue propagated their poſterity, though not their religion. Theſe therefore are ſouldiers for the greater part of them, and ſometimes doe obtaine martiall dignities: and except a few ceremonies of their ſuperſtition which is nowe become ſtale and almoſt worne out, they doe liue altogether after the Chinians faſhion, their predeceſſours being brought into the ſame kingdome about foure hundred yeeres agoe. Linus. Now (Michael) let vs heare you ſay ſomewhat of the Chriſtian religion, which as we hope hath ſet moſt happy footing in that kingdome. Michael. I could ſay much concerning thoſe moſt wiſhed and acceptable beginnings, were they not already publiſhed in Iapon by the letters of the fathers: howbeit I will make a briefe rehearſall of all things, that I may not ſeeme altogether to haue abandoned this labour. You know that from the time wherein the fathers of the ſociety arriued in our Ilands, to the end they might augment Chriſtian religion, they were in like ſort moſt carefull how they might inſinuate themſelues into the innermoſt parts of the kingdome of China. In the middeſt of this endeuour and trauell Francis Xauier, a moſt deuout man of the foreſayd ſociety, departed out of this preſent life at the Ile of Sancian (which ſome call Sangiam) leauing an example vnto the reſt of his aſſociates, how they ſhould likewiſe doe their beſt to plant the religion of Chriſt in that nation. This man was ſeconded by others, who vſed all meanes, and left no practiſe vnattempted, that they might bring theſe good beginnings vnto a proſperous iſſue: howbeit they were greatly hindered by reaſon of an ancient cuſtome in China, in regard whereof they doe not without great difficulty and circumſpection admit any ſtrangers into their dominions, except thoſe which hauing a long time executed the office of ambaſſadours doe ordinarily euery third yeere preſent themſelues before the king: in the admiſſion of whom likewiſe there is maruellous care vſed, that they may not eaſily eſpie and become acquainted with the affaires of the Realme. Hereunto may be added, that the Chinians are great contemners of other nations, and moſt conſtant obſeruers of their owne lawes and cuſtomes: in all which reſpects it came to paſſe, that there was woonderfull labour and diligence employed aboue thirty yeeres together, onely to get an entrance, vntill in the yeere one thouſand fiue hundred fourescore and three, two fathers of the foreſayd ſociety, that had pretty ſkill in the letters and language of China, vtterly deſpairing of mans helpe, and depending vpon the prouidence of almighty God, obtained licence of the Tutan or Vice-roy to build them an houſe and a Church in the City of Xauquin, which by reaſon of the commodiouſneſſe thereof is the ſeat of the Vice-roy himſelfe. This worke being begunne, the ſayd fathers of the ſociety, for the nouelty thereof, were a few yeeres right well entreated by the Magiſtrates: inſomuch that two others out of India had free and eaſie acceſſe vnto them, one couple remaining ſtill in their foreſayd houſe at Xauquin, and the other two taking their iourney for the inner prouinces, to conuert more people vnto the faith: who notwithſtanding afterward, other Magiſtrates not approouing of their attempts, were conſtrained to retire. Nowe all the time wherein the foreſayd fathers abode at Xauquin (being more then fiue yeeres) certaine of the common people were reſtrained from falſe ſuperſtition to Chriſtian religion, and ſeuenty perſons were baptized. But the enemy of mankinde, who omitteth none opportunity for the hinderance of Chriſtian religion, ſuggeſted into the mindes of the Chinians (being, as I ſayd, of their owne nature, a people eſtranged from the traffique and acquaintance of other nations, and alwayes being too too ſuſpicious of ſtrangers) that they ſhould exhibite letters of ſupplication vnto the Caien and the Tutan their principall Magiſtrates, to haue the fathers expelled out of Xauquin: which Magiſtrates repairing vnto their foreſayd houſe and Church entered conſultation how they might banniſh them out of the ſayd City of Xauquin: in which thing verily they vſed great moderation, not any way offending or exaſperating the mindes of the fathers, but onely ſignifying that they had regard vnto the eſtate of their Common-wealth. For the Tutan or Vice-roy calling the fathers vnto him, and (to let paſſe other accidents) vſing courteous and familiar conference with them, declared by many arguments, that their habitation in the City of Xauquin was not conuenient, eſpecially ſithens ſo many Magiſtrates reſorted vnto that City, who would take great offence at the preſence of ſtrangers. For the which cauſe he perſwaded them to accept ſome part of the money which they had beſtowed in the building of their houſe, and ſo to returne either home into their owne countrey, or vnto the port of Macao. Howbeit, ſuch was the inſtant ſupplication of the fathers, and ſo woorthy of compaſſion, that the Tutan or Vice-roy, in the extreame and mediterrane borders of the prouince of Coantum, aſſigned vnto them a new habitation at the city called Xaucheo, commending them alſo to a certaine Magiſtrate, who was come from the ſame place to ſalute him. Thither therefore the ſayd fathers, not without great ſorrow and griefe of the Chriſtians, hied themſelues, and as we are informed by their laſt letters, they haue euen now layed the foundation of their firſt building, and haue alſo written that they are like to liue much more peaceably and conueniently for the propagating of Chriſtian religion. Theſe be the firſt beginnings of Chriſtianity in China, where, euen as in other places of the Chriſtian Common-wealth, the ſeed is to be ſowen with great labour and teares, that acceptable fruits may be reaped with gladneſſe. Leo. It is euen as you haue ſayd (Michael) and nowe for this your pleaſant and eloquent diſcourſe we do acknowledge our ſelues much bounden vnto you.

A Letter

A Letter written from Goa, the principall City of all the Eaſt Indies, by one Thomas Steuens an Engliſh man, and ſent to his father, M. Thomas Steuens : Anno 1579.

AFter moſt humble commendations : Theſe ſhall be to craue your dayly bleſſing, with like commendations vnto my mother; and withall, to certifie you of my being: according to your will and my duety. I wrote vnto you taking my iourney from Italy to Portugall, which letters I thinke are come to your hands, ſo that preſuming thereupon, I thinke I haue the leſſe need at this time to tell you the cauſe of my departing, which neuertheleſſe in one word I may conclude, if I do but name obedience. I came to Lisbon toward the end of March, eight dayes before the departure of the ſhippes, ſo late that if they had not bene ſtayed about ſome weighty matters, they had bene long gone before our comming : inſomuch that there were others ordained to goe in our places, that the kings prouiſion and ours alſo might not be in vaine. Neuertheleſſe our ſudden comming tooke place, and the fourth of Aprill fiue ſhips departed for Goa, wherein beſides ſhipmen and ſouldiers, there were a great number of children which in the ſeas beare out better then men, and no maruell, when that many women alſo paſſe very well. The ſetting foorth from the port I need not to tell how ſolemne it is with trumpets, and ſhooting of ordinance, you may eaſily imagine it, conſidering that they go in the maner of warre. The tenth of the foreſayd moneth we came to the ſight of Porto Santo neere vnto Madera, where an Engliſh ſhippe ſet vpon ours (which was then alſo alone) with a few ſhots, which did no harme, but after that our ſhip had layed out her greateſt ordinance, they ſtraight departed as they came. The Engliſh ſhippe was very faire and great, which I was ſory to ſee ſo ill occupied, for ſhe went rouing about, ſo that we ſaw her againe at the Canarian Iles, vnto the which we came the thirteenth of the ſayd moneth, and good leiſure we had to wonder at the high mountaine of the Iland Tenerif, for we wandred betweene that and great Canaria foure dayes by reaſon of contrary windes : and briefly, ſuch euill weather we had vntill the foureteenth of May, that they deſpaired to compaſſe the Cape of Good hope that yeere. Neuertheleſſe, taking our voyage betweene Guinea and the Ilands of Capo Verde, without ſeeing of any land at all, we arriued at length vnto the coaſt of Guinie, which the Portugals ſo call, chiefly that part of the burning Zone, which is from the ſixt degree vnto the Equinoctiall, in which parts they ſuffered ſo many inconueniences of heats, and lacke of windes, that they thinke themſelues happy when they haue paſſed it : for ſometimes the ſhip ſtandeth there almoſt by the ſpace of many dayes, ſometime ſhe goeth, but in ſuch order that it were almoſt as good to ſtand ſtill. And the greateſt part of this coaſt not cleare, but thicke and cloudy, full of thunder and lightening, and raine ſo vnwholeſome, that if the water ſtand a little while, all is full of wormes, and falling on the meat which is hanged vp, it maketh it ſtraight full of wormes. Along all that coaſt we often times ſaw a thing ſwimming vpon the water like a cocks combe (which they call a ſhip of Guinea) but the colour much fairer; which combe ſtandeth vpon a thing almoſt like the ſwimmer of a fiſh in colour and bigneſſe, and beareth vnderneath in the water, ſtrings, which ſaue it from turning ouer. This thing is ſo poiſonous, that a man cannot touch it without great perill. In this coaſt, that is to ſay, from the ſixt degree vnto the Equinoctiall, we ſpent no leſſe then thirty dayes, partly with contrary windes, partly with calme. The thirtieth of May we paſſed the Equinoctiall with contentation, directing our courſe aſwell as we could to paſſe the promontory, but in all that gulfe, & in all the way beſide, we found ſo often calmes, that the experteſt mariners wondred at it. And in places where are alwayes woont to be moſt horrible tempeſts, we found moſt quiet calmes which was very troubleſome to thoſe ſhips which be the greateſt of all other, and cannot go without good windes. Inſomuch, that when it is tempeſt almoſt intollerable for other ſhips, and maketh them maine all their ſailes, theſe hoiſe vp, and ſaile excellent well, vnleſſe the waters be too too furious, which ſeldome happened in our nauigation. You ſhall vnderſtand, that being paſſed the line, they cannot ſtraightway go the next way to the promontory : but according to the winde, they draw alwayes as neere South as they can to put themſelues in the latitude of the point, which is 35 degrees and an halfe, and then they take their courſe towards the Eaſt, and ſo compaſſe the point. But the winde ſerued vs ſo, that at 33 degrees we did direct our courſe toward the point or promontory of Good hope.

You know that it is hard to ſaile from Eaſt to Weſt, or contrary, becauſe there is no fixed point in all the ſkie, whereby they may direct their courſe, wherefore I ſhall tell you what helps God prouided for theſe men. There is not a fowle that appereth, or ſigne in the aire, or in the ſea, which they haue not written, which haue made the voyages heretofore. Wherefore, partly by their owne experience, and pondering withall what ſpace the ſhip was able to make with ſuch a winde, and ſuch direction, and partly by the experience of others, whoſe books and nauigations they haue, they geſſe whereabouts they be, touching degrees of longitude, for of latitude they be alwayes ſure: but the greateſt and beſt induſtry of all is to marke the variation of the needle or compaſſe, which in the Meridian of the Iland of S. Michael, which is one of the Azores in the latitude of Lisbon, is iuſt North, and thence ſwarueth towards the Eaſt ſo much, that betwixt the Meridian aforeſayd, and the point of Africa it carrieth three or foure quarters of 32. And againe in the point of Afrike, a little beyond the point that is called Cape das Agulias (in Engliſh the needles) it returneth againe vnto the North, and that place paſſed, it ſwarueth againe toward the Weſt, as it did before proportionally.

Signes about the Cape of Bona Speranſa.

As touching our firſt ſignes, the neerer we came to the people of Afrike, the more ſtrange kindes of fowles appeared, inſomuch that when we came within no leſſe then thirty leagues (almoſt an hundred miles) and ſixe hundred miles as we thought from any Iland, as good as three thouſand fowles of ſundry kindes followed our ſhip: ſome of them ſo great that their wings being opened from one point to the other, contained ſeuen ſpannes, as the Mariners ſayd. A maruellous thing to ſee how God prouided, ſo that in ſo wide a ſea theſe fowles are all fat, and nothing wanteth them. The Portugals haue named them all according to ſome propriety which they haue: ſome they call Ruſhtailes, becauſe their tailes be not proportionable to their bodies, but long and ſmall like a ruſh, ſome forked tailes becauſe they be very broad and forked, ſome Veluet ſleeues, becauſe they haue wings of the colour of veluet, and bowe them as a man boweth his elbow. This bird is alwayes welcome, for he appeareth neereſt the Cape. I ſhould neuer make an end if I ſhould tell all particulars: but it ſhall ſuffice briefly to touch a few, which yet ſhall be ſufficient, if you marke them, to giue occaſion to glorifie almighty God in his wonderfull works, and ſuch variety in his creatures.

Fiſhes on the ſea coaſt of Africa.

And to ſpeake ſome what of fiſhes in all places of calme, eſpecially in the burning Zone, neere the line (for without we neuer ſaw any) there waited on our ſhip fiſhes as long as a man, which they call Tuberones, they come to eat ſuch things as from the ſhippe fall into the ſea, not refuſing men themſelues if they light vpon them. And if they finde any meat tied in the ſea, they take it for theirs. Theſe haue waiting on them ſix or ſeuen ſmall fiſhes (wich neuer depart) with gardes blew and greene round about their bodies, like comely ſeruing men: and they go two or three before him, and ſome on euery ſide. Moreouer, they haue other fiſhes which cleaue alwayes vnto their body, and ſeeme to take ſuch ſuperfluities as grow about them, and they are ſayd to enter into their bodies alſo to purge them if they need. The Mariners in time paſt haue eaten of them, but ſince they haue ſeene them eate men their ſtomacks abhorre them. Neuertheleſſe, they draw them vp with great hooks, & kill of them as many as they can, thinking that they haue made a great reuenge. There is another kind of fiſh as bigge almoſt as a herring, which hath wings and flieth, and they are together in great number. Theſe haue two enemies, the one in the ſea, the other in the aire. In the ſea the fiſh which is called Albocore, as big as a Salmon, followeth them with great ſwiftneſſe to take them. This poore fiſh not being able ſwim faſt, for he hath no finnes, but ſwimmeth with mouing of his taile, ſhutting his wings, lifteth himſelfe aboue the water, and flieth not very hie: the Albocore ſeeing that, although he haue no wings, yet he giueth a great leape out of the water, and ſometimes catcheth him, or els he keepeth himſelfe vnder the water going that way on as faſt as he flieth. And when the fiſh being weary of the aire, or thinking himſelfe out of danger, returneth into the water, the Albocore meeteth with him: but ſometimes his other enemy the ſea-crow, catcheth him before he falleth.

Note.

With theſe and like ſights, but alwayes making our ſupplications to God for good weather and ſaluation of the ſhip, we came at length vnto the point, ſo famous & feared of all men: but we found there no tempeſt, only great waues, where our Pilot was a little ouerſeene: for whereas commonly al other neuer come within ſight of land, but ſeeing ſignes ordinary, and finding bottome, go their way ſure and ſafe, he thinking himſelfe to haue winde at will, ſhot ſo nigh the land that the winde turning into the South, and the waues being exceeding great, rolled vs ſo nere the land, that the ſhip ſtood in leſſe then 14 fadoms of water, no more then ſixe miles from the Cape, which is called Das Agulias, and there we ſtood as vtterly caſt away: for vnder vs were rocks of maine ſtone ſo ſharpe, and cutting, that no ancre could hold the ſhip, the ſhore ſo euill, that nothing could take land, and the land itſelfe ſo full of Tigers, and people that are ſauage, and killers of all ſtrangers, that we had no hope of life nor comfort, but onely in God and a good conſcience. Notwithſtanding, after we had loſt ancres, hoiſing vp the ſailes for to get the ſhip a coaſt in ſome ſafer place, or when it ſhould pleaſe God, it pleaſed his mercy ſuddenly, where no man looked for helpe, to fill our ſailes with wind from the land, & ſo we eſcaped, thanks be to God. And the day following, being in the place where they are alwayes wont to catch fiſh, we alſo fell a fiſhing, and ſo many they tooke, that they ſerued all the ſhip for that day, and part of the next.

Corall.

And one of them pulled vp a corall of great bigneſſe and price. For there they ſay (as we ſaw by experience) that the corals doe grow in the maner of ſtalks vpon the rocks in the bottome, and waxe hard and red. The day of perill was the nine and twentieth of Iuly. And you ſhall vnderſtand that, the Cape paſſed, there be two wayes to India: one within the Ile of S. Laurence, which they take willingly, becauſe they refreſh themſelues at Moſambique a fortnight or a moneth, not without great need, and thence in a moneth more land in Goa. The other is without the Ile of S. Laurence, which they take when they ſet forth ſo late, and come ſo late to the point, that they haue no time to take the foreſayd Moſambique, and then they goe heauily, becauſe in this way they take no port. And by reaſon of the long nauigation, and want of food and water, they fall into ſundry diſeaſes, their gummes waxe great, and ſwell, and they are faine to cut them away, their legges ſwell, and all the body becommeth ſore, and ſo benummed, that they can not ſtirre hand nor foot, and ſo they die for weakeneſſe, others fall into fluxes and agues, and die thereby. And this way it was our chance to make: yet though we had more then one hundred and fifty ſicke, there died not paſt ſeuen and twenty; which loſſe they eſteemed not much in reſpect of other times. Though ſome of ours were diſeaſed in this ſort, yet, thanks be to God, I had my health all the way, contrary to the expectation of many: God ſend me my health ſo well in the land, if it may be to his honour and ſeruice. This way is full of many rockes and quicke-ſands, ſo that ſometimes we durſt not ſaile by night, but by the prouidence of God we ſaw nothing, nor neuer found bottome vntill we came to the coaſt of India. When we had paſſed againe the line, and were come to the third degree or ſomewhat more, we ſaw crabs ſwimming on the water that were red as though they had bene ſodden: but this was no ſigne of land. After, about the eleuenth degree, the ſpace of many dayes, more then ten thouſand fiſhes by eſtimation followed round about our ſhip, whereof we caught ſo many, that for fifteene dayes we did eate nothing els, and they ſerued our turne very well: for at this time we had neither meat nor almoſt any thing els to eate, our nauigation growing ſo long that it drew neere to ſeuen moneths, where as commonly they goe it in fiue, I meane when they ſaile the inner way. But theſe fiſhes were not ſigne of land, but rather of deepe ſea. At length we tooke a couple of birds, which were a kinde of Hawks, whereof they ioyed much, thinking that they had bene of India, but indeed they were of Arabia, as we found afterward. And we that thought we had bene neere India, were in the ſame latitude neere Zocotora, an Ile in the mouth of the Red ſea. But there God ſent vs great winds from the Northeaſt or Northnortheaſt, whereupon vnwillingly they bare vp toward the Eaſt, and thus we went tenne dayes without ſeeing ſigne of land, whereby they perceiued their errour: for they had directed their courſe before alwayes Northeaſt, coueting to multiply degrees of latitude, but partly the difference of the Needle, and moſt of all the running ſeas, which at that time ran Northweſt, had drawen vs to this other danger, had not God ſent vs this winde, which at length waxed larger, and reſtored vs to our right courſe. Theſe running ſeas be ſo perillous that they deceiue the moſt part of the gouernours, and ſome be ſo little curious, contenting themſelues with ordinary experience, that they care not to ſeeke out any meanes to know when they ſwarue, neither by the compaſſe, nor by any other triall. The firſt ſigne of land were certaine fowles which they knew to be of India: the ſecond, boughes of palmes and ſedges: the third, ſnakes ſwimming on the water, and a ſubſtance which they call by the name of a coine of money, as broad and as round as a groat, woonderfully printed and ſtamped of nature, like vnto ſome coine. And theſe two laſt ſignes be ſo certaine, that the next day after, if the winde ſerue, they ſee land, which we did to our great ioy, when all our water (for you know they make no beere in thoſe parts) and victuals began to faile vs. And to Goa we came the foure and twentieth day of October, there being receiued with paſſing great charity. The people be tawny, but not diſfigured in their lips & noſes, as the Moores and Cafres of Ethiopia. They that be not of reputation, or at leaſt the moſt part, goe naked, ſauing an apron of a ſpan long, and as much in bredth before them, and a lace two fingers broad before them, girded about with a ſtring and no more: and thus they thinke them as well as we with all our trimming. Of the fruits and trees that be here I cannot now ſpeake, for I ſhould make another letter as long as this. For hitherto I haue not ſeene a tree here, whoſe like I haue ſeene in Europe, the vine excepted, which neuertheleſſe here is to no purpoſe, ſo that all the wines are brought out of Portugall. The drinke of this countrey is good water, or wine of the Palme tree, or of a fruit called Cocos. And this ſhall ſuffice for this time. If God ſend me my health, I ſhall haue opportunity to write to you once againe. Now the length of my letter compelleth me to take my leaue: and thus I wiſh your moſt proſperous health. A briefe relation of the great magnificence and rich traffike of the kingdome of Pegu beyond the Eaſt India, written by Frey Peter of Lisbon, to his couſin Frey Diego of Lisbon, from Cochin.

I Receiued your letters in the harbour of Damaon by a carauell of aduiſe that came from Malacca, which brought ſhot, powder, and other prouiſion for the furniſhing of foure gallies and a great gallion, which are now in building, to keepe our coaſt for feare of great ſtore of men of warre, being Moores, which trouble vs very ſore. At that inſtant when I receiued your letters I was newly come from the kingdome of Pegu, where I had remained one yeere and an halfe, and from thence I departed to the city of Cochin in October 1587. The newes which I can certifie you of concerning theſe countreys are: That this king of Pegu is the mightieſt king of men, & the richeſt that is in theſe parts of the world: for he bringeth into the field at any time, when he hath warres with other princes, aboue a million of fighting men: howbeit they be very leane and ſmall people, and are brought vnto the field without good order. He is lord of the Elephants, and of all the golde and ſiluer mines, and of all the pearles and precious ſtones: ſo that he hath the greateſt ſtore of treaſure that euer was heard of in theſe parts. The countrey people call him The God of trueth and of iuſtice. I had great conference with this king, and with the head captaine of the Portugals, which is one of the countrey. They demanded of me many queſtions as touching the law and faith of Ieſus Chriſt, and as touching the Ten Commandements. And the king gaue his conſent that our Order ſhould build a Church in his countrey, which was halfe builded; but our peruerſe and malicious Portugals plucked it downe againe: for whereas it is a countrey wherein our nation gaine very much by their commodities, they fearing that by the building of this Church there would be greater reſort thither, and ſo their trade ſhould be impaired, if their great gaines ſhould be knowen vnto others then thoſe which found this countrey out firſt, therefore they were ſo vnwilling that the building of this Church ſhould goe forward. Our Portugals which are here in this realme are worſe people then the Gentiles. I preached diuers times among thoſe heathen people; but being obſtinate they ſay, that as their fathers beleeued ſo they will beleeue: for if their forefathers went to the diuell ſo they will. Whereupon I returned backe againe to our monaſtery to certifie our father prouinciall of the eſtate of this New found countrey. It is the beſt and richeſt countrey in all this Eaſt India; and it is thought to be richer then China.

The coaſt of India greatly troubled with Moores.

Abundance of golde, ſiluer, pearles, & precious ſtones in Pegu.

The great gaine of the Portugals in Pegu.

Pegu the beſt & richeſt countrey in all the Eaſt India.

I am afrayd that the warres which his Maieſty hath with England will be the vtter vndoing and ſpoile of Spaine: for theſe countreys likewiſe are almoſt ſpoiled with ciuill warres, which the Moores haue againſt the Gentiles: for the kings here are vp in armes all the countrey ouer. Here is an Indian which is counted a Prophet, which hath propheſied that there will a Dragon ariſe in a ſtrange countrey, which will do great hurt to Spaine. How it will fall out, onely God doth know. And thus I reſt: from this monaſtery of Cochin the 28 of December, 1589.

A propheſie of an Indian againſt Spaine.

Your good couſin and aſſured friend frier Peter of Lisbon.

A voyage with three tall ſhips, the Penelope Admirall, the Marchant royall Viceadmirall, and the Edward Bonauenture Rereadmirall, to the Eaſt Indies, by the Cape of Buona Speranſa, to Quitangone neere Moſambique, to the Iles of Comoro and Zanzibar on the backeſide of Africa, and beyond Cape Comori in India, to the Iles of Nicubar and of Gomes Polo within two leagues of Sumatra, to the Ilands of Pulo Pinaom, and thence to the maine land of Malacca, begunne by M. George Raymond, in the yeere 1591, and performed by M. Iames Lancaſter, and written from the mouth of Edmund Barker of Ipſwich, his lieutenant in the ſayd voyage, by M. Richard Hakluyt.

OUr fleet of the three tall ſhips abouenamed departed from Plimmouth the 10 of April 1591, and arriued at the Canarie-ilands the 25 of the ſame, frō whence we departed the 29 of April. The ſecond of May we were in the height of Cape Blanco. The fift we paſſed the tropique of Cancer. The eight we were in the height of Cape Verde. All this time we went with a faire winde at Northeaſt, alwayes before the winde vntill the 13 of the ſame moneth, when we came within 8 degrees of the Equinoctiall line, where we met with a contrary winde. Here we lay off and on in the ſea vntill the fift of Iune, on which day we paſſed the ſayd line. While we lay thus off and on, we tooke a Portugal Carauel laden by marchants of Lisbon for Braſile, in which Carauel we had ſome 60 tunnes of wine, 1200 iarres of oyle, about 100 iarres of oliues, certaine barrels of capers, three fats of peaſon, with diuers other neceſſaries fit for our voyage: which wine, oyle, oliues and capers were better to vs then gold. We had two men died before wee paſſed the line, and diuers ſicke, which tooke their ſickneſſe in thoſe hote climates: for they be wonderful vnwholeſome from 8 degrees of Northerly latitude vnto the line, at that time of the yeere: for we had nothing but Ternados, with ſuch thunder, lightning, and raine, that we could not keep our men drie 3 houres together, which was an occaſion of the infection among them, and their eating of ſalt victuals, with lacke of clothes to ſhift them. After we paſſed the line, we had the wind ſtill at Eaſtſoutheaſt, which caried vs along the coaſt of Braſil 100 leagues from the maine, til we came in 26 degrees to the Southward of the line, where the wind came vp to the North, at which time we did account, that the Cape of Buona eſperanſa did beare off vs Eaſt and by South, betwixt 900 and 1000 leagues. Paſſing this gulfe from the coaſt of Braſil vnto the Cape we had the wind often variable as it is vpon our coaſt, but for the moſt part ſo, that we might lie our courſe. The 28 of Iuly we had ſight of the foreſayd Cape of Buona eſperanſa: vntill the 31 wee lay off and on with the wind contrary to double the Cape, hoping to double it, & ſo to haue gone ſeuentie leagues further to a place called Agoada de S. Bras, before we would haue ſought to haue put into any harbour. But our men being weake and ſicke in all our ſhippes, we thought good to ſeeke ſome place to refreſh them. With which conſent we bare vp with the land to the Northward of the Cape, and going along the ſhore, we eſpied a goodly Baie with an Iland lying to Seawards of it, into which we did beare, and found it very commodious for our ſhips to ride in. This Baie is called Agoada de Saldanha, lying 15 leagues Northward on the hither ſide of the Cape. The firſt of Auguſt being Sunday we came to an anker in the Baie, ſending our mē on land, and there came vnto them certaine blacke Saluages very brutiſh which would not ſtay, but retired from them. For the ſpace of 15 or 20 dayes we could find no reliefe but onely foules which wee killed with our pieces, which were cranes and geeſe: there was no fiſh but muſkles and other ſhelfiſh, which we gathered on the rockes. After 15 or 20 dayes being here, our Admirall went with his pinnaſſe vnto the Iland which lieth off this Baie, where hee found great ſtore of Penguines & Seales, whereof he brought good plenty with him. And twiſe after that we ſent certain of our men, which at both times brought their bots lading vnto our ſhips. After we had bene here ſome time, we got here a Negro, whom we compelled to march into the country with vs, making ſigns to bring vs ſome cattell; but at this time we could come to the ſight of none, ſo we let the Negro goe with ſome trifles. Within 8 dayes after, he with 30 or 40 other Negros, brought vs downe ſome 40 bullocks and oxen, with as many ſheepe: at which time we bought but few of thē. But within 8 dayes after they came downe with as many more, & then we bought ſome 24 oxen with as many ſheepe. We bought an oxe for two kniues, a ſticke for a knife, and a ſheepe for a knife, and ſome we bought for leſſe value then a knife. The oxen be very large and well fleſhed, but not fat. The ſheepe are very big and very good meat, they haue no wooll on their backs but haire, and haue great tailes like the ſheepe in Syria. There be diuers ſorts of wild beaſts, as the Antilope, (wherof M. Lancaſter killed one of the bignes of a yong colt) the red & fallow Deere, with other great beaſts vnknowen vnto vs. Here are alſo great ſtore of ouer-growen monkeis. As touching our proceeding vpon our voyage, it was thought good rather to proceed with two ſhips wel manned, then with three euill manned: for here wee had of ſound and whole men but 198, of which there went in the Penelope with the Admiral 101, and in the Edward with the worſhipfull M. captaine Lancaſter 97. We left behind 50 men with the Roiall marchant, whereof there were many pretily well recouered, of which ſhip was maſter and gouernour Abraham Kendal, which for many reaſons we thought good to ſend home. The diſeaſe that hath conſumed our men hath bene the ſkuruie. Our ſouldiers which haue not bene vſed to the Sea, haue beſt held out, but our mariners dropt away, which (in my iudgement) proceedeth of their euill diet at home.

Sixe dayes after our ſending backe for England of the Marchant Roiall from Agoada de Saldanha, our Admirall M. captaine Raimond in the Penelope, and M. Iames Lancaſter in the Edward Bonauenture, ſet forward to double the Cape of Buona eſperanſa, which they did very ſpeedily. But being paſſed as far as Cape dos Corrientes, the 14 of Septēber we were encountred with a mighty ſtorme and extreeme guſts of wind, wherein we loſt our Generals companie, and could neuer heare of him nor his ſhip any more, though we did our beſt endeuour to ſeeke him vp and downe a long while, and ſtaied for him certaine dayes at the Iland of Comoro, where we appointed to ſtay one for another. Foure dayes after this vncomfortable ſeperation in the morning toward ten of the clocke we had a terrible clap of thunder, which ſlew foure of our men outright, their necks being wrung in ſonder without ſpeaking any word, and of 94 men there was not one vntouched, whereof ſome were ſtriken blind, others were bruiſed in their legs & armes, and others in their breſts, ſo that they voided blood two dayes after, others were drawen out at length as though they had bene racked. But (God be thanked) they all recouered ſauing onely the foure which were ſlaine out right. Alſo with the ſame thunder our maine maſte was torne very grieuouſly from the head to the decke, and ſome of the ſpikes that were ten inches into the timber, were melted with the extreme heate thereof. From thence wee ſhaped our courſe to the Northeaſt, and not long after we fell vpon the Northweſt end of the mighty Iland of S. Laurence: which one of our men eſpied by Gods good bleſſing late in the euening by Moone light, who ſeeing afarre off the breaking of the Sea, and calling to certaine of his fellowes, aſked them what it was: which eftſoones told him that it was the breaking of the Sea vpon the Shoulds. Whereupon in very good time we caſt about to auoyd the danger which we were like to haue incurred. Thus paſſing on forward, it was our lucke to ouer-ſhoote Mozambique, and to fall with a place called Quitangone two leagues to the Northward of it, and we tooke three or foure Barkes of Moores, which Barkes in their language they call Pangaias, laden with Millio, hennes, and ducks, with one Portugall boy, going for the prouiſion of Mozambique. Within few dayes following we came to an Iland an hundred leagues to the Northeaſt of Mozambique called Comoro, which we found exceeding full of people, which are Moores of tawnie colour and good ſtature, but they be very trecherous and diligently to be taken heed of. Here wee deſired to ſtore our ſelues with water, whereof we ſtood in great need, and ſent ſixteene of our men well armed on ſhore in our boate: whom the people ſuffred quietly to land and water, and diuers of them with their king came aboord our ſhip in a gowne of crimoſine Sattin pinked after the Mooriſh faſhion downe to the knee, whom we entertained in the beſt maner, and had ſome conference with him of the ſtate of the place and marchandiſes, vſing our Portugall boy which we had taken before for our interpreter, and in the end licenſed the king and his company to depart, and ſent our men againe for more water, who then alſo diſpatched their buſineſſe, & returned quietly: the third time likewiſe we ſent them for more, which alſo returned without any harme. And though we thought our ſelues furniſhed, yet our maſter William Mace of Radcliffe pretending that it might be long before we ſhould finde any good watering place, would needes goe himſelfe on ſhore with thirtie men, much againſt the will of our captaine, and hee and 16 of his company, together with one boat which was all that we had, and 16 others that were a waſhing ouer-againſt our ſhip, were betrayed of the perfidious Moores, and in our ſight for the moſt part ſlaine, we being not able for want of a boat to yeeld them any ſuccour. From hence with heauie hearts we ſhaped our courſe for Zanzibar the 7 of Nouember, where ſhortly after wee arriued and made vs a new boat of ſuch boards as we had within boord, and rid in the road vntill the 15 of February, where, during our aboad, we ſawe diuers Pangaias or boates, which are pinned with wodden pinnes, and ſowed together with Palmito cordes, and calked with the huſkes of Cocos ſhels beaten, whereof they make Occam. At length a Portugal Pangaia comming out of the harborow of Zanzibar, where they haue a ſmall Factorie, ſent a Canoa with a Moore which had bene chriſtened, who brought vs a letter wherein they deſired to know what wee were, and what we ſought. We ſent them word we were Engliſhmen come from Don Antonio vpon buſineſſe to his friends in the Indies: with which anſwere they returned, and would not any more come at vs. Whereupon not long after wee manned out our boat and tooke a Pangaia of the Moores, which had a prieſt of theirs in it, which in their language they call a Sheriſe: whom we vſed very curteouſly: which the king tooke in very good part, hauing his prieſts in great eſtimation, and for his deliuerance furniſhed vs with two moneths victuals, during all which time we detained him with vs. Theſe Moores informed vs of the falſe and ſpitefull dealing of the Portugals towards vs, which made them beleeue that we were cruell people and men-eaters, and willed them if they loued their ſafetie in no caſe to come neere vs. Which they did onely to cut vs off from all knowledge of the ſtate and traffique of the countrey. While we road from the end of Nouember vntil the middle of February in this harborough, which is ſufficient for a ſhip of 500 tuns to ride in, we ſet vpon a Portugall Pangaia with our boat, but becauſe it was very litle, & our men not able co ſtirre in it, we were not able to take the ſayd Pangaia, which was armed with 10 good ſhot like our long fouling pieces. This place for the goodneſſe of the harborough and watering, and plentifull refreſhing with fiſh, whereof we tooke great ſtore with our nets, and for ſundry ſorts of fruits of the countrey, as Cocos and others, which were brought vs by the Moores, as alſo for oxen and hennes, is carefully to be ſought for by ſuch of our ſhips, as ſhall hereafter paſſe that way. But our men had need to take good heed of the Portugals: for while we lay here the Portugall Admiral of the coaſt from Melinde to Mozambique, came to view and to betray our boat if he could haue taken at any time aduantage, in a gallie Frigate of ten tunnes with 8 or 9

oares on a ſide. Of the ſtrength of which Frigate and their trecherous meaning we were aduertiſed by an Arabian Moore which came from the king of Zanzibar diuers times vnto vs about the deliuerie of the prieſt aforeſayd, and afterward by another which we caried thence along with vs: for whereſoeuer we came, our care was to get into our hands ſome one or two of the countreys to learne the languages and ſtates of thoſe partes where we touched. Moreouer, here againe we had another clap of thunder which did ſhake our foremaſt very much, which wee fiſht and repaired with timber from the ſhore, whereof there is good ſtore thereabout of a kind of trees ſome fortie foote high, which is a red and tough wood, and as I ſuppoſe, a kind of Cedar. Here our Surgeon Arnold negligently catching a great heate in his head being on land with the maſter to ſeeke oxen, fell ſicke and ſhortly died, which might haue bene cured by letting of blood before it had bin ſetled. Before our departure we had in this place ſome thouſand weight of pitch, or rather a kind of gray and white gumme like vnto frankincenſe, as clammie as turpentine, which in melting groweth as blacke as pitch, and is very brittle of it ſelfe, but we mingled it with oile, whereof wee had 300 iarres in the prize which we tooke to the Northward of the Equinoctiall, not farre from Guinie, bound for Braſil. Sixe dayes before wee departed hence, the Cape marchant of the Factorie wrote a letter vnto our captaine in the way of friendſhip, as he pretended, requeſting a iarre of wine, and a iarre of oyle, and two or three pounds of gunpouder, which letter hee ſent by a Negro his man, and Moore in a Canoa: we ſent him his demaunds by the Moore, but tooke the Negro along with vs becauſe we vnderſtood he had bene in the Eaſt Indies and knew ſomewhat of the countrey. By this Negro we were aduertiſed of a ſmall Barke of ſome thirtie tunnes (which the Moores call a Iunco) which was come from Goa thither laden with Pepper for the Factorie and ſeruice of that kingdome. Thus hauing trimmed our ſhippe as we lay in this road, in the end we ſet forward for the coaſt of the Eaſt India, the 15 of February aforeſayd, intending if we could to haue reached to Cape Comori, which is the headland or Promontorie of the maine of Malauar, and there to haue lien off and on for ſuch ſhips as ſhould haue paſſed from Zeilan, Sant Tome, Bengala, Pegu, Malacca, the Moluccos, the coaſt of China, and the Iſle of Iapan, which ſhips are of exceeding wealth and riches. But in our courſe we were very much deceiued by the currents that ſet into the gulfe of the Red ſea along the coaſt of Melinde. And the windes ſhortening vpon vs to the Northeaſt and Eaſterly, kept vs that we could not get off, and ſo with the putting in of the currents from the Weſtward, ſet vs in further vnto the Northward within foureſcore leagues of the Iſle of Zocotora, farre from our determined courſe and expectation. But here we neuer wanted abundance of Dolphins, Bonitos and flying fiſhes. Now while we found our ſelues thus farre to the Northward, and the time being ſo farre ſpent, we determined to goe for the Red ſea, or for the Iland of Zocotora, both to refreſh our ſelues, and alſo for ſome purchaſe. But while wee were in this conſultation, the winde very luckily came about to the Northweſt and caried vs directly toward Cape Comori. Before we ſhould haue doubled this Cape, we were determined to touch at the Ilands of Mamale, of which we had aduertiſement, that one had victuals, ſtanding in the Northerly latitude of twelue degrees. Howbeit it was not our good lucke to finde it, which fell out partly by the obſtinacie of our maſter: for the day before we fell with part of the Ilands the wind came about to the Southweſt, and then ſhifting our courſe we miſſed it. So the wind increaſing Southerly, we feared we ſhould not haue bene able to haue doubled the Cape, which would haue greatly hazarded our caſting away vpon the coaſt of India, the Winter ſeaſon and Weſterne Monſons already being come in, which Monſons continue on that coaſt vntil Auguſt. Neuertheles it pleaſed God to bring the wind more Weſterly, & ſo in the moneth of May 1592. we happily doubled Cape Comori without ſight of the coaſt of India. From hence thus hauing doubled this Cape, we directed our courſe for the Ilands of Nicubar, which lie North and South with the Weſterne part of Sumatra, and in the latitude of 7 degrees to the Northward of the Equinoctiall. From which Cape of Comori vnto the aforeſayd Ilands we ranne in ſixe dayes with a very large wind though the weather were foule with extreme raine and guſtes of windes. Theſe Ilands were miſſed through our maſters default for want of due obſeruation of the South ſtarre. And we fell to the Southward of them within the ſight of the Ilands of Gomes Polo, which lie hard vpon the great Iland of Sumatra the firſt of Iune, and at the Northeaſt ſide of them we lay two or three dayes becalmed, hoping to haue had a Pilote from Sumatra, within two leagues whereof wee lay off and on. Now the Winter comming vpon vs with much contagious weather, we directed our courſe from hence with the Ilands of Pulo Pinaou, (where by the way is to be noted that Polo in the Malaian tongue ſignifieth an Iland) at which Ilands wee arriued about the beginning of Iune, where we came to an anker in a very good harborough betweene three Ilands: at which time our men were very ſicke and many fallen. Here we determined to ſtay vntill the Winter were ouerpaſt. This place is in 6 degrees and a halfe to the Northward, and ſome fiue leagues from the maine betweene Malacca and Pegu. Here we continued vntill the end of Auguſt. Our refreſhing in this place was very ſmal, onely of oiſters growing on rocks, great wilks, and ſome few fiſh which we tooke with our hookes. Here we landed our ſicke men on theſe vninhabited Ilands for their health, neuertheleſſe 26 of them died in his place, whereof Iohn Hall our maſter was one, and M. Rainold Golding another, a marchant of great honeſtie and much diſcretion. In theſe Ilands are abundance of trees of white wood, ſo right and tall, that a man may make maſtes of them being an hundred foote long. The winter paſſed and hauing watered our ſhip and fitted her to goe to Sea, wee had left vs but 33 men and one boy, of which not paſt 22 were ſound for labour and helpe, and of them not paſt a third part ſailers: thence we made ſaile to ſeeke ſome place of refreſhing, and went ouer to the maine of Malacca. The next day we came to an anker in a Baie in ſix fadomes water ſome two leagues from the ſhore. Then maſter Iames Lancaſter our captaine, and M. Edmund Barker his lieutenant, and other of the companie manning the boat, went on ſhore to ſee what inhabitants might be found. And comming on land we found the tracking of ſome barefooted people which were departed thence not long before: for we ſawe their fire ſtill burning, but people we ſawe none, nor any other liuing creature, ſaue a certaine kind of foule called oxe birds, which are a gray kind of Sea-foule, like a Snite in colour, but not in beake. Of theſe we killed ſome eight dozen with haile-ſhot being very tame, and ſpending the day in ſearch, returned toward night aboord. The next day about two of the clocke in the afternoone we eſpied a Canoa which came neere vnto vs, but would not come aboord vs, hauing in it ſome ſixteen naked Indians, with whom neuertheles going afterward on land, we had friendly conference and promiſe of victuals. The next day in the morning we eſpied three ſhips, being all of burthen 60 or 70 tunnes, one of which wee made to ſtrike with our very boate: and vnderſtanding that they were of the towne of Martabam, which is the chiefe hauen towne for the great citie of Pegu, and the goods belonging to certaine Portugal Ieſuites and a Biſcuit baker a Portugal, we tooke that ſhip & did not force the other two, becauſe they were laden for marchants of Pegu, but hauing this one at our command, we came together to an anker. The night folowing all the men except twelue, which we tooke into our ſhip, being moſt of them borne in Pegu, fled away in their boate, leauing their ſhip and goods with vs. The next day we weighed our anker and went to the Leeward of an Iland hard by, and tooke in her lading being pepper, which ſhee and the other two had laden at Pera, which is a place on the maine 30 leagues to the South. Beſides the aforeſaid three ſhips, we tooke another ſhip of Pegu laden with pepper, and perceiuing her to bee laden with marchants goods of Pegu onely, wee diſmiſſed her without touching any thing.

Pulo Sambilam.

A ſhip of Negapatan taken.

A ſhip of S. Thome.

The galeon of Malacca of 700 taken.

Thus hauing ſtaied here 10 daies and diſcharged her goods into the Edward, which was about the beginning of September, our ſicke men being ſomewhat refreſhed and luſtie, with ſuch reliefe as we had found in this ſhip, we weighed anker, determining to runne into the ſtreights of Malacca to the Ilands called Pulo Sambilam, which are ſome fiue and fortie leagues Northward of the citie of Malacca, to which Ilands the Portugals muſt needs come from Goa or S. Thome, for the Malucos, China, and Iapan. And when wee were there arriued, we lay too and agayne for ſuch ſhipping as ſhould come that way. Thus hauing ſpent ſome fiue dayes, vpon a Sunday wee eſpied a ſaile which was a Portugall ſhip that came from Negapatan a towne on the maine of India ouer-againſt the Northeaſt part of the Ile of Zeilan; and that night we tooke her being of 250 tunnes: ſhe was laden with Rice for Malacca. Captaine Lancaſter commanded their captaine and maſter aboord our ſhippe, and ſent Edmund Barker his lieutenant and ſeuen more to keepe this prize, who being aboord the ſame, came to an anker in thirtie fadomes water: for in that chanell three or foure leagues from the ſhore you ſhall finde good ankorage. Being thus at an anker and keeping out a light for the Edward, another Portugall ſhip of Sant Thome of foure hundred tunnes, came and ankered hard by vs. The Edward being put to Leeward for lacke of helpe of men to handle her ſailes, was not able the next morning to fetch her vp, vntil we which were in the prize with our boate, went to helpe to man our ſhippe. Then comming aboord we went toward the ſhippe of Sant Thome, but our ſhip was ſo foule that ſhee eſcaped vs. After we had taken out of our Portugall prize what we thought good, we turned her and all her men away except a Pilot and foure Moores. We continued here vntill the ſixt of October, at which time we met with the ſhip of the captaine of Malacca of ſeuen hundred tunnes which came from Goa: we ſhot at her many ſhot, and at laſt ſhooting her maine-yard through, ſhe came to an anker and yeelded. We commaunded her Captaine, Maſter, Pilot and Purſer to come aboord vs. But the Captaine accompanied with one ſouldier onely came, and after certaine conference with him, he made excuſe to fetch the Maſter and Purſer, which he ſayd would not come vnleſſe he went for them: but being gotten from vs in the edge of the euening, he with all the people which were to the number of about three hundred men, women and children, gote a ſhore with two great boates and quite abandoned the ſhip. At our comming aboord we found in her ſixteene pieces of braſſe, and three hundred buts of Canarie wine, and Nipar wine, which is made of the palme trees, and raiſin wine which is alſo very ſtrong: as alſo all kind of Haberdaſher wares, as hats, red caps knit of Spaniſh wooll, worſted ſtockings knit, ſhooes, veluets, taffataes, chamlets, and ſilkes, abundance of ſuckets, rice, Venice glaſſes, certaine papers full of falſe and counterfeit ſtones which an Italian brought from Venice to deceiue the rude Indians withall, abundance of playing cardes, two or three packs of French paper. Whatſoeuer became of the treaſure which vſually is brought in roials of plate in this gallion, we could not find it. After that the mariners had diſorderly pilled this rich ſhippe, the Captaine becauſe they would not follow his commandement to vnlade thoſe excellent wines into the Edward, abandoned her & let her driue at Sea, taking out of her the choiſeſt things that ſhe had. And doubting the forces of Malaca, we departed thence to a Baie in the kingdom of Iunſalaom, which is betweene Malacca and Pegu eight degrees to the Northward, to ſeeke for pitch to trimme our ſhip. Here we ſent our ſouldier, which the captaine of the aforeſaid galion had left behind him with vs, becauſe he had the Malaian language, to deale with the people for pitch, which hee did faithfully, and procured vs ſome two or three quintals with promiſe of more, and certaine of the people came vnto vs. We ſent commodities to their king to barter for Amber-grieſe, and for the hornes of Abath, whereof the king onely hath the traffique in his hands. Now this Abath is a beaſt which hath one horne onely in her forehead, and is thought to be the female Vnicorne, and is highly eſteemed of all the Moores in thoſe parts as a moſt ſoueraigne remedie againſt poyſon. We had onely two or three of theſe hornes which are of the colour of a browne gray, and ſome reaſonable quantitie of Amber-grieſe. At laſt the king went about to betray our Portugall without marchandiſe: but he to get aboord vs, told him that we had gilt armour, ſhirtes of maile and halberds, which things they greatly deſire: for hope whereof he let him returne aboord, and ſo he eſcaped the danger. Thus we left this coaſt and went backe againe in ſight of Sumatra, and thence to the Ilands of Nicubar, where we arriued and found them inhabited with Moores, and after wee came to an anker, the people daily came aboord vs in their Canoas, with hennes, Cocos, plantans and other fruits: and within two dayes they brought vnto vs roials of plate, giuing vs them for Calicut cloth: which roials they finde by diuing for them in the Sea, which were loſt not long before in two Portugall ſhips which were bound for China and were caſt away there. They call in their language the Coco Calambe, the Plantane Piſon, a Hen Iam, a Fiſh Iccan, a Hog Babee. From thence we returned the 21 of Nouember to goe for the Iland of Zeilan, and arriued there about the third of December 1592. and ankered vpon the Southſide in ſixe fadomes water, where we loſt our anker, the place being rockie and foule ground. Then we ranne along the Southweſt part of the ſayd Iland, to a place called Punta del Galle, where we ankered, determining there to haue remained vntill the comming of the Bengala Fleet of ſeuen or eight ſhips, and the Fleete of Pegu of two or three ſailes, and the Portugall ſhippes of Tanaſeri being a great Baie to the Southward of Martabam in the kingdom of Siam: which ſhips, by diuers intelligences which we had, were to come that way within foureteene dayes to bring commodities to ſerue the Caraks, which commonly depart from Cochin for Portugall by the middeſt of Ianuarie. The commodities of the ſhippes which come from Bengala bee fine pauillions for beds, wrought quilts, fine Calicut cloth, Pintados and other fine workes, and Rice, and they make this voiage twiſe in the yeere. Thoſe of Pegu bring the chiefeſt ſtones, as Rubies and Diamants, but their chiefe fraight is Rice and certaine cloth. Thoſe of Tanaſeri are chiefly fraighted with Rice and Nipar wine, which is very ſtrong, and in colour like vnto rocke water ſomewhat whitiſh, and very hote in taſte like vnto Aqua vitæ. Being ſhot vp to the place aforeſayd, called Punta del Galle, wee came to an anker in foule ground and loſt the ſame, and lay all that night a drift, becauſe we had nowe but two ankers left vs, which were vnſtocked and in hold. Whereupon our men tooke occaſion to come home, our Captaine at that time lying very ſicke more like to die then to liue. In the morning wee ſet our foreſaile determining to lie vp to the Northward and there to keepe our ſelues to and againe out of the current, which otherwiſe would haue ſet vs off to the Southward from all knowen land. Thus hauing ſet our foreſayle, and in hand to ſet all our other ſayles to accompliſh our aforeſayd determination, our men made anſwere that they would take their direct courſe for England and would ſtay there no longer. Nowe ſeeing they could not bee perſwaded by any meanes poſſible, the captaine was conſtrained to giue his conſent to returne, leauing all hope of ſo great poſſibilities. Thus the eight of December 1592. wee ſet ſayle for the Cape of Buona Speranſa, paſſing by the Ilands of Maldiua, and leauing the mightie Iland of S. Laurence on the ſtarreboord or Northward in the latitude of 26 degrees to the South. In our paſſage ouer from S. Laurence to the maine we had exceeding great ſtore of Bonitos and Albocores, which are a greater kind of fiſh: of which our captain, being now recouered of his ſickneſſe, tooke with an hooke as many in two or three howers as would ſerue fortie perſons a whole day. And this ſkole of fiſh continued with our ſhip for the ſpace of fiue or ſixe weekes, all which while we tooke to the quantitie aforeſayd, which was no ſmall refreſhing to vs. In February 1593. we fell with the Eaſtermoſt land of Africa at a place called Baia de Agoa ſome 100 leagues to the Northeaſt of the Cape of Good Hope: and finding the winds contrary, we ſpent a moneth or fiue weekes before we could double the Cape. After wee had doubled it in March folowing, wee directed our courſe for the Iland of Santa Helena, and arriued there the third day of Aprill, where wee ſtaied to our great comfort nineteene dayes: in which meane ſpace ſome one man of vs tooke thirtie goodly Congers in one day, and other rockie fiſhe and ſome Bonitos. After our arriuall at Santa Helena, I Edmund Barker went on ſhore with foure or fiue Peguins or men of Pegu which we had taken, and our Surgion, where in an houſe by the Chappell I found an Engliſhman one Iohn Segar of Burie in Suffolke, who was left there eighteene moneths before by Abraham Kendall, who put in there with the Roiall marchant, and left him there to refreſh him on the Iland, being otherwiſe like to haue periſhed on ſhipboord: and at our comming wee found him as freſh in colour and in as good plight of body to our ſeeming as might be, but crazed in minde and halfe out of his wits, as afterward wee perceiued: for whether he were put in fright of vs, not knowing at firſt what we were, whether friends or foes, or of ſudden ioy when he vnderſtood we were his olde conſorts and countreymen, hee became idle-headed, and for eight dayes ſpace neither night nor day tooke any naturall reſt, and ſo at length died for lacke of ſleepe. Here two of our men, whereof the one was diſeaſed with the ſkuruie, and the other had bene nine moneths ſicke of the fluxe, in ſhort time while they were on the Iland, recouered their perfect health. We found in this place great ſtore of very holeſome and excellent good greene figs, orenges, and lemons very faire, abundance of goates and hogs, and great plentie of partriges, Guiniecocks, and other wilde foules. Our mariners ſomewhat diſcontented being now watered and hauing ſome prouiſion of fiſh, contrary to the will of the capitaine, would ſtraight home. The capitaine becauſe he was deſirous to goe for Phernambuc in Braſil, granted their requeſt. And about the 12 of Aprill 1593. we departed from S. Helena, and directed our courſe for the place aforeſayd. The next day our capitaine calling vpon the ſailers to finiſh a foreſaile which they had in hand, ſome of them anſwered that vnleſſe they might goe directly home, they would lay their hands to nothing; whereupon he was conſtrained to follow their humour. And from thence-foorth we directed our courſe for our countrey, which we kept vntill we came 8 degrees to the Northward of the Equinoctiall, betweene which 8 degrees and the line, we ſpent ſome ſixe weekes, with many calme and contrary winds at North, and ſomtimes to the Eaſtward, & ſomtimes to the Weſtward: which loſſe of time and expenſe of our victuals, whereof we had very ſmal ſtore, made vs doubt to keepe our courſe: and ſome of our men growing into a mutinie threatned to breake vp other mens cheſts, to the ouerthrow of our victuals and all our ſelues, for euery man had his ſhare of his victuals before in his owne cuſtody, that they might be ſure what to truſt to, and husband it more thriftily. Our capitaine ſeeking to preuent this miſchiefe, being aduertiſed by one of our companie which had bene at the Ile of Trinidada in M. Chidleis voyage, that there we ſhould be ſure to haue refreſhing, hereupon directed his courſe to that Iland, and not knowing the currents, we were put paſt it in the night into the gulfe of Paria in the beginning of Iune, wherein we were 8 dayes, finding the current continually ſetting in, and oftentimes we were in 3 fadomes water, and could find no going out vntil the current had put vs ouer to the Weſterſide vnder the maine land, where we found no current at all, and more deep water; and ſo keeping by the ſhore, the wind off the ſhore euery night did helpe vs out to the Northward. Being cleare, within foure or fiue dayes after we fell with the Ile of Mona where we ankred and rode ſome eighteene dayes. In which time the Indians of Mona gaue vs ſome refreſhing. And in the meane ſpace there arriued a French ſhip of Cane in which was capitaine one Monſieur de Barbaterre, of whom wee bought ſome two buts of wine and bread, and other victuals. Then wee watered and fitted our ſhippe, and ſtopped a great leake which broke on vs as we were beating out of the gulfe of Paria. And hauing thus made ready our ſhip to goe to Sea, we determined to goe directly for New-found-land. But before wee departed, there aroſe a ſtorme the winde being Northerly, which put vs from an anker and forced vs to the Southward of Santo Domingo. This night we were in danger of ſhipwracke vpon an Iland called Sauona, which is enuironed with flats lying 4 or 5 miles off: yet it pleaſed God to cleare vs of them, & ſo we directed our courſe Weſtward along the Iland of Santo Domingo, and doubled

Cape Tiberon, and paſſed through the old chanell betweene S. Domingo and Cuba for the cape of Florida: And here we met againe with the French ſhip of Caen, whoſe Captaine could ſpare vs no more victuals, as he ſaid, but only hides which he had taken by traffike vpon thoſe Iſlands, wherewith we were content and gaue him for them to his good ſatiſfaction. After this, paſſing the Cape of Florida, and cleere of the chanell of Bahama, we directed our courſe for the banke of Newfound-land. Thus running to the height of 36 degrees, and as farre to the Eaſt as the Iſle of Bermuda the 17 of September finding the winds there very variable, contrarie to our expectation and all mens writings, we lay there a day or two the winde being northerly, and increaſing continually more and more, it grewe to be a ſtorme and a great frete of wind: which continued with vs ſome 24 houres, with ſuch extremitie, as it caried not onely our ſayles away being furled, but alſo made much water in our ſhippe, ſo that wee had ſixe foote water in holde, and hauing freed our ſhip thereof with baling, the winde ſhifted to the Northweſt and became dullerd: but preſently vpon it the extremitie of the ſtorme was ſuch that with the labouring of our ſhip we loſt our foremaſte, and our ſhip grewe as full of water as before. The ſtorme once ceaſed, and the winde contrary to goe our courſe, we fell to conſultation which might be our beſt way to ſaue our liues. Our victuals now being vtterly ſpent, & hauing eaten hides 6 or 7 daies, we thought it beſt to beare back againe for Dominica, & the Iſlands adioyning, knowing that there we might haue ſome reliefe, whereupon we turned backe for the ſaid Iſlands. But before we could get thither the winde ſcanted vpon vs, which did greatly endanger vs for lacke of freſh water and victuals: ſo that we were conſtrained to beare vp to the Weſtward to certaine other Ilandes called the Nueblas or cloudie Ilands, towards the Ile of S. Iuan de porto Rico, where at our arriuall we found land-crabs and freſh water, and tortoyſes, which come moſt on lande about the full of the moone. Here hauing refreſhed our ſelues ſome 17 or 18 dayes, and hauing gotten ſome ſmall ſtore of victuals into our ſhip, we reſolued to returne againe for Mona: vpon which our determination fiue of our men left vs, remaining ſtill on the Iles of Nueblas for all perſwaſions that we could vſe to the contrary, which afterward came home in an Engliſh ſhippe. From theſe Iles we departed and arriued at Mona about the twentieth of Nouember 1593, and there comming to an anker toward two or three of the clocke in the morning, the Captaine, and Edmund Barker his Lieuetenant with ſome few others went on land to the houſes of the olde Indian and his three ſonnes, thinking to haue gotten ſome foode, our victuals being all ſpent, and we not able to proceede any further vntill we had obteyned ſome new ſupply. We ſpent two or three daies in ſeeking prouiſion to cary aboord to relieue the whole companie. And comming downe to go aboord, the winde then being northerly and the ſea ſomewhat growne, they could not come on ſhore with the boate, which was a thing of ſmall ſuccour and not able to rowe in any rough ſea, whereupon we ſtayed vntill the next morning, thinking to haue had leſſe winde and ſafer paſſage. But in the night about twelue of the clocke our ſhip did driue away with fiue men and a boy onely in it, our carpenter ſecretly cut their owne cable, leauing nineteene of vs on land without boate or any thing, to our great diſcomfort. In the middeſt of theſe miſeries repoſing our truſt in the goodneſſe of God, which many times before had ſuccoured vs in our greateſt extremities, we contented our ſelues with our poore eſtate, and ſought meanes to preſerue our liues. And becauſe one place was not able to ſuſtaine vs, we tooke our leaues one of another, diuiding our ſelues into ſeuerall companies. The greateſt reliefe that we ſixe which were with the Captaine could finde for the ſpace of nine and twentie dayes was the ſtalkes of purcelaine boyled in water, and now and then a pompion, which we found in the garden of the olde Indian, who vpon this our ſecond arriuall with his three ſonnes ſtole from vs, and kept himſelfe continually aloft in the mountaines. After the ende of nine and twentie dayes we eſpied a French ſhippe, which afterwards we vnderſtood to be of Diepe, called the Luiſa, whoſe Captaine was one Mounſieur Felix, vnto whom wee made a fire, at ſight whereof he tooke in his topſayles, bare in with the land, and ſhewed vs his flagge, whereby we iudged him French: ſo comming along to the Weſterne ende of the Iſland there he ankered, we making downe with all ſpeede vnto him. At this time the Indian and his three ſonnes came downe to our Captaine Maſter Iames Lancaſter, and went along with him to the ſhippe. This night he went aboord the French man, who gaue him good entertainment, and the next day fetched eleuen more of vs aboord entreating vs all very courteouſly. This day came another French ſhippe of the ſame towne of Diepe, which remayned there vntill night expecting our other ſeuen mens comming downe: who, albeit we cauſed certaine pieces of ordinance to be ſhot off to call them, yet came not downe. Whereupon we departed thence, being deuided ſixe into one ſhip, and ſixe into another, and leauing this Iſland, departed for the Northſide of Saint Domingo, where we remained vntill Aprill following 1594, and ſpent ſome two monethes in traffike with the inhabitants by permiſſion for hides and other marchandiſes of the Countrey. In this meane while there came a ſhippe of New-hauen to the place where we were, whereby we had intelligence of our ſeuen men which wee left behinde vs at the Iſle of Mona: which was, that two of them brake their neckes with ventring to take foules vpon the cliffes, other three were ſlaine by the Spaniards, which came from Saint Domingo, vpon knowledge giuen by our men which went away in the Edward, the other two this man of New-hauen had with him in his ſhippe, which eſcaped the Spaniards bloodie hands. From this place Captaine Lancaſter and his Lieutenant Maſter Edmund Barker, ſhipped themſelues in another ſhippe of Diepe, the Captaine whereof was one Iohn La Noe, which was readie firſt to come away, and leauing the reſt of their companie in other ſhips, where they were well intreated, to come after him, on ſunday the ſeuenth of Aprill 1594 they ſet homewarde, and diſbocking through the Caijcos from thence arriued ſafely in Diepe within two and fortie dayes after, on the 19 of May, where after we had ſtayed two dayes to refreſh our ſelues, and giuen humble thankes vnto God, and vnto our friendly neighbours, we tooke paſſage for Rie and landed there on Friday the 24 of May 1594, hauing ſpent in this voyage three yeeres, ſixe weekes and two dayes, which the Portugales performe in halfe the time, chiefely becauſe wee loſt our fit time and ſeaſon to ſet foorth in the beginning of our voyage.

M. Lancaſter returneth to Diepe, and ſo to England.

We vnderſtood in the Eaſt Indies by certaine Portugales which we tooke, that they haue lately diſcouered the coaſt of China to the latitude of nine and fiftie degrees, finding the ſea ſtill open to the Northward: giuing great hope of the Northeaſt or Northweſt paſſage. Witneſſe Maſter Iames Lancaſter.

Certaine remembrances of an intended voyage to Braſill, and the Riuer af Plate, by the Edward Cotton, a ſhip of 260 Tunnes of Maſter Edward Cotton of Southhampton, which periſhed through extreme negligence neare Rio grande in Guinie, the 17 of Iuly 1583.

ARticles of Couenants agreed vpon betweene Edward Cotton Eſquier, owner of the good ſhip called the Edward Cotton of Southhampton, and of all the marchandizes in her laden, of the one part, and William Huddie gentleman, Captaine of the ſaid ſhip, Iohn Hooper his Lieutenant, Iohn Foſter Maſter, Hugh Smith Pilot for the whole voyage, and William Cheeſman marchant, on the other part.

1 TO obſerue and keepe the dayly order of Common prayer aboord the ſhip, and the companie to be called thereunto, at the leaſt once in the day, to be pronounced openly.

2 Item, that they be ready with the firſt faire winde, to ſet ſaile and ſailes in the voyage, and not to put into any port or harbour, but being forcibly conſtrained by weather, or other apparant and vrgent cauſe.

3 Item, that they take in, at or about the Iſles of Cape Verde, to the quantitie of 25 or 30 tuns of ſalt, to be imployed among other the owners marchandize, at Santos, and S. Vincent, to his onely behoofe, and the reſt of the ſalt, ſo much as ſhall be needed for victuall, and for ſauing of the hides to be kept aboord, & the ſame ſalt to be prouided either at the fiſhermens hands neere the ſaid Iſles for trucke of commodities, or els to be taken in at the aforeſaid Iſles, at the diſcretion of the abouenamed.

4 Item, vpon the due performance of this voiage, the owner bindeth himſelfe by this deede, to yeeld vnto any ſuch of the companie, as ſhall refuſe their ſhares before they depart from the coaſt of England, 20 markes a ſingle ſhare, for the dutie of the whole voiage, making not aboue 75. ſhares ſingle in the whole.

5 Item, the company according as they be appointed by the officers of the ſaid ſhip aboue named, ſhall at all times be moſt ready to doe their painfull indeuour, not onely aboord, but in all labours at the land, according to the direction giuen by the aboue named officers, vpon paine of forfeiture of their ſhares and wages, the ſame to be diuided amongſt the company.

6 Item, that the ſhares be taken at their returne out of al the traine oile, and hides of the ſeales, and of all other commodities gotten by their handie labour, and of the ſalt that ſhall be vented and other commodities, at, or neere the coaſt of Braſill, to allow after 9 li. the tunne freight, whereof one third to goe to the companie.

7 Item, that if any man ſhall practiſe by any deuiſe or deuiſes whatſoeuer, to alter the voiage from the true purpoſe and intent of the owner, viz. to make their firſt port at Santos, and Saint Vincent, and there to reuictuall and traffike, and from thence to the riuer of Plate to make their voyage by the traine, and hide of the ſeales, with ſuch other commodities as are there to be had, according as the owner, with diuers that haue gouernment in the ſaid ſhip, are bound to her highneſſe by their deedes obligatorie in great ſummes, that all ſuch practiſers, vpon due proofe made, ſhall looſe their whole intertainement due by ſhares or otherwiſe for this ſayde voyage to be adiudged by the Captaine, his Lieutenant, the Maſter, Pilot, and marchant, or three of them at the leaſt, whereof the Captaine to be one.

8 Item, that the pinneſſe be ready at al times to ſerue the marchants turne vpon his demand, to take in wares and commodities, and to cary and recary to and from the ſhore, when, and as oft as neede ſhall be, and to giue due attendance at the marchant and marchants direction, during the whole voyage.

9 Item, that no head or chiefe officer being ſet downe for ſuch an officer vnder the hand of the owner, at the going to ſea of the ſaid ſhippe, ſhall or may be diſplaced from his ſaid place or office, without great cauſe, and his miſdemeanor to be adiudged by the Captaine, and his Lieutenant, the Maſter, the Pilot, and the marchant, or by the conſent of three of them at the leaſt.

10 Item, that vpon the returne of the ſhippe to the coaſt of England, the Maiſter and Pilot put not into any port or harbour, to the Weſtward of Southhampton, but forced by weather, or ſuch like vrgent cauſe.

A direction as well for the Captaine, and other my friends of the ſhip, as eſpecially for William Cheeſman Marchant, for the voyage to the riuer of Plate.

The Iſle of S. Sebaſtian.

At your comming to the Iſle of Saint Sebaſtian, vpon the coaſt of Braſill, you ſhall according to your diſcretions, make ſale of ſuch commodities, as you may thinke will be thereabout well vented, and likewiſe to buy commodities without making longer ſtay there then your victuals be prouiding, but rather to beſpeake commodities againſt your returne from the riuer of Plate, eſpecially of Amber, Sugar, Greene ginger, Cotton wooll, and ſome quantitie of the peppers of the countrey there. Alſo for Parats and Munkies, and the beaſt called Serraboſa. Alſo you ſhall barrell vp of the beefe called Petune, two or three barrels, and to loſe no good oportunitie, to gather of the Indian figges, and the graines of them to preſerue vſe, in ſuch quantitie as conueniently may be done: and touching the making of the traine, and preſeruing of the hides, I leaue it wholly to the order and the diſcretion of the chiefe of the companie. Alſo that in any road where the ſhip ſhall ride vpon the coaſt of America, triall be made with the dragges, for the pearle Oiſters, and the ſame being taken, to be opened and ſearched for pearle in the preſence of the Captaine, his Lieutenant, the Maſter, the Pilot, and marchant, or three of them, whereof the Captaine or his Lieutenant to be one, and to remaine in the cuſtodie of the Captaine and marchant, vnder two lockes, either of them to haue a key to his owne locke, and that a true inuentorie be deliuered alſo to the Maſter and Pilot of the ſaid pearle or other iewels of price gotten in the ſaid voiage, to the intent that no partie be defrauded of his due, and that no concealment be made of any ſuch thing vpon forfeiture, the partie to loſe his ſhare and dutie for the voyage that ſhall ſo conceale and not reueale it vnto the officers aboue named. Alſo to doe your beſt indeuour to try for the beſt Ore of golde, ſiluer, or other rich mettals whatſoeuer. Forget not alſo to bring the kernels and ſeeds of ſtrange plants with you, the Palmito with his fruit incloſed in him. Serue God, keepe good watch, and ſtand allwayes vpon your garde.

Edward Cotton.

These things being thus ordered, and the ſhip of the burden of 260 tunnes, with 83 men of all ſortes furniſhed, and fully appointed for the voyage, began to ſet ſaile from Hurſt Caſtle vpon Friday the 20 of May, Anno 1583, and the 17 day of July enſuing fell with the coaſt of Guinie, to take in freſh water, where, through meere diſſolute negligence, ſhe periſhed vpon a ſand, with the moſt part of the men in her, as appeareth by the confeſſion of one that eſcaped, the ſubſtance and tenor whereof is this.

The confeſſion of VVilliam Bends Maſters Mate in the Edward Cotton, the 21 of October, Ann. 1584.

HE ſayth, that the 17 day of Iuly, Anno 1583. hauing ſome lacke of freſh water, they put roome vpon the coaſt of Guinie, where they were ſet vpon a ſand about 8 leagues from the ſhore, and this Examinate, with 29 more, got into the pinneſſe, who arriued in an Iſland, being deſolate of people, and fiue miles in compaſſe, where they reſted 18 dayes through force of weather, hauing nought to eate but graſſe. The reſt of the company the ſhip being ſplitted in two, and in quarters, got them into one of the after quarters, and by the helpe of raftes came alſo a ſhore into another Iſland neere to Rio grande, where they all died as he ſuppoſeth.

Rio grande.

The other 30 in the pinneſſe; at the end of 18 dayes, departed that Iſland, and came to Saint Domingo, where comming on ſhore, they were taken of the Moores, & ſtripped naked, And they buried one Coxe an olde man aliue, notwithſtanding his pitifull lamentation and ſkrikings: the reſt hauing Rice and water allowed them, liued there a certaine time. This Examinate was at laſt ſold to a Portugall, with whom he dwelt the ſpace of a quarter of a yere, and in the end, a Portugall Carauel comming thither, his maſter laded the ſame with Negroes, and he obtained leaue of his maſter to goe in the ſame Carauell, & by that meanes arriued at Lisbone, and from thence came into England the 17 of October, 1584, leauing behinde him of his companie aliue, Richard Hacker, Iohn Baker, Iohn Mathew, and a boy, with two others which were gone beyond Saint Domingo: all which, as he ſaith, were ſo ſicke and diſeaſed, that he iudgeth them to be long before this time dead.

One Coxe an old Engliſh man buried aliue by the Moores of Rio grãde in Guinea.

The eſcape of the Primroſe a tall ſhip of London, from before the towne of Bilbao in Biſcay: which ſhip the Corrigidor of the ſame Prouince, accompanied with 97 Spaniards, offered violently to arreſt, and was defeated of his purpoſe, and brought priſoner into England.

Whereunto is added the Kings Commiſſion for a generall imbargment or arreſt of all Engliſh, Netherlandiſh, and Eaſterlings ſhips, written in Barcelona the 19 of May 1585.

IT is not vnknowen vnto the world what danger our Engliſh ſhippes haue lately eſcaped, how ſharpely they haue beene intreated, and howe hardly they haue beene aſſaulted: ſo that the valiancie of thoſe that mannaged them is worthy remembrance. And therefore in reſpect of the couragious attempt and valiant enterpriſe of the ſhip called the Primroſe of London, which hath obteined renowne, I haue taken in hande to publiſh the trueth thereof, to the intent that it may be generally knowen to the reſt of the Engliſh ſhips, that by the good example of this the reſt may in time of extremitie aduenture to doe the like: to the honour of the Realme, and the perpetuall remembrance of themſelues: The maner whereof was as followeth.

VPon Wedneſday being the ſixe and twentieth day of May 1585, the ſhippe called the Primroſe being of one hundred and fiftie tunnes, lying without the bay of Bilbao, hauing beene there two dayes, there came a Spaniſh pinneſſe to them, wherein was the Corrigidor and ſixe others with him: theſe came aboord the Primroſe, ſeeming to be Marchantes of Biſcay, or ſuch like, bringing Cherries with them, and ſpake very friendly to the Maiſter of the ſhip, whoſe name was Foſter, and he in courteous wiſe bad them welcome, making them the beſt cheere that he could with beere, beefe, and biſket, wherewith that ſhip was well furniſhed: and while they were thus in banquetting with the Maiſter, foure of the ſeuen departed in the ſayd Pinneſſe, and went backe againe to Bilbao: the other three ſtayed, and were very pleaſant for the time. But Maſter Foſter miſdoubting ſome danger ſecretly gaue ſpeech that he was doubtfull of theſe men what their intent was; neuertheleſſe he ſayd nothing, nor ſeemed in any outward wiſe to miſtruſt them at all. Forthwith there came a ſhip-boate wherein were ſeuentie perſons being Marchants and ſuch like of Biſcay: and beſides this boate, there came alſo the Pinneſſe which before had brought the other three, in which Pinneſſe there came foure and twentie, as the Spaniards themſelues ſince confeſſed, Theſe made towards the Primroſe, and being come thither, there came aboord the Corrigidor with three or foure of his men: but Maſter Foſter ſeeing this great multitude deſired that there might no more come aboord, but that the reſt ſhould ſtay in their boates, which was granted: neuertheleſſe they tooke ſmall heede of theſe wordes; for on a ſuddaine they came foorth of the boate, entring the ſhippe, euery Spaniarde taking him to his Rapier which they brought in the boate, with other weapons, and a drumme wherewith to triumph ouer them. Thus did the Spaniards enter the ſhippe, plunging in fiercely vpon them, ſome planting themſelues vnder the decke, ſome entring the Cabbens, and a multitude attending their pray. Then the Corrigidor hauing an officer with him which bare a white wand in his hand, ſayd to the maſter of the ſhip: Yeeld your ſelfe, for you are the kings priſoner: whereat the Maiſter ſayd to his men, We are betrayed. Then ſome of them ſet daggers to his breaſt, and ſeemed in furious manner as though they would haue ſlaine him, meaning nothing leſſe then to doe any ſuch act, for all that they ſought was to bring him and his men ſafe aliue to ſhore. Whereat the Maiſter was amazed, and his men greatly diſcomfited to ſee themſelues readie to be conueyed euen to the ſlaughter: notwithſtanding ſome of them reſpecting the daunger of the Maiſter, and ſeeing how with themſelues there was no way but preſent death if they were once landed among the Spaniards, they reſolued themſelues eyther to defend the Maiſter, and generally to ſhunne that daunger, or elſe to die and be buried in the middeſt of the ſea, rather then to ſuffer themſelues to come into the tormentors hands: and therefore in very bold and manly ſort ſome tooke them to their iauelings, lances, bore-ſpeares, and ſhot, which they had ſet in readineſſe before, and hauing fiue Caliuers readie charged, which was all the ſmall ſhot they had, thoſe that were vnder the hatches or the grate did ſhoote vp at the Spaniards that were ouer their heads, which ſhot ſo amazed the Spaniards on the ſuddaine, as they could hardly tell which way to eſcape the daunger, fearing this their ſmall ſhot to be of greater number then it was: others in very manlike ſort dealt about among them, ſhewing themſelues of that courage with bore-ſpeares and lances, that they diſmayed at euery ſtroke two or three Spaniards. Then ſome of them deſired the Maiſter to commaund his men to ceaſe and holde their handes, but hee anſwered that ſuch was the courage of the Engliſh Nation in defence of their owne liues, that they would ſlay them and him alſo: and therefore it lay not in him to doe it. Now did their blood runne about the ſhip in great quantitie, ſome of them being ſhot in betweene the legges, the bullets iſſuing foorth at their breaſts, ſome cut in the head, ſome thruſt into the bodie, and many of them very ſore wounded, ſo that they came not ſo faſt in on the one ſide, but now they tumbled as faſt ouer boord on both ſides with their weapons in their handes, ſome falling into the ſea, and ſome getting into their boates, making haſte towardes the Citie. And this is to be noted, that although they came very thicke thither, there returned but a ſmall companie of them, neither is it knowen as yet how many of them were ſlaine or drowned, onely one Engliſh man was then ſlaine, whoſe name was Iohn Triſtram, and ſixe other hurt. It was great pitie to behold how the Spaniards lay ſwimming in the ſea, and were not able to ſaue their liues. Foure of them taking holde of the ſhippe were for pities ſake taken vp againe by Maiſter Foſter and his men, not knowing what they were: all the Spaniards boſomes were ſtuft with paper, to defend them from the ſhot, and theſe foure hauing ſome wounds were dreſt by the ſurgion of the ſhippe. One of them was the Corrigidor himſelfe, who is gouernour of a hundred Townes and Cities in Spaine, his liuing by his office being better then ſixe hundred pound yeerely. This ſkirmiſh happened in the euening about ſixe of the clocke, after they had laden twentie Tunne of goods and better out of the ſayd ſhip: which goods were deliuered by two of the ſame ſhip, whoſe names were Iohn Burrell, and Iohn Brodbanke, who being on ſhore were apprehended and ſtayed.

After this valiant enterpriſe of eight and twentie Engliſh men againſt 97 Spaniardes, they ſaw it was in vaine for them to ſtay and therefore ſet vp ſayles, and by Gods prouidence auoyded all danger, brought home the reſt of their goods, and came thence with all expedition: and (God be thanked) arriued ſafely in England neere London on Wedneſday being the 8 day of Iune, 1585. In which their returne to England the Spaniards that they brought with them offered fiue hundred crownes to be ſet on ſhore in any place: which, ſeeing the Maiſter would not doe, they were content to be ruled by him and his companie, and craued mercie at their hands. And after Maſter Foſter demaunded why they came in ſuch ſort to betray and deſtroy them, the Corrigidor anſwered, that it was not done onely of themſelues, but by the commandement of the king himſelfe; and calling for his hoſe which were wet, did plucke foorth the kings Commiſſion, by which he was authorized to doe all that he did: The Copie whereof followeth, being tranſlated out of Spaniſh.

The Spaniſh kings commiſsion for the generall imbargment or arreſt of the Engliſh, &c.

Licentiat de Eſcober, my Corigidor of my Signorie of Biskay, I haue cauſed a great fleete to be put in readineſſe in the hauen of Lisbone, and the riuer of Siuill. There is required for the Souldiers, armour, victuals, and munition, that are to bee imployed in the ſame great ſtore of ſhipping of all ſortes againſt the time of ſeruice, and to the end there may be choiſe made of the beſt, vpon knowledge of their burden and goodneſſe; I doe therefore require you, that preſently vpon the arriuall of this carrier, and with as much diſſimulation as may be (that the matter may not be knowen vntill it be put in execution) you take order for the ſtaying and arreſting (with great foreſight) of all the ſhipping that may be found vpon the coaſt, and in the portes of the ſayd Signorie, excepting none of Holand, Zeland, Eaſterland, Germanie, England, and other Prouinces that are in rebellion againſt mee, ſauing thoſe of France which being litle, and of ſmall burden and weake, are thought vnfit to ſerue the turne. And the ſtay being thus made, you ſhall haue a ſpeciall care that ſuch marchandize as the ſayd ſhippes or hulkes haue brought, whether they be all or part vnladen, may bee taken out, and that the armour, munition, tackels, ſayles, and victuals may be ſafely beſtowed, as alſo that it may be well foreſeene, that none of the ſhippes or men may eſcape away. Which things being thus executed, you ſhall aduertiſe me by an expreſſe meſſenger, of your proceeding therein: And ſend me a plaine and diſtinct declaration of the number of ſhips that you ſhall haue ſo ſtayed in that coaſt and partes, whence euery one of them is, which belong to my Rebels, what burthen & goods there are, and what number of men is in euery of them, and what quantitie they haue of armour, ordinance, munition, victuals, tacklings and other neceſſaries, to the end that vpon ſight hereof, hauing made choiſe of ſuch as ſhall be fit for the ſeruice, we may further direct you what ye ſhall do. In the meane time you ſhall preſently ſee this my commandement put in execution, and if there come thither any more ſhips, you ſhall alſo cauſe them to be ſtayed and arreſted after the ſame order, vſing therein ſuch care and diligence, as may anſwere the truſt that I repoſe in you, wherein you ſhall doe me great ſeruice. Dated at Barcelona the 29 of May. 1585.

And thus haue you heard the trueth and manner thereof, wherein is to be noted the great courage of the maiſter, and the louing hearts of the ſeruants to ſaue their maſter from the daunger of death: yea, and the care which the maſter had to ſaue ſo much of the owners goods as hee might, although by the ſame the greateſt is his owne loſſe in that he may neuer trauell to thoſe parts any more without the loſſe of his owne life, nor yet any of his ſeruantes: for if hereafter they ſhould, being knowen they are like to taſte of the ſharpe torments which are there accuſtomed in their Holy-houſe. And as for their terming Engliſh ſhippes to be in rebellion againſt them, it is ſufficiently knowen by themſelues, and their owne conſciences can not denie it, but that with loue, vnitie, and concord, our ſhippes haue euer beene fauourable vnto them, and as willing to pleaſure their King, as his ſubiectes any way willing to pleaſure Engliſh paſſengers.

The Letters patents or priuiledges granted by her Maieſtie to certaine Noble men and Marchants of London, for a trade to Barbarie, in the yeere 1585.

Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. to the Treaſurer & Barons of our Eſchequer, and to al Maiors, ſhirifs, conſtables, cuſtomers, collectors of our cuſtomes and ſubſidies, controllers, ſearchers, and keepers of our hauens and creekes, ports and paſſages, within this our realme of England and the dominions of the ſame, and to al our officers, miniſters and ſubiects, and to all other whoſoeuer to whom it ſhall or may appertaine, and to euery of them greeting. Whereas it is made euidently and apparantly knowen vnto vs, that of late yeeres our right truſtie and right welbeloued councellors, Ambroſe Erle of Warwike, and Robert Erle of Leiceſter, and alſo our louing and naturall ſubiects, Thomas Starkie of our citie of London Alderman, Ierard Gore the elder, and all his ſonnes, Thomas Gore the elder, Arthur Atie gentleman, Alexander Auenon, Richard Staper, William Iennings, Arthur Dawbeney, William Sherington, Thomas Bramlie, Anthony Garrard, Robert How, Henry Colthirſt, Edward Holmden, Iohn Swinnerton, Robert Walkaden, Simon Lawrence, Nicholas Stile, Oliuer Stile, William Bond, Henrie Farrington, Iohn Tedcaſtle, Walter Williams, William Brune, Iohn Suzan, Iohn Newton, Thomas Owen, Roger Afield, Robert Waſhborne, Reinold Guy, Thomas Hitchcocke, George Lydiat, Iohn Cartwright, Henry Paiton, Iohn Boldroe, Robert Bowyer, Anthonie Daſſell, Auguſtine Lane, Robert Lion, and Thomas Dod, all of London, Marchants now trading into the Countrey of Barbary, in the parts of Africa, vnder the gouernment of Muly Hammet Sheriffe, Emperor of Marocco, and king of Feſſe and Sus, haue ſuſtained great and grieuous loſſes, and are like to ſuſtaine greater if it ſhould not be preuented: In tender cōſideration whereof, and for that diuers Marchandize of the ſame Countries are very neceſſary and conuenient for the vſe and defence of this our Realme of England, and for diuers other cauſes vs ſpecially mouing, minding the reliefe and benefite of our ſaid ſubiects, and the quiet trafique and good gouernment to be had, and vſed among them in their ſaid trade, of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe giue and grant vnto the ſaide Earles of Warwike and Leiceſter, Thomas Starkie, Ierard Gore the elder, Arthur Atie gentleman, Alexander Auenon, Richard Staper, William Iennings, Arthur Dawbenie, William Sherington, Thomas Bramlie, Anthonie Gerrard, Robert Howe, Henry Colthirſt, Edward Holmden, Iohn Swinnerton, Robert Walkaden, Simon Lawrence, Nicholas Stile, Oliuer Stile, William Bond, Henry Farrington, Iohn Tedcaſtle, Walter Williams, William Brune, Iohn Suzan, Iohn Newton, Thomas Owen, Roger Afild, Robert Waſhborne, Rainold Guie, Thomas Hitchcocke, George Lidiate, Iohn Cartwright, Henry Payton, Iohn Baldroe, Robert Bowyer, Anthony Daſſell, Auguſtine Lane, Robert Lion, and Thomas Dod, that they and euery of them by themſelues, or by their factors or ſeruants, and none others, ſhall and may, for, and during the ſpace of 12. yeeres, haue and enioy the whole freedome and libertie in the ſaide trafique or trade, vnto or from the ſaid countrey of Barbary, or to or from any part thereof, for the buying and ſelling of all maner of wares and marchandizes whatſoeuer, that now or accuſtomably heretofore haue bene brought or tranſported, frō, or to the ſaid country of Barbary, or frō or to any of the cities, townes, places, ports, roades, hauens, harbors or creeks of the ſaid country of Barbary, any law, ſtatute, graunt, matter, cuſtomes or priuileges, to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

And for the better eſtabliſhing, ordering and gouerning of the ſaid Erles of Warwike and Leiceſter, Thomas Starkie, &c. abouesaid, their factors, ſeruants and aſſignes in the trade aforeſaid, we for vs our heires and ſucceſſors, doe by theſe preſents giue and graunt full licence to the ſaide Thomas Starkie, Ierard Gore the elder, and the reſt aforeſaide, and to euery of them from time to time, during the ſaid terme of twelue yeres, at their pleaſures to aſſemble and meete together in any place or places conuenient within our citie of London, or elſewhere, to conſult of, and for the ſaid trade, and with the conſent of the ſaid Erle of Leiceſter, to make and eſtabliſh good and neceſſary orders and ordinances, for, and touching the ſame, and al ſuch orders and ordinances ſo made, to put in vre and execute, and them or any of them with the conſent of the ſaid Erle of Leiceſter, to alter, change and make voyde, and if need be, to make new, as at any time during the ſaide terme, they or the moſt part of them then liuing and trading, ſhall finde conuenient.

Prouided alwayes, that the ordinances or any of them bee not contrary or repugnant to the lawes, ſtatutes or cuſtomes of this our Realme of England. And to the intent that they onely to whom the ſaid libertie of trafique is graunted by theſe our Letters patents, and none other our Subiects whatſoeuer, without their ſpecial conſent and licence before had, ſhould during the ſaid terme haue trade or trafique for any maner of Marchandizes, to, or from the ſaid countrey of Barbary, or to, or from any Citie, towne, place, port, harbor or creeke within the ſaid countrey of Barbary, to, or out of our ſaid Realmes and dominions, wee doe by theſe preſents ſtraightly charge, commaund, and prohibite all and euery our Subiects whatſoeuer, other then only the ſaid Erles of Warwike and Leiceſter, Thomas Starkie, and the reſt abouesaid, and euery of them by themſelues, or by their Factors or ſeruants during the ſaide terme, to trade or trafique, for or with any marchandize, to, or from the ſaide Countrey of Barbary, or to, or from any the dominions of the ſame, as they tender our fauour, and will auoyde our high diſpleaſure, and vpon paine of impriſonment of his and their bodies, at our will and pleaſure, and of forfeiting all the marchandizes, or the full value thereof, wherewith they or any of them during the ſaide terme, ſhall trade or trafique to or from the ſaid countrey of Barbary, or to, or from the dominions of the ſame, contrary to this our priuilege and prohibition, vnleſſe it be by and with the expreſſe licence, conſent, and agreement of the ſaide Erles of Warwike and Leiceſter, Thomas Starkie, Ierard Gore the elder, and all his ſonnes, Thomas Gore the elder, Arthur Atie gentleman, Alexander Auenon, Richard Straper, William Iennings, Arthur Dawbnie, William Sherington, Thomas Bramlie, Anthonie Gerrard, Robert Howe, Henry Colthirſt, Edward Holmden, Iohn Swinnerton, Robert Walkaden, Simon Lawrence, Nicholas Stile, Oliuer Stile, William Bond, Henry Farington, rington, Iohn Tedcaſtle, Walter Williams, William Brune, Iohn Suzan, Iohn Newton, Thomas Owen, Roger Afield, Robert Waſhborne, Rainold Guy, Thomas Hitchcock, George Lidiate, &c. or by, and with the expreſſe licence and conſent of the more part of them then liuing and trading, firſt had and obtained, ſo alwayes, that the ſayd Earle of Leiceſter be one, if hee bee liuing.

And we further for vs our heires and ſucceſſors of our ſpeciall grace, meere motion and certaine knowledge, do graunt to the ſaid Erles of Warwike and Leiceſter, Thomas Starkie, and the reſt aboueſaid, and to euery of them, that nothing ſhall be done, to be of force or validitie touching the ſaid trade or trafique, or the exerciſe thereof, without or againſt the conſent of the ſaide Erles, Thomas Starkie, (and the others before named) during the time of theſe our Letters patents for 12. yeeres as aforeſaid.

And for that the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. and euery of them aforeſaid ſhould not be preuented or interrupted in this their ſaid trade, we do by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, ſtraightly prohibite and forbid all maner of perſon or perſons, as well ſtrangers of what nation or countrey ſoeuer, as our owne Subiects, other then onely the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. and euery of them as aforeſaid, that they nor any of them from henceforth during the ſaid terme of 12. yeeres, do or ſhall bring, or cauſe to be brought into this our Realme of England, or to any the dominions thereof, any maner of marchandizes whatſoeuer growing, or being made within the ſaid Countrey of Barbary, or within any the dominions thereof, vnleſſe it be by and with the licence, conſent and agreement of the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or with the conſent and licence of the more part of them then liuing, firſt had and obtained, ſo alwayes yͤ the ſayd Erle of Leiceſter (if hee be liuing) be one, vnder the paine that euery one that ſhall offend or doe againſt this our preſent prohibition here laſt aboue mentioned in theſe preſents, ſhall forfeite and loſe all and ſingular the ſaid marchandizes to be landed in any our realmes and dominions, cõtrary to the tenor and true meaning of this our prohibition in that behalfe prouided: the one moitie of all and euery which ſaid forfaitures whatſoeuer mentioned or ſpecified in theſe our preſent Letters patents, ſhalbe to vs our heires & ſucceſſors: And the other moity of al and euery the ſaid forfaitures, we doe by theſe preſents of our certaine knowledge and meere motion, clearely and wholy for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, giue and graunt vnto the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. And theſe our Letters patents, vpon the onely ſight thereof, without any further warrant, ſhal bee ſufficient authoritie to our Treaſurer of England for the time being, to our Barons of the Exchequer, and to all other our officers that ſhall haue to deale in this behalfe, to make full allowance vnto the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. their deputies or aſſignes of the one moitie of all and ſingular the goods, marchandizes and things whatſoeuer mentioned in theſe our preſent Letters patents, to be forfaited at any time or times during the ſaid terme of twelue yeres: which ſaid allowance we doe ſtraightly charge and commaund from time to time to be made to the ſayd Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. and to euery of them accordingly, without any maner of delay or deniall of any of our officers whatſoeuer, as they tender our fauour and the furtherance of our good pleaſure. And wee doe ſtraightly charge and commaund, and by theſe preſents prohibite all and ſingular Cuſtomers and Collectors of our cuſtomes & ſubſidies, and comptrollers of the ſame, of, and within our Citie and port of London, and all other portes, creekes, & places within this our Realme of England, and euery of them, that they ne any of them take or perceiue, or cauſe, or ſuffer to be taken, receiued, or perceiued for vs & in our name, or to our vſe, or to yͤ vſes of our heires or ſucceſſors of any perſon or perſons, any ſum or ſummes of money, or other things whatſoeuer during the ſaid terme of 12. yeres, for, and in the name & liew or place of any cuſtome, ſubſidy & other thing or duties to vs, our heires or ſucceſſors due or to be due for the cuſtomes & ſubſidies of any marchandizes whatſoeuer growing, being made or cõming out of the ſaid countrey of Barbary, or out of the dominions thereof, nor make, cauſe, nor ſuffer to be made any entrie into our or their books of cuſtoms & ſubſidies, nor make any agreement for the ſubſidies and cuſtoms, of, and for any the ſaid marchants, ſauing onely with, & in the name of the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or the moſt part of them, as they and euery of them will anſwere at their vttermoſt perils to the contrary. And for the better and more ſure obſeruation of this our graunt, wee will, and grant for vs our heires & ſucceſſors by theſe preſents, that the Treaſurer & barons of our Exchequer for the time being, by force of this our graunt or enrolment thereof in the ſaid court, at al & euery time & times during the ſaid terme of 12. yeres, at & vpon requeſt made vnto them by the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or by the atturneis, factors, deputies or aſſignes of them, or the moſt part of them then liuing and trading, ſhall and may make & direct vnder the ſeale of the ſaid Exchequer, one or moe ſufficient writ or writs, cloſe or patents, vnto euery or any of our ſaid cuſtomers, collectors or cõtrollers of our heires and ſucceſſors in all and euery, or to any port or ports, creeke, hauen, or other places within this our realme of England, as the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. or any the atturneis, factors, deputies or aſſignes of them or the moſt part of them then liuing and trading; ſhall at any time require, commaunding and ſtraightly charging them and euery of them, that they nor any of them at any time or times during the ſaid terme of 12. yeeres, make any entrie of any wares or marchandizes whatſoeuer, growing, being made or comming out or from the ſaid countrey of Barbary, or the dominions thereof, nor receiue or take any cuſtome, ſubſidie or other entrie, or make any agreement for the ſame, other then with or in the name of the ſaid Erles, Thomas Starkie, &c. the factor or factors, deputies or aſſignes of them or the moſt part of them then liuing and trading, according to this our graunt, and the true meaning thereof, and according to our ſaide will and pleaſure before in theſe preſents declared. In witneſſe whereof we haue cauſed theſe our Letters to be made patents. Witneſſe our ſelfe at Weſtminſter the 5. day of Iuly in the 27. yeere of our reigne.

The Ambaſſage of Maſter Henry Roberts, one of the ſworne Eſquires of her Maieſties perſon, from her highneſſe to Mully Hamet Emperour of Marocco and the King of Feſſe, and Sus, in the yeere 1585: who remained there as Liger for the ſpace of 3. yeeres. Written briefly by himſelfe.

VPon an incorporation granted to the Company of Barbary Marchants reſident in London, I Henry Roberts one of her Maieſties ſworne Eſquires of her perſon, was appointed her highneſſe meſſenger, and Agent vnto the aforeſaid Mully Hamet Emperor of Marocco, king of Feſſe and Sus. And after I had receiued my Commiſſion, inſtructions, and her Maieſties letters, I departed from London the 14. of Auguſt in the yeere 1585. in a tall ſhip called the Aſcenſion, in the company of the Minion and Hopewell, and we all arriued in ſafetie at Azafi a port of Barbary, the 14. of September next following. The Alcaide of the towne (being the kings officer there, and as it were Maior of the place) receiued mee with all humanitie and honour, according to the cuſtome of the Countrey, lodging me in the chiefeſt houſe of the towne, from whence I diſpatched a meſſenger (which in their language they call a Trottero) to aduertiſe the Emperour of my arriuall: who immediatly gaue order, and ſent certaine ſouldiers for my guard and conduct, and horſes for my ſelfe, and mules for mine owne and my companies carriages. Thus being accompanied with M. Richard Euans, Edward Salcot, and other Engliſh Marchants reſident there in the Countrey, with my traine of Moores and carriages, I came at length to the riuer of Tenſiſt, which is within foure miles of Marocco: and there by the water ſide I pitched my tents vnder the Oliue trees: where I met with all the Engliſh Marchants by themſelues, and the French and Flemiſh, and diuers other Chriſtians, which attended my comming. And after we had dined, & ſpent out the heat of the day, about foure of the clocke in the afternoone we all ſet forward toward the Citie of Marocco, where we arriued the ſaid day, being the 14. of September, and I was lodged by the Emperours appointment in a faire houſe in the Iudaria or Iurie, which is the place where the Iewes haue their abode, and is the faireſt place, and quieteſt lodging in all the Citie.

After I had repoſed my ſelfe 3. dayes, I had acceſſe to the kings preſence, deliuered my meſſage and her Maieſties letters, and was receiued with all humanitie, and had fauourable audience from time to time for three yeeres: during which ſpace I abode there in his Court, as her Maieſties Agent and Ligier: and whenſoeuer I had occaſion of buſineſſe I was admitted either to his Maieſtie himſelfe, or to his vice Roy, whoſe name was Alcayde Breme Saphiana, a very wiſe and diſcreet perſon, and the chiefeſt about his Maieſtie. The particulers of my ſeruice, for diuers good and reaſonable cauſes, I forbeare here to put downe in writing.

After leaue obtained, and an honourable reward beſtowed by the Emperour vpon me, I departed from his Court at Marocco the 18. of Auguſt 1588. toward a garden of his, which is called Shersbonare, where he promiſed mee I ſhould ſtay but one day for his letters: howbeit, vpon ſome occaſion I was ſtayed vntil the 14. of September at the kings charges, with 40. or 50. ſhot attending vpon me for my guard and ſafetie.

From thence at length I was conducted with all things neceſſary to the port of Santa Cruz, being ſixe dayes iourney from Marocco, and the place where our ſhippes do commonly take in their lading, where I arriued the 21. of the ſame moneth. In this port I ſtayed 43. dayes, and at length the ſecond of Nouember I embarqued my ſelfe, and one Marshok Reiz a Captaine and a Gentleman, which the Emperour ſent with mee vpon an Ambaſſage to her Maieſtie: and after much torment and foule weather at Sea, yet New-yeres day I came on land at S. Iues in Cornwall, from whence paſſing by land both together vp towards London, we were met without the citie with the chiefeſt marchants of the Barbary Company, well mounted all on horſebacke, to the number of 40. or 50. horſe, and ſo the Ambaſſadour and my ſelfe being both in Coche, entred the citie by torchlight, on Sunday at night the 12. of Ianuary 1589.

Eſte es vn traſlado bien y fielmente ſacado da vna carta real del Rey Muley Hamet de Fes y Emperador de Marruecos, cuyo tenor es eſte, que Segue.

Con el nombre de Dios piadoſo y miſericordioſo, &c. This is a copy well and truely tranſlated of an edict of Muley Hamet king of Fez and Emperour of Marocco, whoſe tenor is as followeth: to wit, That no Engliſhmen ſhould be moleſted or made ſlaues in any part of his Dominions, obtained by the aforeſaid M. Henry Roberts.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IN the Name of the pitifull and the mercifull God, &c. The ſeruant of the ſupreme God, the conqueror in his cauſe, the ſucceſſor aduanced by God, the Emperour of the Moores, the ſonne of the Emperour of the Moores, the Iariffe, the Haçeny, whoſe honour God long increaſe and aduance his eſtate. This our princely commandement is deliuered into the hands of the Engliſh marchants, which remaine in the protection of our ſtately palaces: to the ende that all men which ſhall ſee this preſent writing, may vnderſtand that our princely counſaile wil defend them by the fauor of God, from any thing that may impeach or hurt them in what ſort ſoeuer they ſhalbe wronged: and that, which way ſoeuer they ſhall trauaile, no man ſhall take them captiues in theſe our kingdomes, ports, and places which belong vnto vs, which alſo may protect and defend them by our authoritie from any moleſtation whatſoeuer: and that no man ſhall hinder them by laying violent hand vpon them, and ſhall not giue occaſion that they may be grieued in any ſort by the fauour and aſſiſtance of God. And we charge and command our officers of our hauens and fortreſſes, and all ſuch as beare any authoritie in theſe our dominions, and likewiſe all the common people, that in no wiſe they do moleſt them, in ſuch ſort that they be no way offended or wronged. And this our commandement ſhall remaine inuiolable, being regiſtred in the middeſt of the moneth of Rabel in the yeere 996.

The date of this letter agreeth with the 20. of March 1587. which I Abdel Rahman el Catan, interpretour for his Maieſtie, haue tranſlated and turned out of the Arabian into Spaniſh word for word as is conteined therein: and in witneſſe thereof haue ſubſcribed my name as aforeſaid.

In the Name of the mercifull and pitifull God.

The bleſſing of God light vpon our lord and prophet Mahumet, and thoſe that are obedient vnto him.

The ſeruant of God both mightie in warre and mightily exalted by the grace of God Myra Momanyn, the ſon of Myra Momanyn, the Iariff, the Hazeni, whoſe kingdoms God maintaine and aduance his authoritie: Vnto the right famous, right noble, & right highly eſteemed Erle of Leiceſter, after due praiſes giuen vnto God, & due bleſſings and ſalutations rendred vnto the prophet Mahumet. Theſe are to giue you to vnderſtand, that your letters arriued here in our royal Court, and we wel perceiue the contents thereof. And your Ambaſſador which remaineth here in our Court told me the cauſe of the ſlowneſſe of the gages or pledges vntil this time: which reckoning we accept of, and holde our ſelues as ſatiſfied. And as touching the matter whereof you write vnto vs concerning Iohn Herman, and the ſelfe ſame complaint which your Ambaſſador hath made of him, before the comming of your letter, we had already commaunded him to be taken vpon the complaint which your Ambaſſadour had made of him, whereupon he ſtil remaineth in hold, and ſhal ſo continue vntil further iuſtice be done vpon him according to his deſert. And ſo our Lord keepe you in his ſafegard. Written at our royall court in Marocco, which God maintaine, the 20. day of the moneth Remodan, Anno | 996.

The Queenes letters to the Emperour.

MVy alto, y muy poderoſo Sennor,

Auiendo entendido de parte de nueſtro Agente la mucha aficion, y voluntad, que nos teneys, y quanta honra, y fauor le hazeys por amor nueſtro, para dar nos tanto mayor teſtimonio de vueſtra amiſtad, hemos recebido de lo vno y de lo otro muy grande contento, y ſatisfacion: y aſſy no podemos dexar de agradeſceroſlo, como mereceys. Vueſtras cartas hemos tambien recibido, y con ellas holgadomos infinitamente, por venir de parte de vn Principe, à quien tenemos tanta obligacion. Nueſtro Agente nos ha eſcripto ſobre ciertas coſas, que deſſeays ſer os embiadas de aqui: Y, aunque queriamos poder os en ello puntualmente cōplazer, como pidis, ha ſuccedido, que las guerras, en que ſtamos al preſente occupadas, no nos lo conſienten del todo: Hemos però mandado, que ſe os ſatisfaga en parte, y conforme à lo que por agora la neceſſitad nos permite, como mas particularmente os lo declararà nueſtro Agente: eſperando, que lo reciberreys en buena parte y cōforme al animo, con que os lo cōcedemos. Y porque nos ha ſido referido, que aueys prometido de proceder cōtra vn Iuan Herman vaſſallo nueſtro, (el qual nos ha grauemente offendido) de la manera, que os lo demandaremos, auemos dado orden à nueſtro dicho Agente de deziros mas particularmente lo que deſſeamos ſer hecho acerca deſte negocio, y rogandoos, que lo mandeys aſſi complir: y que ſeays ſeruido de fauoreſcer ſiempre al dicho Agente, y tener lo en buen credito, como haſta agora aueys hecho, ſin permiter, que nadie os haga mudar de parecer acerca de las calumnias, que le podran leuantar, yy dudar, que no compliamos muy por entero todo, lo que de nueſtra parte os prometiere. Nueſtro Sennor guarde voſtra muy alta y muy poderoſa perſona. Hecha en nueſtra Corte Real de Grenewich a 20. de Iulio 1587.

RIght high and mightie Prince, Hauing vnderſtood from our Agent the great affection and good will which you beare vs, and how great honour and fauor you ſhew him for our ſake, to the end to giue vs more ample teſtimonie of your friendſhip, we haue receiued very great contentment & ſatiſfaction, aſwel of the one as of the other: and withall we could not omit to magnifie you, according to your deſert. We haue alſo receiued your letters, and do not a litle reioyce thereof, becauſe they come from a prince vnto whom we are ſo much beholden. Our Agent hath written vnto vs concerning certaine things which you deſire to bee ſent vnto you from hence. And albeit we wiſh that we could particularly ſatiſfie you, as you deſire, yet it is fallen out, that the warres, wherein at this preſent we be buſied, wil not ſuffer vs fully to doe the ſame: neuertheleſſe, wee haue commaunded to ſatiſfie you in part, and according as the preſent neceſſitie doeth permit vs, as our Agent will declare vnto you more particularly, hoping you will receiue it in good part, and according to the good will wherewith wee graunt the ſame. And becauſe it hath bene ſignified vnto vs that you haue promiſed to proceed in iuſtice againſt one Iohn Herman our ſubiect, which hath grieuouſly offended vs, in ſuch ſort as wee haue ſent word vnto you, wee haue giuen order to our ſaid Agent to informe you more particularly in that which we deſire to be done in this buſines, praying you alſo to command the ſame to be put in execution: and that it would pleaſe you alwayes to fauour our ſaid Agent and to hold him in good credite, as you haue done hitherto, not ſuffering your ſelfe to be changed in your opinion, for all the falſe reports which they may raiſe againſt him, nor to doubt that wee will not accompliſh at large all that he ſhall promiſe you on our behalfe. Our Lord keepe and preſerue your right high and mightie perſon. Written in our royall Court at Greenwich the 20. of Iuly 1587.

Iohn Herman an Engliſh rebel.

A voyage to the Azores with two pinaſes, the one called the Serpent, and the other the Mary Sparke of Plimouth, both of them belonging to Sir Walter Ralegh, written by Iohn Eueſham Gentleman, wherein were taken the gouernour of the Iſle of Saint Michael, and Pedro Sarmiento gouernour of the Straits of Magalanes, in the yeere 1586.

The 10. of Iune 1586. we departed from Plimouth with two Pinaſes, the one named the Serpent, of the burden of 35. Tunnes, and the other the Mary Sparke of Plimouth of the burthen of 50. Tuns, both of them belonging to ſir Walter Ralegh knight; and directing our courſe towards the coaſt of Spaine, & from thence towards the Iſles of the Azores, we tooke a ſmall barke laden with Sumacke and other commodities, wherein was the gouernour of S. Michaels Iſland, being a Portugal, hauing other Portugals and Spaniards with him. And from thence we ſailed to the Iſland of Gracioſa, to the Weſtward of the Iſland of Terceera, where we deſcried a ſaile, and bearing with her wee found her to be a Spaniard: But at the firſt not greatly reſpecting whō we tooke, ſo that we might haue enriched our ſelues, which was the cauſe of this our trauaile, and for that we would not bee knowen of what nation we were, wee diſplayed a white ſilke enſigne in our maine toppe, which they ſeeing, made accompt that we had bene ſome of the king of Spaines Armadas, lying in wait for Engliſh men of war: but when we came within ſhot of her, we tooke downe our white flagge, and ſpread abroad the Croſſe of S. George, which when they ſaw, it made them to flie as faſt as they might, but all their haſte was in vaine, for our ſhippes were ſwifter of ſaile then they, which they fearing, did preſently caſt their ordinance and ſmall ſhot with many letters, and the draft of the Sraights of Magelan into the Sea, and thereupon immediatly we tooke her, wherein wee alſo tooke a gentleman of Spaine, named Pedro Sarmiento, gouernour of the Straights of Magelan, which ſaide Pedro we brought into England with vs, and preſented him to our ſoueraigne Lady the Queene.

The gouernor of S. Michael taken priſoner.

Pedro Sarmiento the gouernour of the Straights of Magelan taken priſoner.

After this, lying off and about the Iſlands, wee deſcried another ſaile, and bearing after her, we ſpent the maine maſte of our Admirall, but yet in the night our Viceadmirall tooke her, being laden with fiſh from Cape Blanke, the which ſhippe wee let goe againe for want of men to bring her home. The next day we deſcried two other ſailes, the one a ſhippe and the other a Carauel, to whom we gaue chaſe, which they ſeeing, with all ſpeede made in vnder the Iſle of Gracioſa, to a certaine Fort there for their ſuccour, where they came to an anker, and hauing the winde of vs we could not hurt them with our ſhips, but we hauing a ſmall boate, which we called a light horſeman, wherein my ſelfe was, being a Muſqueter, and foure more with Caliuers, and foure that rowed, came neere vnto the ſhore againſt the winde, which when they ſaw vs come towards them they caried a great part of their marchandiſe on land, whither alſo the men of both veſſels went and landed, and as ſoone as we came within Muſquet ſhot, they began to ſhoote at vs with great ordinance and ſmall ſhot, and we likewiſe at them, and in the ende we boorded one ſhippe wherein was no man left, ſo we cut her cables, hoyſed her ſailes, and ſent her away with two of our men, and the other 7. of vs paſſed more neere vnto the ſhoare, and boorded the Carauel, which did ride within a ſtones caſt from the ſhoare, and ſo neere the land that the people did caſt ſtones at vs, but yet in deſpight of them all we tooke her, and one onely Negro therein, and cutting her cables in the hawſe we hoyſed her ſailes, and being becalmed vnder the land, we were conſtrained to towe her out with our boate, the Fort ſtill ſhooting at vs, and the people on land with Muſquets and Caliuers, to the number of 150. or thereabout: and we anſwered them with the ſmall force we had; In the time of which our ſhooting, the ſhot of my Muſquet being a croſſebarre-ſhot happened to ſtrike ſtrike the gunner of the fort to death, euen as he was giuing leuell to one of his great pieces, and thus we parted from them without any loſſe or hurt on our ſide. And now, hauing taken theſe fiue ſailes of ſhippes, we did as before, turne away the ſhippe with the fiſh; without hurting them, and from one of the other ſhippes wee tooke her maine Maſte to ſerue our Admirals turne, and ſo ſent her away putting into her all the Spaniards and Portugals, (ſauing that gentleman Pedro Sarmiento, with three other of the principal men and two Negroes) leauing them all within ſight of land, with bread and water ſufficient for 10. dayes if neede were.

A ſhip laden with fiſh taken and releaſed againe.

One of the ſhips taken, and ſent away with 2. perſons.

The Carauel is taken.

The priſes ſent home.

Thus ſetting our courſe for England, being off the Iſlands in the height of 41. degrees, or there about, one of our men being in the toppe diſcried a ſaile, then 10. ſaile, then 15. whereupon it was concluded to ſende home thoſe prizes we had, and ſo left in both our Pinaſſes not aboue 60. men. Thus wee returned againe to the Fleete wee had diſcried, where wee found 24. ſaile of ſhippes, whereof two of them were Caracks, the one of 1200. and the other of a 1000. tunnes, and 10. Galions, the reſt were ſmall ſhippes and Carauels all laden with Treaſure, ſpices, and ſugars, with which 24. ſhippes we with two ſmall Pinaſſes did fight, and kept company the ſpace of 32. houres, continually fighting with them and they with vs, but the two Caracks kept ſtill betwixt the Fleete and vs, that wee could not take any one of them, ſo wanting powder, wee were forced to giue them ouer againſt our willes, for that wee were all wholly bent to the gaining of ſome of them, but neceſſitie compelling vs, and that onely for want of powder, without loſſe of any of our men, (which was a thing to be wondered at conſidering the inequalitie of number) at length we gaue them ouer. Thus we againe ſet our courſe for England, and ſo came to Plimouth within 6. houres after our prizes, which we ſent away 40. houres before vs, where wee were receiued with triumphant ioy, not onely with great Ordinance then ſhot off, but with the willing hearts of all the people of the Towne, and of the Countrey thereabout; and we not ſparing our Ordinance (with the powder wee had left) to requite and anſwere them againe. And from thence wee brought our prizes to Southampton, where ſir Walter Ralegh being our owner, rewarded vs with our ſhares.

Two Caracks, 10. Gallions, 12. ſmall ſhips.

The 2. pinaſſes returne for England.

Our prizes were laden with ſugars, Elephants teeth, waxe, hides, rice, braſill, and Cuſer, as by the teſtimonie of Iohn Eueſham himſelfe, Captaine Whiddon, Thomas Rainford, Beniamin Wood, William Cooper Maſter, William Corniſh Maſter, Thomas Drake Corporall, Iohn Ladd gunner, William Warefield gunner, Richard Moone, Iohn Drew, Richard Cooper of Harwich, William Beares of Ratcliffe, Iohn Row of Saltaſh, and many others, may appeare.

A briefe relation of the notable ſeruice performed by Sir Francis Drake vpon the Spaniſh Fleete prepared in the Road of Cadiz: and of his deſtroying of 100. ſaile of barks; Paſſing from thence all along the coaſt to Cape Sacre, where alſo hee tooke certaine Forts: and ſo to the mouth of the Riuer of Liſbon, and thence croſſing ouer to the Iſle of Sant Michael, ſupprized a mighty Carack called the Sant Philip comming out of the Eaſt India, which was the firſt of that kinde that euer was ſeene in England: Performed in the yeere 1587.

HEr Maieſtie being informed of a mightie preparation by Sea begunne in Spaine for the inuaſion of England, by good aduiſe of her graue and prudent Counſell thought it expedient to preuent the ſame. Whereupon ſhe cauſed a Fleete of ſome 30. ſailes to be rigged and furniſhed with all things neceſſary. Ouer that Fleete ſhe appointed Generall ſir Francis Drake (of whoſe manifold former good ſeruices ſhe had ſufficient proofe) to whom ſhe cauſed 4. ſhips of her Nauie royall to be deliuered, to wit, The Bonauenture wherein himſelfe went as Generall; the Lion vnder the conduct of Maſter William Borough Controller of the Nauie; the Dread-nought vnder the command of M. Thomas Venner; and the Rainebow, captaine whereof was M. Henry Bellingham: vnto which 4. ſhips two of her pinaſſes were appointed as hand-maids. There were alſo added vnto this Fleet certaine tall ſhips of the Citie of London, of whoſe eſpeciall good ſeruice the Generall made particular mention in his priuate Letters directed to her Maieſtie. This Fleete ſet ſaile from the ſound of Plimouth in the moneth of April towards the coaſt of Spaine.

The 16. of the ſaid moneth we mette in the latitude of 40. degrees with two ſhips of Middleborough, which came from Cadiz; by which we vnderſtood that there was great ſtore of warlike prouiſion at Cadiz & thereabout ready to come for Lisbon. Upon this information our Generall with al ſpeed poſſible, bending himſelfe thither to cut off their ſaid forces and prouiſions, vpon the 19. of April entered with his Fleet into the Harbor of Cadiz: where at our firſt entring we were aſſailed ouer againſt the Towne by ſixe Gallies, which notwithſtanding in ſhort time retired vnder their fortreſſe.

There were in the Road 60.ſhips and diuers other ſmall veſſels vnder the fortreſſe: there fled about 20.French ſhips to Port Real, and ſome ſmall Spaniſh veſſels that might paſſe the ſholdes. At our firſt cōming in we ſunke with our ſhot a ſhip of Raguza of a 1000.tunnes, furniſhed with 40.pieces of braſſe and very richly laden. There came two Gallies more from S.Mary port, and two from Porto Reale, which ſhot freely at vs, but altogether in vaine: for they went away with the blowes well beaten for their paines.

Before night we had taken 30.of the ſaid ſhips, & became Maſters of the Road, in deſpight of the Gallies, which were glad to retire them vnder the Fort: in the number of which ſhips there was one new ſhip of an extraordinary hugeneſſe in burthen aboue 1200.tunnes, belonging to the Marqueſſe of Santa Cruz being at that inſtant high Admiral of Spaine. Fiue of them were great ſhips of Biskay, whereof 4.we fired, as they were taking in the Kings prouiſion of victuals for the furniſhing of his Fleet at Lisbon: the fift being a ſhip about 1000.tunnes in burthen, laden with Iron-ſpikes, nailes, yron hoopes, horſe-ſhooes, and other like neceſſaries bound for the Weſt Indies we fired in like maner. Alſo we tooke a ſhip of 250.tunnes laden with wines for the Kings prouiſion, which wee caried out to the Sea with vs, and there diſcharged the ſaid wines for our owne ſtore, and afterward ſet her on fire. Moreouer we tooke 3.Flyboats of 300.tunnes a piece laden with biſcuit, whereof one was halfe vnladen by vs in the Harborow, and there fired, and the other two we tooke in our company to the Sea. Likewiſe there were fired by vs ten other ſhips which were laden with wine, raiſins, figs, oiles, wheat, & ſuch like. To conclude, the whole number of ſhips and barkes (as we ſuppoſe) then burnt, ſuncke, and brought away with vs, amounted to 30.at the leaſt, being (in our iudgement) about 10000.tunnes of ſhipping.

There were in ſight of vs at Porto Real about 40.ſhips, beſides thoſe that fled from Cadiz.

We found little eaſe during our aboad there, by reaſon of their continuall ſhooting from the Gallies, the fortreſſes, and from the ſhoare: where continually at places conuenient they planted new ordinance to offend vs with: beſides the inconuenience which wee ſuffered from their ſhips, which, when they could defend no longer, they ſet on fire to come among vs. Whereupon when the flood came wee were not a little troubled to defend vs from their terrible fire, which neuertheleſſe was a pleaſant ſight for vs to beholde, becauſe we were thereby eaſed of a great labour, which lay vpon vs day and night, in diſcharging the victuals, and other prouiſions of the enemie. Thus by the aſſiſtance of the Almightie, and the inuincible courage and induſtrie of our Generall, this ſtrange and happy enterprize was atchieued in one day and two nights, to the great aſtoniſhment of the King of Spaine, which bread ſuch a corraſiue in the heart of the Marques of Santa Cruz high Admiral of Spaine, that he neuer enioyed good day after, but within fewe moneths (as may iuſtly be ſuppoſed) died of extreame griefe and ſorrow.

Thus hauing performed this notable ſeruice, we came out of the Road of Cadiz on the Friday morning the 21.of the ſaid moneth of April, with very ſmall loſſe not worth the mentioning.

After our departure ten of the Gallies that were in the Road came out, as it were in diſdaine of vs, to make ſome paſtime with their ordinance, at which time the wind ſkanted vpon vs, whereupon we caſt about againe, and ſtood in with the ſhoare, & came to an anker within a league of the towne; where the ſaid Gallies, for all their former bragging, at length ſuffred vs to ride quietly.

We now haue had experience of Gally-fight: wherein I can aſſure you, that onely theſe 4.of her Maieſties ſhips will make no accompt of 20.Gallies, if they may be alone, and not buſied to guard others. There were neuer Gallies that had better place and fitter opportunitie for their aduantage to fight with ſhips: but they were ſtill forced to retire, wee riding in a narrow gut, the place yeelding no better, and driuen to maintaine the ſame, vntill wee had diſcharged and fired the ſhippes, which could not conueniently be done but vpon the flood, at which time they might driue cleare off vs. Thus being victualed with bread and wine at the enemies coſt for diuers moneths (beſides the prouiſions that we brought from home) our Generall diſpatched Captaine Croſſe into England with his letters, giuing him further in charge to declare vnto her Maieſtie all the particularities of this our firſt enterprize.

After whoſe departure wee ſhaped our courſe toward Cape Sacre, and in the way thither wee tooke at ſeuerall times of ſhips, barkes, and Carauels well neere an hundred, laden with hoopes, gally-oares, pipe-ſtaues, & other prouiſions of the king of Spaine, for the furniſhing of his forces intended againſt England, al which we burned, hauing delt fauorably with the men and ſent them on ſhoare. We alſo ſpoiled and cōſumed all the fiſher-boats and nets thereabouts, to their great hinderance; and (as we ſuppoſe) to the vtter ouerthrow of the rich fiſhing of their Tunies for the ſame yere. At length we came to the aforeſaid Cape Sacre, where we went on land; and the better to enioy the benefite of the place, and to ride in harborow at our pleaſure, we aſſailed the ſame caſtle, and three other ſtrong holds, which we tooke ſome by force and ſome by ſurrender.

Thence we came before the hauen of Lisbon ankering nere vnto Caſcais, where the Marques of Santa Cruz was with his Gallies, who ſeeing vs chaſe his ſhips a ſhoare, & take and cary away his barks and Carauels, was content to ſuffer vs there quietly to tary, and likewiſe to depart, and neuer charged vs with one Canon-ſhot. And when our Generall ſent him worde that hee was there ready to exchange certaine bullets with him, the marques refuſed his chalenge, ſending him word, that he was not then ready for him, nor had any ſuch Commiſſion from his King.

Our Generall thus refuſed by the Marques, and ſeeing no more good to be done in this place, thought it conuenient to ſpend no longer time vpon this coaſt: and therefore with conſent of the chiefe of his Company he ſhaped his courſe toward the Iſles of the Açores, and paſſing towards the Iſle of Saint Michael, within 20. or 30. leagues thereof, it was his good fortune to meete with a Portugale Carak called Sant Philip, being the ſame ſhippe which in the voyage outward had caried the 3. Princes of Iapan, that were in Europe, into the Indies. This Carak without any great reſiſtance hee tooke, beſtowing the people thereof in certaine veſſels well furniſhed with victuals, and ſending them courteouſly home into their Countrey: and this was the firſt Carak that euer was taken comming foorth of the Eaſt Indies; which the Portugals tooke for an euil ſigne, becauſe the ſhip bare the Kings owne name.

The Carack called the Sanct Philip taken.

The riches of this prize ſeemed ſo great vnto the whole Company (as in trueth it was) that they aſſured themſelues euery man to haue a ſufficient reward for his trauel: and thereupon they all reſolued to returne home for England: which they happily did, and arriued in Plimouth the ſame Sommer with their whole Fleete and this rich booty, to their owne profite and due commendation, and to the great admiration of the whole kingdome.

And here by the way it is to be noted, that the taking of this Carak wrought two extraordinary effects in England: firſt, that it taught others, that Caracks were no ſuch bugs but that they might be taken (as ſince indeed it hath fallen out in the taking of the Madre de Dios, and fyreing and ſinking of others) and ſecondly in acquainting the Engliſh Nation more generally with the particularities of the exceeding riches and wealth of the Eaſt Indies: whereby themſelues and their neighbours of Holland haue bene incouraged, being men as ſkilfull in Nauigation and of no leſſe courage then the Portugals to ſhare with them in the Eaſt Indies, where their ſtrength is nothing ſo great as heretofore hath bene ſuppoſed.

A Patent granted to certaine Marchants of Exeter, and others of the Weſt parts, and of London, for a trade to the Riuer of Senega and Gambra in Guinea, 1588.

Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To our Treaſurer and Admirall of England, our Treaſurer and Barons of our Exchequer, and all and euery our Officers, miniſters and ſubiects whatſoeuer, greeting. Whereas our welbeloued ſubiects William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicolas Spicer, and Iohn Doricot of our City of Exeter marchants, Iohn Yong of Coliton in our county of Deuon marchant, Richard Doderige of Barneſtable in our ſaide Countie of Deuon Marchant, Anthonie Daſſell, and Nicolas Turner of our Citie of London Marchants, haue bene perſwaded and earneſtly moued by certaine Portugals reſident within our Dominions, to vndertake and ſet forward a voyage to certaine places on the coaſt of Guinea: Videlicet, from the Northermoſt part of the Riuer commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Senega, and from and within that Riuer all along that coaſt vnto the Southermoſt part of another Riuer commonly called by the name of Gambra, and within that Riuer: which, as we are informed, they haue already once performed accordingly: And for that we are credibly giuen to vnderſtand that the further proſecuting of the ſame voyage, and the due and orderly eſtabliſhing of an orderly trafique and trade of marchandize into thoſe Countreis, wil not only in time be very beneficial to theſe our Realmes and dominions, but alſo be a great ſuccour and reliefe vnto the preſent diſtreſſed eſtate of thoſe Portugals, who by our princely fauour liue and continue here vnder our protection: And cōſidering that the aduenturing and enterpriſing of a newe trade cannot be a matter of ſmall charge and hazard to the aduenturers in the beginning: we haue therefore thought it conuenient, that our ſaid louing ſubiects William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthonie Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, for the better incouragement to proceede in their ſaide aduenture and trade in the ſaid Countreis, ſhal haue the ſole vſe and exerciſe thereof for a certaine time, time. In conſideration whereof, and for other waightie reaſons and conſiderations vs ſpecially moouing, of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, we haue giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors doe giue and graunt vnto the ſaid William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Young, Richard Doderide, Anthony Daſſell and Nicholas Turner, and to euery of them, and to ſuch other our Subiects as they or the moſt part of them ſhall thinke conuenient to receiue into their Company and ſociety, to be the traders with them into the ſaid Countreis, that they and euery of them by themſelues or by their ſeruants or Factors and none others, ſhall and may for and during the full ſpace and terme of tenne yeeres next enſuing the date of theſe preſents, haue and enioy the free and whole traſique, trade and feat of marchandiſe, to and from the ſaid Northermoſt part of the ſaid Riuer, commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Senega: and from and within that Riuer all along the coaſt of Guinea, vnto the Southermoſt part of the ſaid Riuer, commonly called by the name of the Riuer of Gambra, and within that Riuer alſo. And that they the ſaid William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſel and Nicholas Turner, & euery of them, by themſelues or by their ſeruants or Factors, & ſuch as they or the moſt part of them ſhall receiue into their Company and ſocietie, to be traders with them into the ſayd Countreis (as is aforeſaid) and none others, ſhall and may, for, and during the ſaid ſpace and terme of 10. yeres, haue and enioy the ſole & whole traſique or trade of marchandize into and from the ſaid places afore limitted and deſcribed, for the buying & ſelling, bartering and changing of and with any goods, wares, and marchandizes whatſoeuer, to be vented had or found, at or within any the cities, townes, or places ſituated or being in the countries, parts & coaſtes of Guinea before limitted, any law, ſtatute, or graunt, matter, cuſtome or priuileges to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And for the better ordering, eſtabliſhing, & gouerning of the ſaid ſocietie and Company in the ſaid trade and traſique of marchandizes, & the quiet, orderly & lawfull exerciſe of the ſame, We for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſors, do by theſe preſents giue and graunt full licenſe and authoritie vnto the ſaid William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthonie Daſſell, and Nicholas Turper, and to ſuch others as they ſhall receiue into their ſaide ſocietie and company to be traders into the ſaid countreis, as is aforeſaid, and to euery of them, that they or the moſt part of them ſhall and may at all conuenient times at their pleaſures, aſſemble and meete together in any place or places conuenient, aſwell within our citie of Exeter, as elſewhere within this our Realme of England, or other our dominions, during the ſaid terme of ten yeere, to conſult of, for, and concerning the ſaide trade and traſique of marchandize, and from time to time to make, ordaine, and ſtabliſh good, neceſſary, and reaſonable orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances, for, and touching the ſame trade. And al ſuch orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances ſo to be made, to put in vre and execute, and them, or any of them, to alter, change, and make voyd, and, if neede be, to make new, as at any time, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, to them, or the moſt part of them then trading, as is aforeſaide, ſhall be thought neceſſary and conuenient. Unto all and euery which ſaid orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances, they, and euery of them, and all other perſons which ſhall hereafter be receiued into the ſaide ſocietie and Company, ſhall ſubmit themſelues, and ſhall well and duely obſerue, performe, and obey the ſame, ſo long as they ſhall ſtand in force, or elſe ſhall pay and incurre ſuch forfeitures, paines, and penalties, for the breach thereof, and in ſuch maner and forme, and to ſuch vſes & intents, as by the ſaide orders, conſtitutions, and ordinances ſhall be aſſeſſed, limitted and appointed. So alwayes, as the ſame orders, conſtitutions and ordinances, be not repugnant or contrary to the lawes, ſtatutes, and cuſtomes of this Realme of England, nor any penaltie to exceede the reaſonable forme of other penalties, aſſeſſed by the Company of our Marchants, named Aduenturers. And to the intent that they onely, to whom the ſaid power and libertie of traſique and trade of marchandize is graunted by theſe our letters patents aforeſaid, and none others whatſoeuer, without their ſpeciall conſent and licenſe before had, ſhall, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, vſe, or haue trade or traſique, with or for any maner of goods or marchandizes, to and from the ſaide coaſtes or parts of Guinea afore limited: Wee doe by theſe preſents, by our royall and ſupreme authoritie, ſtraightly charge and commaund, that no perſon, or perſons whatſoeuer, by themſelues, or by their factors, or ſeruants, during the ſaid terme of 10. yeres, ſhall in any wiſe trade or traſique, for or with any goods or marchandizes, to or from the ſaid coaſts and parts of Guinea afore limitted, other then the ſaid William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, and ſuch as from time to time, they, or the moſt part of them, ſhall receiue into their ſocietie or company, to be traders with them, as is aforeſaid, as they tender our fauour, and will auoyde our high diſpleaſure, and vpon paine of impriſonment of his or their bodies, at our will and pleaſure, and to loſe and forfeit the ſhip or ſhippes, and all the goods, wares, and marchandizes, wherewith they, or any of them ſhal, during the ſaid terme of 10. yeres, trade, or traffique to or from the ſaid Countries, or any part thereof, according to the limitation aboue mentioned, contrary to our expreſſe prohibition and reſtraint, in that behalfe. And further, we do by theſe preſents giue and graunt ful power and authoritie to the ſaid William Braily, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, and to ſuch other perſons, as they ſhal receiue into their ſocietie and company, to be traders with them, as is aforeſaid, and the moſt part of them, for the time being: that they, and euery of them, by themſelues, their factors, deputies, or aſſignes, ſhall and may, from time to time, during the ſaid terme of 10. yeres, attach, arreſt, take, and ſeaſe all, and all maner of ſhip, and ſhips, goods, wares, and marchandizes whatſoeuer, which ſhall be brought from, or caried to the ſaid coaſts and parts of Guinea afore limited, contrary to our will and pleaſure, and the true meaning of the ſame, declared and expreſſed in theſe our letters patents. Of all and euery which ſaid forfaitures whatſoeuer, the one third part ſhall be vnto vs, our heires, and ſucceſſors, and another thirde part thereof we giue and graunt by theſe preſents, for and towards the reliefe of the ſaide Portugals continuing here vnder our protection, as is aforeſaid. And the other third part of al the ſame forfaitures, we do by theſe preſents, of our certaine knowledge and meere motion, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, giue and grant cleerely and wholy vnto the ſaid William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſel, and Nicholas Turner, and ſuch other perſons, as they ſhall receiue into their ſocietie, and company, as is aforeſaid. And theſe our letters patents, or the inrolment or exemplification of the ſame, without any further or other warrant, ſhall from time to time, during the ſaid tenne yeeres, be a ſufficient warrant and authoritie to our Treaſurer of England, for the time being, and to the barons of our Exchequer, and to all other our officers and miniſters whatſoeuer, to whom it ſhall or may appertaine, to allow, deliuer, and pay one thirde part of all the ſaid forfeitures, to the vſe of the ſaid Portugals, and one other thirde part of the ſame forfeitures, to the ſaide William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, and ſuch other perſons, as they ſhall receiue into their ſocietie and Company, to be traders with them, as aforeſaide, to their owne proper vſe and behoofe: which ſaid allowances and paiments thereof, our will and pleaſure is, and we do ſtraightly charge and command, to bee from time to time duely made and performed accordingly, without any delay or denial of any our officers aforeſaid, or any other our officers or miniſters whatſoeuer. And we do ſtraightly charge and command, and by theſe preſents prohibite all and ſingular our cuſtomers, collectors, and farmers of our Cuſtomes and ſubſidies, and controllers of the ſame, of and within our ports of the citie of London, and the Citie of Exeter, and all other ports, creekes, and places, within this our Realme of England, and euery of them, and all other our officers and miniſters whatſoeuer, which haue or ſhall haue any dealing or intermedling, touching our ſaid Cuſtomes and ſubſidies, that they, ne any of them by themſelues, their clearks, deputies, or ſubſtitutes, or any of them take or receiue, or in any wiſe cauſe or ſuffer to be taken or receiued for vs, or in our name, or to our vſe, or for, or in the names or to the vſes of our heires or ſucceſſors, of any perſon, or perſons, any ſumme or ſummes of money, or other things whatſoeuer, during the ſaid terme of ten yeeres, for, or in the name, lieu, or place of any Cuſtome, ſubſidie, or other thing or duetie, to vs, our heires, or ſucceſſors, due, or to be due, for the Cuſtomes or ſubſidies of any ſuch goods, wares, or marchandizes, to be tranſported, caried, or brought to or from the priuileged places, before in theſe preſents mentioned, or any of them: nor make, nor cauſe to be made any entry into, or of the bookes of ſubſidies or cuſtomes, nor make any agreement for the Cuſtomes or ſubſidies, of, or for any goods, wares, or marchandizes, to bee ſent to, or returned from any the priuileged places, before in theſe preſents mentioned, ſauing onely with, and in the name, and by the conſent of the ſaide William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Antonie Daſſel, and Nicholas Turner, or of ſome of them, or of ſuch as they or the moſt part of them ſhall receiue into their ſocietie and Company, as aforeſaid. Prouided alwaies, that if at any time hereafter, we our ſelues, by our writing ſigned with our proper hand, or any ſixe or more of our priuie Counſell, for the time being, ſhall, by our direction, and by writing ſigned and ſubſcribed with their hands, ſignifie and notifie to the ſaid William Brayley, Gilbert Smith, Nicholas Spicer, Iohn Doricot, Iohn Yong, Richard Doderige, Anthony Daſſell, and Nicholas Turner, or to any of them, or to any other, whom they, or the moſt part of them ſhal receiue into their Companie and ſociety, as is aforeſaid, or otherwiſe to our officers in our ports of Exeter, or Plimouth, by them to be notified to ſuch as ſhall haue intereſt in this ſpeciall priuilege, that our will and pleaſure is, that the ſaid trade and traffique ſhal ceaſe, and be no longer continued into the ſaide coaſts and partes of Guinea before limited: then immediatly from and after the ende of ſixe moneths next inſuing, after ſuch ſignification & notification ſo to be giuen to any of the ſaid Company and ſocietie, as is aforeſaid, or otherwiſe to our Officers in our ports of Exeter or Plimouth, by them to be notified to ſuch as ſhall haue intereſt in this ſpeciall priuilege, theſe our preſent letters Patents, and our graunt therein contained ſhall be vtterly voyde, and of none effect, ne validitie in the lawe, to all intents and purpoſes: any thing before mentioned to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. Witneſſe our ſelfe at Weſtminſter, the thirde day of May, in the thirtieth yere of our Reigne 1588.

A voyage to Benin beyond the Countrey of Guinea, ſet foorth by Maſter Bird and Maſter Newton Marchants of London, with a ſhippe called the Richard of Arundell, and a Pineſſe; Written by Iames Welſh, who was chiefe Maſter of the ſaid voyage, begunne in the yeere 1588.

Vpon the twelft of October wee wayed our ankers at Ratcliffe and went to Blackwall. And the next day ſayling from thence, by reaſon of contrary winde and weather, wee made it the 25. of October before wee were able to reach Plimouth, and there we ſtayed (to our great expenſe of victuals) for lacke of winde and weather vnto the 14. of December.

On Saturday the ſaid 14. of December we put from thence, and about midnight were thwart of the Lizart.

Rio del oro is in 22. degrees, and 47. min.

Thurſday the ſecond of January wee had ſight of the land neere Rio del oro, God be thanked, and there had 22. degrees of latitude, and 47. minutes.

Cauo de las Barbas.

The thirde of January wee had ſight of Cauo de las Barbas, and it bare Southeaſt fiue leagues off.

Croſiers.

The 4. we had ſight of the Croſiers in the morning.

Cauo Verde, in 14 degr. 43. m.

Tueſday the 7. day we had ſight of Cauo verde, and I finde this place to be in latitude 14. degrees, and 43. minutes, being 4. leagues from the ſhoare.

Cauo de Monte.

Cauo Menſurado.

Friday the 17. Cauo de Monte bare off vs North Northeaſt, we ſounded and had 50. fathom blacke oaſe, and at 2. of the clocke it bare North Northweſt 8. leagues off. And Cauo Menſurado bare of vs Eaſt and by South, and wee went Northeaſt with the maine: here the currant ſetteth to the Eaſt Southeaſt alongſt the ſhoare, and at midnight wee ſounded and had 26. fathome blacke oaſe.

The 18. in the morning we were thwart of a land much like Cauo verde, and it is as I iudge 9. leagues from Cauo Menſurado; it is a hill ſadlebacked, and there are 4. or 5. one after another: and 7. leagues to the Southward of that, we ſaw a row of hils ſadlebacked alſo, and from Cauo Menſurado are many mountaines.

Rio de Seſtos.

Cauo dos Baixos.

Tabanoo.

The 19. we were thwart Rio de Seſtos, and the 20. Cauo dos Baixos was North & by West 4. leagues off the ſhoare, and at afternoone there came a boate from the ſhoare with 3. Negroes, from a place (as they ſay) called Tabanoo. And towards euening we were thwart of an Iſland, and a great many of ſmall Iſlands or rockes to the Southward, and the currant came out of the Souther-boord: we ſounded and had 35. fathomes.

A French ſhip at Ratire.

Crua.

A currant to the South-eaſtward.

The 21. wee had a flat hill that bare North Northeaſt off vs, and wee were from the ſhoare 4. leagues, and at 2. a clocke in the afternoone we ſpake with a Frenchman riding neere a place called Ratire, and another place hard by called Crua. This Frenchman caried a letter from vs to M. Newton: wee layd it on hull while wee were writing of our letter; and the current ſet vs to the Southward a good paſe alongſt the ſhoare South Southeaſt.

The 25. we were in the bight of the bay that is to the Weſtward of Capo de Tres puntas; the currant did ſet Eaſt Northeaſt.

The 28. we lay ſixe glaſſes a hull tarying for the pineſſe.

Cauo de tres puntas.

The laſt of January the middle part of Cape de tres puntas was thwart of vs three leagues at ſeuen of the clocke in the morning: and at eight the pineſſe came to an anker: and wee prooued that the current ſetteth to the Eaſtward: and at ſixe at night the vttermoſt lande bare Eaſt and by South 5. leagues, and we went Southweſt, and Southweſt and by South.

Saturday the firſt of February 1588. we were thwart of a Round foreland, which I take to be the Eaſtermoſt part of Capo de tres puntas: and within the ſaid Round foreland was a great bay with an Iſland in the ſaid bay.

The Caſtle of Mina.

The ſecond of February wee were thwart of the Caſtle of Mina, and when the thirde glaſſe of our Looke-out was ſpent, we ſpied vnder our Larbord-quarter one of their Boates with certaine Negroes, and one Portugale in the Boate, wee would haue had him to come aboord, but he would not. And ouer the caſtle vpon the hie rockes we did ſee as it might be two watch-houſes, and they did ſhew very white: and we went eaſtnortheaſt.

Two white watch-houſes.

The 4 in the morning we were thwart a great high hill, and vp into the lande were more high ragged hilles, and thoſe I reckoned to be but little ſhort of Monte Redondo. Then I reckoned that we were 20 leagues Southeaſt-ward from the Mina, and at 11 of the clocke I ſawe two hilles within the land, theſe hils I take to be 7 leagues from the firſt hils. And to ſea-ward of theſe hilles is a bay, and at the eaſt end of the bay another hill, and from the hils the landes lie verie low. We went Eaſtnortheaſt, and Eaſt and by North 22 leagues, ann then Eaſt along the ſhore.

Monte Redondo.

The 6 we were ſhort of Villa longa, and there we met with a Portugall Carauell;

The 7 a faire temperate day, and all this day we road before Villa longa.

Villa longa.

The 8 at noone we ſet ſaile from Villa longa, and ten leagues from thence we ankered againe and ſtayed all that night in ten fadom water.

The 9 we ſet ſaile, and all alongſt the ſhore were very thicke woodes, and in the afternoone we were thwart a riuer, & to the Eaſtward of the riuer a litle way off was a great high buſh-tree as though it had no leaues, and at night we ankered with faire and temperate weather.

Rio de Lagoa.

The 10 we ſet ſayle and went Eaſt, and Eaſt and by South 14 leagues along the ſhoare, which was ſo full of thicke woods, that in my iudgement a man ſhould haue much to doe to paſſe through them, and towards night we ankered in 7 fadome with faire weather.

The 11 we ſayled Eaſt and by South, and three leagues from the ſhore we had but 5 fadome water, and all the wood vpon the land was as euen as if it had beene cut with a paire of gardeners ſheeres, and in running of two leagues we deſcerned a high tuft of trees vpon the brow of a land, which ſhewed like a Porpoſe head, and when wee came at it, it was but part of the lande, and a league further we ſaw a head-land very low and full of trees, and a great way from the land we had very ſhallow water, then we lay South into the ſea, becauſe of the ſands for to get into the deepe water, and when we found it deepe, we ankered in fiue fadom thwart the riuer of Iaya, in the riuers mouth.

Very ſhallow water.

The 12 in the morning we road ſtill in the riuers mouth. This day we ſent the pinneſſe and the boat on land with the marchants, but they came not againe vntill the next morning. The ſhalloweſt part of this riuer is toward the Weſt, where there is but 4 fadom and a halfe, and it is very broad. The next morning came the boate aboord, and they alſo ſaid it was Rio de Iaya. Here the currant ſetteth Weſtward, and the Eaſtermoſt land is higher then the Weſtermoſt.

Rio de Iaya.

Thurſday the 13 we ſet ſaile, and lay South Southeaſt along the ſhore, where the trees are wonderfull euen, and the Eaſt ſhore is higher then the Weſt ſhore, and when wee had ſayled 18 leagues we had ſight of a great riuer, then we ankered in three fadom and a halfe, and the currant went Weſtward. This riuer is the riuer of Benin, and two leagues from the maine it is very ſhallowe.

Rio Benin.

The 15 we ſent the boat and pinneſſe into the riuer with the marchants, and after that we ſet ſaile, becauſe we road in ſhallow water, and went Southſoutheaſt, and the ſtarbord tacke aboord vntill we came to fiue fathom water, where we road with the currant to the Weſtward: then came our boat out of the harbour and went aboord the pinneſſe. The Weſt part of the land was high browed much like the head of a Gurnard, and the Eaſtermoſt land was lower, and had on it three tufts of trees like ſtackes of wheate or corne, and the next day in the morning we ſawe but two of thoſe trees, by reaſon that we went more to the Eaſtward. And here we road ſtill from the 14 of Februarie vntill the 14 of Aprill, with the winde at Southweſt.

A currant Weſtward.

The 16 of Februarie we rode ſtill in 5 fadome, and the currant ranne ſtill to the Weſtward, the winde at Southweſt, and the boat and pinneſſe came to vs againe out of the riuer, and told vs that there was but ten foote water vpon the barre. All that night was drowſie, and yet reaſonable temperate.

Ten foote water vpon the barre of Rio de Benin.

The 17 a cloſe day the winde at Southweſt. Our marchants wayed their goods and put them aboord the pinneſſe to goe into the riuer, and there came a great currant out of the riuer and ſet to the Weſtward.

The 18 the marchants went with the boat and pinneſſe into the riuer with their commodities. This day was cloſe and drowſie, with thunder, raine and lightening.

The 24 a cloſe morning and temperate, and in the afternoone the boat came to vs out of the riuer from our marchants.

Tweſday the 4 of March, a cloſe ſoultry hot morning, the currant went to the Weſtward, and much troubled water came out of the riuer.

The 16 our pinneſſe came aboord and Anthonie Ingram in her, & ſhe brought in her 94 bags

Sickneſſe among our men.

of pepper, and 28 Elephants teeth, and the Maſter of her and all his company were ſicke. This was a temperate day and the winde at Southweſt.

The 17. 18. and 19 were faire temperate weather and the winde at Southweſt. This day the pinneſſe went into the riuer againe, and caried the Purſer and the Surgion.

The 25 of the ſaid moneth 1589 we ſent the boate into the riuer.

The death of the Captaine. Pepper & Elephants teeth.

The 30 our pinneſſe came from Benin, and brought ſorowfull newes, that Thomas Hemſted was dead and our Captaine alſo, and ſhe brought with her 159 Cerons or ſackes of pepper and Elephants teeth.

A good note.

Note that in all the time of our abiding here, in the mouth of the riuer of Benin, and in all the coaſt hereabout, it is faire temperate weather, when the winde is at Southweſt. And when the winde is at Northeaſt and Northerly, then it raineth, with lighning and thunder, and is very intemperate weather.

The 13 of Aprill 1589 we ſet ſaile homewards in the name of Ieſus. In the morning we ſayled with the winde at Southweſt, and lay Weſt and by North, but it prooued calme all that night, and the currant Southeaſt.

The 14 the riuer of Benin was Northeaſt 7 leagues from the ſhore, and there was litle winde and towards night calme.

The 17 a faire temperate day the winde variable, and we had of latitude foure degrees and 20 minutes.

The 25 a faire temperate day the winde variable, and here we had three degrees & 29 minuts of latitude.

A deceitfull currant.

The 8 of May we had ſight of the ſhore, which was part of Cauo de Monte, but we did not thinke we had beene ſo farre, but it came ſo to paſſe by reaſon of the currant. In this place M. Towrſon was in like maner deceiued with the currant.

The 9 we had ſight of Cauo de monte.

The 17 a darke drowſie day, this was the firſt night that I tooke the North ſtarre.

The 26 a temperate day with litle winde, and we were in 12 degrees and 13 minutes of latitude.

The 30 we met a great ſea out of the Northweſt.

The 6 of Iune we found it as temperate as if we had beene in England, & yet we were within the height of the ſunne, for it was declined 23 degrees, and 26 minuts to the Northward, and we had 15 degrees of latitude.

The 8 faire and temperate as in England, here we met with a counter ſea, out of the Southborde.

The 15 a faire temperate day, the winde variable, here we had 18 degrees and fiftie nine minutes.

Rockweed or Saragaſſo all along the ſea.

The 12 of Iuly in 30 degrees of latitude we met with great ſtore of rockweed, which did ſticke together like cluſters of grapes, and this continued with vs vntill the 17 of the ſaid moneth, and then we ſaw no more, at which 17 day we were in two and thirtie degrees ſixe and fortie minutes of latitude.

The 25 at ſixe of the clocke in the morning, we had ſight of the Iſle of Pike, it bare North and by Eaſt from vs, we being 15 leagues off.

The 27 we ſpake with the poſte of London and ſhe told vs good newes of England.

The nine and twentieth we had ſight of the Iſland of Cueruo, and the 30 we ſaw the Iſland of Flores.

The 27 of Auguſt in 41 degrees of latitude we ſaw 9 ſaile of Britons, and three of them followed vs vntill noone, and then gaue vs ouer.

The 30 we had ſight of Cape Finiſterre.

The eight of September at night wee put into Plimouth ſound, and road in Cauſon bay all night.

The 9 we put into Catwater and there ſtayed vntill the 28 of September, by reaſon of want of men and ſickneſſe.

The nine and twentieth we ſet ſayle from Plimouth, and arriued at London the ſecond of October 1589.

The commodities that we caried in this voyage were cloth both linnen & wollen, yron worke of ſundry ſorts, Manillios or bracelets of copper, glaſſe beades, and corall.

The commodities that we brought home were pepper and Elephants teeth, oyle of palme, cloth made of Cotton wooll very curiouſly wouen, and cloth made of the barke of palme trees.

Their money is pretie white ſhels, for golde and ſiluer we ſaw none. They haue alſo great ſtore of cotton growing: their bread is a kind of roots, they call it Inamia, and when it is well ſodden I would leaue our bread to eat of it, it is pleaſant in eating, and light of digeſtion, the roote thereof is as bigge as a mans arme. Our men vpon fiſh-dayes had rather eate the rootes with oyle and vineger, then to eate good ſtockfiſh. There are great ſtore of palme trees, out of the which they gather great ſtore of wine, which wine is white and very pleaſant, & we ſhould buy two gallons of it for 20 ſhels. They haue good ſtore of ſope, and it ſmelleth like beaten violets. Alſo many pretie fine mats and baſkets that they make, and ſpoones of Elephants teeth very curiouſly wrought with diuers proportions of foules and beaſts made vpon them. There is vpon the coaſt wonderfull great lightning and thunder, in ſo much as I neuer hard the like in no Countrey, for it would make the decke or hatches tremble vnder our feete, and before we were well acquainted with it, we were fearefull, but God be thanked we had no harme. The people are very gentle and louing, and they goe naked both men and women vntill they be married, and then they goe couered from the middle downe to the knees. They would bring our men earthen pottes of the quantitie of two gallons, full of hony and hony combes for 100 ſhelles. They would alſo bring great ſtore of Oranges and Plantans which is a fruit that groweth vpon a tree, and is very like vnto a Cucumber but very pleaſant in eating. It hath pleaſed God of his merceifull goodneſſe to giue me the knowledge how to preſerue freſh water with little coſt, which did ſerue vs ſixe moneths at the ſea, & when we came into Plimmouth it was much wondered at, of the principal men of the towne, who ſaid that there was not ſweeter water in any ſpring in Plimouth. Thus doth God prouide for his creatures, vnto whom be praiſe now and for euermore, Amen.

Inamia, a kind of bread in Benin.

Wine of palm trees.

Abundance of hony.

This preſeruatiue is wrought by caſting into an hogſhead of water an handful of bay-ſalt, as the author told me.

The voiage ſet forth by M. Iohn Newton, and M. Iohn Bird marchants of London to the kindome and Citie of Benin in Africa, with a ſhip called the Richard of Arundell, and a pinneſſe, in the yere 1588. briefely ſet downe in this letter following, written by the chiefe Factor in the voyage to the foreſaid Marchants at the time of the ſhips firſt arriuall at Plimouth.

VOrſhipful Sirs, the diſcourſe of our whole proceeding in this voyage wil aſke more time and a perſon in better health then I am at this preſent, ſo that I truſt you will pardon me, till my comming vp to you: in the meane time let this ſuffice. Whereas we departed in the moneth of December from the coaſt of England with your good ſhip the Richard of Arundell and the pinneſſe, we held on our direct courſe towards our appointed port, and the 14 day of Februarie following we arriued in the hauen of Benin, where we found not water enough to carry the ſhip ouer the barre, ſo that we left her without in the road, and with the pinneſſe & ſhip boat, into which we had put the chiefeſt of our marchãdiſe, we went vp the riuer to a place called Goto, where we arriued the 20 of February, the foreſaid Goto being the neereſt place that we could come to by water, to go for Benin. From thence we preſently ſent Negroes to the king, to certifie him of our arriuall, and of the cauſe of our comming thither: who returned to vs againe the 22 day with a noble man in their company to bring vs vp to the Citie, and with 200 Negroes to carrie our commodities: hereupon the 23 day we deliuered our marchandize to the kings Factor, & the 25 day we came to the great Citie of Benin, where we were well intertained: The ſixe & twenty day we went to the Court to haue ſpoken with the king, which (by reaſon of a ſolemne feaſt then kept amongſt them) we could not doe: but yet we ſpake with his Veadore, or chiefe man, that hath the dealing with the Chriſtians: and we conferred with him concerning our trading, who anſwered vs, that we ſhould haue all things to our deſire, both in pepper and Elephants teeth.

Goto in Benin.

The great citie of Benin.

The firſt of March, we were admitted to the kings preſence, and he made vs the like courteous anſwere for our traffike: the next day we went againe to the Court, where the foreſaid Veadore ſhewed vs one baſket of greene pepper, and another of dry in the ſtalkes: wee deſired to haue it plucked from the ſtalks and made cleane, who anſwered, that it would aſke time, but yet in ſhould be done: and that againſt another yeere it ſhould be in better readines, & the reaſon why we found it ſo vnprepared was, becauſe in this kings time no Chriſtians had euer reſorted thither, to lade pepper. The next day there were ſent vs 12 baſkets, and ſo a litle euery day vntill the 9 of March at which time we had made vpon 64 ſerons of pepper, and 28 Elephants teeth. In this time of our being at Benin (our natures at this firſt time not ſo well acquainted with that climate) we fell all of vs into the diſeaſe of the feuer, whereupon the Captaine ſent me downe with thoſe goods which we alreadie had receiued, to the reſt of our men at Goto: where being arriued, I found all the men of our pinneſſe ſicke alſo, and by reaſon of their weaknes not able to conuey the pinneſſe and goods downe to the place where our ſhip road: but by good hap within two houres after my comming to Goto, the boate came vp from the ſhip, to ſee how all things ſtood with vs, ſo that I put the goods into the boat, and went downe towards the ſhip: but by that time I was come aboord, many of our men died: namely, Maſter Benſon, the Cooper, the Carpenter, & 3 or 4 more, & my ſelfe was alſo in ſuch a weake ſtate that I was not able to returne againe to Benin. Whereupon I ſent vp Samuel Dunne, and the Chirurgian with him to our men, that were about to let them blood, if it were thought needfull: who at their comming to Benin, found the Captaine and your ſonne William Bird dead, and Thomas Hempſteede very weake, who alſo died within two dayes after their comming thither. This ſorrowfull accident cauſed them with ſuch pepper and teeth, as they could then find, ſpeedily to returne to the ſhip, as by the Cargaſon will appeare: at their comming away the Veadore tolde them, that if they could or would ſtay any longer time, he would vſe all poſſible expedition to bring in more commodities: but the common ſickneſſe ſo increaſed and continued amongſt vs all, that by the time our men which remained were come aboord, we had ſo many ſicke and dead of our companie, that we looked all for the ſame happe, and ſo thought to looſe both our ſhip, life, countrey and all. Very hardly and with much adoe could we get vp our ankers, but yet at the laſt by the mercie of God hauing gotten them vp, but leauing our pinneſſe behinde vs, we got to ſea, and ſet ſaile, which was vpon the 13 of Aprill. After which by little and little our men beganne to gather vp their crums and to recouer ſome better ſtrength: and ſo ſailing betwixt the Iſlands of Cape Verde, and the maine we came to the Iſlands of the Azores vpon the 25 of Iuly, where our men beganne a freſh to grow ill, and diuers died, among whom Samuel Dun was one, and as many as remained liuing were in a hard caſe: but in the midſt of our diſtreſſe, it fell ſo wel out, by Gods good prouidence, that we met with your ſhip the Barke Burre, on this ſide the North cape, which did not only keepe vs good cõpanie, but alſo ſent vs ſixe freſh men aboord, without whoſe helpe, we ſhould ſurely haue taſted of many inconueniences. But by this good meanes we are now at the laſt arriued in Plimouth, this 9 day of September: and for want of better health at this time, I referre the further knowledge of more particularities, till my comming to London.

Yours to commaund
Anthony Ingram.

The ſecond voyage to Benin, ſet foorth by Maſter Iohn Newton, and Maſter Iohn Bird Marchants of London in the yeere 1590 with a ſhip called the Richard of Arundell of the burthen of one hundreth tunnes, and a ſmall pinneſſe, in which voyage Maſter Iames Welſh was chiefe Maiſter.

The third of September 1590 we ſet ſaile from Ratclife, and the 18 of the ſaid moneth we came into Plimouth ſound, and the two and twentieth we put to ſea againe, and at midnight we were off the Liſart, and ſo paſſed on our voyage vntill the 14 of October, on which day we had ſight of Forteuentura one of the Canarie Iſlands, which appeared very ragged as we ſailed by it.

The 16 of October, in the latitude of 24 degrees and nine minutes we met with a great hollow ſea, the like whereof I neuer ſaw on this coaſt, and this day there came to the ſhips ſide a monſtrous great fiſh (I thinke it was a Gobarto) which put vp his head to the ſteepe tubs where yͤ cooke was in ſhifting the victuals, whō I thought the fiſh would haue caried away.

The 21 in this latitude of 18 degrees we met with a counterſea out of the North boord, and the laſt voyage in this very place we had the counterſea out of the South, being very calme weather as now it is alſo.

The 24 we had ſight of Cauo Verde, and the 25 we met with a great hollow ſea out of the North, which is a common ſigne that the winde will be Northerly, and ſo it prooued.

A token of a Northerly winde.

The 15 of Nouember we met with three currants out of the Weſt and Northweſt, one after another, with an houres time betweene each currant. This was in the latitude of 6 degrees and 42 minutes.

Great currants.

The 18 day we met with two other great currants out of the Southweſt, and the 20 we ſaw another current out of the Northeaſt, and the 24 we had a great current out of the Southſouthweſt, and at 6 of the clocke towards night we had 3 currents more.

The 27 we thought that we had gone at the leaſt 2 leagues and a halfe euery watch, and it fell out that we ſailed but one league euery watch for the ſpace of 24 houres, by meanes of a great billow and current that came ſtill out of the South.

The 5 of December in ſetting the watch we caſt about and lay Eaſt Northeaſt, and Northeaſt, and here in 5 degrees and a halfe our pinneſſe loſt vs wilfully.

The 7 at the going downe of the Sunne we ſaw a great blacke ſpot in the Sunne, and the 8. day both at riſing and ſetting we ſaw the like, which ſpot to our ſeeming was about the bigneſſe of a ſhilling, being in 5 degrees of latitude, and ſtill there came a great billow out of the ſouther-bord.

The 14 we ſounded and had 15 fadom water and groſſe red ſand, and 2 leagues from the ſhore the currant ſet Southeaſt along the ſhore with a billow ſtill out of the ſoutherbord.

The 15 we were thwart a rocke ſomewhat like the Mewſtone in England, it was 2 leagues from vs, here we ſounded and had 27 fadom, but the rocke is not aboue a mile from the ſhore, and a mile farther we ſaw another rocke, and betweene them both broken ground; here we ſounded and had but 20 fadome and blacke ſand, and we might ſee plaine that the rockes went not along the ſhore, but from the land to the ſeaward, and about 5 leagues to the Southward we ſawe a great bay, here we had 4 degrees and 27 minuts.

Two rocks.

The 16 we met with a French ſhip of Hunfleur, who robbed our pinneſſe, we ſent a letter by him, and this night we ſaw another ſpot in the Sunne at his going downe. And towards euening we were thwart of a riuer, and right ouer the riuer was a high tuft of trees.

A French ſhip of Hunfleur.

The 17 we ankered in the riuers mouth, and then we found the land to be Cauo de las Palmas, and betweene vs & the cape was a great ledge of rockes, one league and a halfe into the ſea, and they bare to the Weſt of the Cape, we ſaw alſo an Iſland off the point of the foreland, thus it waxed night that we could perceiue no more of the lande, but onely that it trended in like a bay, where there runneth a ſtreame as if it were in the riuer of Thames, and this was the change day of the Moone.

Cauo de las Palmas.

The 19 a faire temperate day, and the wind South, we went Eaſt, and the lande a ſterne of vs Weſt, and it ſhewed low by the water ſide like Iſlands, this was the eaſt of Cauo de las Palmas, and it trended in with a great ſound, and we went Eaſt all night, and in the morning wee were but 3 or 4 leagues from the ſhore.

The 20 we were thwart of a riuer called Rio de los Barbos.

The 21 we went along the ſhore Eaſt, & 3 or 4 leagues to the Weſt of Cauo de tres puntas, I find the bay to be ſet deeper then it is by 4 leagues, and at 4 of the clocke the land begun to ſhewe high, and the firſt part of it full of Palme trees.

Rio de los Barbos.

The 24 ſtill going by the ſhore, the land was very low and full of trees by the water ſide, and at 12 of the clocke we ankered thwart of the riuer called, Rio de Boilas. Here we ſent our boate a ſhore with the marchants, but they durſt not put into the riuer becauſe of a great billow that continually brake at the enterance vpon the barre.

Rio de Boilas.

The 28 we ſailed alongſt the ſhore, and ankered at night in ſeuen fadom becauſe a great current would haue put vs backe, which came from the Eaſt Southeaſt from Papuas.

Papuas.

The 29 at noone we were thwart of Arda, and there we tooke a Carauel but the men were fled on land, then we went aboord her, but ſhe had nothing in her but only a litle oyle of Palme trees, and a few roots. The next morning our Captaine and marchants went to meete Portugals, that came in a boate to ſpeake with vs, where they communed about the buying of the Carauell of our men againe, and the Portugals promiſed that we ſhould haue for the Carauell, certaine bullocks and Elephants teeth, and they gaue vs one tooth and one bullocke preſently, and ſayd they would bring vs the reſt the next day.

Arda.

The firſt of Ianuarie our Captaine went on land to ſpeake with the Portugales, but when he ſaw they did diſſemble, he came aboord againe, and preſently we vnrigged the Carauell, and ſet her on fire before the towne. Then we ſet ſaile and went along the coaſt, where we ſaw a Date tree, the like whereof is not in all that coaſt vpon the water ſide, alſo we fell on ground a litle in one place: Thus we went to Villa longa, and there ankered.

Ianuarie.

Villa longa.

The third we were as far ſhot as Rio de Lagoa, where our marchants went a ſhore and vpon the barre they found 3 fadom flat, but they went not in becauſe it was late. There is alſo to the Eaſtward of this riuer a Date tree higher then all the reſt of the other trees thereabout. Thus we went along the coaſt, and euery night ankered, & al the ſhore as we went was full of trees and thicke woods.

Rio de Lagoa.

The 6 day in the morning it was very foggy, ſo that we could not ſee the land, and at three of the clocke in the afternoone it cleared vp, & then we found our ſelues thwart of the riuer of Iaya, and when we found the ſhallow water, we bare into the ſea South, as we did the voyage before, and came to an ancre in fiue fadom water. The next day we ſet ſaile againe, and towards noone we were thwart of the riuer of Benin in foure fadom water.

The riuer of Iaya.

The riuer of Benin.

The 10 day our Captaine went on land with the ſhallop at 2 a clocke in the afternoone. All this weeke it was very foggy euery day vntill ten a clocke, and all this time hitherto hath beene as temperate as our ſummer in England. This day we went into the road and ankered, & the weſt point of the road bare Eaſt northeaſt off vs, we riding in foure fadome water.

Goto.

The 21 a faire temperate day, this day M. Haſſald went to the towne of Goto, to heare newes of the Captaine.

The Carauell bringeth teeth aboord.

The 23 came the Carauell, and Samuell in her, and ſhe brought 63 Elephants teeth, and three bullocks.

The 28 a faire temperate day, and towards night there fell much raine, lightning, and thunder, this day our boate came aboord from Goto.

298. ſacks of pepper.

The 24 of Februarie, we tooke in 298 Cerons or ſackes of pepper, and 4 Elephants teeth, and the winde was at Southeaſt. And the 26 we put the reſt of our goods into the Carauell, and M. Haſſald went with her to Goto.

The 5 of March ỹ Carauel came againe & brought 21 Cerons of pepper, & 4 Elephants teeth.

The 9 of Aprill our Carauell came aboord with water for our prouiſion for the ſea, and this day alſo we loſt our ſhallope.

Three ſpouts.

The 17 a drowſie rainie day, and in the afternoone we ſaw 3 great ſpoutes of raine, two on our larboord ſide, and one right with the ſhips head, but God be thanked, they came not at vs, and this day we tooke in the laſt of our water for the ſea, and the 26 we victualed our Carauell to go with vs to the ſea.

They returned homeward.

The 27 we ſet ſaile to goe homewarde with the winde at Southweſt, and at two a clocke in the afternoone, the riuer of Benin was Northeaſt 8 leagues from vs.

The 3 of May we had ſuch a terrible guſt with raine, lightning & thunder, that it tore and ſplit our fore ſaile, and alſo the Carauels fore-ſayle and maine-ſayle, with the wind at Southeaſt.

The 12 a faire temperate day, much like our ſommer mornings in England, being but one degree & a halfe from the line, but at midnight we had a cruell guſt of raine, & the wind at northeaſt.

The 24 we were South from from Cauo de las Palmas 37 leagues.

Braua.

The firſt of Iuly we had ſight of the Iſland of Braua, and it bare Eaſt 7 leagues off, and this Iſland is one of the Iſlands of Cauo Verde.

The 13 of Auguſt we ſpake with the Queenes ſhips, the Lord Thomas Howard being Admirall, and ſir Richard Greeneuill Viceadmirall. They kept vs in their company vntill the 15 day at night, themſelues lying a hull, in waight for purchaſe 30 leagues to the Southweſt of the Iſland of Flores.

We departed in company of a prize.

The 15 we had leaue to depart with a fly-boat laden with ſugar that came from Sant Thome, which was taken by the Queenes ſhips, whereof my Lord Admirall gaue me great charge, not to leaue her vntill ſhe were harbored in England.

Coruo.

The three and twentieth the Northeaſt part of the Iſland of Coruo bare off vs Eaſt and by South ſixe leagues off.

The 17 of September we met with a ſhip of Plimouth that came out of the Weſt Indies, but ſhe could tell vs no newes. The next day we had ſight of another ſayle, this day alſo one of our company named M. Wood died.

The 23 we ſpake with the Dragon of my Lord of Cumberland, whereof Maſter Iuie was Maiſter.

The ſecond of October we met with a ſhip of New-caſtle which came from Newfound-land, and out of her we had 300 couple of Newland fiſh.

The 6 we had ſight of Sillie, and with raine and winde we were forced to put into S. Maries ſound, where we ſtaied all night, and 4 dayes after.

The 11 we ſet ſaile againe, and comming out had three fadom vpon the barre at a high water, then we lay out Southeaſt, through Crow-ſand, and ſhortly after we had ſight of the lands end, and at ten of the clocke we were thwart of the Lyſart.

The 13 we were put into Dartmouth, and there we ſtayd vntill the 12 of December. From thence we put out with the winde at Weſt, and the 18 of December, God be praiſed, we ankered at Limehouſe in the Thames, where we diſcharged 589 ſacks of Pepper, 150 Elephants teeth, and 32 barrels of oile of Palme trees.

The commodities that we caried out this ſecond voyage were Broad cloth, Kerſies, Bayes, Linnen cloth, Yron vnwrought, Bracelets of Copper, Corall, Hawks belles, Horſetailes, Hats, and ſuch like.

This voyage was more comfortable vnto vs then the firſt, becauſe we had good ſtore of freſh water, and that very ſweet: for as yet we haue very good water in the ſhippe which we brought out of the riuer of Benin the firſt day of Aprill 1591. and it is at this day (being the 7 of Iune 1592.) to be ſeen abord the ſhip as cleare and as ſweet as any fountaine can yeeld.

In this voiage we ſailed 350 leagues within halfe a degree of the equinoctiall line, and there we found it more temperate, then where we rode. And vnder the line wee did kill great ſtore of ſmall Dolphines, and many other good fiſhes, and ſo did we all the way, which was a very great refreſhing vnto vs, and the fiſh neuer forſooke vs, vntill we were to the Northwards of the Ilands of Azores, and then we could ſee no more fiſh, but God be thanked wee met with good company of our countrey ſhips which were great comfort vnto vs, being fiue moneths before at Sea without any companie.

It is more temperate vnder the equinoctiall, then on the coaſt of Guinie & Benin.

both theſe voyages to the riuer of Benin.

An Aduertiſement ſent to Philip the ſecond king of Spaine from Angola by one Baltazar Almeida de Souſa, touching the ſtate of the foreſayd countrey, written the 21 of May, 1591.

The 26 of July I certified your maieſtie by Iohn Frere de Bendanha your maieſties pay-maſter and commiſſioner, with the gouernour Paulo Dias, which is lately deceaſed, of all things that happened the 28 of December in the yere laſt paſt 1590. Now I thought it conuenient to aduertiſe your maieſtie what hath fallen out ſince that time, which is as foloweth. The gouernour Luis Serrano encamped himſelfe eight leagues from Cabaſa, where the Negro king dwelleth, with 350 Portugal ſouldiers: & afterward being there encamped, it hapned that the king of Matamba ſent a ſtrong and mightie army, & in warlike maner, with ſtrange inuentions for the ſayd purpoſe. So the king of Angola gaue this other king battell, and the gouernour ſent 114 ſouldiers Portugals to helpe the ſaid king of Angola: in which battell it was the will of God that our army was ouerthrowen and all ſlaine, as well our Portugals as the Moores which tooke part with them. So with this ouerthrow it happened that this realme the ſecond time hath rebelled againſt your maieſtie. Hereupon the Gouernour aſſembling the reſt of his Portugall ſouldiers, to the number of 250 altogether, went to Amaſanguano, which is now his place of abode. Moreouer, beſides the manifold loſſes which haue befallen the Portugals in this realme, your maieſtie hath ſuſtained other great miſfortunes both in your lands and goods. And becauſe I cannot perſonally come to certifie your maieſtie thereof, I thought it good to write ſome part of the ſame whereby your maieſtie may vnderſtand the eſtate of this countrey. This realme, for the moſt part thereof hath twiſe bene wonne, and twiſe loſt for want of good gouernment. For here haue bene many gouernours which haue pretended to do iuſtice, but haue pitifully neglected the ſame, and practiſed the cleane contrary, and this I know to be moſt true. But the onely way to recouer this realme, and to augment your maieſties lands, goods and treaſure, muſt be by ſending ſome noble and mightie man to rule here, which muſt bring authoritie frõ your maieſtie, and by taking ſtreight order that euery captaine which doeth conquere here may bee rewarded according to his deſerts. Likewiſe your maieſtie muſt ſend hither 2000 good ſouldiers, with munition and ſufficient ſtore of prouiſion for them. And by this meanes your highneſſe ſhall know what yeerely reuenue Angola will yeeld vnto your coffers, and what profit will grow thereof. Otherwiſe your maieſtie ſhall reape but litle benefit here. If with my preſence I may doe your maieſtie any ſeruice in giuing information of the ſtate of this realme, as one which haue had experience thereof, and haue ſeene the order of it, vpon the vnderſtanding of your maieſties pleaſure herein, I will doe my beſt indeuour. And the cauſe wherefore I haue not done this heretofore hath bene, by reaſon that the Gouernours of this realme would ſuffer none of the captaines which haue conquered this countrey to informe your maieſtie of that which is needfull for your ſeruice, and the augmenting of this conqueſt. Our lord preſerue your catholique perſon with increaſe of many kingdomes, and the augmentation of your crowne. Written in the conqueſt of the realme of Angola the 21 of May 1591.

A true diſcourſe written (as is thought) by Colonel Antonie VVinkfield emploied in the voiage to Spaine and Portugall, 1589. ſent to his particular friend, & by him publiſhed for the better ſatiſfaction of all ſuch as hauing bene ſeduced by particular report, haue entred into conceits tending to the diſcredite of the enterpriſe and Actors of the ſame.

ALthough the deſire of aduancing my reputation cauſed me to withſtand the many perſwaſions you vſed to hold me at home, & the purſute of honorable actions drew me (contrary to your expectation) to neglect that aduiſe, which in loue I know you gaue me: yet in reſpect of the many aſſurances you haue yeelded mee of your kindeſt friendſhip, I cannot ſuſpect that you will either loue or eſteeme me the leſſe, at this my returne: and therfore I wil not omit any occaſion which may make me appeare thankfull, or diſcharge any part of that duetie I owe you; which now is none other then to offer you a true diſcourſe how theſe warres of Spaine and Portugall haue paſſed ſince our going out of England the 18 of Aprill, till our returne which was the firſt of July. Wherein I wil (vnder your fauourable pardon) for your further ſatiſfaction, as well make relation of thoſe reaſons which confirmed me in my purpoſe of going abroad, as of theſe accidents which haue happened during our aboad there; thereby hoping to perſwade you that no light fanſie did drawe me from the fruition of your deareſt friendſhip, but an earneſt deſire, by following the warres to make my ſelfe more worthy of the ſame.

Hauing therefore determinately purpoſed to put on this habite of a ſouldier, I grew doubtfull whether to employ my time in ẏ wars of the low Countries, which are in auxiliarie maner maintained by her maieſtie, or to folow the fortune of this voiage, which was an aduenture of her and many honorable perſonages, in reuenge of vnſupportable wrongs offered vnto the eſtate of our countrey by the Caſtilian king: in arguing whereof, I find that by how much the chalenger is reputed before the defendant, by ſo much is the iourney to be preferred before thoſe defenſiue wars. For had the duke of Parma his turne bene to defend, as it was his good fortune to inuade: from whence could haue proceeded that glorious honor which theſe late warres haue laid vpon him, or what could haue bene ſaid more of him, then of a Reſpondent (though neuer ſo valiant) in a priuate Duell? Euen, that he hath done no more then by his honour he was tied vnto. For the gaine of one towne or any ſmall defeat giueth more renoume to the Aſſailant, then the defence of a countrey, or the withſtanding of twentie encounters can yeeld any man who is bound by his place to guard the ſame: whereof as well the particulars of our age, eſpecially in the Spaniard, as the reports of former hiſtories may aſſure vs, which haue ſtill laied the fame of all warres vpon the Inuader. And do not ours in theſe dayes liue obſcured in Flanders, either not hauing wherewithall to manage any warre, or not putting on armes, but to defend thẽſelues when the enemie ſhall procure them? Whereas in this ſhort time of our Aduenture, we haue won a towne by eſcalade, battred & aſſaulted another, ouerthrowen a mightie princes power in the field, landed our armie in 3 ſeueral places of his kingdom, marched 7 dayes in the heart of his country, lien three nights in the ſuburbs of his principall citie, beaten his forces into the gates thereof, and poſſeſſed two of his frontier Forts, as ſhall in diſcourſe thereof more particularly appeare: whereby I conclude, that going with an Inuader, and in ſuch an action as euery day giueth new experience, I haue much to vaunt of, that my fortune did rather cary me thither then into the wars of Flanders. Notwithſtanding the vehement perſwaſions you vſed with me to the contrary, the grounds whereof ſithence you receiued them from others, you muſt giue me leaue to acquaint you with the error you were led into by thẽ, who labouring to bring the world into an opinion that it ſtood more with the ſafetie of our eſtate to bend all our forces againſt the prince of Parma, then to folow this action by looking into the true effects of this iourney, will iudicially conuince themſelues of miſtaking the matter. For, may the conqueſt of theſe countries againſt the prince of Parma be thought more eaſie for vs alone now, then the defence of them was 11 yeeres agoe, with the men and money of the Queene of England? the power of the Monſieur of France? the aſſiſtance of the principal ſtates of Germanie? and the nobilitie of their owne country? Could not an armie of more then 20000 horſe, & almoſt 30000 foot, beat Don Iohn de Auſtria out of the countrey, who was poſſeſſed of a very few frontier townes? & ſhal it now be laid vpon her maieſties ſhoulders to remoue ſo mightie an enemie, who hath left vs but 3 whole parts of 17 vnconquered? It is not a iourny of a few moneths, nor an auxiliarie warre of few yeeres that can dammifie the king of Spaine in thoſe places where we ſhall meet at euery 8 or 10 miles end with a towne, which will coſt more the winning then will yeerely pay 4 or 5 thouſand mens wages, where all the countrey is quartered by riuers which haue no paſſage vnfortified, and where moſt of the beſt ſouldiers of Chriſtendom that he on our aduerſe party be in penſion. But our armie, which hath not coſt her maieſtie much aboue the third part of one yeres expenſes in the Low countries, hath already ſpoiled a great part of the prouiſion he had made at the Groine of all ſorts, for a new voyage into England; burnt 3 of his ſhips, whereof one was yͤ ſecond in the laſt yeres expedition called S. Iuan de Colorado; taken frõ him aboue 150 pieces of good artillerie; cut off more then 60 hulks and 20 French ſhips wel mãned fit and readie to ſerue him for men of war againſt vs, laden for his ſtore with corne, victuals, maſts, cables and other marchandizes; ſlaine and taken the principal men of war he had in Galitia; made Don Pedro Enriques de Guſman, Conde de Fuentes, Generall of his forces in Portugall, ſhamefully run at Peniche; laid along of his beſt Commanders in Lisbon; and by theſe few aduentures diſcouered how eaſily her maieſtie may without any great aduenture in ſhort time pull the Tirant of the world vpon his knees, as wel by the diſquieting his vſurpation of Portugall as without difficultie in keeping the commoditie of his Indies from him, by ſending an army ſo accompliſhed, as may not be ſubiect to thoſe extremities which we haue endured: except he draw, for thoſe defences, his forces out of the Low countries and diſfurniſh his gariſons of Naples & Milan, which with ſafetie of thoſe places he may not do. And yet by this meane he ſhall rather be inforced thereunto, thẽ by any force that can be vſed there againſt him: wherefore I directly conclude that this proceeding is the moſt ſafe and neceſſary way to be held againſt him, and therefore more importing then the war in the Low countries. Yet hath the iourney (I know) bene much miſliked by ſome, who either thinking too worthily of the Spaniards valure, too indifferently of his purpoſes againſt vs, or too vnworthily of them that vndertooke this iourney againſt him, did thinke it a thing dangerous to encounter the Spaniard at his owne home, a thing needleſſe to proceed by inuaſion againſt him, a thing of too great moment for two ſubiects of their qualitie to vndertake: And therfore did not ſo aduance the beginnings as though they hoped for any good ſucceſſe therof.

The chances of wars be things moſt vncertaine: for what people ſoeuer vndertake them, they are in deed as chaſtiſements appointed by God for the one ſide or the other. For which purpoſe it hath pleaſed him to giue ſome victories to the Spaniards of late yeeres againſt ſome whom he had in purpoſe to ruine. But if we conſider what wars they be that haue made their name ſo terrible, we ſhal find them to haue bin none other then againſt the barbarous Moores, the naked Indians, and the vnarmed Netherlanders, whoſe yeelding rather to the name thẽ act of the Spaniards, hath put them into ſuch a conceit of their mightines, as they haue conſiderately vndertaken the conqueſt of our monarchie, conſiſting of a people vnited & alwayes held ſufficiently warlike: againſt whom what ſucceſſe their inuincible army had the laſt yeere, as our very children can witnes, ſo I doubt not but this voiage hath ſufficiently made knowen what they are euen vpon their owne dunghill, which, had it bene ſet out in ſuch ſort as it was agreed vpon by their firſt demaund, it might haue made our nation the moſt glorious people of the world. For hath not the want of 8 of the 12 pieces of artillerie, which were promiſed vnto the Aduenture, loſt her maieſtie the poſſeſſion of the Groine and many other places, as hereafter ſhal appeare, whoſe defenſible rampires were greater then our batterie (ſuch as it was) cold force: and therefore were left vnattempted?

It was alſo reſolued to haue ſent 600 Engliſh horſes of the Low countries, whereof we had not one, notwithſtanding the great charges expended in their tranſportation hither: and that may the army aſſembled at Puente de Burgos thanke God of, as well as the forces of Portugall, who foreran vs 6 daies together: Did we not want 7 of the 13 old Companies, which we ſhould haue had frõ thence; foure of the 10 dutch Companies; & 6 of their men of war for the ſea, from the Hollanders: which I may iuſtly ſay we wanted, in that we might haue had ſo many good ſouldiers, ſo many good ſhips, and ſo many able bodies more then we had?

Did there not vpõ the firſt thinking of the iourney diuers gallant Courtiers put in their names for aduenturers to the ſumme of 10000 li. who ſeeing it went forward in good earneſt, aduiſed themſelues better, and laid the want of ſo much money vpon the iourney?

Was there not moreouer a round ſumme of the aduenture ſpent in leuying, furniſhing, and maintaining 3 moneths 1500 men for the ſeruice of Berghen, with which Companies the Mutinies of Oſtend were ſuppreſſed, a ſeruice of no ſmal moment?

What miſery the detracting of the time of our ſetting out, which ſhould haue bene the 1 of February, did lay vpon vs, too many can witnes: and what extremitie the want of that moneths victuals which we did eat, during the moneth we lay at Plimmouth for a wind, might haue driuen vs vnto, no man can doubt of, that knoweth what men do liue by, had not God giuen vs in the ende a more proſperous wind and ſhorter paſſage into Galitia then hath bene often ſeen, where our owne force & fortune reuictualled vs largely: of which croſſe windes, that held vs two dayes after our going out, the Generals being wearie, thruſt to Sea in the ſame, wiſely chuſing rather to attend the change thereof there, then by being in harborough to loſe any part of the better, when it ſhould come by hauing their men on ſhore : in which two dayes 25 of our companies ſhipped in part of the fleet were ſcattered from vs, either not being able or willing to double Vſhant.

Theſe burdens layed vpon our Generals before their going out, they haue patiently endured, and I thinke they haue thereby much enlarged their honour : for hauing done thus much with the want of our artillery, 600 horſe, 3000 foot, 20000 li. of their aduenture, and one moneths victuals of their proportion, what may be coniectured they would haue done with their ful cōplement?

For the loſſe of our men at ſea, ſince we can lay it on none but the will of God, what can be ſaid more, then that it is his pleaſure to turne all thoſe impediments to the honor of them againſt whom they were intended : and he will ſtill ſhew himſelfe the Lord of hoſts in doing great things by thē, whom many haue ſought to obſcure : who if they had let the action fall at the height thereof in reſpect of thoſe defects, which were ſuch eſpecially for the ſeruice at land, as would haue made a mighty ſubiect ſtoope vnder thē, I do not ſee how any man could iuſtly haue layd any reproch vpon him who commanded the ſame, but rather haue lamented the iniquity of this time, wherein men whom forren countries haue for their conduct in ſeruice worthily eſteemed of, ſhould not only in their owne countrey not be ſeconded in their honorable endeuors, but mightily hindred, euen to yͤ impairing of their owne eſtates, which moſt willingly they haue aduentured for the good of their countries: whoſe worth I wil not value by my report, leſt I ſhould ſeem guiltie of flattery (which my ſoule abhorreth) & yet come ſhort in the true meaſure of their praiſe. Onely for your inſtructiō againſt them who had almoſt ſeduced you from the true opinion you hold of ſuch men, you ſhal vnderſtand that General Norris frō his booke was trained vp in the wars of the Admiral of France, and in very yong yeeres had charge of men vnder the erle of Eſſex in Ireland : which with what commendations he then diſcharged, I leaue to the report of them who obſerued thoſe ſeruices. Vpon the breach betwixt Don Iohn & the States, he was made Colonell generall of all yͤ Engliſh forces there preſent, or to come, which he continued 2 yeeres : he was then made Marſhall of the field vnder Conte Hohenlo : and after that, General of the army in Friſlād : at his cōming home in the time of Monſieurs gouernment in Flanders, he was made lord Preſident of Munſter in Ireland, which he yet holdeth, from whence within one yeere he was ſent for, & ſent Generall of the Engliſh forces which her maieſtie thē lent to the Low countries, which he held til the erle of Leiceſters going ouer. And he was made Marſhall of the field in England, the enemy being vpon our coaſt, and when it was expected the crowne of England ſhould haue bene tried by battel. Al which places of commaundement which neuer any Engliſhman ſucceſſiuely attained vnto in forren wars, and the high places her maieſtie hath thought him worthy of, may ſuffice to perſwade you, that he was not altogether vnlikely to diſcharge that which he vndertooke.

What fame general Drake hath gotten by his iourny about the world, by his aduentures to the weſt Indies, & the ſcourges he hath laid vpon the Spaniſh nation, I leaue to the Southerne parts to ſpeake of, & refer you to The Booke extant in our own language treating of yͤ ſame, & beſeech you conſidering the waighty matters they haue in all the courſe of their liues with wonderfull reputation managed, that you wil eſteeme them not wel informed of their proceedings, that thinke them inſufficient to paſſe through that which they vndertooke, eſpecially hauing gone thus far in the view of the world, through ſo many incombrances, & diſappointed of thoſe agreements which led them yͤ rather to vndertake the ſeruice. But it may be you wil thinke me herein either to much opinionated of the voiage, or conceited of the Commanders, yͭ labouring thus earneſtly to aduance the opinion of them both, haue not ſo much as touched any part of the miſorders, weaknes & wants that haue bene amongſt vs, whereof they that returned did plentifully report. True it is, I haue conceiued a great opinion of the iourney, & do thinke honorably of the Commanders : for we find in greateſt antiquities, that many Commanders haue bene receiued home with triumph for leſſe merite, & that our owne countrey hath honored men heretofore with admiration for aduentures vnequal to this: it might therfore in thoſe daies haue ſeemed ſuperfluous to extend any mans commendations by particular remembrances, for that then all men were ready to giue euery man his due. But I hold it moſt neceſſary in theſe daies, ſithence euery vertue findeth her direct oppoſite, & actions worthy of all memory are in danger to be enuiouſly obſcured, to denounce the prayſes of the action, and actors to the ful, but yet no further then with ſinceritie of trueth, & not without grieuing at the iniury of this time, wherein is enforced a neceſſitie of Apologies for thoſe men & matters, which all former times were accuſtomed to entertaine with the greateſt applauſe that might be. But to anſwere the reports which haue bene giuen out in reproch of the actors and action by ſuch as were in the ſame : let no man thinke otherwiſe, but that they, who fearing the caſuall accidents of war had any purpoſe of returning, did firſt aduiſe of ſome occaſion that ſhould moue them thereunto : and hauing found any whatſoeuer did thinke it ſufficiently iuſt, in reſpect of the earneſt deſire they had to ſeeke out matter that might colour their comming home.

Of theſe there were ſome, who hauing noted the late Flemiſh warres did finde that many yong men haue gone ouer and ſafely returned ſouldiers within fewe moneths, in hauing learned ſome wordes of Arte vſed in the warres, and thought after that good example to ſpend like time amongſt vs: which being expired they beganne to quarrell at the great mortalitie that was amongſt vs.

The neglect of diſcipline in the Armie, for that men were ſuffered to be drunke with the plentie of wines.

The ſcarſitie of Surgions.

The want of carriages for the hurt and ſicke: and the penurie of victuals in the Campe:

Thereupon diuining that there would be no good done: And that therefore they could be content to loſe their time, and aduenture to returne home againe.

Theſe men haue either cõceiued wel of their owne wits (who by obſeruing the paſſages of the warre were become ſufficiẽt ſouldiers in theſe fewe weeks, & did long to be at home, where their diſcourſes might be wondred at) or miſſing of their Portegues and Milrayes which they dreamed on in Portogall, would rather returne to their former maner of life, then attend the ende of the iourney. For ſeeing that one hazard brought another; and that though one eſcaped the bullet this day it might light vpon him tomorow, the next day, or any day; and that the warre was not confined to any one place, but yͭ euery place brought foorth new enemies, they were glad to ſee ſome of the poore ſouldiers fal ſicke, yͭ fearing to be infected by them they might iuſtly deſire to go home.

Anſwere to the firſt.

The ſickneſſe I confeſſe was great, becauſe any is too much. But hath it bene greater then is ordinary amongſt Engliſhmen at their firſt entrance into the warres, whitherſoeuer they goe to want the fulneſſe of their fleſh pots? Haue not ours decayed at all times in France, with eating yong fruits and drinking newe wines? haue they not abundantly periſhed in the Low countreys with cold, and rawneſſe of the aire, euen in their garriſons? Haue there not more died in London in ſixe moneths of the plague, then double our Armie being at the ſtrongeſt? And could the Spaniſh Armie the laſt yeere (who had all prouiſions that could be thought on for an Armie, and tooke the fitteſt ſeaſon in the yeere for our Climate) auoyd ſicknes amongſt their ſouldiers? May it then be thought that ours could eſcape there, where they found inordinate heat of weather, and hot wines to diſtemper them withall?

But can it be, that wee haue loſt ſo many as the common ſort perſwade themſelues wee haue? It hath bene prooued by ſtrickt examinations of our muſters, that we were neuer in our fulneſſe before our going from Plimouth 11000. ſouldiers, nor aboue 2500. Marriners. It is alſo euident that there returned aboue 6000. of all ſorts, as appeareth by the ſeuerall paiments made to them ſince our comming home. And I haue truely ſhewed you that of theſe numbers very neere 3000. forſooke the Armie at the Sea, whereof ſome paſſed into France and the reſt returned home. So as we neuer being 13000. in all, and hauing brought home aboue 6000. with vs, you may ſee how the world hath bene ſeduced, in beleeuing that we haue loſt 16000. men by ſicknes.

Anſwere to the ſecond.

To them that haue made queſtion of the gouernment of the warres (little knowing what appertaineth thereunto in that there were ſo many drunkards amongſt vs) I anſwere, that in their gouernment of ſhires and pariſhes, yea in their very houſholdes, themſelues can hardly bridle their vaſſals from that vice. For we ſee it is a thing almoſt impoſſible, at any your Faires or publique aſſemblies to finde any quarter thereof ſober, or in your Townes any Alepoles vnfrequented: And we obſerue that though any man hauing any diſordered perſons in their houſes, do locke vp their drinke and ſet Butlers vpon it, that they will yet either by indirect meanes ſteale themſelues drunke from their Maſters tables, or runne abroad to ſeeke it. If then at home in the eyes of your Iuſtices, Maiors, Preachers, and Maſters, and where they pay for euery pot they take, they cannot be kept from their liquor: doe they thinke that thoſe baſe diſordered perſons whom themſelues ſent vnto vs, as liuing at home without rule, who hearing of wine doe long for it as a daintie that their purſes could neuer reach to in England, and hauing it there without mony euẽ in their houſes where they lie & hold their guard, can be kept from being drunk; and once drunke, held in any order or tune, except we had for euery drunkard an officer to attend him? But who be they that haue runne into theſe diſorders? Euen our neweſt men, our yongeſt men, and our ideleſt men, and for the moſt part our ſlouenly preſt men, whom the Iuſtices (who haue alwayes thought vnworthily of any warre) haue ſent out as the ſcumme and dregs of their countrey. And thoſe were they, who diſtempering themſelues with theſe hote wines, haue brought in that ſickneſſe, which hath infected honeſter men then themſelues. But I hope, as in other places the recouerie of their diſeaſes doeth acquaint their bodies with the aire of the countries where they be, ſo the remainder of theſe which haue either recouered, or paſt without ſickneſſe will prooue moſt fit for Martiall ſeruices.

Anſwere to the third.

If we haue wanted Surgeons, may not this rather be laid vpon the captaines (who are to prouide for their ſeuerall Companies) then vpon the Generals, whoſe care hath bene more generall. And how may it be thought that euery captaine, vpon whom moſt of the charges of raiſing their Companies was laid as an aduenture, could prouide themſelues of all things expedient for a war, which was alwaies wont to be maintained by the purſe of the prince. But admit euery captaine had his Surgeon: yet were the want of curing neuer-the leſſe: for our Engliſh Surgeons (for the moſt part) be vnexperienced in hurts that come by ſhot; becauſe England hath not knowen wars but of late, from whoſe ignorãce proceeded this diſcomfort, which I hope will warne thoſe yͭ hereafter go to the wars to make preparation of ſuch as may better preſerue mens liues by their ſkill.

Anſwere to the fourth.

From whence the want of cariages did proceed, you may coniecture in yͭ we marched through a countrey neither plentiful of ſuch prouiſions, nor willing to part from any thing: yet this I can aſſure you, that no mã of worth was left either hurt or ſicke in any place vnprouided for. And that the General commanded all the mules & aſſes that were laden with any baggage to be vnburdened and taken to that vſe: and the earle of Eſſex and he for mony hired men to cary mẽ vpon pikes. And the earle (whoſe true vertue and nobilitie, as it doeth in all other his actions appeare, ſo did it very much in this) threw down his own ſtuffe, I meane apparel & neceſſaries which he had there, from his owne cariages, and let them be left by the way, to put hurt and ſicke men vpon them. Of whoſe honorable deſeruings I ſhall not need here to make any particular diſcourſe, for that many of his actions do hereafter giue me occaſion to obſerue the ſame.

Anſwere to the fift.

And the great complaint that theſe men make for the want of victuals may well proceed from their not knowing the wants of the war; for if to feed vpon good biefes, muttons & goats, be to want, they haue endured great ſcarcitie at land, wherunto they neuer wanted, two daies together, wine to mixe with their water, nor bread to eat with their meat (in ſome quantitie) except it were ſuch as had vowed rather to ſtarue then to ſtir out of their places for food: of whom we had too many, who if their time had ſerued for it, might haue ſeen in many campes in the moſt plentifull countries of the world for victuals, men daily die with want of bread and drinke in not hauing money to buy, nor the countrey yeelding any good or healthful water in any place; whereas both Spaine and Portugall do in euery place afford the beſt water that may be, and much more healthful then any wine for our drinking.

And although ſome haue moſt iniuriouſly exclaimed againſt the ſmal prouiſions of victuals for the ſea, rather grounding the ſame vpon an euil that might haue fallen, then any that did light vpõ vs: yet know you this, that there is no man ſo forgetfull, that will ſay they wanted before they came to the Groine, that whoſoeuer made not very large prouiſions for himſelfe & his company at the Groine, was very improuident, where was plentiful ſtore of wine, biefe and fiſh, & no man of place prohibited to lay in the ſame into their ſhips, wherewith ſome did ſo furniſh themſelues, as they did not onely in the iourney ſupplie the wants of ſuch as were leſſe prouident then they, but in their returne home made a round commoditie of the remainder thereof. And that at Caſcais there came in ſuch ſtore of prouiſions into the Fleet out of England, as no man that would haue vſed his diligence could haue wanted his due proportiõ thereof, as might appeare by the remainder that was returned to Plimmouth, and the plentifull ſale thereof made out of the marchants ſhips after their comming into the Thames.

But leaſt I ſhould ſeeme vnto you too ſtudious in confuting idle opinions, or anſwering friuolous queſtions, I wil addreſſe me to the true report of thoſe actiõs that haue paſſed therein: wherein I proteſt, I will neither hide any thing that hath hapned againſt vs, nor attribute more to any man or matter, then the iuſt occaſions thereof lead me vnto: wherein it ſhall appeare that there hath bene nothing left vndone by the Generals which was before our going out vndertaken by them, but that there hath bene much more done then was at the firſt required by Don Antonio, who ſhould haue reaped the fruit of our aduenture.

Our men land within a mile of the Groine the 20 of April

After 6 daies ſailing from the coaſt of England, & the 5 after we had the wind good being the 20 of April in the euening, we landed in a baie more then an Engliſh mile from the Groine, in our long boats and pinnaſſes without any impeachment: from whence we preſently marched toward the towne, within one halfe mile we were encountred by the enemie, who being charged by ours, retired into their gates. For that night our armie lay in the villages, houſes & mils next adioining, and very neere round about the towne, into the which the Galeon named S. Iohn (which was the ſecond of the laſt yeeres Fleet agaynſt England) one hulke, two ſmaller ſhips and two Gallies which were found in the road, did beate vpon vs and vpon our Companies as they paſſed too and fro that night and the next morning. Generall Norris hauing that morning before day viewed the Towne, found the ſame defended on the land ſide (for it ſtandeth vpon the necke of an Iland) with a wall vpon a dry ditch: whereupon he reſolued to trie in two places what might bee done againſt it by eſcalade, and in the meane time aduiſed for the landing of ſome artillery to beat vpon the ſhips and gallies, that they might not annoy vs: which being put in execution, vpon the planting of the firſt piece the gallies abandoned the road, and betooke them to Feroll, not farre from thence: and the Armada being beaten with the artillery and muſketers that were placed vpon the next ſhore, left her playing vpon vs. The reſt of the day was ſpent in preparing the companies, and other prouiſions ready for the ſurpriſe of the baſe towne, which was effected in this ſort.

There were appointed to be landed 1200 men vnder the conduct of Colonell Huntley, and Captaine Fenner the Viceadmirall, on that ſide next fronting vs by water in long boats and pinneſſes, wherein were placed many pieces of artillery to beat vpon the towne in their approch: at the corner of the wall which defended the other water ſide, were appointed Captaine Richard Wingfield Lieutenant Colonell to Generall Norris, and Captaine Sampſon Lieutenant Colonell to Generall Drake to enter at low water with 500 men if they found it paſſable, but if not, to betake them to the eſcalade, for they had alſo ladders with them: at the other corner of the wall which ioyned to that ſide that was attempted by water, were appointed Colonell Vmpton, and Colonell Bret with 300 men to enter by eſcalade. All the companies which ſhould enter by boat being imbarked before the low water, and hauing giuen the alarme, Captaine Wingfield and Captaine Sampſon betooke them to the eſcalde, for they had in commandement to charge all at one inſtant. The boats landed without any great difficulty: yet had they ſome men hurt in the landing. Colonell Bret and Colonell Vmpton entred their quarter without encounter, not finding any defence made againſt them: for Captaine Hinder being one of them that entred by water, at his firſt entry, with ſome of his owne company whom he truſted well, betooke himſelfe to that part of the wall, which he cleared before that they offered to enter, and ſo ſtill ſcoured the wall till hee came on the backe of them who mainteined the fight againſt Captaine Wingfield and Captaine Sampſon; who were twiſe beaten from their ladders, and found very good reſiſtance, till the enemies perceiuing ours entred in two places at their backs, were driuen to abandon the ſame. The reaſon why that place was longer defended then the other, is (as Don Iuan de Luna who commanded the ſame affirmeth) that the enemy that day had reſolued in councell how to make their defences, if they were approched: and therein concluded, that, if we attempted it by water, it was not able to be held, and therefore vpon the diſcouery of our boats, they of the high towne ſhould make a ſignall by fire from thence, that all the low towne might make their retreat thither: but they (whether troubled with the ſudden terror we brought vpon them, or forgetting their decree) omitted the fire, which made them guard that place til we were entred on euery ſide.

Then the towne being entred in three ſeueral places with an huge cry, the inhabitants betooke them to the high towne: which they might with leſſe perill doe, for that ours being ſtrangers there, knew not the way to cut them off. The reſt that were not put to the ſword in fury, fled to the rocks in the Iland, and others hid themſelues in chambers and ſellers, which were euery day found out in great numbers.

Amongſt thoſe Don Iuan de Luna, a man of very good commandement, hauing hidden himſelfe in a houſe, did the the next morning yeeld himſelfe.

There was alſo taken that night a commiſſary of victuals called Iuan de Vera, who confeſſed that there were in the Groine at our entry 500 ſouldiers being in ſeuen cōpanies which returned very weake (as appeareth by the ſmall numbers of them) from the iourney of England, namely:

Vnder Don Iuan de Luna.

- Don Diego Barran, a baſtard ſonne of the Marques of Santa Cruz; his company was that night in the Galeon.
- Don Antonio de Herera then at Madrid.
- Don Pedro de Manriques brother to the Earle of Paxides.
- Don Ieronimo de Mourray of the Order of S. Iuan, with ſome of the towne were in the fort.
- Don Gomez de Caramaſal then at Madrid.
- Captaine Manço Caucaſo de Socas.

Alſo there came in that day of our landing from Retanzas the companies of Don Iuan de Moſalle, and Don Pedro poure de Leon.

Alſo he ſaith that there was order giuen for baking of 300000 of biſcuit, ſome in Batanſas, ſome in Ribadeo, and the reſt there.

There were then in the towne 2000 pipes of wine, and 150 in the ſhips.

That there were lately come vnto the Marques of Seralba 300000 ducats.

That there were 1000 iarres of oile.

A great quantitie of beanes, peaze, wheat, and fiſh.

That there were 3000 quintals of beefe.

And that not twenty dayes before, there came in three barks laden with match & harquebuzes.

Some others alſo found fauour to be taken priſoners, but the reſt falling into the hands of the common ſouldiers, had their throats cut, to the number of 500, as I coniecture, firſt and laſt, after we had entred the towne; and in the entry thereof there was found euery celler full of wine, whereon our men, by inordinate drinking, both grew themſelues for the preſent ſenſeleſſe of the danger of the ſhot of the towne, which hurt many of them being drunke, & tooke the firſt ground of their ſickneſſe; for of ſuch was our firſt and chiefeſt mortality. There was alſo abundant ſtore of victuals, ſalt, and all kinde of prouiſion for ſhipping and the warre: which was confeſſed by the ſayd Commiſſary of victuals taken there, to be the beginning of a magaſin of all ſorts of prouiſion for a new voyage into England: whereby you may coniecture what the ſpoile thereof hath aduantaged vs, and preiudiced the king of Spaine.

The next morning about eight of the clocke the enemies abandoned their ſhips. And hauing ouercharged the artillery of ẏ gallion, left her on fire, which burnt in terrible ſort two dayes together, the fire and ouercharging of the pieces being ſo great, as of fifty that were in her, there were not aboue ſixteene taken out whole; the reſt with ouercharge of the powder being broken, and molten with heat of the fire, were taken out in broken pieces into diuers ſhippes. The ſame day was the cloiſter on the South ſide of the towne entred by vs, which ioyned very neere to the wall of the towne, out of the chambers and other places whereof we beat into the ſame with our muſquetiers.

The next day in the afternoone there came downe ſome 2000 men, gathered together out of the countrey, euen to the gates of the towne, as reſolutely (ledde by what ſpirit I know not) as though they would haue entred the ſame: but at the firſt defence made by ours that had the guard there, wherein were ſlaine about eighteene of theirs, they tooke them to their heeles in the ſame diſorder they made their approch, and with greater ſpeed then ours were able to follow: notwithſtanding we followed after them more then a mile. The ſecond day Colonell Huntley was ſent into the countrey with three or foure hundred men, who brought home very great ſtore of kine and ſheepe for our reliefe.

The third day in the night the Generall had in purpoſe to take a long munition-houſe builded vpon their wall, opening towards vs, which would haue giuen vs great aduantage againſt them; but they knowing the commodity thereof for vs, burnt it in the beginning of the euening; which put him to a new councell: for he had likewiſe brought ſome artillery to that ſide of the towne. During this time there happened a very great fire in the lower end of the towne; which, had it not bene by the care of the Generals heedily ſeene vnto, and the fury thereof preuented by pulling downe many houſes which were moſt in danger, as next vnto them, had burnt all the prouiſions we found there, to our woonderfull hinderance.

The fourth day were planted vnder the gard of the cloiſter two demy-canons, and two coluerings againſt the towne, defended or gabbioned with a croſſe wall, thorow the which our battery lay; the firſt and ſecond tire whereof ſhooke all the wall downe, ſo as all the ordinance lay open to the enemy, by reaſon whereof ſome of the Canoniers were ſhot and ſome ſlaine. The Lieutenant alſo of the ordinance, M. Spencer, was ſlaine faſt by Sir Edward Norris, Maſter thereof: whoſe valour being accompanied with an honourable care of defending that truſt committed vnto him, neuer left that place, till he receiued direction from the Generall his brother to ceaſe the battery, which he preſently did, leauing a guard vpon the ſame for that day; and in the night following made ſo good defence for the place of the battery, as after there were very few or none annoyed therein. That day Captaine Goodwin had in commandement from the Generall, that when the aſſault ſhould be giuen to the towne, he ſhould make a proffer of an eſcalade on the other ſide, where he held his guard: but he (miſtaking the ſignall that ſhould haue bene giuen) attempted the ſame long before the aſſault, and was ſhot in the mouth. The ſame day the Generall hauing planted his ordinance ready to batter, cauſed the towne to be ſummoned; in which ſummons they of the towne ſhot at our Drum: immediatly after that there was one hanged ouer the wall, and a parle deſired; wherein they gaue vs to vnderſtand, that the man hanged was he that ſhot at the Drum before: wherein alſo they intreated to haue faire warres, with promiſe of the ſame on their parts. The reſt of the parle was ſpent in talking of Don Iuan de Luna, and ſome other priſoners, and ſomewhat of the rendring of the towne, but not much, for they liſtened not greatly thereunto.

Generall Norris hauing by his ſkilfull view of the towne (which is almoſt all ſeated vpon a rocke) found one place thereof mineable, did preſently ſet workemen in hand withall; who after three dayes labour (and the ſeuenth after we were entred the baſe towne) had bedded their powder, but indeed not farre enough into the wall. Againſt which time the breach made by the canon being thought aſſaultable, and companies appointed as well to enter the ſame, as that which was expected ſhould be blowen vp by the mine: namely, to that of the canon, Captaine Richard Wingfield, and Captaine Philpot, who lead the Generals foot-companie, with whom alſo Captaine Yorke went, whoſe principall commandment was ouer the horſemen. And to that of the Myne, Captaine John Sampſon, and Captaine Anthonie Wingfield Lieutenant Colonell to the Maſter of the Ordinance, with certaine ſelected out of diuers Regiments. All theſe companies being in armes, and the aſſault intended to be giuen in al places at an inſtant, fire was put to the traine of the mine; but by reaſon the powder brake out backewards in a place where the caue was made too high, there could be nothing done in either place for that day. During this time Captaine Hinder was ſent with ſome choſen out of euery company into the countrey for prouiſions, whereof he brought in good ſtore, and returned without loſſe.

The next day Captaine Anthony Sampſon was ſent out with ſome 500 to fetch in prouiſions for the army, who was encountred by them of the countrey, but he put them to flight, and returned with good ſpoile. The ſame night the Miners were ſet to worke againe, who by the ſecond day after had wrought very well into the foundation of the wall. Againſt which time the companies aforeſayd being in readineſſe for both places (Generall Drake on the other ſide, with two or three hundred men in pinneſſes, making proffer to attempt a ſtrong fort vpon an Iland before the towne, where he left more then thirty men) fire was giuen to the traine of the mine, which blew vp halfe the tower vnder which the powder was planted. The aſſailants hauing in charge vpon the effecting of the mine preſently to giue the aſſault, performed it accordingly; but too ſoone: for hauing entred the top of the breach, the other halfe of the tower, which with the firſt force of the powder was onely ſhaken and made looſe, fell vpon our men: vnder which were buried about twenty or thirty, then being vnder that part of the tower. This ſo amazed our men that ſtood in the breach, not knowing from whence that terror came, as they forſooke their Commanders, and left them among the ruines of the mine. The two Enſignes of Generall Drake and Captaine Anthony Wingfield were ſhot in the breach, but their colours were reſcued: the Generals by Captaine Sampſons Lieutenant, and Captaine Wingfields by himſelfe. Amongſt them that the wall fell vpon, was Captaine Sydenham pitifully loſt; who hauing three or foure great ſtones vpon his lower parts, was held ſo faſt, as neither himſelfe could ſtirre, nor any reaſonable company recouer him. Notwithſtanding the next day being found to be aliue, there was ten or twelue loſt in attempting to relieue him.

The breach made by the canon was woonderfully well aſſaulted by them that had the charge thereof, who brought their men to the puſh of the pike at the top of the breach. And being ready to enter, the looſe earth (which was indeed but the rubbiſh of the outſide of the wall) with the weight of them that were thereon ſlipped outwards from vnder their feet. Whereby did appeare halfe the wall vnbattered. For let no man thinke that culuerin or demy-canon can ſufficiently batter a defenſible rampire: ant of thoſe pieces which we had; the better of the demy-canons at the ſecond ſhot brake in her carriages, ſo as the battery was of leſſe force, being but of three pieces.

In our retreat (which was from both breaches thorow a narrow lane) were many of our men hurt: and Captaine Dolphin, who ſerued very well that day, was hurt in the very breach. The failing of this attempt, in the opinion of all the beholders, and of ſuch as were of beſt iudgement, was the fall of the mine; which had doubtleſſe ſucceeded, the rather, becauſe the approch was vnlooked for by the enemy in that place, and therefore not ſo much defence made there as in the other; which made the Generall grow to a new reſolution: for finding that two dayes battery had ſo little beaten their wall, and that he had no better preparation to batter withall: he knew in his experience, there was no good to be done that way; which I thinke he firſt put in proofe, to trie if by that terror he could get the vpper towne, hauing no other way to put it in hazzard ſo ſpeedily, and which in my conſcience had obtained the towne, had not the defendants bene in as great perill of their liues by the diſpleaſure of their king in giuing it vp, as by the bullet or ſword in defending the ſame. For that day before the aſſault, in the view of our army, they burnt a cloiſter within the towne, and many other houſes adioyning to the caſtle, to make it more defenſible: whereby it appeared how little opinion themſelues had of holding it againſt vs, had not God (who would not haue vs ſuddenly made proud) layed that miſfortune vpon vs.

Hereby it may appeare, that the foure canons, and other pieces of battery promiſed to the iourney, and not performed, might haue made her Maieſty miſtreſſe of the Groine: for though the mine were infortunate, yet if the other breach had bene ſuch as the earth would haue held our men thereon, I doe not thinke but they had entred it thorowly at the firſt aſſault giuen: which had bene more then I haue heard of in our age. And being as it was, is no more then the Prince of Parma hath in winning of all his townes endured, who neuer entred any place at the firſt aſſault, nor aboue three by aſſault.

The next day the Generall hearing by a priſoner that was brought in, that the Conde de Andrada had aſſembled an armie of eight thouſand at Puente de Burgos, ſixe miles from thence in the way to Petance, which was but the beginning of an armie: in that there was a greater leauie readie to come thither vnder the Conde de Altemira, either in purpoſe to releeue the Groine, or to encampe themſelues neere the place of our embarking, there to hinder the ſame; for to that purpoſe had the marqueſſe of Seralba written to them both the firſt night of our landing, as the Commiſſarie taken then confeſſed, or at the leaſt to ſtop our further entrance into the Countrey, (for during this time, there were many incurſions made of three or foure hundred at a time, who burnt, ſpoyled, and brought in victuals plentifully) the Generall, I ſay, hearing of this armie, had in purpoſe the next day following to viſite them, agaynſt whom hee caried but nine Regiments: in the vangard were the Regiment of Sir Roger Williams, Sir Edward Norris, and Colonell Sidney: in the Battaile, that of the Generall, of Colonell Lane, and Colonel Medkerk: and in the Rereward, Sir Henrie Norris, Colonell Huntley, and Colonell Brets Regiments; leauing the other fiue Regiments with Generall Drake, for the guard of the Cloiſter and Artillerie. About ten of the clocke the next day, being the ſixt of May, halfe a mile from the campe, we diſcouering the enemy, Sir Edward Norris, who commanded the vangard in chiefe, appointed his Lieutenant Colonell Captaine Anthonie Wingfield to command the ſhot of the ſame, who diuided them into three troups; the one he appointed to Captaine Middleton to be conducted in a way on the left hand: another to Captaine Erington to take the way on the right hand, and the body of them (which were Muſquetiers) Captaine Wingfield tooke himſelfe, keeping the direct way of the march. But the way taken by Captaine Middleton met a little before with the way held by Captaine Wingfield, ſo as he giuing the firſt charge vpon the enemy, was in the inſtant ſeconded by Captaine Wingfield, who beat them from place to place (they hauing very good places of defence, and croſſe walles which they might haue held long) till they betooke them to their bridge, which is ouer a creeke comming out of the Sea, builded of ſtone vpon arches. On the foot of the further ſide whereof, lay the Campe of the enemy very ſtrongly entrenched; who with our ſhot beaten to the further end of the bridge, Sir Edward Norris marching in the point of the pikes, without ſtay paſſed to the bridge, accompanied with Colonell Sidney, Captaine Hinder, Captaine Fulford, and diuers others, who found the way cleare ouer the ſame, but through an incredible volley of ſhot; for that the ſhot of their army flanked vpon both ſides of the bridge, the further end whereof was barricaded with barrels: but they who ſhould haue guarded the ſame, ſeeing the proud approch we made, forſooke the defence of the barricade, where Sir Edward entered, and charging the firſt defendant with his pike, with very earneſtneſſe in ouerthruſting, fell, and was grieuouſly hurt at the ſword in the head, but was moſt honourably reſcued by the Generall his brother, accompanied with Colonell Sidney, and ſome other gentlemen: Captaine Hinder alſo hauing his Caſke ſhot off, had fiue wounds in the head and face at the ſword: and Captaine Fulford was ſhot into the left arme at the ſame encounter: yet were they ſo thorowly ſeconded by the Generall, who thruſt himſelfe ſo neere to giue encouragement to the attempt (which was of woonderfull difficulty) as their braueſt men that defended that place being ouerthrowen, their whole army fell preſently into rout, of whom our men had the chaſe three miles in foure ſundry wayes, which they betooke themſelues vnto. There was taken the Standerd with the Kings armes, and borne before the Generall. How many two thouſand men (for of ſo many conſiſted our vangard) might kill in purſuit of foure ſundry parties, ſo many you may imagine fell before vs that day. And to make the number more great, our men hauing giuen ouer the execution, and returning to their ſtandes, found many hidden in the Vineyards and hedges, which they diſpatched. Alſo Colonell Medkerk was ſent with his regiment three miles further to a Cloiſter, which he burnt and ſpoiled, wherein he found two hundred more, & put them to the ſword. There were ſlaine in this fight on our ſide onely Captaine Cooper, and one priuate ſouldier; Captaine Barton was alſo hurt vpon the bridge in the eye. But had you ſeene the ſtrong baricades they had made on either ſide of the bridge, and how ſtrongly they lay encamped thereabouts, you would haue thought it a rare reſolution of ours to giue ſo braue a charge vpon an army ſo ſtrongly lodged. After the furie of the execution, the Generall ſent the vangard one way, and the battell another, to burne and ſpoile; ſo as you might haue ſeene the countrey more then three miles compaſſe on fire. There was found very good ſtore of munition and victuals in the Campe, ſome plate and rich apparell, which the better ſort left behinde, they were ſo hotly purſued. Our ſailers alſo landed in an Iland next adioyning to our ſhips, where they burnt and ſpoiled all they found. Thus we returned to the Groine, bringing ſmall comfort to the enemy within the ſame, who ſhot many times at vs as we marched out; but not once in our comming backe againe.

The next day was ſpent in ſhipping our artillery landed for the battery, and of the reſt taken at the Groine, which had it bene ſuch as might haue giuen vs any aſſurance of a better battery, or had there bene no other purpoſe of our iourney but that, I thinke the Generall would haue ſpent ſome more time in the ſiege of the place.

The two laſt nights, there were that vndertooke to fire the higher towne in one place, where the houſes were builded vpon the wall by the water ſide; but they within ſuſpecting as much, made ſo good defence againſt vs, as they preuented the ſame. In our departure there was fire put into euery houſe of the low towne, inſomuch as I may iuſtly ſay, there was not one houſe left ſtanding in the baſe towne, or the cloiſter.

The next day, being the eight of May, we embarked our army without loſſe of a man, which (had we not beaten the enemy at Puente de Burgos) had bene impoſſible to haue done; for that without doubt they would haue attempted ſomething againſt vs in our imbarking: as appeared by the report of the Commiſſary aforeſayd, who confeſſed, that the firſt night of our landing the Marques of Seralba writ to the Conde de Altemira, the Conde de Andrada, and to Terneis de Santiſſo, to bring all the forces againſt vs that they could poſſible raiſe, thinking no way ſo good to aſſure that place, as to bring an army thither, wherewithall they might either beſiege vs in their baſe towne, if we ſhould get it, or to lie betweene vs and our place of imbarking, to fight with vs vpon the aduantage; for they had aboue 15000 ſouldiers vnder their commandements.

After we had put from thence, we had the winde ſo contrary, as we could not vnder nine dayes recouer the Burlings: in which paſſage on the thirteenth day the Earle of Eſſex, and with him M. Walter Deuereux his brother (a Gentleman of woonderfull great hope) Sir Roger Williams Colonell generall of the footmen, Sir Philip Butler, who hath alwayes bene moſt inward with him, and Sir Edward Wingfield, came into the fleet. The Earle hauing put himſelfe into the iourney againſt the opinion of the world, and as it ſeemed to the hazzard of his great fortune, though to the great aduancement of his reputation, (for as the honourable cariage of himſelfe towards all men doth make him highly eſteemed at home; ſo did his exceeding forwardneſſe in all ſeruices make him to be woondered at amongſt vs) who, I ſay, put off in the ſame winde from Falmouth, that we left Plimmouth in, where he lay, becauſe he would auoid the importunity of meſſengers that were dayly ſent for his returne, and ſome other cauſes more ſecret to himſelfe, not knowing (as it ſeemed) what place the Generals purpoſed to land in, had bene as farre as Cadiz in Andaluzia, and lay vp and downe about the South Cape, where he tooke ſome ſhips laden with corne, and brought them vnto the fleet. Alſo in his returne from thence to meet with our fleet, he fell with the Ilands of Bayon; and on that ſide of the riuer which Cannas ſtandeth vpon, he, with Sir Roger Williams, and thoſe Gentlemen that were with him went on ſhore, with ſome men out of the ſhip he was in, whom the enemy, that held guard vpon that coaſt, would not abide, but fled vp into the countrey.

The 16 day we landed at Peniche in Portugall, vnder the ſhot of the caſtle, and aboue the waſte in water, more then a mile from the towne, wherein many were in perill of drowning, by reaſon the winde was great, and the ſea went high, which ouerthrew one boat, wherein fiue and twenty of Captaine Dolphins men periſhed. The enemy being fiue companies of Spaniards vnder the commandement of the Conde de Fuentes, ſallied out of the towne againſt vs, and in our landing made their approch cloſe by the water ſide. But the Earle of Eſſex with Sir Roger Williams, and his brother, hauing landed ſufficient number to make two troups, left one to holde the way by the water ſide, and led the other ouer the Sandhils; which the enemy ſeeing, drew theirs likewiſe further into the land; not, as we coniectured, to encounter vs, but indeed to make their ſpeedy paſſage away: notwithſtanding, they did it in ſuch ſort, as being charged by ours which were ſent out by the Colonell generall vnder Captaine Iackſon, they ſtood the ſame euen to the puſh of the pike: in which charge and at the puſh, Captaine Robert Piew was ſlaine. The enemy being fled further then we had reaſon to follow them, all our companies were drawen to the towne; which being vnfortified in any place, we found vndefended by any man againſt vs. And therefore the Generall cauſed the caſtle to be ſummoned that night; which being abandoned by him that commanded it, a Portugall named Antonio de Aurid, being poſſeſſed thereof, deſired but to be aſſured that Don Antonio was landed, whereupon he would deliuer the ſame; which he honeſtly performed. There was taken out of the caſtle ſome hundred ſhot and pikes, which Don Emanuel furniſhed his Portugals withall, and twenty barrels of powder: ſo as poſſeſſing both the towne and the caſtle, we reſted there one day; wherein ſome Friers and other poore men came vnto their new king, promiſing in the name of their countrey next adioyning, that within two dayes he ſhould haue a good ſupply of horſe and foote for his aſſiſtance. That day we remained there, the Generals company of horſes were vnſhipped.

The Generals there fully reſolued, that the Armie ſhould march ouer land to Lisbone vnder the conduct of Generall Norris; and that Generall Drake ſhould meete him in the riuer thereof with the Fleete; that there ſhould be one Company of foote left in garde of the Caſtle, and ſixe in the ſhips: alſo that the ſicke & hurt ſhould remaine there with prouiſions for their cures. The Generall, to trie the euent of the matter by expedition, the next day beganne to march in this ſort: his owne Regiment, and the Regiment of Sir Roger Williams, Sir Henrie Norris, Colonell Lane, and Colonell Medkerk, in the vantgard: Generall Drake, Colonell Deuereux Sir Edward Norris, and Colonell Sidneis in the battell: Sir Iames Hales, Sir Edward Wingfield, Colonell Vmptons, Colonell Huntlies, and Colonell Brets in the arrereward. By that time our army was thus marſhalled, Generall Drake, although hee were to paſſe by Sea, yet to make knowen the honourable deſire he had of taking equall part of all fortunes with vs, ſtood vpon the aſcent of an hill, by the which our battalions muſt of neceſſity march, and with a pleaſing kindneſſe tooke his leaue ſeuerally of the Commanders of euery regiment, wiſhing vs all moſt happy ſucceſſe in our iourney ouer the land, with a conſtant promiſe that he would, if the iniury of the weather did not hinder him, meet vs in the riuer of Lisbon with our fleet. The want of cariages the firſt day was ſuch, as they were enforced to cary their munition vpon mens backs, which was the next day remedied.

In this march Captaine Criſpe the Prouoſt Marſhall cauſed one who (contrary to the Proclamation publiſhed at our arriuall in Portugall) had broken vp an houſe for pillage, to be hanged, with the cauſe of his death vpon his breaſt, in the place where the act was committed: which good example prouidently giuen in the beginning of our march, cauſed the commandement to be more reſpectiuly regarded all the iourney after, by them whom feare of puniſhment doeth onely holde within compaſſe. The campe lodged that night at Lorinha: the next day we had intelligence all the way, that the enemy had made head of horſe and foot againſt vs at Torres Vedras, which we thought they would haue held: but comming thither the ſecond day of our march, not two houres before our vantgard came in, they left the towne and the caſtle to the poſſeſſion of Don Antonio.

There began the greateſt want we had of victuals, eſpecially of bread, vpon a commandement giuen from the Generall, that no man ſhould ſpoile the countrey, or take any thing from any Portugall: which was more reſpectiuely obſerued, then I thinke would haue bene in our owne countrey, amongſt our owne friends and kindred: but the countrey (contrary to promiſe) wholly neglected the prouiſion of victuals for vs, whereby we were driuen for that time into a great ſcarſity. Which mooued the Colonell generall to call all the Colonels together, and with them to aduiſe for ſome better courſe for our people: who thought it beſt, firſt to aduertiſe the king what neceſſity we were in, before we ſhould of our ſelues alter the firſt inſtitution of abſtinence. The Colonell generall hauing acquainted the Generall herewith, with his very good allowance thereof, went to the king; who after ſome expoſtulations vſed, tooke the more carefull order for our men, and after that our army was more plentifully relieued.

The third day we lodged our army in three ſundry villages, the one battalion lying in Exarama de los Caualleros, another in Exarama do Obiſpo, and the third in San Sebaſtian.

Captaine Yorke who commanded the Generals horſe company, in this march made triall of the valour of the horſemen of the enemy; who by one of his Corporals charged with eight horſes thorow 40 of them, & himſelfe thorow more then 200 with ſome forty horſes: who would abide him no longer then they could make way from him.

The next day we marched to Lores, and had diuers intelligences that the enemy would tary vs there: for the Cardinall had made publique promiſe to them of Lisbon, that he would fight with vs in that place, which he might haue done aduantageouſly; for we had a bridge to paſſe ouer in the ſame place: but before our comming he diſlodged, notwithſtanding it appeared vnto vs that he had in purpoſe to encampe there; for we found the ground ſtaked out where their trenches ſhould haue bene made: and their horſemen with ſome few ſhot ſhewed themſelues vpon an hill at our comming into that village; whom Sir Henry Norris (whoſe regiment had the point of the vantgard) thought to draw vnto ſome fight, and therefore marched without ſound of drumme, and ſomewhat faſter then ordinary, thereby to get neere them before he were diſcouered, for he was ſhadowed from them by an hill that was betweene him and them: but before he could draw his companies any thing neere, they retired.

General Drakes regiment that night, for the commodity of good lodging, drew themſelues into a village, more then one Engliſh mile from thence, and neere the enemy: who not daring to do any thing againſt vs in foure dayes before, tooke that occaſion, and in the next morning fell downe vpon that regiment, crying, Viua el Rey Don Antonio, which was a generall ſalutation thorow all the Countrey as they came: whom our yoong Souldiers (though it were vpon their guard, and before the watch were diſcharged) began to entertaine kindly, but hauing got within their guard, they fell to cut their throats: but the alarme being taken inwards, the officers of the two next Companies, whoſe Captaines (Captaine Sydnam and Captaine Young) were lately dead at the Groine, brought downe their colours and pikes vpon them in ſo reſolute maner, as they preſently draue them to retire with loſſe: they killed of ours at their firſt entrance fourteene, and hurt ſixe or ſeuen.

The next day we lodged at Aluelana within three miles of Lisbon, where many of our ſouldiers drinking in two places of ſtanding waters by the way were poiſoned, and thereon preſently died. Some do thinke it came rather by eating of hony, which they found in the houſes plentifully. But whether it were by water or by hony, the poore men were poiſoned.

That night the Earle of Eſſex, and Sir Roger Williams went out about eleuen of the clocke with 1000 men to lie in ambuſcade neere the towne, and hauing layed the ſame very neere, ſent ſome to giue the alarme vnto the enemy: which was well performed by them that had the charge thereof, but the enemy refuſed to iſſue after them, ſo as the Earle returned aſſoone as it was light without doing any thing, though he had in purpoſe, and was ready to haue giuen an honourable charge on them.

The 25 of May in the euening we came to the ſuburbs of Lisbon: at the very entrance whereof Sir Roger Williams calling Captaine Anthony Wingfield with him, tooke thirty ſhot or thereabouts, and firſt ſcowred all the ſtreets till they came very neere the towne; where they found none but olde folks and beggers, crying, Viua el Rey Don Antonio, and the houſes ſhut vp: for they had caried much of their wealth into the towne, and had fired ſome houſes by the water ſide, full of corne and other prouiſions of victuals, leaſt we ſhould be benefited thereby, but yet left behinde them great riches in many houſes.

The foure regiments that had the vantgard that day, which were Colonell Deuereux, Sir Edward Norris, Colonell Sidneys, and Generall Drakes (whom I name as they marched) the Colonell generall cauſed to holde guard in the neereſt ſtreets of the Suburbs: the battell and the arreward ſtood in armes all the night in the field neere to Alcantara. Before morning Captaine Wingfield, by direction from the Colonell generall Sir Roger Williams, held guard with Sir Edward Norris his regiment in three places very neere the towne wall, and ſo held the ſame till the other regiments came in the morning. About midnight they within the towne burnt all their houſes that ſtood vpon their wall either within or without, leaſt we poſſeſſing them, might thereby greatly haue annoyed the towne.

The next morning Sir Roger Williams attempted (but not without peril) to take a Church called S. Antonio, which ioyned to the wall of the towne, and would haue bene a very euill neighbor to the towne: but the enemy hauing more eaſie entry into it then we, gained it before vs. The reſt of that morning was ſpent in quartering the battell and arreeward in the Suburbs called Bona Viſta, and in placing Muſquetiers in houſes, to front their ſhot vpon the wall, who from the ſame ſcowred the great ſtreets very dangerouſly.

By this time our men being thorowly weary with our ſixe dayes march, and the laſt nights watch, were deſirous of reſt; whereof the enemy being aduertiſed, about one or two of the clocke ſallied out of the towne, and made their approch in three ſeuerall ſtreets vpon vs, but chiefly in Colonell Brets quarter: who (as moſt of the army was) being at reſt, with as much ſpeed as he could, drew his men into armes, and made head againſt them ſo thorowly, as himſelfe was ſlaine in the place, Captaine Carſey ſhot thorow the thigh, of which hurt he died within foure dayes after, Captaine Carre ſlaine preſently, and Captaine Caue hurt (but not mortally) who were all of his regiment.

This reſiſtance made aſwell here, as in other quarters where Colonell Lane and Colonell Medkerk commanded, put them to a ſudden foule retreat; inſomuch, as the Earle of Eſſex had the chaſe of them euen to the gates of the high towne, wherein they left behinde them many of their beſt Commanders: their troupe of horſemen alſo came out, but being charged by Captaine Yorke, withdrew themſelues againe. Many of them alſo left the ſtreets, and betooke them to houſes which they found open: for the Sergeant maior Captaine Wilſon ſlew in one houſe with his owne hands three or foure, and cauſed them that were with him to kill many others. Their loſſe I can aſſure you did triple ours, aſwell in quality as in quantity.

During our march to this place, Generall Drake with the whole fleet was come into Caſcais, and poſſeſſed the towne without any reſiſtance: many of the inhabitants at their diſcouery of our nauy, fledde with their baggage into the mountaines, and left the towne for any man that would poſſeſſe it, till Generall Drake ſent vnto them by a Portugall Pilot which he had on boord, to offer them all peaceable kindneſſe, ſo farre foorth as they would accept of their King, and miniſter neceſſaries to the army he had brought; which offer they ioyfully imbraced, and preſently ſent two chiefe men of their towne, to ſignifie their loyalty to Don Antonio, and their honeſt affections to our people. Whereupon the Generall landed his companies not farre from the Cloiſter called San Domingo, but not without perill of the ſhot of the caſtle, which being guarded with 65 Spaniards, held ſtill againſt him.

As our fleet were caſting ancre when they came firſt into that road, there was a ſmall ſhip of Braſil that came from thence, which bare with them, and ſeemed by ſtriking her ſailes, as though ſhe would alſo haue ancred: but taking her fitteſt occaſion hoiſed againe, and would haue paſſed vp the riuer, but the Generall preſently diſcerning her purpoſe, ſent out a pinneſſe or two after her, which forced her in ſuch ſort, as ſhe ran herſelfe vpon the Rocks: all the men eſcaped out of her, and the lading (being many cheſts of ſugar) was made nothing woorth, by the ſalt water. In his going thither alſo, he tooke ſhips of the port of Portugall, which were ſent from thence, with fifteene other from Pedro Vermendes Xantes Sergeant maior of the ſame place, laden with men and victuals to Lisbon: the reſt that eſcaped put into Setuuel.

The next day it pleaſed Generall Norris to call all the Colonels together, and to aduiſe with them, whether it were more expedient to tary there to attend the forces of the Portugall horſe and foot, whereof the King had made promiſe, and to march ſome conuenient number to Caſcais to fetch our artillery and munition, which was all at our ſhips, ſauing that which for the neceſſity of the ſeruice was brought along with vs: whereunto, ſome caried away with the vaine hope of Don Antonio, that moſt part of the towne ſtood for vs, held it beſt to make our abode there, and and to ſend ſome 3000 for our artillery: promiſing to themſelues, that the enemy being wel beaten the day before, would make no more ſallies: ſome others (whoſe vnbeliefe was very ſtrong of any hope from the Portugall) perſwaded rather to march wholly away, then to be any longer carried away with the opinion of things, whereof there was ſo little appearance. The Generall not willing to leaue any occaſion of blotte to be layed vpon him for his ſpeedy going from thence, nor to loſe any more time by attending the hopes of Don Antonio; tolde them, that though the expedition of Portugall were not the onely purpoſe of their iourney, but an aduenture therein (which if it ſucceeded proſperouſly, might make them ſufficiently rich, and woonderfull honourable) and that they had done ſo much already in triall thereof, as what end ſoeuer happened, could nothing impaire their credits: yet in regard of the Kings laſt promiſe, that he ſhould haue that night 3000 men armed of his owne Countrey, he would not for that night diſlodge. And if they came, thereby to make him ſo ſtrong, that he might ſend the like number for his munition, he would reſolue to trie his fortune for the towne. But if they came not, he found it not conuenient to diuide his forces, by ſending any to Caſcais, and keeping a remainder behinde, ſithence he ſaw them the day before ſo boldly ſally vpon his whole army, and knew that they were ſtronger of Souldiours armed within the towne, then he was without: and that before our returne could be from Caſcais, they expected more ſupplies from all places, of Souldiours: for the Duke of Bragança, and Don Franciſco de Toledo were looked for with great reliefe. Whereupon his concluſion was, that if the 3000 promiſed came not that night, to march wholly away the next morning.

It may be here demanded, why a matter of ſo great moment ſhould be ſo ſlenderly regarded, as that the Generall ſhould march with ſuch an army againſt ſuch an enemy, before he knew either the fulneſſe of his owne ſtrength, or certaine meanes how he ſhould abide the place when he ſhould come to it. Wherein I pray you remember the Decrees made in the Councell at Peniche, and confirmed by publique proteſtation the firſt day of our march, that our nauy ſhould meet vs in the riuer of Lisbon, in the which was the ſtore of all our prouiſions, and ſo the meane of our tariance in that place, which came not, though we continued till we had no munition left to entertaine a very ſmall fight. We are alſo to conſider, that the King of Portugall (whether carried away with imagination by the aduertiſements he receiued from the Portugals, or willing by any promiſe to bring ſuch an army into his Countrey, thereby to put his fortune once more in triall) aſſured the Generall, that vpon his firſt landing, there would be a reuolt of his ſubiects: whereof there was ſome hope giuen at our firſt entry to Peniche, by the maner of the yeelding of that towne and fort, which made the Generall thinke it moſt conuenient ſpeedily to march to the principall place, thereby to giue courage to the reſt of the Countrey. The Friers alſo and the poore people that came vnto him promiſed, that within two dayes the gentlemen and others of the Countrey would come plentifully in: within which two dayes came many more Prieſts, and ſome very few gentlemen on horſebacke; but not til we came to Torres Vedras: where they that noted the courſe of things how they paſſed, might ſomewhat diſcouer the weakneſſe of that people. There they tooke two dayes more; and at the end thereof referred him till our comming to Lisbon, with aſſurance, that ſo ſoone as our army ſhould be ſeene there, all the inhabitants would be for the King and fall vpon the Spaniards.

After two nights tariance at Lisbon, the King, as you haue heard, promiſed a ſupply of 3000 foot, and ſome horſe: but all his appointments being expired, euen to the laſt of a night, all his horſe could not make a cornet of 40, nor his foot furniſh two enſignes fully, although they caried three or foure colours: and theſe were altogether ſuch as thought to inrich themſelues by the ruine of their neighbours: for they committed more diſorders in euery place where we came by ſpoile, then any of our owne.

The Generall, as you ſee, hauing done more then before his comming out of England was required by the King, and giuen credit to his many promiſes, euen to the breach of the laſt, he deſiſted not to perſwade him to ſtay yet nine dayes longer: in which time he might haue engaged himſelfe further, then with any honour he could come out of againe, by attempting a towne fortified, wherein were more men armed againſt vs, then we had to oppugne them withall, our artillery and munition being fifteene miles from vs, and our men then declining; for there was the firſt ſhew of any great ſickeneſſe amongſt them. Whereby it ſeemeth, that either his prelacy did much abuſe him in perſwading him to hopes, whereof after two or three dayes he ſaw no ſemblance: or he like a ſilly louer, who promiſeth himſelfe fauor by importuning a coy miſtreſſe, thought by our long being before his towne, that in the end taking pity on him, they would let him in.

What end the Friers had by following him with ſuch deuotion, I know not, but ſure I am, the Laity did reſpite their homage till they might ſee which way the victory would ſway; fearing to ſhew themſelues apparantly vnto him, leaſt the Spaniard ſhould after our departure (if we preuailed not) call them to account: yet ſent they vnder hand meſſages to him of obedience, thereby to ſaue their owne, if he became King; but indeed very well contented to ſee the Spaniards and vs try by blowes, who ſhould carry away the crowne. For they be of ſo baſe a mould, as they can very wel ſubiect themſelues to any gouernment, where they may liue free from blowes, and haue liberty to become rich, being loth to endure hazzard either of life or goods. For durſt they haue put on any minds thorowly to reuolt, they had three woonderfull good occaſions offered them during our being there.

Themſelues did in generall confeſſe, that there were not aboue 5000 Spaniards in that part of the Countrey, of which number the halfe were out of the towne till the laſt day of our march: during which time, how eaſily they might haue preuailed againſt the reſt, any man may conceiue. But vpon our approch they tooke them all in, and combined themſelues in generall to the Cardinall.

The next day after our comming thither, when the ſally was made vpon vs by their moſt reſolute Spaniards, how eaſily might they haue kept them out, or haue giuen vs the gate which was held for their retreat, if they had had any thought thereof?

And two dayes after our comming to Caſcais, when 6000 Spaniards and Portugals came againſt vs as farre as S. Iulians by land, as you ſhal preſently heare (all which time I thinke there were not many Spaniards left in the towne) they had a more fit occaſion to ſhew their deuotion to the King, then any could be offered by our tarying there. And they could not doubt, that if they had ſhut them out, but that we would haue fought with them vpon that aduantage, hauing fought them in Galicia vpon diſaduantage to beat them: and hauing taken ſo much paines to ſeeke them at their owne houſes, whereof we gaue ſufficient teſtimony in the ſame accident. But I thinke the feare of the Spaniard had taken ſo deepe impreſſion within them, as they durſt not attempt any thing againſt them vpon any hazzard.

For, what ciuill countrey hath euer ſuffered themſelues to be conquered by ſo few men as they were; to be depriued of their naturall King, and to be tyrannized ouer thus long, but they? And what countrey, liuing in ſlauery vnder a ſtranger whom they naturally hate, hauing an army in the field to fight for them and their liberty, would lie ſtill with the yoke vpon their necks, attending if any ſtrangers would vnburthen them, without ſo much as rouſing themſelues vnder it, but they? They will promiſe much in ſpeeches, for they be great talkers, whom the Generall had no reaſon to diſtruſt without triall, and therefore marched on into their countrey: but they performed little in action, whereof we could haue had no proofe without this thorow triall. Wherein he hath diſcouered their weakneſſe, and honorably performed more then could be in reaſon expected of him: which had he not done, would not theſe maligners, who ſeeke occaſions of ſlander, haue reported him to be ſuſpicious of a people, of whoſe infidelity he had no teſtimony: and to be fearefull without cauſe, if he had refuſed to giue credit to their promiſes without any aduenture: Let no friuolous queſtioniſt therefore further enquire why he marched ſo many dayes to Lisbon, and taried there ſo ſmall a while.

The next morning, ſeeing no performance of promiſe kept, he gaue order for our marching away; himſelfe, the Earle of Eſſex, and Sir Roger Williams remaining with the ſtand that was made in the high ſtreet, till the whole army was drawen into the field, and ſo marched out of the towne, appointing Captaine Richard Wingfield, and Captaine Anthony Wingfield in the arrereward of them with the ſhot; thinking that the enemy (as it was moſt likely) would haue iſſued out vpon our riſing; but they were otherwiſe aduiſed. When we were come into the field, euery battalion fell into that order which by courſe appertained vnto them, and ſo marched that night vnto Caſcais. Had we marched thorow his Countrey as enemies, our Souldiours had beene well ſupplied in all their wants: but had we made enemies of the Suburbs of Lisbon, we had beene the richeſt army that euer went out of England: for beſides the particular wealth of euery houſe, there were many Warehouſes by the water ſide full of all ſorts of rich marchandizes.

In our march that day the gallies which had ſomewhat, but not much, annoyed vs at Lisbon, (for that our way lay along the riuer) attended vs till we were paſt S. Iulians, beſtowing many ſhot amongſt vs, but did no harme at all, ſauing that they ſtrocke off a gentlemans leg, & killed the Sergeant maiors moile vnder him. The horſemen alſo followed vs afarre off, and cut off as many ſicke men as were not able to holde in march, nor we had cariage for.

After we had bene two dayes at Caſcais, we had intelligence by a Frier, that the enemy was marching ſtrongly towards vs, and then came as farre as S. Iulian: which newes was ſo welcome to the Earle of Eſſex and the Generals, as they offered euery one of them to giue the meſſenger an hundred crownes if they found them in the place; for the Generall deſiring nothing more then to fight with them in field roome, diſpatched that night a meſſenger with a trumpet, by whom he writ a cartell to the Generall of their army, wherein he gaue them the lie, in that it was by them reported that we diſlodged from Lisbon in diſorder and feare of them (which indeed was moſt falſe) for that it was fiue of the clocke in the morning before we fell into armes, and then went in ſuch ſort, as they had no courage to follow out vpon vs. Alſo he challenged him therein, to meet him the next morning with his whole army, if he durſt attend his comming, and there to try out the iuſtneſſe of their quarrel by battell: by whom alſo the Earle of Eſſex (who preferring the honor of the cauſe, which was his countreys, before his owne ſafety) ſent a particular cartel, offering himſelfe againſt any of theirs, if they had any of his quality; or if they would not admit of that; ſixe, eight, or tenne, or as many as they would appoint, ſhould meet ſo many of theirs in the head of our battell to trie their fortunes with them; and that they ſhould haue aſſurance of their returne and honourable intreaty.

The Generall accordingly made all his army ready by three of the clocke in the morning and marched euen to the place where they had encamped, but they were diſlodged in the night in great diſorder, being taken with a ſudden feare that we had bene come vpon them, as the Generall was the next day certainely informed: ſo as the Trumpet followed them to Lisbon, but could not get other anſwere to either of his letters, but threatening to be hanged, for daring to bring ſuch a meſſage. Howbeit the Generall had cauſed to be written vpon the backſide of their paſport, that if they did offer any violence vnto the meſſengers, he would hang the beſt priſoners he had of theirs: which made them to aduiſe better of the matter, and to returne them home; but without anſwere.

After our army came to Caſcais, and the caſtle ſummoned, the Caſtellan thereof granted, that vpon fiue or ſixe ſhot of the canon he would deliuer the ſame, but not without ſight thereof. The Generall thinking that his diſtreſſe within had bene ſuch for want of men or victuals as he could not holde it many dayes, becauſe he ſaw it otherwiſe defenſible enough, determined rather to make him yeeld to that neceſſity, then to bring the cannon, and therefore onely ſet a guard vpon the ſame, leaſt any ſupply of thoſe things which he wanted ſhould be brought vnto them. But he ſtill ſtanding vpon thoſe conditions, the Generall about two dayes before he determined to goe to Sea, brought three or foure pieces of battery againſt it: vpon the firſt tire whereof he ſurrendered, and compounded to go away with his baggage and armes: he had one canon, two culuerings, one baſiliſke, and three or foure other field pieces, threeſcore and fiue Souldiours, very good ſtore of munition, and victualles enough in the Caſtle; inſomuch as he might haue held the ſame longer then the Generall had in purpoſe to tarry there. One company of footmen was put into the guard thereof, till the artillery was taken out, and our army embarked; which without hauing that fort, we could not without great perill haue done. When we were ready to ſet ſaile (one halfe of the fort being by order from the Generall blowen vp by mine) the company was drawne away.

During the time we lay in the road, our fleet began the ſecond of Iune, and ſo continued ſixe dayes after to fetch in ſome hulks to the number of threeſcore, of Danſik, Stetin, Roſtock, Lubeck & Hamburgh, laden with Spaniſh goods, and as it ſeemed for the kings prouiſion, and going for Lisbon: their principall lading was Corne, Maſts, Cables, Copper, and Waxe: amongſt which were ſome of great burthen woonderful well builded for ſailing, which had no great lading in them, and therefore it was thought that they were brought for the kings prouiſion, to reinforce his decayed nauy: whereof there was the greater likelyhood, in that the owner of the greateſt of them which caried two miſnes, was knowen to be very inward with the Cardinall, who rather then he would be taken with his ſhips, committed himſelfe vnto his ſmall boat, wherein he recouered S. Sebaſtians: into the which our men, that before were in flieboats, were ſhipped, and the flieboats ſent home with an offer of corne, to the value of their hire. But the winde being good for them for Rochel, they choſe rather to loſe their corne then the winde, and ſo departed. The Generall alſo ſent his horſes with them, and from thence ſhipped them into England.

The third of Iune, Colonell Deuereux and Colonell Sidney, being both very ſicke, departed for England, who in the whole iourney had ſhewed themſelues very forward to all ſeruices, and in their departure very vnwilling to leaue vs: that day we imbarked all our army, but lay in the road vntill the eight thereof.

The ſixt day the Earle of Eſſex, vpon receit of letters from her Maieſty, by them that brought in the victuals, preſently departed towards England, with whom Sir Roger Williams was very deſirous to go, but found the Generals very vnwilling he ſhould do ſo, in that he bare the next place vnto them, and if they ſhould miſcarry, was to command the army. And the ſame day there came vnto vs two ſmall barks that brought tidings of ſome other ſhippes come out of England with victuals, which were paſſed vpwards to the Cape: for meeting with whom, the ſecond day after we ſet ſaile for that place, in purpoſe after our meeting with them to go with the Iles of Açores, the ſecond day, which was the ninth, we met with them comming backe againe towards vs, whoſe prouiſion little anſwered our expectation. Notwithſtanding we reſolued to continue our courſe for the Ilands.

About this time was the Marchant Royall, with three or foure other ſhips, ſent to Peniche, to fetch away the companies that were left there; but Captaine Barton hauing receiued letters from the Generals that were ſent ouerland, was departed before, not being able by reaſon of the enemies ſpeedy marching thither, either to bring away the artillery, or all his men, according to the direction thoſe letters gaue him; for he was no ſooner gone, then the enemy poſſeſſed the towne and caſtle, and ſhot at our ſhips as they came into the road.

At this time alſo was the Ambaſſador from the Emperor of Marocco, called Reys Hamet Bencaſamp, returned, and with him M. Ciprian, a Gentleman of good place and deſert, was ſent from Don Antonio, and Captaine Ouſley from the Generals to the Emperor.

The next morning the nine gallies which were ſent not fiue dayes before out of Andaluzia for the ſtrengthening of the riuer of Lisbon (which being ioyned with the other twelue that were there before, though we lay hard by them at S. Iulians, durſt neuer make any attempt againſt vs) vpon our departure from thence were returning home, and in the morning being a very dead calme, in the dawning thereof, fell in the winde of our fleet; in the vttermoſt part whereof they aſſailed one ſtragling barke of Plimmouth, of the which Captaine Cauerley being Captaine of the land company, with his Lieutenant, the Maſter, and ſome of the Mariners abandoned the ſhip, and betooke them to the ſhip-boats, whereof one, in which the Maſter and the Captaine were, was ouerrunne with the gallies, and they drowned. There were alſo two hulks ſtragled farre from the ſtrength of the other ſhips, which were ſo calmed, as neither they could get to vs, nor we to them, though all the great ſhippes towed with their boats to haue releeued them, but could not be recouered; in one of which was Captaine Minſhaw with his company, who fought with them to the laſt, yea after his ſhip was on fire, which whether it was fired by himſelfe or by them we could not wel diſcerne, but might eaſily iudge by his long and good fight, that the enemy could not but ſuſtaine much loſſe: who ſetting alſo vpon one other hulke wherein was but a Lieutenant, and he very ſicke, were by the valour of the Lieutenant put off, although they had firſt beaten her with their artillery, and attempted to boord her. And ſeeing alſo one other hulke a league off, a ſterne off vs, they made towards her, but finding that ſhe made ready to fight with them, they durſt not further attempt her: whereby it ſeemed, their loſſe being great in the other fights, they were loth to proceed any further.

From that day till the 19 of Iune, our direction from the Generall was, that if the wind were Northerly, we ſhould plie for the Açores; but if Southerly, for the Iles of Bayon. We lay with contrary windes about that place and the Rocke, till the Southerly winde preuailing carried vs to Bayon: part of our ſhips to the number of 25, in a great winde which was two dayes before, hauing loſt the Admirals and fleet, according to their direction, fell in the morning of that day with Bayon, among whom was Sir Henry Norris in the Ayde; who had in purpoſe (if the Admirals had not come in) with ſome 500 men out of them all to haue landed, and attempted the taking of Vigo. The reſt of the fleet held with Generall Drake, who though he were two dayes before put vpon thoſe Ilands, caſt off againe to ſea for the Açores: but remembring how vnprouided he was for that iourney, and ſeeing that he had loſt company of his great ſhips, returned for Bayon, and came in there that night in the euening, where he paſſed vp the riuer more then a mile aboue Vigo.

The next morning we landed as many as were able to fight, which were not in the whole aboue 2000 men, (for in the 17 dayes we continued on boord we had caſt many of our men ouerboord) with which number the Colonell generall marched to the towne of Vigo, neere the which when he approched, he ſent Captaine Anthony Wingfield with a troupe of ſhot to enter one ſide of the ſame, who found vpon euery ſtreets end a ſtrong barricade, but altogether abandoned; for hauing entred the towne, he found but one man therein, but might ſee them making way before him to Bayon. On the other ſide of the towne entred Generall Drake with Captaine Richard Wingfield, whoſe approch on that ſide (I thinke) made them leaue the places they had ſo artificially made for defence: there were alſo certaine ſhippes ſent with the Vice-admirall to lie cloſe before the towne, to beat vpon the ſame with their artillery.

Vigo taken.

In the afternoone were ſent 300 vnder the conduct of Captaine Petuin and Captaine Henry Poure, to burne another village betwixt that and Bayon, called Borſis, and as much of the country as the day would giue them leaue to do; which was a very pleaſant rich valley: but they burnt it all, houſes and corne, as did others on the other ſide of the towne, both that and the next day, ſo as the countrey was ſpoiled ſeuen or eight miles in length. There was found great ſtore of wine in the towne, but not any thing els: for the other dayes warning of the ſhippes that came firſt in, gaue them a reſpit to cary all away.

The next morning by breake of the day the Colonell generall (who in the abſence of the Generals that were on boord their ſhips, commanded that night on ſhore) cauſed all our companies to be drawen out of the towne, and ſent in two troups to put fire in euery houſe of the ſame: which done, we imbarked againe.

Vigo burned.

This day there were certaine Mariners which (without any direction) put themſelues on ſhore, on the contrary ſide of the riuer from vs for pillage; who were beaten by the enemy from their boats, and puniſhed by the Generals for their offer, in going without allowance.

The reaſons why we attempted nothing againſt Bayon were before ſhewed to be want of artillery, and may now be alledged to be the ſmall number of our men: who ſhould haue gone againſt ſo ſtrong a place, manned with very good ſouldiers, as was ſhewed by Iuan de Vera taken at the Groine, who confeſſed that there were fiue hundred olde Souldiers in garriſon there of Flanders, and the Tercios of Naples, lately alſo returned out of the iourney of England,

Under the leading of

- Capitan Puebla.
- Chriſtofero Vaſques de Viralta a ſouldier of Flanders.
- Don Pedro Camaſcho, del tercio de Napoles.
- Don Franciſco de Ceſpedes.
- Cap. Iuan de Solo, del tercio de Naples.
- Don Diego de Caſſaua.
- Cap. Sauban.

Alſo he ſayth there be 18 pieces of braſſe, and foure of yron, lately layed vpon the walles of the towne, beſides them that were there before.

The ſame day the Generals ſeeing what weake eſtate our army was drawen into by ſickneſſe, determined to man and victuall twenty of the beſt ſhips for the Ilands of Açores with Generall Drake, to ſee if he could meet with the Indian fleet, and Generall Norris to returne home with the reſt: And for the ſhifting of men and victualles accordingly, purpoſed the next morning to fall downe to the Ilands of Bayon againe, and to remaine there that day. But Generall Drake, according to their apointment, being vnder ſaile neuer ſtrooke at the Ilands, but put ſtraight to ſea; whom all the fleet followed ſauing three and thirty, which being in the riuer further then he, and at the entrance out of the ſame, finding the winde and tide too hard againſt them, were inforced to caſt ancre there for that night; amongſt whom, by good fortune, was the Foreſight, and in her ſir Edward Norris. And the night folowing, Generall Norris being driuen from the reſt of the Fleet by a great ſtorme, (for all that day was the greateſt ſtorme we had all the time we were out) came againe into the Ilands, but not without great perill, he being forced to truſt to a Spaniſh Fiſher-man (who was taken two dayes before at ſea) to bring him in.

The next morning he called a council of as many as he found there, holding the purpoſe he had concluded with ſir Francis Drake the day before, and directed all their courſes for England, tarying there all that day to water and helpe ſuch with victuall, as were left in wonderfull diſtreſſe by hauing the victuals that came laſt, caried away the day before to ſea.

The next day he ſet ſaile, and the 10 day after, which was the 2 of Iuly came into Plimmouth, where he found ſir Francis Drake and all the Queens ſhips, with many of the others, but not all: for the Fleet was diſperſed into other harbors, ſome led by a deſire of returning frõ whence they came, and ſome being poſſeſſed of the hulks, ſought other Ports from their Generals eie, where they might make their priuate commoditie of them, as they haue done to their great aduantage.

Their returne to Plimmouth.

Preſently vpon their arriuall there, the Generals diſſolued all the armie ſauing 8 companies which are yet held together, giuing euery ſouldier fiue ſhillings in money, and the armes hee bare to make money of, which was more then could by any means be due vnto them: for they were not in ſeruice three moneths, in which time they had their victuals, which no man will value at leſſe then halfe their pay, for ſuch is the allowance in her maieſties ſhips to her mariners, ſo as there remained but 10 ſhillings a moneth more to be paid, for which there was not any priuate man but had apparel and furniture to his owne vſe, ſo as euery common ſouldier diſcharged, receiued more in money, victuals, apparell and furniture, then his pay did amount vnto.

Notwithſtanding, there be euen in the ſame place where thoſe things haue paſſed, that either do not or will not conceiue the ſouldiers eſtate, by comparing their pouertie and the ſhortneſſe of the time together, but lay ſome iniuries vpõ the Generals and the action. Where, and by the way, but eſpecially here in London, I find there haue bene ſome falſe prophets gone before vs, telling ſtrange tales. For as our countrey doeth bring foorth many gallant men, who deſirous of honour doe put themſelues into the actions thereof, ſo doeth it many more dull ſpirited, who though their thoughts reach not ſo high as others, yet doe they liſten how other mens acts doe paſſe, and either beleeuing what any man will report vnto them, are willingly caried away into errors, or tied to ſome greater mans faith, become ſecretaries againſt a noted trueth. The one ſort of theſe doe take their opinions from the high way ſide, or at the furtheſt goe no further thẽ Pauls to enquire what hath bene done in this voiage: where, if they meet with any, whoſe capacitie before their going out could not make them liue, nor their valour maintaine their reputation, and who went onely for ſpoile, complaining on the hardneſſe and miſery thereof, they thinke they are bound to giue credite to theſe honeſt men who were parties therein, and in very charitie become of their opinions. The others to make good the faction they are entred into, if they ſee any of thoſe maleconcents (as euery iourney yeeldeth ſome) doe runne vnto them like tempting ſpirits to confirme them in their humour, with aſſurance that they foreſaw before our going out what would become thereof.

Be ye not therefore too credulous in beleeuing euery report: for you ſee there haue bene many more beholders of theſe things that haue paſſed, then actors in the ſame; who by their experience, not hauing the knowledge of the ordinarie wants of the warre, haue thought, that to lie hard, not to haue their meat well dreſſed, to drinke ſometimes water, to watch much, or to ſee men die and be ſlaine, was a miſerable thing; and not hauing ſo giuen their mindes to the ſeruice, as they are any thing inſtructed thereby, doe for want of better matter diſcourſe ordinarily of theſe things: whereas the iourney (if they had with that iudgement ſeene into it, which their places required) hath giuen them far more honorable purpoſe and argument of diſcourſe.

Theſe mens diſcontentments and miſlikings before our comming home haue made mee labour thus much to inſtruct you in the certaintie of euery thing, becauſe I would not willingly haue you miſcaried in the iudgements of them, wherein you ſhall giue me leaue ſomewhat to dilate vpon a queſtion, which I onely touched in the beginning of my letter, namely, whether it bee more expedient for our eſtate to maintain an offenſiue war againſt the king of Spaine in the Low countries, or as in this iourney, to offend him in his neerer territories, ſeeing the grounds of arguing thereof are taken from the experience which the actions of this iourney haue giuen vs.

A worthy queſtion dilated.

There is no good ſubiect that wil make queſtiõ, whether it be behoofeful for vs to hold friendſhip with theſe neighbours of ours or no, aſwell in reſpect of the infinite proportion of their ſhipping, which muſt ſtand either with vs or againſt vs; as of the commoditie of their harbors, eſpecially that of Vliſhing, by the fauour whereof our Nauie may continually keepe the Narrow ſeas, and which would harbour a greater Fleete againſt vs, then the Spaniard ſhall neede to annoy vs withall, who being now diſtreſſed by our common enemie, I thinke it moſt expedient for our ſafetie to defend them, and if it may be, to giue them a reentrie into that they haue of late yeeres loſt vnto him. The one without doubt her maieſtie may do without difficultie, and in ſo honorable ſort as he ſhal neuer be able to diſpoſſeſſe her or them of any the townes they now hold. But if any man thinke that the Spaniard may be expelled from thence more ſpeedily or conueniently by keeping an armie there, then by ſending one againſt him into his owne countrey: let him foreſee of how many men and continuall ſupplies that armie muſt conſiſt, and what intollerable expenſes it requireth. And let him thinke by the example of the duke of Alua, when the prince of Orenge had his great armie agaynſt him; and of Don Iuan, when the States had their mightie aſſembly againſt him, how this wiſe enemie, with whom we are to deale, may but by prolonging to fight with vs, leaue vs occaſions enough for our armie within fewe moneths to mutine and breake; or by keeping him in his townes leaue vs a ſpoyled field: where though our prouiſion may bee ſuch of our owne as we ſtarue not, yet is our weakneſſe in any ſtrange countrey ſuch, as with ſicknes and miſerie we ſhall be diſſolued. And let him not forget what a continual burthen we hereby lay vpon vs, in that to repoſſeſſe thoſe countreys which haue bene lately loſt, will be a warre of longer continuance then we ſhall be able to endure.

In the very action whereof, what ſhould hinder the king of Spaine to bring his forces home vnto vs? For it is certaine he hath long ſince ſet downe in councell, that there is no way for him wholy to recouer thoſe Low countries, but by bringing the warre vpon England it ſelfe, which hath alwayes aſſiſted them againſt him: and that being determined, and whereunto he hath bene vehemently vrged by the laſt yeeres loſſe he ſuſtained vpon our coaſts, and the great diſhonor this iourney hath laid vpon him; no doubt if we ſhall giue him reſpite to doe it, but he will mightily aduance his purpoſe, for he is richly able thereunto, and wonderfull deſirous of reuenge.

To encounter wherewith, I wiſh euen in true and honeſt zeale to my Countrey, that we were all perſwaded that there is no ſuch aſſured meanes for the ſafetie of our eſtate, as to buſy him with a well furniſhed armie in Spaine, which hath ſo many goodly Bayes open, as we may land without impeachment as many men as ſhall be needfull for ſuch an inuaſion. And hauing an armie of 20000 roially furniſhed there, we ſhall not need to take much care for their payment: for ſhal not Lisbon be thought able to make ſo few men rich, when the Suburbs thereof were found ſo abounding in riches, as had we made enemie of them, they had largely enriched vs all? Which with what ſmall loſſe it may be won, is not here to ſhew; but why it was not won by vs, I haue herein ſhewed you. Or is not the ſpoyle of Siuil ſufficient to pay more then ſhall bee needfull to bee ſent againſt it, whoſe defence (as that of Lisbone) is onely force of men, of whom how many may for the preſent be raiſed, is not to be eſteemed, becauſe wee haue diſcouered what kind of men they be, euen ſuch as will neuer abide ours in field, nor dare withſtand any reſolute attempt of ours agaynſt them: for during the time we were in many places of their countrey, they cannot ſay that euer they made 20 of our men turne their faces from them. And be there not many other places of leſſe difficultie to ſpoyle, able to ſatiſfie our forces?

But admit, that if vpon this alarme that we haue giuen him, he tendering his naturall and neereſt ſoile before his further remmooued off gouernments, do draw his forces of old ſouldiers out of the Low countreys for his owne defence, is not the victory then won by drawing and holding them from thence, for the which we ſhould haue kept an armie there at a charge by many partes greater then this, and not ſtirred them?

Admit further our armie be impeached from landing there, yet by keeping the Seas, and poſſeſſing his principall roades, are we not in poſſibilitie to meet with his Indian marchants, and very like to preuent him of his prouiſions comming out of the Eaſt countreys; without the which, neither the ſubiect of Lisbon is long able to liue, nor the king able to maintaine his Nauie? For though the countrey of Portugall doe ſome yeeres find themſelues corne, yet are they neuer able to victuall the leaſt part of that Citie. And albeit the king of Spaine be the richeſt prince in Chriſtendome, yet can he neither draw cables, hewe maſtes, nor make powder out of his mettals, but is to be ſupplied of them all from thence. Of whom (ſome will hold opinion) it is no reaſon to make prize, becauſe they bee not our enemies: and that our diſagreeance with them will impeach the trade of our marchants, and ſo impoueriſh our countrey. Of whoſe mind I can hardly be drawen to be: For if my enemie fighting with me doe breake his ſword, ſo as I thereby haue the aduantage againſt him; what ſhall I thinke of him that putteth a new ſword into his hand to kill me withall? And may it not bee thought more fitting for vs in theſe times to looſe our trades of Cloth, then by ſuffering theſe miſchiefes, to put in hazard whether we ſhall haue a countrey left to make cloth in or no? And yet though neither Hamburgh, Embden, nor Stode doe receiue our cloth, the neceſſary vſe thereof in all places is ſuch, as they will find meanes to take it from vs with our ſufficient commoditie.

And admit (which were impoſſible) that we damnifie him neither at ſea nor land (for vnleſſe it be with a much more mightie armie then ours, he ſhall neuer be able to withſtand vs) yet ſhall we by holding him at his home, free our ſelues from the warre at our owne wals: the benefit whereof let them conſider that beſt can iudge, and haue obſerued the difference of inuading, and being inuaded; the one giuing courage to the ſouldier, in that it doeth ſet before him commoditie and reputation; the other a fearefull terror to the countrey-man, who if by chance he play the man, yet is he neuer the richer: and who knowing many holes to hide himſelfe in, will trie them all before he put his life in perill by fighting: whereas the Inuader caſteth vp his account before hee goeth out, and being abroad muſt fight to make himſelfe way, as not knowing what place or ſtrength to truſt vnto. I will not ſay what I obſerued in our countrey-men when the enemy offred to aſſaile vs here: but I wiſh that all England knew what terror we gaue to the ſame people that frighted vs, by viſiting them at their owne houſes.

Were not Alexanders fortunes great againſt the mightie Darius, onely in that his Macedonians thirſted after the wealth of Perſia, and were bound to fight it out to the laſt man, becauſe the laſt man knew no ſafer way to ſaue himſelfe then by fighting? Whereas the Perſians either truſting to continue ſtil maſters of their wealth by yeelding to the Inuader, began to practiſe againſt their owne king: or hauing more inward hopes, did hide themſelues euen to the laſt, to ſee what courſe the Conquerour would take in his Conqueſt. And did not the aduiſe of Scipio, though mightily impugned at the firſt, prooue very ſound and honourable to his countrey? Who ſeeing the Romans wonderfully amazed at the neereneſſe of their enemies Forces, and the loſſes they daily ſuſtained by them, gaue counſell rather by way of diuerſion to cary an army into Afrike, and there to aſſaile, then by a defenſiue warre at home to remaine ſubiect to the common ſpoiles of an aſſailing enemie. Which being put in execution drew the enemie from the gates of Rome, and Scipio returned home with triumph: albeit his beginnings at the firſt were not ſo fortunate againſt them, as ours haue bene in this ſmal time againſt the Spaniard. The good ſucceſſe whereof may encourage vs to take armes reſolutely againſt him. And I beſeech God it may ſtirre vp all men that are particularly intereſted therein, to bethinke themſelues how ſmall a matter will aſſure them of their ſafetie, by holding the Spaniard at a Bate, ſo farre of: whereas, if we giue him leaue quietly to hatch and bring foorth his preparations, it will be with danger to vs all.

He taketh not armes againſt vs by any pretenſe of title to the crowne of this realme, nor led altogether with an ambicious deſire to command our countrey, but with hatred towards our whole Nation and religion. Her maieſties Scepter is already giuen by Bull to another, the honours of our Nobilitie are beſtowed for rewards vpon his attendants, our Clergie, our Gentlemen, our Lawyers, yea all men of what condition ſoeuer are offered for ſpoyle vnto the common ſouldier. Let euery man therefore, in defence of the libertie and plentie he hath of long enioyed, offer a voluntarie contribution of the ſmalleſt part of their ſtore for the aſſurance of the reſt. It were not much for euery Iuſtice of peace, who by his blew coat protecteth the propereſt and moſt ſeruiceable men at euery muſter from the warres, to contribute the charge that one of theſe idle men doe put him to for one yeere: nor for the Lawyer, who riſeth by the diſſenſions of his neighbours, to take but one yeeres gifts (which they call Fees) out of his coffers. What would it hinder euery officer of the Exchequer, and other of her Maieſties courts, who without checke doe ſuddenly grow to great wealth, honeſtly to bring foorth the myſticall commoditie of one yeeres profits? Or the Clergie, who looke preciſely for the Tenths of euery mans increaſe, ſimply to bring forth the Tenth of one yeeres gathering, and in thankfulneſſe to her Maieſtie, (who hath continued for all our ſafeties a moſt chargeable warre both at land & ſea) beſtow the ſame for her honor & their owne aſſurance, vpon an army which may make this bloody enemy ſo to know himſelfe and her Maieſties power, as he ſhall bethinke him what it is to mooue a ſtirring people? Who, though they haue receiued ſome ſmall checke by the ſickneſſe of this laſt iourney, yet doubt I not, but if it were made knowen, that the like voyage were to bee ſupported by a generalitie, (that might and would beare the charge of a more ample prouiſion) but there would of all ſortes moſt willingly put themſelues into the ſame: ſome caried with an honorable deſire to be in action, and ſome in loue of ſuch would affectionately folow their fortunes; ſome in thirſting to reuenge the death and hurts of their brethren, kinred, and friends: and ſome in hope of the plentifull ſpoyles to be found in thoſe countreys, hauing bene there already and returned poore, would deſire to goe againe, with an expectation to make amends for the laſt: and all, in hatred of that cowardly proud Nation, and in contemplation of the true honour of our owne, would with courage take armes to hazard their liues agaynſt them, whom euery good Engliſhman is in nature bound to hate as an implacable enemie to England, thirſting after our blood, and labouring to ruine our land, with hope to bring vs vnder the yoke of perpetuall ſlauerie.

Agaynſt

Againſt them is true honour to be gotten, for that we ſhall no ſooner ſet foot in their land, but that euery ſtep we tread will yeeld vs new occaſion of action, which I wiſh the gallantrie of our Countrey rather to regard then to folow thoſe ſoft vnprofitable pleaſures wherein they now conſume their time and patrimonie. And in two or three townes of Spaine is the welth of all Europe gathered together, which are the Magaſins of the fruits and profits of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, whereunto I wiſh our yong able men, who, (againſt the libertie they are borne vnto) terme themſelues Seruing men, rather to bend their deſires and affections, then to attend their double liuerie and 40 ſhillings by the yeere-wages, and the reuerſion of the old Copy-hold, for carying a diſh to their maſters table. But let me here reprehend my ſelfe and craue pardō for entring into a matter of ſuch ſtate and conſequence, the care whereof is already laid vpon a moſt graue and honorable counſell, who wil in their wiſdoms foreſee the dangers that may be threatned agaynſt vs. And why do I labour to diſquiet the ſecuritie of theſe happy gentlemen, & the trade of thoſe honeſt ſeruing men, by perſwading them to the warres when I ſee the profeſſion thereof ſo ſlenderly eſteemed? For though all our hope of peace be fruſtrate, and our quarels determinable by the ſword: though our enemy hath by his owne forces and his penſionaries induſtry, cōfined the vnited Prouinces into a narow roume, & almoſt diſunited the ſame: if he be now in a good way to harbor himſelfe in the principall hauens of France, from whence he may front vs at pleaſure: yea though we are to hope for nothing but a bloodie warre, nor can truſt to any helpe but Armes; yet how far the common ſort are from reuerencing or regarding any perſons of conduction, was too apparant in the returne of this our iourney, wherein the baſe and common ſouldier hath bene tollerated to ſpeake againſt the Captaine, and the ſouldier and Captaine againſt the Generals, and wherein mechanicall and men of baſe condicion doe dare to cenſure the doings of them, of whoſe acts they be not worthy to talke.

The ancient graue degree of the Prelacie is vpheld, though Martin raile neuer ſo much, & the Lawyer is after the old maner worſhipped, whoſoeuer inueigh againſt him. But the ancient Engliſh honour is taken from our men of war, & their profeſſion in diſgrace, though neuer ſo neceſſary. Either we commit idolatry to Neptune, and will put him alone ſtil to fight for vs as he did the laſt yeere, or we be inchanted with ſome diueliſh opinions, that trauell nothing more then to diminiſh the reputation of them, vpon whoſe ſhoulders the burden of our defence againſt the enemie muſt lie when occaſion ſhall be offred. For whenſoeuer he ſhall ſet foote vpon our land, it is neither the preaching of the Clergie that can turne him out againe, nor the pleading of any Lawyers that can remooue him out of poſſeſſion: no, then they will honour them whom now they thinke not on, and then muſt thoſe men ſtand betweene them and their perils, who are now thought vnworthie of any eſtimation.

May the burning of one towne (which coſt the king then being ſix times as much as this hath done her maieſtie, wherein were loſt ſeuen times as many men as in any one ſeruice of this iourney, and taried not the tenth part of our time in the enemies Countrey) be by our elders ſo highly reputed and ſounded out by the hiſtorie of the Realme; and can our voyage be ſo meanly eſteemed, wherein we burned both townes and Countreys without the loſſe of fortie men in any ſuch attempt?

Did our kings in former times reward ſome with the greateſt titles of honour for ouerthrowing a number of poore Scots, who, after one battell loſt, were neuer able to reenforce themſelues againſt him; and ſhall they in this time who haue ouerthrowen our mightie enemie in battell, and taken his roiall Standerd in the field, beſieged the marqueſſe of Saralba 15 dayes together, that ſhould haue bene the Generall of the Armie againſt vs, brought away ſo much of his artillarie (as I haue before declared) be vnworthily eſteemed of?

Is it poſſible that ſome in ſome times ſhould receiue their reward for looking vpon an enemie, and ours in this time not receiue ſo much as thanks for hauing beaten an enemie at handie ſtrokes?

But it is true that no man ſhall bee a prophet in his Countrey: and for my owne part I will lay aſide my Armes till that profeſſion ſhal haue more reputation, and liue with my friends in the countrey, attending either ſome more fortunate time to vſe them, or ſome other good occaſion to make me forget them.

But what? ſhall the blind opinion of this monſter, a beaſt of many heads, (for ſo hath the generalitie of old bene termed) cauſe me to neglect the profeſſion from whence I chalenge ſome reputation, or diminiſh my loue to my countrey, which hitherto hath nouriſhed me? No, it was for her ſake I firſt tooke armes, and for her ſake I will handle them ſo long as I ſhall bee able to vſe them: not regarding how ſome men in priuate conuenticles do meaſure mens eſtimations by their owne humors; nor how euery popular perſon doeth giue ſentence on euery mans actions by the worſt accidents. But attending the gracious aſpect of our dread Soueraigne, who neuer yet left vertue vnrewarded: and depending vpon the iuſtice of her moſt rare and graue aduiſors, who by their heedie looking into euery mans worth, do giue encouragement to the vertuous to exceed others in vertue: and aſſuring you that there ſhall neuer any thing happen more pleaſing vnto me, then that I may once againe bee a partie in ſome honorable iourney againſt the Spaniard in his owne countrey, I will ceaſe my complaint: and with them that deſerue beyond me, patiently endure the vnaduiſed cenſure of our malicious reprouers.

If I haue ſeemed in the beginning hereof troubleſome vnto you, in the diſcouering of thoſe impediments, and anſwering the ſlanders which by the vulgar malicious and mutinous ſort are laid as blemiſhes vpon the iourney, and reproches vpon the Generals (hauing indeed proceeded from other heads:) let the neceſſitie of conſeruing the reputation of the action in generall, & the honors of our Generals in particular, bee my ſufficient excuſe: the one hauing by the vertue of the other made our country more dreaded & renowmed, then any act that euer England vndertooke before. Or if you haue thought my perſwaſible diſcourſe long in the latter end; let the affectionate deſire of my countreys good be therein anſwerable for me. And ſuch as it is I pray you accept it, as only recommended to your ſelfe, and not to be deliuered to the publique view of the world, leaſt any man take offence thereat; which ſome particular men may ſeeme iuſtly to do, in that hauing deſerued very well, I ſhould not herein giue them their due commendations: whereas my purpoſe in this priuate diſcourſe hath bene onely to gratifie you with a touch of thoſe principall matters that haue paſſed, wherein I haue onely taken notes of thoſe men who either commaunded euery ſeruice, or were of chiefeſt marke: if therefore you ſhall impart the ſame to one, and he to another, and ſo it paſſe through my hands, I know not what conſtructions would be made thereof to my preiudice; for that the Hares eares may happily be taken for hornes. Howbeit I hold it very neceſſary (I muſt confeſſe) that there ſhould be ſome true manifeſtation made of theſe things: but be it far from me to be the author thereof, as very vnfit to deliuer my cenſure of any matter in publique, & moſt vnwilling to haue my weakneſſe diſcouered in priuate. And ſo I doe leaue you to the happy ſucceſſe of your accuſtomed good exerciſes, earneſtly wiſhing that there may be ſome better acceptance made of the fruits of your ſtudies, then there hath bene of our hazards in the wars. The voiage of the right honorable George Erle of Cumberland to the Azores, &c. Written by the excellent Mathematician and Enginier maſter Edward Wright.

The right honorable the Erle of Cumberland hauing at his owne charges prepared his ſmall Fleet of foure Sailes onely, viz. The Victorie one of the Queenes ſhips royall; the Meg and Margaret ſmall ſhips, (one of which alſo he was forced ſoone after to ſend home againe, finding her not able to endure the Sea) and a ſmall Carauell, and hauing aſſembled together about 400 men (or fewer) of gentlemen, ſouldiers, and ſaylers, embarked himſelfe and them, and ſet ſaile from the Sound of Plimmouth in Deuonſhire, the 18 day of Iune 1589. being accompanied with theſe captaines and gentlemen which hereafter folow.

Captaine Chriſtopher Liſter a man of great reſolution, captaine Edward Carleſſe, alias Wright, who in ſir Francis Drakes Weſt-Indian voyage to S. Domingo and Carthagena, was captaine of the Hope. Captaine Boſwell, M. Meruin, M. Henry Long, M. Partridge, M. Norton, M. William Mounſon captaine of the Meg, and his viceadmirall, now ſir William Mounſon, M. Pigeon captaine of the Carauell.

About 3 dayes after our departure from Plimmouth we met with 3 French ſhips, whereof one was of Newhauen, another of S. Malos, and ſo finding them to be Leaguers & lawful Priſes, we tooke them and ſent two of them for England with all their loding, which was fiſh for the moſt part from New-found-land, ſauing that there was part thereof diſtributed amongſt our ſmall Fleet, as we could find ſtowage for the ſame: and in the third, all their men were ſent home into France. The ſame day & the day folowing we met with ſome other ſhips, whom (when after ſome conference had with them, we perceiued plainly to bee of Roterodam and Emden, bound for Rochell) we diſmiſſed.

The 28 and 29 dayes we met diuers of our Engliſh ſhips, returning from the Portugall voiage which my lord relieued with victuals. The 13 day of Iuly being Sonday in the morning, we eſpied 11 ſhips without ſight of yͤ coaſt of Spaine, in the height of 39 degrees, whom wee preſently prepared for, & prouided to meet them, hauing firſt ſet forth captaine Mounſon in the Meg, before vs, to deſcry whence they were. The 13 day of Iuly being Sonday in the morning, we eſpied 11 ſhips without ſight of yͤ coaſt of Spaine, in the height of 39 degrees, whom wee preſently prepared for, & prouided to meet them, hauing firſt ſet forth captaine Mounſon in the Meg, before vs, to deſcry whence they were. The Meg approching neere, there paſſed ſome ſhot betwixt them, whereby, as alſo by their Admiral and Viceadmirall putting foorth their flags, we perceiued that ſome fight was likely to follow. Hauing therefore fitted our ſelues for them, we made what haſt we could towards them with regard alwayes to get the wind of them, and about 10 or 11 of the clocke, we came vp to them with the Victory. But after ſome few ſhot & ſome litle fight paſſed betwixt vs, they yeelded themſelues, & the maſters of them all came aboord vs, ſhewing their ſeueral Paſports from the cities of Hamburg and Lubeck, from Breme, Pomerania and Calice.

They had in them certaine bags of Pepper & Synamom, which they confeſſed to be the goods of a Iew in Lisbon, which ſhould haue bene caried by them into their country to his Factor there, and ſo finding it by their owne confeſſion to be lawful Priſe, the ſame was ſoone after taken and deuided amongſt our whole company, the value wherof was eſteemed to be about 4500 pounds, at two ſhillings the pound.

The 17 day the foreſaid ſhips were diſmiſſed, but 7 of their men that were willing to go along with vs for ſailers, we tooke to helpe vs, and ſo held on our courſe for the Azores.

The 1 of Auguſt being Friday in the morning, we had ſight of the Iland of S. Michael, being one of the Eaſtermoſt of the Azores toward which we ſailed all that day, and at night hauing put foorth a Spaniſh flag in our main-top, that ſo they might the leſſe ſuſpect vs, we approched neere to the chiefe towne and road of that Iland, where we eſpied 3 ſhips riding at anker and ſome other veſſels: all which we determined to take in the darke of the night, and accordingly attempted about 10 or 11 of the clocke, ſending our boats well manned to cut their cables and hauſers, and let them driue into the ſea. Our men comming to them, found yͭ one of thoſe greateſt ſhips was the Falcon of London being there vnder a Scottiſh Pilot who bare the name of her as his own. But 3 other ſmal ſhips that lay neere vnder the caſtle there, our men let looſe and towed them away vnto vs, moſt of the Spaniards that were in them leaping ouer-boord and ſwimming to ſhore with lowd and lamentable outcries, which they of the towne hearing were in an vprore, and anſwered with the like crying. The caſtle diſcharged ſome great ſhot at our boats, but ſhooting without marke by reaſon of the darkneſſe they did vs no hurt. The Scots likewiſe diſcharged 3 great pieces into the aire to make the Spaniards thinke they were their friends and our enemies, and ſhortly after the Scottiſh maſter, & ſome other with him, came aboord to my lord doing their dutie, and offring their ſeruice, &c. Theſe 3 ſhips were fraught with wine and Sallet-oile from Siuil.

3 ſhips forcibly towed out of harbour.

The ſame day our Carauel chaſed a Spaniſh Carauel to ſhore at S. Michael, which caried letters thither, by which we learned that the Caraks were departed from Tercera 8 dayes before.

The 7 of Auguſt we had ſight of a litle ſhip which wee chaſed towards Tercera with our pinnaſſe (the weather being calme) and towards euening we ouertooke her, there were in her 30 tunnes of good Madera wine, certaine woollen cloth, ſilke, taffata, &c. The 14 of Auguſt we came to the Iland of Flores, where we determined to take in ſome freſh water and freſh victuals, ſuch as the Iland did afford. So we manned our boats with ſome 120 men and rowed towards the ſhore; whereto when we approched the inhabitants that were aſſembled at the landing place, put foorth a flag of truce, whereupon we alſo did the like.

When we came to them, my Lord gaue them to vnderſtand by his Portugall interpreter, that he was a friend to their king Don Antonio, and came not any way to iniury thẽ, but that he ment onely to haue ſome freſh water and freſh victuals of them, by way of exchange for ſome prouiſion that he had, as oile, wine, or pepper, to which they preſently agreed willingly, & ſent ſome of their company for beeues and ſheepe, and we in the meane ſeaſon marched Southward about a mile to Villa de Santa Cruz, from whence all the inhabitants yong and old were departed, and not any thing of value left. We demanding of them what was the cauſe hereof, they anſwered, Feare; as their vſuall maner was when any ſhips came neere their coaſt.

We found that part of the Iland to be full of great rockie barren hils and mountains, litle inhabited by reaſon that it is moleſted with ſhips of war which might partly appeare by this towne of Santa Cruz (being one of their chiefe townes) which was all ruinous, and (as it were) but the reliques of the ancient towne which had bene burnt about two yeeres before by certaine Engliſh ſhips of war, as the inhabitants there reported.

At euening as we were in rowing towards the Victory, an huge fiſh purſued vs for the ſpace well nigh of two miles together, diſtant for the moſt part frõ the boats ſterne not a ſpeares length, and ſometimes ſo neere that the boat ſtroke vpon him, the tips of whoſe finnes about the gils (appearing oft times aboue the water) were by eſtimation 4 or 5 yards aſunder, and his iawes gaping a yard and an halfe wide, which put vs in feare of ouer-turning the pinnaſſe, but God bee thanked (rowing as hard as we could) we eſcaped.

When we were about Flores a litle ſhip called the Drake, brought vs word that the Caraks were at Tercera, of which newes we were very glad, & ſped vs thitherward with all the ſpeed we could: and by the way we came to Fayal road the ſeuen and twentieth day of Auguſt, after ſunne ſet, where we eſpied certaine ſhippes ryding at anker, to whom we ſent in our Skiffe with Captaine Liſter and Captaine Monſon in her to diſcouer the roaders: and leaſt any daunger ſhould happen to our boate, we ſent in likewiſe the Sawſie-Iacke and the ſmall Carauell; but the wind being off the ſhoare, the ſhippes were not able to fet it ſo nigh as the Spaniards ride, which neuertheleſſe the boate did, and clapped a ſhippe aboord of two hundred and fiftie tunnes, which caried in her fourteene caſt peeces, and continued fight alone with her for the ſpace of one houre vntill the comming vp of other boates to the reſkue of her, which were ſent from the ſhippes, and then a freſh boording her againe one boate in the quarter, another in the hauſe, wee entred her on the one ſide, and all the Spaniards lept ouerboord on the other, ſaue Iuan de Palma the Captaine of her and two or three more, and thus we became poſſeſſors of her. This ſhippe was mored to the Caſtle which ſhot at vs all this while: the onely hurt which we receiued of all this ſhot was this, that the maſter of our Carauell had the calfe of his legge ſhot away. This ſhippe was laden with Sugar, Ginger, and hides lately come from S. Iuan de Puerto Rico; after we had towed her cleare off the caſtle, we rowed in againe with our boats, and fetched out fiue ſmall ſhips more, one laden with hides, another with Elephants teeth, graines, coco-nuts, and goates ſkins come from Guinie, another with woad, and two with dogge-fiſh, which two laſt we let driue in the ſea making none account of them. The other foure we ſent for England the 30 of Auguſt.

At the taking of theſe Prizes were conſorted with vs ſome other ſmall men of warre, as Maiſter Iohn Dauis, with his ſhippe, Pinneſſe, and Boate, Captaine Markesburie with his ſhip, whoſe owner was Sir Walter Ralegh, the Barke of Lime, which was alſo conſorted with vs before.

The laſt of Auguſt in the morning we came in ſight of Tercera, being about ſome nine or ten leagues from ſhoare, where we eſpied comming towards vs, a ſmall boat vnder ſaile, which ſeemed ſomewhat ſtrange vnto vs, being ſo farre from land, and no ſhippe in ſight, to which they might belong: but comming neere, they put vs out of doubt, ſhewing they were Engliſh men (eight in number) that had lately beene priſoners in Tercera, and finding opportunitie to eſcape at that time, with that ſmall boat committed themſelues to the ſea, vnder Gods prouidence, hauing no other yard for their maine ſaile, but two pipe ſtaues tyed together by the endes, and no more prouiſion of victuals, then they could bring in their pockets and boſomes. Hauing taken them all into the Victorie, they gaue vs certaine intelligence, that the Carackes were departed from thence about a weeke before.

An eſcape of 8. Engliſhmen from Tercera.

Thus beeing without any further hope of thoſe Caraks, we reſolued to returne for Fayall, with intent to ſurprize the towne, but vntill the ninth of September, we had either the winde ſo contrary, or the weather ſo calme, that in all that time, we made ſcarce nine or ten leagues way, lingring vp and downe not farre from Pico.

The tenth of September, being Wedneſday in the afternoone, wee came againe to Fayal roade. Whereupon immediatly my Lord ſent Captaine Liſter, with one of Gracioſa (whom Captaine Munſon had before taken) and ſome others, towards Fayal, whom certaine of the Inhabitants met in a boat, and came with Captaine Liſter to my Lord, to whom hee gaue this choice: either to ſuffer him quietly to enter into the platforme there without reſiſtance, where he and his companie would remaine a ſpace without offering any iniurie to them, that they (the Inhabitants) might come vnto him and compound for the ranſome of the Towne: or elſe to ſtand to the hazard of warre.

With theſe words they returned to the towne: but the keepers of the platforme anſwered, that it was againſt their oath and allegeance to king Philip to giue ouer without fight. Whereupon my Lord commanded the boates of euery ſhip, to be preſently manned, and ſoone after landed his men on the ſandie ſhoare, vnder the ſide of an hill, about halfe a league to the Northwards from the platforme: vpon the toppe of which hill certaine horſemen and footmen ſhewed themſelues, and other two companies alſo appeared, with enſignes diſplayed, the one before the towne vpon the ſhore by the ſea ſide, which marched towards our landing place, as though they would encounter vs; the other in a valley to the Southwards of the platforme, as if they would haue come to helpe the Townesmen: during which time, they in the platforme alſo played vpon vs with great Ordinance. Notwithſtanding my L. (hauing ſet his men in order) marched along the ſea ſhore, vpon the ſands, betwixt the ſea & the towne towards the platforme for the ſpace of a mile or more, & then the ſhore growing rockie, & permitting no further progreſſe without much difficultie, he entred into the towne & paſſed through the ſtreet without reſiſtance, vnto the platforme; for thoſe companies before mentioned at my Lo. approching, were ſoone diſperſed, and ſuddenly vaniſhed.

The taking of the towne and platforme of Fayal.

Likewiſe they of the platforme, being all fled at my Lordes comming thither, left him and his company to ſcale the walles, to enter and take poſſeſſion without reſiſtance.

In the meane time our ſhippes ceaſed not to batter the foreſaid Towne and Platforme with great ſhotte, till ſuch time as we ſaw the Red-Croſſe of England flouriſhing vpon the Forefront thereof.

A deſcription of the towne of Faial.

This Fayal is the principall towne in all that is land, & is ſituate directly ouer againſt the high and mighty mountaine Pico, lying towards the Weſt Northweſt from that mountaine, being deuided therefrom by a narrow Sea, which at that place is by eſtimation about ſome two or three leagues in bredth betweene the Iſles of Fayal and Pico.

The towne conteyned ſome three hundred houſholds, their houſes were faire and ſtrongly builded of lime and ſtone, and double couered with hollow tyles much like our roofe-tyles, but that they are leſſe at the one end then at the other.

Euery houſe almoſt had a ciſterne or well in a garden on the backe ſide: in which gardens grew vines (with ripe cluſters of grapes) making pleaſant ſhadowes, and Tabacco nowe commonly knowen and vſed in England, wherewith their women there dye their faces reddiſh, to make them ſeeme freſh and young: Pepper Indian and common; figge-trees bearing both white and red figges: Peach trees not growing very tall: Orenges, Limons, Quinces, Potato-roots, &c. Sweete wood (Ceder I thinke) is there very common, euen for building and firing.

My Lord hauing poſſeſſed himſelfe of the towne and platforme, and being carefull of the preſeruation of the towne, gaue commandement, that no mariner or ſouldier ſhould enter into any houſe, to make any ſpoyle thereof. But eſpecially he was carefull that the Churches and houſes of religion there ſhould be kept inuiolate, which was accordingly performed, through his appointment of guarders and keepers for thoſe places: but the reſt of the towne eyther for want of the former inhibition, or for deſire of ſpoyle & prey, was rifled, & ranſacked by the ſouldiers & mariners, who ſcarcely left any houſe vnſearched, out of which they tooke ſuch things as liked them, as cheſtes of ſweete wood, chaires, cloth, couerlets, hangings, bedding, apparell: and further ranged into the countrey, where ſome of them alſo were hurt by the inhabitants. The Friery there conteyning and maintayning thirtie Franciſcan Friers (among whom we could not finde any one able to ſpeake true Latine) was builded by a Fryer of Angra in Tercera of the ſame order, about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred and ſixe. The tables in the hall had ſeates for the one ſide onely, and were alwayes couered, as readie at all times for dinner or ſupper.

From Wedneſday in the afternoone, at which time we entred the towne, til Saturday night, we continued there, vntill the Inhabitans had agreed and payed for the ranſome of the towne, two thouſand duckats, moſt part whereof was Church-plate.

We found in the platforme eight and fiftie yron peeces of Ordinance, whereof three and twentie (as I remember) or more were readie mounted vpon their carriages, betweene Barricados, vpon a platforme towardes the ſea-ſide, all which Ordinance wee tooke, and ſet the platforme on fire, and ſo departed: My Lord hauing inuited to dinner in the Victorie, on the Sunday following, ſo many of the Inhabitants as would willingly come (ſaue onely Diego Gomes the Gouernour, who came but once onely to parle about the ranſome) onely foure came and were well entertained, and ſolemnely diſmiſſed with ſound of drumme and trumpets, and a peale of Ordinance: to whom my Lord deliuered his letter ſubſcribed with his owne hand, importing a requeſt to all other Engliſhmen to abſtaine from any further moleſting them, ſaue onely for freſh water, and victuals neceſſary for their intended voyage. During our abode here (viz. the 11 of September) two men came out of Pico which had beene priſoners there: Alſo at Fayal we ſet at libertie a priſoner tranſlated from S. Iago, who was couſin to a ſeruant of Don Anthonio king of Portugall in England: Theſe priſoners we deteyned with vs.

On Munday we ſent our boates a ſhore for freſh water, which (by reaſon of the raine that fell the former night) came plentifully running downe the hilles, and would otherwiſe haue beene hard to be gotten there. On Tueſday likewiſe hauing not yet ſufficiently ſerued our turnes, we ſent againe for freſh water, which was then not ſo eaſie to be gotten as the day before, by reaſon of a great winde: which in the afternoone increaſed alſo in ſuch ſort, that we thought it not ſafe to ride ſo neere the land; whereupon we weyed anker and ſo departed Northweſt and by weſt, alongſt the coaſt of Fayal Iland, Some of the Inhabitants comming aboord to vs this day, tolde vs that alwayes about that time of the yeere ſuch windes Weſt Southweſt blew on that coaſt.

This day, as we ſayled neere Saint Georges Iland, a huge fiſh lying ſtill a litle vnder water, or rather euen therewith, appeared hard by a head of vs, the ſea breaking vpon his backe, which was blacke coloured, in ſuch ſort as ſeeming at the firſt it had beene a rocke, and the ſhip ſtemming directly with him, we were put in a ſudden feare for the time: till ſoone after we ſaw him moue out of the way.

The 16 of September in the night it lightned much, whereupon there followed great winds and raine, which continued the 17 18 19 20 and 21 of the ſame. The 23 of September we came againe into Faial road to weigh an anker which (for haſte and feare of foule weather) wee had left there before, where we went on ſhore to ſee the towne, the people (as we thought) hauing now ſetled themſelues there againe: but notwithſtanding many of them through too much diſtruſtfulneſſe, departed and prepared to depart with their packets at the firſt ſight of vs: vntill ſuch time as they were aſſured by my Lord, that our comming was not any way to iniury them, but eſpecially to haue freſh water, and ſome other things needefull for vs, contenting them for the ſame.

So then we viewed the Towne quietly, and bought ſuch things as we deſired for our money as if we had bene in England. And they helped to fill vs in freſh water, receiuing for their paines ſuch ſatiſfaction as contented them.

The 25 day we were forced againe to depart from thence, before we had ſufficiently watered, by reaſon of a great tempeſt that ſuddenly aroſe in the night, in ſo much, that my Lord himſelfe ſoone after midnight rayſed our men out of their Cabines to wey anker, himſelfe alſo together with them haling at the Capſten, and after chearing them vp with wine.

The next day we ſent our Carauell and the Sawſie-Iacke to the road of Saint Michael, to ſee what they could eſpie: we following after them vpon the 27 day, plying to and fro, came within ſight of S. Michael, but by contrary windes the 28 29 and 30 dayes wee were driuen to leeward, and could not get neere the Iland.

The firſt of October wee ſayled alongſt Tercera, and euen againſt Braſill (a promontorie neere to Angra the ſtrongeſt Towne in that Iland) wee eſpied ſome boates comming to the Towne, and made out towardes them: but being neere to the lande they came to ſhoare and eſcaped vs.

In the afternoone we came neere to Gracioſa, whereupon my Lord forthwith ſent Captain Liſter to the Ilanders, to let them vnderſtand that his deſire was onely to haue water and wine of them, and ſome freſh victuals, and not any further to trouble them. They anſwered they could giue no reſolute anſwere to this demaund, vntill the Gouernors of the Iland had conſulted thereupon, and therefore deſired him to ſend againe to them the next day.

Vpon the ſecond day of October early in the morning, we ſent forth our long boat and Pinneſſe, with emptie Caſke, and about ſome fiftie or ſixty men together with the Margaret, and Captaine Dauis his ſhippe: for we now wanted all the reſt of our conſorts. But when our men would haue landed, the Ilanders ſhot at them, and would not ſuffer them. And troupes of men appeared vpon land, with enſignes diſplayed to reſiſt vs: So our boates rowed alongſt the ſhoare, to finde ſome place where they might land, not with too much diſaduantage: our ſhippes and they ſtill ſhooting at the Ilanders: but no place could be founde where they might land without great perill of looſing many of their liues, and ſo were conſtrayned to retire without receiuing any anſwere, as was promiſed the day before. We had three men hurt in this conflict, whileſt our boates were together in conſulting what was beſt to be done: two of them were ſtroken with a great ſhot (which the Ilanders drew from place to place with Oxen) wherewith the one loſt his hand, and the other his life within two or three dayes after: the third was ſhot into his necke with a ſmall ſhot, without any great hurt.

With theſe newes our company returned backe againe at night, whereupon preparation was made to goe to them againe the next day: but the day was farre ſpent before we could come neere them with our ſhip: neither could we finde any good ground to anker in, where we might lye to batter the Towne, and further we could finde no landing place, without great danger to looſe many men: which might turne not only to the ouerthrow of our voiage, but alſo put the Queenes ſhip in great perill for want of men to bring her home. Therefore my Lord thought it beſt to write to them to this effect: That he could not a litle maruell at their inhumanitie and crueltie which they had ſhewed towards his men, ſeeing they were ſent by him vnto them in peaceable manner, to receiue their anſwere which they had promiſed to giue the day before: and that were it not for Don Antonio their lawfull king his ſake, he could not put vp ſo great iniury at their hands, without iuſt reuengement vpon them: notwithſtanding for Don Antonio his ſake, whoſe friend he was, he was yet content to ſend to them once againe for their anſwere: At night Captaine Liſter returned with this anſwere from them. That their Gunner ſhot off one of their peeces, which was charged with powder onely, and was ſtopped; which our men thinking it had bin ſhot at them, ſhot againe, and ſo beganne the fight: and that the next morning they would ſend my Lord a reſolute anſwere to his demaunde, for as yet they could not knowe their Gouernours minde herein. The next morning there came vnto vs a boate from the ſhoare with a flagge of truce, wherein were three of the chiefe men of the Iland, who agreed with my Lord that hee ſhould haue of them ſixtie buttes of wine, and freſh victuals to refreſh himſelfe and his companie withall: but as for freſh water, they could not ſatiſfie our neede therein, hauing themſelues little or none, ſauing ſuch as they ſaued in veſſels or ciſternes when it rayned, and that they had rather giue vs two tunnes of wine then one of water: but they requeſted that our ſouldiers might not come on ſhoare, for they themſelues would bring all they had promiſed to the water-ſide, which requeſt was granted, we keeping one of them aboord with vs vntill their promiſe was performed, and the other we ſent to ſhoare with our emptie Caſke, and ſome of our men to helpe to fill, and bring them away with ſuch other prouiſion as was promiſed: ſo the Margaret, Captaine Dauis his ſhippe, and another of Weymouth ſtayed ryding at anker before the Towne, to take in our prouiſion. This ſhippe of Weymouth came to vs the day before, and had taken a rich Prize (as it was reported) worth ſixteene thouſand pound, which brought vs newes that the Weſt-Indian Fleete was not yet come, but would come very ſhortly. But we with the Victorie put off to ſea, and vpon Saturday the fourth of October, we tooke a French ſhippe of Saint Malo (a citie of the vnholy league) loden with fiſh from New-found land: which had beene in ſo great a tempeſt, that ſhe was conſtrayned to cut her mayne maſt ouerboord for her ſafetie, and was now comming to Gracioſa, to repaire her ſelfe. But ſo hardly it befell her, that ſhe did not onely not repaire her former loſſes, but loſt all that remayned vnto vs. The chiefe of her men we tooke into our ſhip, and ſent ſome of our men, mariners, and ſouldiers into her to bring her into England.

Vpon the Sunday following at night, all our promiſed prouiſion was brought vnto vs from Gracioſa: and we friendly diſmiſſed the Ilanders with a peale of Ordinance.

Vpon Munday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday, we plyed to and fro about thoſe Ilandes, being very rough weather. And vpon Thurſday at night, being driuen ſome three or foure leagues from Tercera, we ſaw fifteene ſaile of the Weſt-Indian Fleete comming into the Hauen at Angra in Tercera. But the winde was ſuch, that for the ſpace of foure dayes after, though wee lay as cloſe by the winde as was poſſible, yet we could not come neere them. In this time we loſt our late French Prize, not being able to lie ſo neere the winde as we, and heard no more of her till we came to England where ſhee ſafely arriued. Vpon Munday we came very neere the Hauens mouth, being minded to haue runne in amongſt them, and to haue fetched out ſome of them if it had beene poſſible: But in the end this enterpriſe was deemed too daungerous, conſidering the ſtrength of the place where they rode, being haled and towed in neerer the towne, at the firſt ſight of our approching, and lying vnder the protection of the Caſtle of Braſill, on the one ſide (hauing in it fiue and twentie peeces of Ordinance) and a fort on the other ſide wherein were 13 or 14 great braſſe pieces. Beſides, when we came neere land the winde prooued too ſcant for vs to attempt any ſuch enterpriſe.

Vpon Tueſday the fourteenth of October we ſent our boate to the roade to ſound the depth, to ſee if there were any ankoring place for vs, where we might lie without ſhot of the Caſtle and Fort, and within ſhot of ſome of thoſe ſhippes, that we might either make them come out to vs, or ſinke them where they lay. Our boate returned hauing found out ſuch a place as we deſired, but the winde would not ſuffer vs to come neere it, and againe if we could haue ankored there, it was thought likely that they would rather runne themſelues a ground to ſaue their liues and liberties, and ſome of their goods, then come foorth to looſe their liberties and goods to vs their enemies. So we ſhot at them to ſee if we could reach them, but it fell farre ſhort. And thus we departed, thinking it not probable that they would come foorth ſo long as we watched for them before the hauens mouth, or within ſight of them. For the ſpace of fiue dayes after we put off to ſea, and lay without ſight of them, and ſent a pinneſſe to lie out of ſight cloſe by the ſhore, to bring vs word if they ſhould come foorth. After a while the Pinneſſe returned and tolde vs that thoſe ſhips in the Hauen had taken downe their ſayles, and let downe their toppe maſtes: ſo that wee ſuppoſed they would neuer come foorth, till they perceiued vs to bee quite gone.

Wherefore vpon the 20 of October, hearing that there were certaine Scottiſh ſhips at Saint Michael, we ſayled thither, and found there one Scottiſh roader, and two or three more at Villa Franca, the next road a league or two from the towne of S. Michael, to the Eaſtwards: of whom we had for our reliefe ſome ſmall quantitie of wine (viz. ſome fiue or ſixe buttes of them all) and ſome freſh water, but nothing ſufficient to ſerue our turne.

Vpon Tueſday the one and twentieth of October, we ſent our long boate to ſhore for freſh water at a brooke a little to the Weſtwards from Villa Franca.

But the Inhabitants eſpying vs came downe with two Enſignes diſplayed, and about ſome hundred and fiftie men armed, to withſtand our landing. So our men hauing ſpent all their powder vpon them in attempting to land, and not being able to preuaile at ſo great oddes, returned fruſtrate.

From hence we departed towardes Saint Maries Iſland, minding to water there, and then to goe for the coaſt of Spaine. For we had intelligence that it was a place of no great force, and that we might water there very well: therefore vpon Friday following, my Lord ſent Captaine Liſter, and Captaine Amias Preſton now Sir Amias Preſton (who not long before came to vs out of his owne ſhippe, and ſhe looſing vs in the night, hee was forced to tarry ſtill with vs) with our long boate and Pinneſſe, and ſome ſixtie or ſeuentie ſhotte in them, with a friendly letter to the Ilanders, that they would grant vs leaue to water, and we would no further trouble them.

So we departed from the Victorie for the Iland, about nine of the clocke in the forenoone, and rowed freſhly vntill about 3 a clocke afternoone. At which time our men being ſomething weary with rowing, and being within a league or two of the ſhore, and 4 or 5 leagues from the Victorie, they eſpied (to their refreſhing) two ſhips ryding at anker hard vnder the towne, whereupon hauing ſhifted ſome 6 or 7 of our men into Captaine Dauis his boate, being too much peſtered in our owne, and retayning with vs ſome 20 ſhot in the pinneſſe, we made way towardes them with all the ſpeede we could.

By the way as we rowed we ſaw boates paſſing betwixt the roaders and the ſhore, and men in their ſhirtes ſwimming and wading to ſheare, who as we perceiued afterwardes, were labouring to ſet thoſe ſhippes faſt on ground, and the Inhabitants as buſily preparing themſelues for the defence of thoſe roaders, their Iland, and themſelues. When we came neere them, Captaine Liſter commaunded the Trumpets to be ſounded, but prohibited any ſhot to be diſcharged at them, vntill they had direction from him: But ſome of the companie, either not well perceiuing or regarding what he ſayd, immediatly vpon the ſound of the Trumpets diſcharged their pieces at the Ilanders, which for the moſt part lay in trenches and fortefied places vnſeene, to their owne beſt aduantage: who immediatly ſhot likewiſe at vs, both with ſmall and great ſhot, without danger to themſelues: Notwithſtanding Captaine Liſter earneſtly haſtened forward the Saylers that rowed, who beganne to ſhrinke at that ſhot, flying ſo faſt about their eares, and himſelfe firſt entring one of the ſhippes that lay a litle further from ſhoare then the other, we ſpedily followed after him into her, ſtill plying them with our ſhot. And hauing cut in ſunder her Cables and Hauſers, towed her away with our Pinneſſe. In the meane time Captaine Dauis his boate ouertooke vs and entred into the other ſhippe, which alſo (as the former) was forſaken by all her men: but they were conſtrayned to leaue her & to come againe into their boate (whileſt ſhot and ſtones from ſhoare flew faſt amongſt them) finding her to ſticke ſo faſt a grounde, that they could not ſtire her: which the Towneſmen alſo perceiuing, and ſeeing that they were but fewe in number, and vs (buſied about the other ſhip) not comming to ayde them, were preparing to haue come and taken them. But they returned vnto vs, and ſo together we came away towards the Victory, towing after vs the Prize that we had now taken, which was lately come from Braſill, loden with Sugar.

In this fight we had two men ſlaine and 16 wounded: and as for them, it is like they had litle hurt, lying for the moſt part behind ſtone walles, which were builded one aboue another hard by the ſea ſide, vpon the end of the hill whereupon the Towne ſtoode betwixt two valleyes. Vpon the toppe of the hill lay their great Ordinance (ſuch as they had) wherewith they ſhot leaden bullets, whereof one pierced through our Prizes ſide, and lay ſtill in the ſhippe without doing any more harme.

The next day we went againe for water to the ſame Iland, but not knowing before the inconuenience and diſaduantage of the place where we attempted to land, we returned fruſtrate.

The ſame night the 25 of October we departed for S. Georges Iland for freſh water, whither we came on Munday following October 27, and hauing eſpied where a ſpout of water came running downe: the pinneſſe and long boate were preſently manned and ſent vnder the conduct of Captaine Preſton, and Captaine Munſon, by whom my Lord ſent a letter to the Ilanders as before, to grant vs leaue to water onely, and we would no further trouble them: notwithſtanding our men comming on ſhoare found ſome of the poore Ilanders, which for feare of vs hid themſelues amongſt the rockes.

And on Wedneſday following our boats returned with freſh water, whereof they brought onely ſixe tunnes for the Victorie, alleaging they could get no more, thinking (as it was ſuppoſed) that my Lord hauing no more prouiſion of water and wine, but onely 12 tunnes, would not goe for the coaſt of Spaine, but ſtraight for the coaſt of England, as many of our men greatly deſired: notwithſtanding my Lord was vnwilling ſo to doe, and was minded the next day to haue taken in more water: but through roughneſſe of the ſeas and winde, and vnwillingneſſe of his men it was not done. Yet his Hon. purpoſed not to returne with ſo much prouiſion vnſpent, and his voyage (as he thought) not yet performed in ſuch ſort as mought giue ſome reaſonable contentment or ſatiſfaction to himſelfe and others.

Therefore becauſe no more water could now conueniently be gotten, and being vncertaine when it could be gotten, and the time of our ſtaying aboord alſo vncertaine, the matter being referred to the choyſe of the whole companie, whither they would tarrie longer, till wee might be more ſufficiently prouided of freſh water, or goe by the coaſt of Spaine for England, with halfe ſo much allowance of drinke as before, they willingly agreed that euery meaſe ſhould bee allowed at one meale but halfe ſo much drinke as they were accuſtomed (except them that were ſicke or wounded) and ſo to goe for England, taking the coaſt of Spaine in our way, to ſee if we could that way make vp our voyage.

Vpon Saturday Octob. 31 we ſent the Margaret (becauſe ſhe leaked much) directly for England, together with the Prize of Braſile which we tooke at S. Marie, and in them ſome of our hurt and wounded men or otherwiſe ſicke were ſent home as they deſired, for England: but Captaine Monſon was taken out of the Megge into the Victorie.

So we held on our courſe for the coaſt of Spaine with a faire winde and a large which before we ſeldome had. And vpon Tweſday following being the 4 of Nouemb. we eſpied a ſaile right before vs, which we chaſed till about three a clocke in the afternoone, at which time we ouertaking her, ſhe ſtroke ſayle, and being demaunded who was her owner and from whence ſhe was, they anſwered, a Portugall, and from Pernanbucke in Braſile. She was a ſhip of ſome 110 tuns burden, fraighted with 410 cheſtes of Sugar, and 50 Kintals of Braſill-wood, euery Kintall contayning one hundred pound weight: we tooke her in latitude nine and twentie degrees, about two hundred leagues from Lisbone weſtwards: Captaine Preſton was preſently ſent vnto her, who brought the principall of her men aboord the Victorie, and certaine of our men, mariners and ſouldiers were ſent aboord her. The Portugals of this Prize told vs that they ſaw another ſhip before them that day about noone. Hauing therefore diſpatched all things about the Prize aforeſaid, and left our long boat with Captaine Dauis, taking his leſſer boat with vs, we made way after this other ſhip with all the ſayles we could beare, holding on our courſe due Eaſt, and giuing order to Captaine Dauis his ſhip and the Prize that they ſhould follow vs due Eaſt, and that if they had ſight of vs the morning following they ſhould follow vs ſtill: if not, they ſhould goe for England.

The next morning we eſpied not the ſayle which we chaſed, and Captaine Dauis his ſhip and the Prize were behinde vs out of ſight: but the next Thurſday the ſixt of Nouember (being in latitude 38 degrees 30 minutes, and about ſixtie leagues from Lisbone weſtwards) early in the morning Captaine Preſton deſcried a ſayle ſome two or three leagues a head of vs, after which we preſently haſtened our chaſe, and ouertooke her about eight or nine of the clocke before noone. She came lately from Saint Michaels roade, hauing beene before at Braſill loden with Sugar and Braſile. Hauing ſent our boat to them to bring ſome of the chiefe of their men aboord the Victorie, in the meane time whileſt they were in comming to vs one out of the maine toppe eſpied another ſaile a head ſome three or foure leagues from vs. So immediately vpon the returne of our boate, hauing ſent her backe againe with ſome of our men aboord the prize, we purſued ſpeedily this new chaſe, with all the ſayles we could packe on, and about two a clocke in the afternoone ouertooke her: ſhe had made prouiſion to fight with vs, hauing hanged the ſides of the ſhip ſo thicke with hides (wherewith eſpecially ſhe was loden) that muſket ſhot could not haue pearced them: but yet we had diſcharged two great pieces of our Ordinance at her, ſhe ſtroke ſayle, and approching neerer, we aſking of whence they were, they anſwered from the Weſt-Indies, from Mexico, and Saint Iohn de Lowe (truely called Vlhua.) This ſhip was of ſome three or foure hundred tunnes, and had in her ſeuen hundred hides worth tenne ſhillings a peece: ſixe cheſts of Cochinell, euery cheſt houlding one hundred pound weight, and euery pound worth ſixe and twentie ſhillings and eight pence, and certaine cheſts of Sugar and China diſhes, with ſome plate and ſiluer.

The Captaine of her was an Italian, and by his behauiour ſeemed to be a graue, wiſe, and ciuill man: he had put in aduenture in this ſhippe fiue and twentie thouſand Duckats. Wee tooke him with certaine other of her chiefeſt men (which were Spaniards) into the Victorie: and Captaine Liſter with ſo manie other of the chiefeſt of our Mariners, ſouldiers, and ſaylers as were thought ſufficient, to the number of 20. or there abouts, were ſent into her. In the meane time (we ſtaying) our other prizes which followed after, came vp to vs. And nowe wee had our hands full and with ioy ſhaped our courſe for England, for ſo it was thought meeteſt, hauing now ſo many Portugals, Spaniards and Frenchmen amongſt vs, that if we ſhould haue taken any more prizes afterwards, wee had not bene well able to haue manned them without endangering our ſelues. So about 6. of the clocke in the afternoone (when our other prize had ouertaken vs) wee ſet ſaile for England. But our prizes not being able to beare vs company without ſparing them many of our ſailes, which cauſed our ſhip to rowle and wallow, in ſuch ſort that it was not onely very troubleſome to vs, but, as it was thought, would alſo haue put the maine Maſte in danger of falling ouerboord: hauing acquainted them with theſe inconueniences, we gaue them direction to keepe their courſes together, folowing vs, and ſo to come to Portſmouth. We tooke this laſt prize in the latitude of 39. degrees, and about 46. leagues to the Weſtwards from The Rocke.

She was one of thoſe 16. ſhips which we ſaw going into the hauen at Angra in Terçera, October 8. Some of the men that we tooke out of her tolde vs, that whileſt wee were plying vp and downe before that hauen, as before was ſhewed, expecting the comming foorth of thoſe ſhippes, three of the greateſt and beſt of them, at the appointment of the Gouernour of Terçera, were vnloden of their treaſure and marchandize. And in euery of them were put three hundred Souldiers, which were appointed to haue come to lay the Victory aboord in the night, and take her: but when this ſhould haue bene done the Victory was gone out of their ſight.

Now we went meerily before the winde with all the ſailes we could beare, inſomuch that in the ſpace of 24. houres, we ſailed neere 47. leagues, that is ſeuenſcore Engliſh miles, betwixt Friday at noone and Saturday at noone (notwithſtanding the ſhippe was very foule, and much growne with long being at Sea) which cauſed ſome of our company to make accompt they would ſee what running at Tilt there ſhould bee at Whitehall vpon the Queenes day. Others were imagining what a Chriſtmas they would keepe in England with their ſhares of the prizes we had taken. But ſo it befell, that we kept a colde Chriſtmas with the Biſhop and his clearks (rockes that lye to the Weſtwards from Sylly, and the Weſterne parts of England:) For ſoone after the wind ſcanting came about to the Eaſtwards (the worſt part of the heauens for vs, from which the winde could blow) in ſuch ſort, that we could not fetch any part of England. And hereupon alſo our allowance of drinke, which was ſcant ynough before, was yet more more ſcanted, becauſe of the ſcarcitie thereof in the ſhippe. So that now a man was allowed but halfe a pinte at a meale, and that many times colde water, and ſcarce ſweete. Notwithſtanding this was an happie eſtate in compariſon of that which followed: For from halfe a pinte we came to a quarter, and that laſted not long neither, ſo that by reaſon of this great ſcarcitie of drinke, and contrarietie of winde, we thought to put into Ireland, there to relieue our wants. But when wee came neere thither, lying at hull all night (tarrying for the daylight of the next morning, whereby we might the ſafelyer bring our ſhip into ſome conuenient harbour there) we were driuen ſo farre to lee-ward, that we could fetch no part of Ireland, ſo as with heauie hearts and ſad cheare, wee were conſtreined to returne backe againe, and expect till it ſhould pleaſe God to ſend vs a faire winde either for England or Ireland. In the meane time we were allowed euery man three or foure ſpoones full of vineger to drinke at a meale: for other drinke we had none, ſauing onely at two or three meales, when we had in ſtead hereof as much wine, which was wringed out of Wine-lees that remained. With this hard fare (for by reaſon of our great want of drinke, wee durſt eate but very litle) wee continued for the ſpace of a fourtnight or thereabouts: Sauing that now and then wee feaſted for it in the meane time: And that was when there fell any haile or raine: the haile-ſtones wee gathered vp and did eate them more pleaſantly then if they had bene the ſweeteſt Comfits in the world; The raine-drops were ſo carefully ſaued, that ſo neere as wee coulde, not one was loſt in all our ſhippe. Some hanged vp ſheetes tied with cordes by the foure corners, and a weight in the midſt that the water might runne downe thither, and ſo be receiued into ſome veſſell ſet or hanged vnderneth: Some that wanted ſheetes, hanged vp nakins, and cloutes, and watched them till they were thorow wet, then wringing and ſucking out the water. And that water which fell downe and waſhed away the filth and ſoyling of the ſhippe, trod vnder foote, as bad as running downe the kennell many times when it raineth, was not loſt I warrant you, but watched and attended carefully (yea ſometimes with ſtrife and contention) at euery ſcupper-hole, and other place where it ranne downe, with diſhes, pots, cannes, and Iarres, whereof ſome drunke hearty draughts euen as it was, mud and all, without tarrying to clenſe or ſettle it: Others clenſed it firſt, but not often, for it was ſo thicke and went ſo ſlowly thorow, that they might ill endure to tary ſo long, and were loth to looſe too much of ſuch precious ſtuffe: ſome licked with their tongues (like dogges) the boards vnder feete, the ſides, railes, and Maſts of the ſhippe: others that were more ingenious, faſtened girdles or ropes about the Maſtes, dawbing tallow betwixt them and the Maſte (that the raine might not runne downe betweene) in ſuch ſort, that thoſe ropes or girdles hanging lower on the one ſide then on the other, a ſpout of leather was faſtened to the loweſt part of them, that all the raine drops that came running downe the Maſte, might meete together at that place, and there be receiued.

He that got a canne of water by theſe meanes was ſpoken of, ſued to, and enuied as a rich man, Quàm pulchrum digno monſtrari & dicier hic eſt? Some of the poore Spaniards that we had taken (who notwithſtanding had the ſame allowance that our owne men had) would come and craue of vs, for the loue of God, but ſo much water as they could holde in the hollow of their hand: and they had it, notwithſtanding our great extremitie, to teache them ſome humanitie in ſtead of their accuſtomed barbaritie, both to vs and other nations heretofore. They put alſo bullets of lead into their mouthes to ſlake their thirſt.

Now in euery corner of the ſhippe were heard the lamentable cries of ſicke and wounded men ſounding wofully in our eares, crying out and pitifully complaining for want of drinke, being ready to die, yea many dying for lacke thereof, ſo as by reaſon of this great extremitie we loſt many more men, then wee had done all the voyage before: hauing before this time bene ſo well and ſufficiently prouided for, that we liued in maner as well and healthfully, and died as fewe as if wee had bene in England, whereas now lightly euery day ſome were caſt ouerboord.

But the ſecond day of December 1589. was a feſtiuall day with vs, for then it rained a good pace, and wee ſaued ſome pretie ſtore of raine water (though wee were well wet for it, and that at midnight) and filled our ſkins full beſides: notwithſtanding it were muddie and bitter with waſhing the ſhippe, but (with ſome ſugar which we had to ſweeten it withall) it went merrily downe, yet remembred we and wiſhed for with all our hearts, many a Conduit, pumpe, ſpring, & ſtreame of cleare ſweete running water in England: And how miſerable wee had accompted ſome poore ſoules whom we had ſeene driuen for thirſt to drinke thereof, and how happy we would now haue thought our ſelues if we might haue had our fills of the ſame: yet ſhould wee haue fared the better with this our poore feaſting, if we might haue had our meate and drinke (ſuch and ſo much as it was) ſtand quietly before vs: but beſide all the former extremities, wee were ſo toſſed and turmoiled with ſuch horrible ſtormie and tempeſtuous weather, that euery man had beſt holde faſt his Canne, cup, and diſh in his hands, yea and himſelfe too, many times, by the ropes, railes, or ſides of the ſhip or elſe he ſhould ſoone finde all vnder feete.

Herewith our maine ſaile was torne from the yarde and blowne ouerboord quite away into the ſea without recouery, and our other ſailes ſo rent and torne (from ſide to ſide ſome of them) that hardly any of them eſcaped hole. The raging waues and foming ſurges of the ſea came rowling like mountaines one after another, and ouerraked the waſte of the ſhippe like a migtie riuer running ouer it, whereas in faire weather it was neere 20. foote aboue the water, that nowe wee might cry out with the princely Prophet Pſalme 107. verſ. 26. They mount vp to heauen, and deſcend to the deepe, ſo that their ſoule melteth away for trouble: they reele too and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken man, and all their cunning is gone. With this extremitie of foule weather the ſhip was ſo toſſed and ſhaken, that by the craking noiſe it made, and by the leaking which was now much more then ordinary, wee were in great feare it would haue ſhaken in ſunder, ſo that now alſo we had iuſt cauſe to pray a litle otherwiſe then the Poet, though marring the verſe, yet mending the meaning.

Deus maris & Cœli, quid enim niſi vota ſuperſunt,
 Soluere quaſſatæ parcito membra ratis.

Notwithſtanding it pleaſed God of his great goodneſſe to deliuer vs out of this danger. Then forthwith a new maine ſaile was made and faſtened to the yard, and the reſt repaired as time and place would ſuffer: which we had no ſooner done, but yet againe wee were troubled with as great extremitie as before, ſo that againe we were like to haue loſt our new maine ſaile, had not Maſter William Antony the Maſter of the ſhip himſelfe (when none elſe would or durſt) ventured with danger of drowning by creeping along vpon the maine yarde (which was let downe cloſe to the railes) to gather it vp out of the ſea, and to faſten it thereto, being in the meane while oft-times ducked ouer head and eares into the ſea.

Theſe ſtormes were ſo terrible, that there were ſome in our company, which confeſſed they had gone to ſeas for the ſpace of 20. yeeres, and had neuer ſeene the like, and vowed that if euer they returned ſafe home, they would neuer come to Sea againe.

The laſt of Nouember at night we met with an Engliſh ſhip, out of which (becauſe it was too late that night) it was agreed that we ſhould haue had the next morning two or three Tunnes of wine, which, as they ſaid, was al the prouiſion of drink they had, ſaue only a But or two, which they muſt néeds reſerue for their owne vſe: but after that, we heard of them no more, till they were ſet on ground vpon the coaſt of Ireland, where it appeared that they might haue ſpared vs much more then they pretended they could, ſo as they might wel haue relieued our great neceſſities, and haue had ſufficient for themſelues beſides, to bring them into England.

The firſt of December at night we ſpake with another Engliſh ſhip, and had ſome beere out of her, but not ſufficient to carry vs into England, ſo that wee were conſtrained to put into Ireland, the winde ſo ſeruing.

The next day we came to an anker, not far from the S. Kelmes vnder the land & winde, where we were ſomewhat more quiet, but (that being no ſafe harbour to ride in) the next morning wee went about to weigh anker, but hauing ſome of our men hurt at the Capſten, wee were faine to giue ouer and leaue it behinde, holding on our courſe to Ventre hauen, where wee ſafely arriued the ſame day, that place being a very ſafe and conuenient harbor for vs, that now wee might ſing as we had iuſt cauſe, They that goe downe to the Sea, &c.

So ſoone as we had ankered here my Lord went forthwith to ſhoare, and brought preſently freſh water and freſh victuals, as Muttons, pigges, hennes, &c. to refreſh his company withall. Notwithſtanding himſelfe had lately bene very weake, and taſted of the ſame extremitie that his Company did: For in the time of our former want, hauing a little freſh water left him remaining in a pot, in the night it was broken, and the water drunke and dried vp. Soone after the ſicke and wounded men were carried to the next principall Towne, called Dingenacuſh, being about three miles diſtant from the foreſaide hauen, where our ſhippe roade, to the Eaſtwards, that there they might be the better refreſhed, and had the Chirurgians dayly to attend vpon them. Here we wel refreſhed our ſelues whileſt the Iriſh harpe ſounded ſweetely in our eares, and here we, who for the former extremities were in maner halfe dead, had our liues (as it were) reſtored vnto vs againe.

This Dingenacuſh is the chiefe Towne in al that part of Ireland, it conſiſteth but of one maine ſtreete, from whence ſome ſmaller doe proceede on either ſide. It hath had gates (as it ſeemeth) in times paſt at either ende to open and ſhut as a Towne of warre, and a Caſtle alſo. The houſes are very ſtrongly built with thicke ſtone walles, and narrow windowes like vnto Caſtles: for as they confeſſed, in time of trouble, by reaſon of the wilde Iriſh or otherwiſe, they vſed their houſes for their defence as Caſtles. The caſtle and all the houſes in the Towne, ſaue foure, were won, burnt, and ruinated by the Erle of Deſmond. Theſe foure houſes fortified themſelues againſt him, and withſtood him and all his power perforce, ſo as he could not winne them.

There remaineth yet a thicke ſtone wall that paſſeth ouerthwart the midſt of the ſtreete which was a part of their fortification. Notwithſtanding whileſt they thus defended themſelues, as ſome of them yet aliue confeſſed, they were driuen to as great extremities as the Iewes, beſieged by Titus the Romane Emperour, inſomuch that they were conſtrained to eat dead mens carcaſes for hunger. The Towne is nowe againe ſomewhat repaired, but in effect there remaine but the ruines of the former Towne. Commonly they haue no chimneis in their houſes, excepting them of the better ſort, ſo that the ſmoake was very troubleſom to vs, while we continued there. Their fewell is turfes, which they haue very good, and whinnes or furres. There groweth little wood thereabouts, which maketh building chargeable there: as alſo want of lime (as they reported) which they are faine to fetch from farre, when they haue neede thereof. But of ſtones there is ſtore ynough, ſo that with them they commonly make their hedges to part ech mans ground from other; and the ground ſeemeth to be nothing elſe within but rockes and ſtones: Yet it is very fruitfull and plentifull of graſſe, and graine, as may appeare by the abundance of kine and cattel there: inſomuch that we had good muttons (though ſomewhat leſſe then ours in England) for two ſhillings or fiue groates a piece, good pigges and hennes for 3. pence a piece.

The greateſt want is induſtrious, painefull, and husbandly inhabitants to till and trimme the ground: for the common ſort, if they can prouide ſufficient to ſerue from hand to mouth, take no further care.

Of money (as it ſeemeth) there is very ſmall ſtore amongſt them, which perhaps was the cauſe that made them double and triple the prizes of many things we bought of them, more then they were before our comming thither.

Good land was here to be had for foure pence the Acre yeerely rent. There are Mines of Allome, Tinne, braſſe, and yron. Stones wee ſawe there as cleare as Chriſtall, naturally ſquared like Diamonds.

Mines in Ireland.

That part of the Countrey is all ful of great mountaines and hills, from whence came running downe the pleaſant ſtreames of ſweete freſh running water. The naturall hardneſſe of that Nation appeareth in this, that their ſmall children runne vſually in the middeſt of Winter vp and downe the ſtreetes bare-foote and bare-legged, with no other apparell (many times) ſaue onely a mantell to couer their nakedneſſe.

The chiefe Officer of their Towne they call their Soueraigne, who hath the ſame office and authoritie among them that our Maiors haue with vs in England, and hath his Sergeants to attend vpon him, and beare the Mace before him as our Maiors.

We were firſt intertained at the Soueraignes houſe, which was one of thoſe 4. that withſtood the Erle of Deſmond in his rebellion. They haue the ſame forme of Common prayer word for word in Latin, that we haue here in England. Vpon the Sunday the Soueraigne commeth into the Church with his Sergeant before him, and the Sheriffe and others of the Towne accompany him, and there they kneele downe euery man by himſelfe priuately to make his prayers. After this they riſe and go out of the Church againe to drinke, which being done, they returne againe into the Church, and then the Miniſter beginneth prayers.

Their maner of baptizing differeth ſomething from ours: part of the ſeruice belonging thereto is repeated in Latin, and part in Iriſh. The Miniſter taketh the child in his hands, and firſt dippeth it backwards, and then forwards, ouer head and eares into the cold water in the midſt of Winter, whereby alſo may appeare their naturall hardneſſe, (as before was ſpecified.) They had neither Bell, drum, nor trumpet, to call the Pariſhioners together, but they expect till their Soueraigne come, and then they that haue any deuotion follow him.

They make their bread all in cakes, and, for the tenth part, the bakers bake for all the towne.

We had of them ſome 10. or 11. Tunnes of beere for the Victory, but it proued like a preſent purgation to them that tooke it, ſo that we choſe rather to drinke water then it.

The 20. of December we looſed frõ hence, hauing well prouided our ſelues of freſh water, and other things neceſſary, being accompanied with ſir Edw. Dennie, his Lady, and two yong ſonnes.

This day in the morning my Lord going aſhoare to diſpatch away ſpeedily ſome freſh water that remained for the Victory, the winde being very faire for vs, brought vs newes that there were 60. Spaniſh prizes taken and brought to England. For two or three dayes wee had a faire winde, but afterwards it ſcanted ſo, that (as I ſaid before) we were faine to keepe a cold Chriſtmas with The Biſhop and his clearkes.

Captaine Liſter drowned.

After this we met with an Engliſh ſhip, that brought vs ioyful news of 91. Spaniſh prizes that were come to England: and ſorrowfull newes withall, that the laſt and beſt prize we tooke, had ſuffered ſhipwracke at a place vpon the coaſt of Cornwal which the Corniſh men cal Als Efferne, that is, Hel-cliffe, and that Captaine Liſter and all the men in the ſhip were drowned, ſaue 5. or 6. the one halfe Engliſh, the other Spaniſh that ſaued themſelues with ſwimming: but notwithſtanding much of the goods were ſaued, and reſerued for vs, by ſir Francis Godolphin, and the worſhipful gentlemen of the Countrey there. My Lord was very ſorry for Captaine Liſters death, wiſhing that he had loſt his voyage to haue ſaued his life.

The 29. of December we met with another ſhippe, that tolde vs the ſame newes, and that ſir Martin Frobiſher, & Captaine Reymond had taken the Admirall and vice-Admirall of the Fleet that we eſpied going to Terçera hauen. But the Admiral was ſunke with much leaking, neere to the Idy Stone, a rocke that lieth ouer againſt Plimouth ſound, and the men were ſaued.

This ſhip alſo certified vs that Captaine Preſtons ſhip had taken a prize laden with ſiluer. My Lord entred preſently into this ſhip, & went to Falmouth, and we held on our courſe for Plimouth. At night wee came neere to the Ram-head (the next Cape Weſtwards from Plimouth ſound) but we were afraid to double it in the night, miſdoubting the ſcantneſſe of the winde. So we ſtood off to Sea halfe the night, and towards morning had the winde more large, and made too litle ſpare thereof, that partly for this cauſe, and partly through miſtaking of the land, wee were driuen ſo much to lee-wards, that we could not double that Cape: Therefore we returned backe againe, and came into Falmouth hauen, where wee ſtrucke on ground in 17. foote water: but it was a low ebbe, and ready againe to flowe, and the ground ſoft, ſo as no hurt was done. Here with gladneſſe wee ſet foote againe vpon the Engliſh ground (long deſired) and refreſhed our ſelues with keeping part of Chriſtmas vpon our natiue ſoile.

The valiant fight performed by 10. Merchants ſhips of London, againſt 12. Spaniſh gallies in the Straights of Gibralter, the 24. of April 1590.

IT is not long ſince ſundry valiant ſhips appertaining to the Marchants of London, were fraighted & rigged forth, ſome for Venice, ſome for Conſtantinople, & ſome to ſundry other places of trafique, among whom theſe enſuing met within the Straights of Gibraltar, as they were taking their courſe homewards, hauing before eſcaped all other danger. The firſt whereof was the Salomon apperteining to M. Alderman Barnam of London, and M. Bond, and M. Twyd of Harwich; which went foorth the firſt day of February laſt. The ſecond was the Margaret and Iohn belonging to M. Wats of London: The thirde was the Minion: The fourth was the Aſcenſion. The fifth was the Centurion of Maſter Cordal: The ſixt the Violet: the ſeuenth the Samuel: the eight the Creſſcent: the ninth the Elizabeth: and the 10. was the Richard belonging to M. Duffield. All theſe ſhips being of notable and approued ſeruice, comming neere to the mouth of the Straights hard by the coaſt of Barbary, deſcried twelue tall Gallies brauely furniſhed and ſtrongly prouided with men and munition, ready to ſeaze vpon theſe Engliſh ſhips: which being perceiued by the Captaines and Maſters thereof, wee made ſpeedy preparation for the defence of our ſelues, ſtill waiting all the night long for the approching of the enemie. In the morning early being the Tueſday in Eaſter weeke, and the 24 of April 1590, according to our vſual cuſtomes, we ſaid Seruice and made our prayers vnto Almightie God, beſeeching him to ſaue vs from the hands of ſuch tyrants as the Spaniards, whom we iuſtly imagined to be, and whom we knew and had found to be our moſt mortall enemies vpon the Sea. And hauing finiſhed our prayers, and ſet our ſelues in a readineſſe, we perceiued them to come towards vs, and that they were indeede the Spaniſh Gallies that lay vnder the conduct of Andre Doria, who is Vice-roy for the King of Spaine in the Straights of Gibraltar, and a notable knowne enemie to all Engliſhmen. So when they came ſomewhat neerer vnto vs, they waued vs a maine for the King of Spaine, and wee waued them a maine for the Queene of England, at which time it pleaſed Almightie God greatly to incourage vs all in ſuch ſort, as that the neerer they came the leſſe we feared their great multitudes and huge number of men, which were planted in thoſe Gallies to the number of two or three hundred men in ech Gallie. And it was thus concluded among vs, that the foure firſt and talleſt ſhips ſhould be placed hindmoſt, and the weaker & ſmalleſt ſhips formoſt, and ſo it was performed, euery man being ready to take part of ſuch ſucceſſe as it ſhould pleaſe God to ſend.

February 1590.

At the firſt encounter the Gallies came vpon vs very fiercely, yet God ſo ſtrengthened vs, that if they had bene ten times more, we had not feared them at all. Whereupon the Salomon being a hot ſhippe, and hauing ſundry caſt pieces in her, gaue the firſt ſhotte in ſuch a ſowre ſort, as that it ſhared away ſo many men as ſate on the one ſide of a Gallie, and pierced her through in ſuch maner, as that ſhe was ready to ſinke, which made them to aſſault vs the more fiercely. Whereupon the reſt of our ſhippes, eſpecially the foure chiefeſt, namely, the Margaret and Iohn, the Minion, and the Aſcenſion followed, and gaue a hot charge vpon them, and they at vs, where began a hot and fierce battaile with great valiancie the one againſt the other, and ſo continued for the ſpace of ſixe houres. About the beginning of this our fight there came two Flemings to our Fleet, who ſeeing the force of the Gallies to be ſo great, the one of them preſently yeelded, ſtrooke his ſailes, and was taken by the Gallies, whereas if they would haue offered themſelues to haue fought in our behalfe and their owne defence, they needed not to haue bene taken ſo cowardly as they were to their coſt. The other Fleming being alſo ready to performe the like piece of ſeruice began to vaile his ſailes, and intended to haue yeelded immediatly. But the Trumpetter in that ſhippe plucked foorth his faulchion and ſtepped to the Pilote at the helme, and vowed that if he did not ſpeedily put off to the Engliſh Fleete, and ſo take part with them, he would preſently kill him: which the Pilote for feare of death did, and ſo by that meanes they were defended from preſent death, and from the tyrannie of thoſe Spaniards, which doubtleſſe they ſhould haue found at their handes.

A fight of ſixe houres long.

A faint-hearted Fleming.

Thus we continued in fight ſixe houres and ſomewhat more, wherein God gaue vs the vpper hand, and we eſcaped the hands of ſo many enemies, who were conſtrained to flie into harbour and ſhroude themſelues from vs, and with ſpeed to ſeeke for their owne ſafetie. This was the handie worke of God, who defended vs all from danger in ſuch ſort, as that there was not one man of vs ſlaine. And in all this fierce aſſault made vpon vs by the Spaniſh power, wee ſuſtained no hurt or damage at all more then this, that the ſhrowds and backe-ſtay of the Salomon, who gaue the firſt and laſt ſhot, and galled the enemie ſhrewdly all the time of the battell, were cleane ſtriken off.

The battel being ceaſed, we were conſtrained for want of wind to ſtay and waft vp and downe, and then went backe againe to Tition in Barbary, which is ſixe leagues off from Gibraltar, and when we came thither we found the people wonderous fauourable to vs, who being but Moores and heathen people ſhewed vs where to haue freſh water and al other neceſſaries for vs. And there we had ſuch good intertainment, as if we had bene in any place of England.

The gouernour was one that fauoured vs greatly, whom wee in reſpect of his great friendſhip preſented with giftes and ſuch commodities as we had in our cuſtodie, which he wonderfully wel accepted of: and here we ſtayed foure dayes.

After the battell was ceaſed, which was on Eaſter Tueſday, we ſtayed for want of winds before Gibraltar, vntill the next morning, where wee were becalmed, and therefore looked euery houre when they would haue ſent foorth ſome freſh ſupply againſt vs, but they were farre vnable to doe it, for all their Gallies were ſo ſore battered, that they durſt not come foorth of the harbour, by reaſon of our hot reſiſtance which they ſo lately before had receiued. Yet were they greatly vrged thereunto by the Gouernour of the ſaid Towne of Gibraltar.

At our being at Tition in Barbary, there we heard report of the hurt that wee had done to the Gallies, for at our comming from them wee could not well diſcerne any thing at all by reaſon of the ſmoake which the powder had made: there we heard that we had almoſt ſpoiled thoſe twelue Gallies by ſhooting them cleane through, that two of them were ready to ſinke, and that wee had ſlaine of their men ſuch great abundance, as that they were not able to furniſh foorth any more Gallies at all for that yeere.

Thus after we came from Tition, we aſſayed to depart the Straight three ſeuerall times, but could not paſſe, yet, God be thanked, the fourth time wee came ſafely away, and ſo ſailed with a pleaſant winde vntill wee came vpon the coaſt of England, which was in the beginning of the moneth of Iuly 1590.

The valiant fight performed in the Straight of Gibraltar, by the Centurion of London, againſt fiue Spaniſh Gallies, in the moneth of April 1591.

IN the moneth of Nouember 1590, there were ſundry ſhippes appertaining to ſeuerall Marchants of London, which were rigged and fraught foorth with marchandize, for ſundry places within the Straight of Gibraltar: who, together hauing winde and weather, which oft-time fell out very vncertaine, arriued ſafely in ſhort ſpace, at ſuch places as they deſired. Among whom was the Centurion of London, a very tall ſhippe of burden, yet but weakely manned, as appeareth by this diſcourſe following.

This aforeſaid ſhippe called The Centurion ſafely arriued at Marſeils, where after they had deliuered their goods, they ſtayed about the ſpace of fiue weekes, and better, and then tooke in lading, intending to returne to England.

Now when the Centurion was ready to come away from Marſeils, there were ſundry other ſhippes of ſmaller burden which entreated the Maſter thereof, (whoſe name is Robert Bradſhaw, dwelling at Lime-houſe) to ſtay a day or two for them; vntill they were in a readineſſe to depart with them, thereby perſwading them, that it would be farre better for them to ſtay and goe together in reſpect of their aſſiſtance, then to depart of themſelues without company, and ſo happily for want of aide fall into the hands of their enemies in the Spaniſh Gallies. Vpon which reaſonable perſwaſion, notwithſtanding that this ſhippe was of ſuch ſufficiencie as they might hazard her in the danger of the Sea, yet they ſtayed for thoſe litle ſhippes, according to their requeſt, who together did put to Sea from Marſeils, and vowed in generall not to flie one from another, if they ſhould happen to meete with any Spaniſh Gallies.

Theſe ſmall ſhippes, accompanied with the Centurion, ſayling along the coaſt of Spaine, were vpon Eaſter day in the Straight of Gibraltar ſuddenly becalmed, where immediatly they ſaw ſundry Gallies make towards them, in very valiant and couragious ſort: the chiefe Leaders and ſouldiers in thoſe Gallies brauely apparelled in ſilke coates, with their ſiluer whiſtles about their neckes, and great plumes of feathers in their hattes, who with their Caliuers ſhot at the Centurion ſo faſt as they might: ſo that by 10. of the clocke and ſomewhat before, they had boorded the Centurion, who before their comming had prepared for them, and intended to giue them ſo ſoure a welcome as they might. And thereupon hauing prepared their cloſe fights, and all things in a readineſſe, they called vpon God, on whom onely they truſted: and hauing made their prayers, and cheered vp one another to fight ſo long as life endured, they beganne to diſcharge their great Ordinance vpon the Gallies, but the little ſhippes durſt not come forward, but lay aloofe, while fiue Gallies had boorded them, yea and with their grapling irons made their Gallies faſt to the ſaid ſhippe called the Centurion.

The Gallies were grapled to the Centurion in this maner, two lay on one ſide, and two on another, and the Admirall lay full in the ſterne, which galled and battered the Centurion ſo ſore, that her maine Maſte was greatly weakened, her ſailes filled with many holes, and the Mizzen and ſterne made almoſt vnſeruiceable.

During which time there was a ſore and deadly fight on both ſides, in which the Trumpet of the Centurion ſounded foorth the deadly points of warre, and encouraged them to fight manfully againſt their aduerſaries: on the contrary part, there was no warlike Muſicke in the Spaniſh

Gallies, but onely their whiſtles of ſiluer, which they ſounded forth to their owne contentment: in which fight many a Spaniard was turned into the Sea, and they in multitudes came crawling and hung vpon the ſide of the ſhippe, intending to haue entred into the ſame, but ſuch was the courage of the Engliſhmen, that ſo faſt as the Spaniards did come to enter, they gaue them ſuch entertainment, that ſome of them were glad to tumble aliue into the Sea, being remedileſſe for euer to get vp aliue. In the Centurion there were in all, of men and boyes, fourtie and eight, who together fought moſt valiantly, and ſo galled the enemie, that many a braue and luſtie Spaniard loſt his life in that place.

The Centurion was fired fiue ſeuerall times, with wilde fire and other prouiſion, which the Spaniards threw in for that purpoſe: yet, God be thanked, by the great and diligent foreſight of the Maſter it did no harme at all.

In euery of the Gallies there were about 200. ſouldiers: who together with the ſhot, ſpoiled, rent, and battered the Centurion very ſore, ſhot through her maine Maſte, and ſlew 4. of the men in the ſaid ſhippe, the one of them being the Maſters mate.

Ten other perſons were hurt, by meanes of ſplinters which the Spaniards ſhotte: yea, in the ende when their prouiſion was almoſt ſpent, they were conſtrained to ſhoote at them hammers, and the chaines from their ſlaues, and yet God bee thanked, they receiued no more domage: but by ſpoyling and ouerwearying of the Spaniards, the Engliſhmen conſtrained them to vngrapple themſelues, and get them going: and ſure if there had bene any other freſh ſhippe or ſuccour to haue relieued and aſſiſted the Centurion, they had ſlaine, ſuncke, or taken all thoſe Gallies and their Souldiers.

The Dolphin lay a looſe off and durſt not come neere, while the other two ſmall ſhippes fledde away, ſo that one of the Gallies went from the Centurion and ſet vpon the Dolphin, which ſhippe immediatly was ſet on fire with their owne powder, whereby both men and ſhippe periſhed: but whether it was with their good wills or no, that was not knowen vnto the Centurion, but ſure, if it had come forward, and bene an aide vnto the Centurion, it is to bee ſuppoſed that it had not periſhed.

Fiue houres and a halfe this fight continued, in which time both were glad to depart onely to breath themſelues, but when the Spaniards were gone, they neuer durſt returne to fight: yet the next day ſixe other Gallies came and looked at them, but durſt not at any hand meddle with them.

Thus God deliuered them from the handes of their enemies, and gaue them the victory: for which they heartily praiſed him, and not long after ſafely arriued in London.

☞ There were preſent at this fight Maſter Iohn Hawes Marchant, and ſundry other of good accompt.

A report of the trueth of the fight about the Iſles of Açores, the laſt of Auguſt 1591. betwixt the Reuenge, one of her Maieſties ſhippes, and an Armada of the king of Spaine; Penned by the honourable Sir Water Ralegh knight.

BEcauſe the rumours are diuerſly ſpred, as well in England as in the Lowe countreis and elſe where, of this late encounter betweene her Maieſties ſhips and the Armada of Spaine; and that the Spaniards according to their vſuall maner, fill the world with their vaine-glorious vaunts, making great apparance of victories, when on the contrary, themſelues are moſt commonly and ſhamefully beaten and diſhonoured; thereby hoping to poſſeſſe the ignorant multitude by anticipating & forerunning falſe reports: It is agreeable with all good reaſon, for manifeſtation of the truth, to ouercome falſhood and vntrueth; that the beginning, continuance and ſucceſſe of this late honourable encounter of Sir Richard Greenuil, and other her Maieſties Captaines, with the Armada of Spaine; ſhould be truely ſet downe and publiſhed without partialitie or falſe imaginations. And it is no marueile that the Spaniard ſhould ſeeke by falſe and ſlanderous pamphlets, aduiſoes and Letters, to couer their owne loſſe, and to derogate from others their due honors, eſpecially in this fight being performed far off: ſeeing they were not aſhamed in the yeere 1588. when they purpoſed the inuaſion of this land, to publiſh in ſundry languages in print, great victories in wordes, which they pleaded to haue obteined againſt this Realme; and ſpred the ſame in a moſt falſe ſort ouer all parts of France, Italy, and elſe where. When ſhortly after it was happily manifeſted in very deed to al Nations, how their Nauy which they termed inuincible, conſiſting of 140. ſaile of ſhippes, not onely of their owne kingdome, but ſtrengthened with the greateſt Argoſies, Portugal Caracks, Florentines, and huge hulks of other Countreis, were by 30. of her Maieſties owne ſhips of war, and a few of our owne Marchants, by the wiſe, valiant, and aduantagious conduct of the L. Charles Howard high Admirall of England, beaten and ſhuffled together; euen from the Lizard in Cornwall firſt to Portland, where they ſhamefully left Don Pedro de Valdes, with his mightie ſhip; from Portland to Cales, where they loſt Hugo de Moncado, with the Gallias of which he was Captaine, and from Cales, driuen with ſquibs from their anchors, were chaſed out of the ſight of England, round about Scotland and Ireland. Where for the ſympathie of their barbarous religion, hoping to finde ſuccour and aſſiſtance, a great part of them were cruſht againſt the rocks, and thoſe other that landed, being very many in number, were notwithſtanding broken, ſlaine, and taken, and ſo ſent from village to village coupled in halters, to be ſhipped into England. Where her Maieſtie of her Princely and inuincible diſpoſition, diſdaining to put them to death, and ſcorning either to retaine or entertaine them: they were all ſent backe againe to their countreys, to witnes and recount the worthy achieuements of their inuincible and dreadfull Nauy: Of which the number of Souldiers, the fearefull burthen of their ſhippes, the commanders names of euery ſquadron, with all other their magaſines of prouiſions, were put in print, as an Army and Nauy vnreſiſtable, and diſdaining preuention. With all which ſo great and terrible an oſtentation, they did not in all their ſailing round about England, ſo much as ſinke or take one ſhippe, Barke, Pinneſſe, or Cockbote of ours: or euer burnt ſo much as one ſheepecote of this land. Whenas on the contrarie, Sir Francis Drake, with onely 800. ſouldiers not long before, landed in their Indies, and forced Sant-Iago, Santo Domingo, Cartagena, and the forts of Florida.

And after that, Sir Iohn Norris marched from Peniche in Portugall, with a handfull of ſouldiers, to the gates of Lisbone, being aboue 40 Engliſh miles. Where the Earle of Eſſex himſelfe and other valiant Gentlemen braued the Citie of Lisbone, encamped at the very gates; from whence, after many dayes abode, finding neither promiſed partie, nor prouiſion to batter; they made retrait by land, in deſpight of all their Garriſons, both of horſe & foote. In this ſort I haue a little digreſſed from my firſt purpoſe, onely by the neceſſarie compariſon of theirs and our actions: the one couetous of honour without vaunt of oſtentation; the other ſo greedy to purchaſe the opinion of their owne affaires, and by falſe rumors to reſiſt the blaſts of their owne diſhonours, as they will not onely not bluſh to ſpread all manner of vntruthes: but euen for the leaſt aduantage, be it but for the taking of one poore aduenturer of the Engliſh, will celebrate the victory with bonefires in euery towne, alwayes ſpending more in faggots, then the purchaſe was worth they obtained. When as we neuer thought it worth the conſumption of two billets, when we haue taken eight or ten of their Indian ſhippes at one time, and twentie of the Braſill fleete. Such is the difference betweene true valure, and oſtentation: and betweene honorable actions, and friuolous vaineglorious vaunts. But now to returne to my purpoſe.

The L. Thomas Howard with ſixe of her Maieſties ſhippes, ſixe victualers of London, the Barke Ralegh, & two or three other Pinnaſes riding at anker neere vnto Flores, one of the Weſterly Ilands of the Azores, the laſt of Auguſt in the afternoone, had intelligence by one Captaine Middleton of the approch of the Spaniſh Armada. Which Middleton being in a very good ſailer had kept them company three dayes before, of good purpoſe, both to diſcouer their forces the more, as alſo to giue aduiſe to my L. Thomas of their approch. Hee had no ſooner deliuered the newes but the fleete was in ſight: many of our ſhippes companies were on ſhore in the Iland; ſome prouiding balaſt for their ſhips; others filling of water and refreſhing themſelues from the land with ſuch things as they could either for money, or by force recouer. By reaſon whereof our ſhips being all peſtered and romaging euery thing out of order, very light for want of balaſt, and that which was moſt to our diſaduantage, the one halfe part of the men of euery ſhippe ſicke, and vtterly vnſeruiceable: for in the Reuenge there were ninety diſeaſed: in the Bonauenture, not ſo many in health as could handle her maine ſaile. For had not twenty men beene taken out of a Barke of ſir George Careys, his being commaunded to be ſunke, and thoſe appointed to her, ſhe had hardly euer recouered England. The reſt, for the moſt parte, were in little better ſtate. The names of her Maieſties ſhippes were theſe as followeth, the Defiance, which was Admiral, the Reuenge Viceadmirall, the Bonauenture commaunded by Captaine Croſſe, the Lion by George Fenner, the Foreſight by M. Thomas Vauaſour, and the Crane by Duffild. The Foreſight & the Crane being but ſmal ſhips; only the other were of the middle ſize; the reſt, beſides the Barke Ralegh, commaunded by Captaine Thin, were victuallers, and of ſmall force or none. The Spaniſh fleet hauing ſhrouded their approch by reaſon of the Iland; were now ſo ſoone at hand, as our ſhippes had ſcarce time to way their anchors, but ſome of them were driuen to let ſlippe their Cables and ſet ſaile. Sir Richard Grinuile was the laſt that wayed, to recouer the men that were vpon the Iland, which otherwiſe had bene loſt. The L. Thomas with the reſt very hardly recouered the winde, which Sir Richard Grinuile not being able to doe, was perſwaded by the Maſter and others to cut his maine ſayle, and caſt about, and to truſt to the ſayling of the ſhip: for the ſquadron of Siuil were on his weather bow. But Sir Richard vtterly refuſed to turne from the enemie, alleaging that hee would rather chooſe to die, then to diſhonour himſelfe, his countrey, and her Maieſties ſhippe, perſwading his companie that hee would paſſe through the two ſquadrons, in deſpight of them, and enforce thoſe of Siuil to giue him way. Which hee performed vpon diuers of the formoſt, who, as the Mariners terme it, ſprang their luffe, and fell vnder the lee of the Reuenge. But the other courſe had bene the better, and might right well haue bene anſwered in ſo great an impoſſibility of preualing. Notwithſtanding out of the greatneſſe of his minde, he could not be perſwaded. In the meane while as hee attended thoſe which were neareſt him, the great San Philip being in the winde of him, and comming towards him, becalmed his ſailes in ſuch ſort, as the ſhippe could neither make way, nor feele the helme: ſo huge and high carged was the Spaniſh ſhip, being of a thouſand and fiue hundreth tuns. Who after layd the Reuenge aboord. When he was thus bereft of his ſailes, the ſhips that were vnder his lee luffing vp, alſo layd him aboord: of which the next was the Admiral of the Biſcaines, a very mighty and puiſſant ſhippe commanded by Brittandona. The ſayd Philip carried three tire of ordinance on a ſide, and eleuen pieces in euery tire. She ſhot eight forth right out of her chaſe, beſides thoſe of her ſterne ports.

After the Reuenge was entangled with this Philip, foure other boorded her; two on her larboord, and two on her ſtarboord. The fight thus beginning at three of the clock in the afternoone, continued very terrible all that euening. But the great San Philip hauing receiued the lower tire of the Reuenge, diſcharged with croſſebarſhot, ſhifted her ſelfe with all diligence from her ſides, vtterly miſliking her firſt entertainement. Some ſay that the ſhippe foundred, but we cannot report it for truth, vnleſſe we were aſſured. The Spaniſh ſhips were filled with companies of ſouldiers, in ſome two hundred beſides the mariners; in ſome fiue, in others eight hundreth. In ours there were none at all beſide the mariners, but the ſeruants of the commanders and ſome few voluntary gentlemen onely. After many enterchanged volies of great ordinance and ſmall ſhot, the Spaniards deliberated to enter the Reuenge, and made diuers attempts, hoping to force her by the multitudes of their armed ſoulders and Muſketters, but were ſtill repulſed againe and againe, and at all times beaten backe into their owne ſhips, or into the ſeas. In the beginning of the fight, the George Noble of Londō hauing receiued ſome ſhot thorow her by the Armadas, fell vnder the lee of the Reuenge, and aſked Sir Richard what he would command him, being but one of the victualers and of ſmall force: Sir Richard bid him ſaue himſelfe, and leaue him to his fortune. After the fight had thus, without intermiſſion, continued while the day laſted and ſome houres of the night, many of our men were ſlaine and hurte, and one of the great Gallions of the Armada, and the Admirall of the Hulkes both ſunke, and in many other of the Spaniſh ſhippes great ſlaughter was made. Some write that ſir Richard was very dangerouſly hurt almoſt in the beginning of the fight, and lay ſpeechleſſe for a time ere hee recouered. But two of the Reuenges owne company, brought home in a ſhip of Lime from the Ilandes, examined by ſome of the Lordes, and others, affirmed that hee was neuer ſo wounded as that hee forſooke the vpper decke, till an houre before midnight; and then being ſhot into the bodie with a Muſket as hee was a dreſſing, was againe ſhot into the head, and withall his Chirurgion wounded to death. This agreeth alſo with an examination taken by ſir Francis Godolphin, of foure other mariners of the ſame ſhippe being returned, which examination, the ſaid ſir Francis ſent vnto maſter William Killegrue, of her Maieſties priuy Chamber.

But to returne to the fight, the Spaniſh ſhips which attempted to bord the Reuenge, as they were wounded and beaten off, ſo alwayes others came in their places, ſhe hauing neuer leſſe then two mighty Gallions by her ſides, and aboard her: So that ere the morning, from three of the clocke the day before, there had fifteene ſeuerall Armadas aſſayled her; and all ſo ill approued their entertainement, as they were by the breake of day, far more willing to harken to a compoſition, then haſtily to make any more aſſaults or entries. But as the day encreaſed, ſo our men decreaſed: and as the light grew more and more, by ſo much more grewe our diſcomforts. For none appeared in ſight but enemies, ſauing one ſmall ſhip called the Pilgrim, commaunded by Iacob Whiddon, who houered all night to ſee the ſucceſſe: but in the morning bearing with the Reuenge, was hunted like a hare amongſt many rauenous houndes, but eſcaped.

All the powder of the Reuenge to the laſt barrell was now ſpent, all her pikes broken, fortie of her beſt men ſlaine, and the moſt part of the reſt hurt. In the beginning of the fight ſhee had but one hundreth free from ſicknes, and foureſcore & ten ſicke, laid in hold vpon the Ballaſt. A ſmall troup to man ſuch a ſhip, & a weake garriſon to reſiſt ſo mighty an army. By thoſe hundred al was ſuſteined, the voleis, boordings, and entrings of fifteen ſhips of warre, beſides thoſe which beat her at large. On the contrary, the Spaniſh were alwayes ſupplied with ſouldiers brought from euery ſquadron: all maner of Armes and powder at will. Unto ours there remained no comfort at all, no hope, no ſupply either of ſhips, men, or weapons; the Maſtes all beaten ouer boord, all her tackle cut aſunder, her vpper worke altogether raſed, and in effect euened ſhee was with the water, but the very foundation or bottome of a ſhip, nothing being left ouer head either for flight or defence. Sir Richard finding himſelfe in this diſtreſſe, and vnable any longer to make reſiſtance, hauing endured in this fifteene houres fight, the aſſault of fifteene ſeuerall Armadas, all by turnes aboord him, and by eſtimation eight hundred ſhotte of great Artillerie, beſides many aſſaults and entries; and that himſelfe and the ſhippe muſt needes be poſſeſſed by the enemy, who were now all caſt in a ring round about him (The Reuenge not able to mooue one way or other, but as ſhe was moued with the waues and billow of the ſea) commaunded the Maſter gunner, whom hee knew to be a moſt reſolute man, to ſplit and ſinke the ſhippe; that thereby nothing might remaine of glory or victory to the Spaniards: ſeeing in ſo many houres fight, and with ſo great a Nauie they were not able to take her, hauing had fifteene houres time, aboue ten thouſand men, & fiftie and three ſaile of men of warre to performe it withall: and perſwaded the company, or as many as hee could induce, to yeelde themſelues vnto God, and to the mercie of none elſe; but as they had, like valiant reſolute men, repulſed ſo many enemies, they ſhould not nowe ſhorten the honour of their Nation, by prolonging their owne liues for a few houres, or a fewe dayes. The Maſter gunner readily condeſcended and diuers others; but the Captaine and the Maſter were of another opinion, and beſought Sir Richard to haue care of them: alleaging that the Spaniard would be as ready to entertaine a compoſition, as they were willing to offer the ſame: and that there being diuers ſufficient and valiant men yet liuing, and whoſe wounds were not mortal, they might do their Countrey and prince acceptable ſeruice hereafter. And whereas Sir Richard had alleaged that the Spaniards ſhould neuer glory to haue taken one ſhippe of her Maieſtie, ſeeing they had ſo long and ſo notably defended themſelues; they anſwered, that the ſhippe had ſixe foote water in holde, three ſhot vnder water, which were ſo weakely ſtopped, as with the firſt working of the ſea, ſhe muſt needs ſinke, and was beſides ſo cruſht and bruſed, as ſhee could neuer be remoued out of the place.

The Spaniſh 53. ſaile.

And as the matter was thus in diſpute, and Sir Ricard refuſing to hearken to any of thoſe reaſons; the Maſter of the Reuenge (while the Captaine wanne vnto him the greater party) was conuoyd aboord the Generall Don Alfonſo Baçan. Who (finding none ouer haſtie to enter the Reuenge againe, doubting leaſt Sir Richard would haue blowne them vp and himſelfe, and perceiuing by the report of the Maſter of the Reuenge his dangerous diſpoſition) yeelded that all their liues ſhould be ſaued, the company ſent for England, & the better ſort to pay ſuch reaſonable ranſome as their eſtate would beare, and in the meane ſeaſon to be free from Gally or impriſonment. To this he ſo much the rather condeſcended as wel, as I haue ſaid, for feare of further loſſe and miſchiefe to themſelues, as alſo for the deſire he had to recouer Sir Richard Greenuil; whom for his notable valure he ſeemed greatly to honour and admire.

When this anſwere was returned, and that ſafetie of life was promiſed, the common ſort being now at the ende of their perill, the moſt drew backe from Sir Richard and the Maſter gunner, being no hard matter to diſſwade men from death to life. The Maſter gunner finding himſelfe and Sir Richard thus preuented and maſtered by the greater number, would haue ſlaine himſelfe with a ſword, had he not bene by force with-held and locked into his Cabben. Then the Generall ſent many boates aboord the Reuenge, and diuers of our men fearing Sir Richards diſpoſition, ſtole away aboord the Generall and other ſhippes. Sir Richard thus ouermatched, was ſent vnto by Alfonſo Baçan to remooue out of the Reuenge, the ſhippe being maruellous vnſauorie, filled with blood and bodies of dead, and wounded men like a ſlaughter houſe. Sir Richard anſwered that hee might doe with his body what he liſt, for hee eſteemed it not, and as he was carried out of the ſhippe hee ſwounded, and reuiuing againe deſired the company to pray for him. The Generall vſed Sir Richard with all humanitie, and left nothing vnattempted that tended to his recouerie, highly commending his valour and worthineſſe, and greatly bewailing the danger wherein he was, being vnto them a rare ſpectacle, and a reſolution ſildome approoued, to ſee one ſhippe turne toward ſo many enemies, to endure the charge and boording of ſo many huge Armadas, and to reſiſt and repell the aſſaults and entries of ſo many ſouldiers. All which and more is confirmed by a Spaniſh Captaine of the ſame Armada, and a preſent actor in the fight, who being ſeuered from the reſt in a ſtorme, was by the Lion of London a ſmall ſhip taken, and is now priſoner in London.

The generall commander of the Armada, was Don Alphonſo Baçan, brother to the Marques of Santa Cruz. The admiral of the Biſcaine ſquadron, was Britandona. Of the ſquadron of Siuil,

Marques of Arumburch. The Hulkes and Flybotes were cōmanded by Luis Coutinho. There were ſlaine and drowned in this fight, well neere one thouſand of the enemies, and two ſpeciall commanders Don Luis de ſant Iohn, and Don George de Prunaria de Mallaga, as the Spaniſh captaine confeſſeth, beſides diuers others of ſpeciall account, whereof as yet report is not made.

The Admirall of the Hulkes and the Aſcenſion of Siuil were both ſunke by the ſide of the Reuenge; one other recouered the rode of Saint Michael, and ſunke alſo there; a fourth ranne her ſelfe with the ſhore to ſaue her men. Sir Richard died as it is ſayd, the ſecond or third day aboord the Generall, and was by them greatly bewailed. What became of his body, whether it were buried in the ſea or on the land we know not: the comfort that remayneth to his friends is, that hee hath ended his life honourably in reſpect of the reputation wonne to his nation and countrey, and of the ſame to his poſteritie, and that being dead, he hath not outliued his owne honour.

For the reſt of her Maieſties ſhips that entred not ſo farre into the fight as the Reuenge, the reaſons and cauſes were theſe. There were of them but ſixe in all, whereof two but ſmall ſhips; the Reuenge ingaged paſt recouery: The Iland of Flores was on the one ſide, 53 ſaile of the Spaniſh, diuided into ſquadrons on the other, all as full filled with ſouldiers as they could containe: Almoſt the one halfe of our men ſicke and not able to ſerue: the ſhips growne foule, vnroomaged, and ſcarcely able to beare any ſaile for want of balaſt, hauing bene ſixe moneths at the ſea before. If all the reſt had entred, all had bene loſt: for the very hugenes of the Spaniſh fleete, if no other violence had beene offered, would haue cruſht them betweene them into ſhiuers. Of which the diſhonour and loſſe to the Queene had bene farre greater then the ſpoyle or harme that the enemie could any way haue receiued. Notwithſtanding it is very true, that the Lord Thomas would haue entred betweene the ſquadrons, but the reſt would not condeſcend; and the maſter of his owne ſhip offred to leape into the ſea, rather then to conduct that her Maieſties ſhip and the reſt to bee a pray to the enemie, where there was no hope nor poſſibilitie either of defence or victory. Which alſo in my opinion had ill ſorted or anſwered the diſcretion and truſt of a Generall, to commit himſelfe and his charge to an aſſured deſtruction, without hope or any likelyhood of preuailing: thereby to diminiſh the ſtrength of her Maieſties Nauy, and to enrich the pride and glory of the enemie. The Foreſight of the Queenes commaunded by M. Thomas Vauiſor performed a very great fight, and ſtayed two houres as neere the Reuenge as the weather would permit him, not forſaking the fight, till he was like to be encompaſſed by the ſquadrons, & with great difficultie cleared himſelfe. The reſt gaue diuers voleis of ſhot, and entred as farre as the place permitted, and their owne neceſſities, to keepe the weather gage of the enemie, vntill they were parted by night. A fewe dayes after the fight was ended, and the Engliſh priſoners diſperſed into the Spaniſh and Indie ſhips, there aroſe ſo great a ſtorme from the Weſt and Northweſt, that all the fleete was diſperſed, as well the Indian fleete which were then come vnto them, as the reſt of the Armada that attended their arriuall, of which 14. ſaile together with the Reuenge, and in her 200 Spaniards, were caſt away vpon the Iſle of S. Michael. So it pleaſed them to honor the buriall of that renowmed ſhip the Reuenge, not ſuffering her to periſh alone, for the great honour ſhe archieued in her life time. On the reſt of the Ilandes there were caſt away in this ſtorme, 15 or 16 more of the ſhips of warre: and of an hundred and odde ſaile of the Indie fleete, expected this yeere in Spaine, what in this tempeſt, and what before in the bay of Mexico, and about the Bermudas, there were 70 and odde conſumed and loſt, with thoſe taken by our ſhippes of London, beſides one very rich Indian ſhip, which ſet her ſelfe on fire, beeing boorded by the Pilgrim, and fiue other taken by maſter Wats his ſhips of London, between the Hauana and Cape S. Antonio. The fourth of this moneth of Nouember we receiued letters from the Tercera, affirming that there are 3000 bodies of men remaining in that Iland, ſaued out of the periſhed ſhips: & that by the Spaniards owne confeſſion, there are 10000 caſt away in this ſtorme, beſides thoſe that are periſhed betweene the Ilands and the maine. Thus it hath pleaſed God to fight for vs, and to defend the iuſtice of our cauſe, againſt the ambicious and bloody pretenſes of the Spaniard, who ſeeking to deuoure all nations, are themſelues deuoured. A manifeſt teſtimony how iniuſt and diſpleaſing, their attempts are in the ſight of God, who hath pleaſed to witnes by the ſucceſſe of their affaires, his miſlike of their bloody and iniurious deſignes, purpoſed and practiſed againſt all Chriſtian princes, ouer whom they ſeeke vnlawfull and vngodly rule and Empery.

One day or two before this wracke happened to the Spaniſh fleete, when as ſome of our priſoners deſired to be ſet on ſhore vpon the Ilandes, hoping to be from thence tranſported into England, which libertie was formerly by the Generall promiſed: One Morice Fitz Iohn, ſonne of olde Iohn of Deſmond, a notable traytour, couſin german to the late Earle of Deſmond, was ſent to the Engliſh from ſhippe to ſhippe, to perſwade them to ſerue the King of Spaine, The arguments hee vſed to induce them were theſe. The increaſe of pay which he promiſed to be trebled: aduancement to the better ſort: and the exerciſe of the true Catholique Religion, and ſafetie of their ſoules to all. For the firſt, euen the beggerly and vnnaturall behauiour of thoſe Engliſh and Iriſh rebels, that ſerued the King in that preſent action, was ſufficient to anſwere that firſt argument of rich pay. For ſo poore and beggerly they were, as for want of apparell they ſtripped their poore Countrey men priſoners out of their ragged garments, worne to nothing by ſixe months ſeruice, and ſpared not to deſpoyle them euen of their bloody ſhirtes, from their wounded bodies, and the very ſhooes from their feete; A notable teſtimonie of their rich entertainment and great wages. The ſecond reaſon was hope of aduancement if they ſerued well, and would continue faithfull to the King. But what man can bee ſo blockiſhly ignorant euer to expect place or honour from a forraine King, hauing no other argument or perſwaſion then his owne diſloyaltie; to be vnnaturall to his owne Countrey that bred him; to his parents that begat him, and rebellious to his true Prince, to whoſe obedience he is bound by oath, by nature, and by Religion? No, they are onely aſſured to be imployed in all deſperate enterpriſes, to bee helde in ſcorne and diſdaine euer among thoſe whom they ſerue. And that euer traitour was either truſted or aduanced I could neuer yet reade, neither can I at this time remember any example. And no man coulde haue leſſe becommed the place of an Orator for ſuch a purpoſe, then this Morice of Deſmond. For the Erle his coſen being one of the greateſt ſubiects in that kingdom of Ireland, hauing almoſt whole Countreis in his poſſeſſion; ſo many goodly Mannors, caſtles, and lordſhips; the Count Palatine of Kerry, fiue hundred gentlemen of his owne name and family to follow him, beſides others (all which he poſſeſſed in peace for three or foure hundred yeeres) was in leſſe then three yeeres after his adhering to the Spaniards and rebellion, beaten from all his holdes, not ſo many as ten gentlemen of his name left liuing, himſelfe taken and beheaded by a ſouldier of his owne nation, and his land giuen by a Parliament to her Maieſtie, and poſſeſſed by the Engliſh: His other coſen Sir Iohn of Deſmond taken by Maſter Iohn Zouch, and his body hanged ouer the gates of his natiue Citie to be deuoured by rauens: the thirde brother Sir Iames hanged, drawne, and quartered in the ſame place. If hee had withall vaunted of his ſucceſſe of his owne houſe, no doubt the argument would haue mooued much, and wrought great effect; which becauſe hee for that preſent forgot, I thought it good to remember in his behalfe. For matter of Religion it would require a particuler volume, if I ſhould ſet downe how irreligiouſly they couer their greedy and ambicious pretenſes, with that veile of pietie. But ſure I am, that there is no kingdome or common-wealth in all Europe, but if they be reformed, they then inuade it for religion ſake: if it bee, as they terme Catholique, they pretend title; as if the Kings of Caſtile were the naturall heires of all the world: and ſo betweene both, no kingdome is vnſought. Where they dare not with their owne forces to inuade, they baſely entertaine the traitours and vacabonds of all Nations; ſeeking by thoſe and by their runnagate Ieſuits to winne parts, and haue by that meane ruined many Noble houſes and others in this lande, and haue extinguiſhed both their liues and families. What good, honour, or fortune euer man yet by them atchieued, is yet vnheard of, or vnwritten. And if our Engliſh Papiſts doe but looke into Portugall, againſt which they haue no pretence of Religion, how the Nobilitie are put to death, impriſoned, their rich men made a praye, and all ſorts of people captiued; they ſhall finde that the obedience euen of the Turke is eaſie and a libertie, in reſpect of the ſlauerie and tyrannie of Spaine. What haue they done in Sicill, in Naples, Millaine, and in the Low countreis; who hath there bene ſpared for Religion at all? And it commeth to my remembrance of a certaine Burger of Antwerpe, whoſe houſe being entred by a company of Spaniſh ſouldiers, when they firſt ſacked the Citie, hee beſought them to ſpare him and his goods, being a good Catholique, and one of their owne partie and faction. The Spaniards anſwered, that they knew him to be of a good conſcience for himſelfe, but his money, place, iewels, and goods, were all hereticall, and therefore good prize. So they abuſed and tormented the fooliſh Fleming, who hoped that an Agnus Dei had bene a ſufficient target againſt all force of that holy and charitable nation. Neither haue they at any time as they proteſt inuaded the kingdomes of the Indies and Peru, and elſewhere, but onely led thereunto, rather to reduce the people to Chriſtianitie, then for either gold or Emperie. When as in one onely Iſland called Hiſpaniola, they haue waſted thirtie hundred thouſand of the naturall people, beſides many millions elſe in other places of the Indies: a poore and harmeleſſe people created of God, and might haue bene wonne to his knowledge, as many of them were, and almoſt as many as euer were perſwaded thereunto. The ſtorie whereof is at large written by a Biſhop of their owne nation called Bartholomew de las Caſas, and tranſlated into Engliſh and many other languages, intituled The Spaniſh cruelties. Who would therefore repoſe truſt in ſuch a nation of rauenous ſtrangers, and eſpecially in thoſe Spaniards which more greedily thirſt after Engliſh blood, then after the liues of any other people of Europe, for the many ouerthrowes and diſhonours they haue receiued at our hands; whoſe weakeneſſe wee haue diſcouered to the world, and whoſe forces at home, abroad, in Europe, in India, by ſea and land, wee haue euen with handfulles of men and ſhippes, ouerthrowen and diſhonoured. Let not therefore any Engliſh man, of what religion ſoeuer, haue other opnion of the Spaniards, but that thoſe whom hee ſeeketh to winne of our Nation, he eſteemeth baſe and trayterous, vnworthy perſons, or vnconſtant fooles: and that he vſeth his pretence of religion, for no other purpoſe but to bewitch vs from the obedience of our naturall Prince; thereby hoping in time to bring vs to ſlauery and ſubiection, and then none ſhall be vnto them ſo odious, and diſdayned as the traitours themſelues, who haue ſolde their Countrey to a ſtranger, and forſaken their faith and obedience contrarie to nature & religion; and contrarie to that humane and generall honour, not onely of Chriſtians, but of heathen and irreligious nations, who haue alwayes ſuſtayned what labour ſoeuer, and embraced euen death it ſelfe, for their countrey, Prince, or common-wealth. To conclude, it hath euer to this day pleaſed God to proſper and defend her Maieſtie, to breake the purpoſes of malicious enemies, of forſworne traytors, and of iniuſt practiſes and inuaſions. She hath euer beene honoured of the worthieſt kings, ſerued by faithfull ſubiects, and ſhall by the fauour of God, reſiſt, repell, and confound all whatſoeuer attempts againſt her ſacred perſon or kingdome. In the meane time let the Spaniard and traytour vaunt of their ſucceſſe, and wee her true and obedient vaſſals, guided by the ſhining light of her vertues, ſhall alwayes loue her, ſerue her, and obey her to the end of our liues.

A particular note of the Indian fleet, expected to haue come into Spaine this preſent yeere of 1591. with the number of ſhippes that are periſhed of the ſame: according to the examination of certaine Spaniards lately taken and brought into England by the ſhips of London.

The fleete of Noua Hiſpania, at their firſt gathering together and ſetting forth, were two and fiftie ſailes. The Admirall was of ſixe hundred tunnes, and the Vice Admirall of the ſame burthen. Foure or fiue of the ſhippes were of nine hundred and 1000 tunnes a peece, ſome fiue hundred, and ſome foure hundred and the leaſt of two hundred tuns. Of this fleet 19 were caſt away, and in them 2600 men by eſtimation, which was done along the coaſt of Noua Hiſpania, ſo that of the ſame fleet there came to the Hauana but 33 ſailes.

The fleete of Terra Firma were, at their firſt departure from Spaine, fiftie ſailes, which were bound for Nombre de Dios, where they did diſcharge their lading, and thence returned to Cartagena, for their healths ſake, vntill the time the treaſure was readie they ſhould take in, at the ſaid Nombre de Dios. But before this fleete departed, ſome were gone by one or two at a time, ſo that onely 23 ſayles of this fleete arriued in the Hauana,

At the Hauana there met
- 33 ſailes of Noua Hiſpania.
- 23 ſailes of Terra Firma.
- 12 ſailes of San Domingo.
- 9 ſailes of the Hunduras.

The whole 77 ſhippes, ioyned and ſet ſailes all together at the Hauana, the 17 of Iuly, according to our account, and kept together vntill they came into the height of thirtie fiue degrees, which was about the tenth of Auguſt, where they found the winde at Southweſt chaunged ſuddenly to the North, ſo that the ſea comming out of the Southweſt, and the wind very violent at North, they were put all into great extremitie, and then firſt loſt the Generall of their fleete, with 500 men in her; and within three or foure dayes after, an other ſtorme riſing, there were fiue or ſixe other of the biggeſt ſhippes caſt away with all their men, together with their Vice-Admirall.

And in the height of 38, degrees, about the end of Auguſt, grew another great ſtorme, in which all the fleet ſauing 48. ſailes were caſt away: which 48, ſailes kept together, vntill they came in ſight of the Iſlands of Coruo and Flores, about the fift or ſixt of September, at which time a great ſtorme ſeparated them: of which number fifteene or ſixeteene were after ſeene by theſe Spanyards to ride at anchor vnder the Tercera; and twelue or fourteene more to beare with the Iſland of S. Michael; what became of them after that theſe Spaniards were taken cannot yet be certified; their opinion is, that very few of thee fleet are eſcaped, but are either drowned or taken. And it is otherwaies of late certified, that of this whole fleete that ſhould haue come into Spaine this yeere, being one hundred twentie and three ſayle, there are arriued as yet but fiue and twentie. This note was taken out of the examination of certaine Spaniardes, that were brought into England by ſixe of the ſhips of London, which tooke ſeuen of the aboue named Indian Fleete, neere the Iſlands of Açores.

A report of Maſter Robert Flicke directed to Maſter Thomas Bromley, Maſter Richard Staper, and Maſter Cordall concerning the ſucceſſe of a part of the London ſupplies ſent to my Lord Thomas Howard to the Iſles of the Azores, 1591.

WOrſhipfull, my heartie commendations vnto you premiſed: By my laſt of the twelfth of Auguſt from this place I aduertiſed you particularly of the accidents of our Fleete vntill then. It remayneth now to relate our endeuours in accompliſhing the order receiued for the ioyning with my Lorde Thomas Howard, together with the ſucceſſe wee haue had. Our departure from hence was the ſeuenteenth of Auguſt, the winde not ſeruing before. The next day following I cauſed a Flagge of Counſell to be put foorth, whereupon the Captaines and Maſters of euery ſhippe came aboord, and I acquainted them with my Commiſſion, firmed by the Right honourable the Lordes of her Maieſties Counſell, and with all the aduertiſements of Sir Edward Denny, of my Lordes determination to remaine threeſcore leagues to the Weſt of Fayal, ſpreading North and South betwixt thirtie ſeuen and a halfe or thirty eight and a halfe degrees. And not finding him in this heigth to repaire to the Iſles of Flores and Coruo, where a Pinneſſe of purpoſe ſhould ſtay our comming vntill the laſt of Auguſt, with intent after that day to repaire to yͤ coaſt of Spaine, about the heigth of The Rocke, ſome twentie or thirtie leagues off the ſhoare. The which being aduiſedly conſidered of, hauing regard vnto the ſhortneſſe of time, by reaſon of our long abode in this place, and the vncertainety of the weather to fauour vs, it was generally holden for the beſt and ſecureſt way to meete with my Lorde, to beare with the heigth of The Rocke, without making any ſtay vpon the coaſt, and ſo directly for the Iſlands which was accordingly fully agreed and performed. The 28 day wee had ſight of the Burlings, and the 29 being thwart of Peniche, the winde ſeruing vs, without any ſtay we directed our courſe Weſt for the Iſlands. The 30 day we met with Captaine Royden in the Red-Roſe, ſometime called the Golden Dragon, ſeparated from my Lorde of Cumberland in a ſtorme: who certified vs of 50 ſayles of the Spaniſh kings Armadas to be gone for the Iſlands, but could not informe vs any newes of my Lord Thomas Howard, otherwiſe then vpon preſumption to remaine about the Iſlandes, and ſo wee continued our courſe the winde ſtanding with vs.

The 4 of September we recouered Tercera, and ranged along all the Iſlands, both on the South and North ſides the ſpace of foure dayes: during which time it was not our hap to meete with any ſhipping, whereby either to vnderſtand of my Lord, or of the Indian Fleete: hereupon we directed our courſe to the Weſt from Fayal, according to the inſtructions of Sir Edward Denny. The 11 day in the plying to the Weſtwards we deſcried a ſayle out of our maine toppe, and in the afternoone betweene two and three of the clocke hauing rayſed her hull, the weather became calme, ſo that the ſhip could not fetch her. I ſent off my Skiffe throughly manned, furniſhed with ſhot and ſwords, The Cherubin, and the Margaret and Iohn doing the like. Vpon this the ſayle ſtood off againe, and the night approching, our boates loſt her and ſo returned. In this our purſute after the ſayle the Centurion being left a ſterne, the next morning wee miſſed her, and ſpent that day in plying vp and downe ſeeking her. And for as much as euery of the ſhips had receiued order, that, if by extremity of weather or any other miſchance they ſhould be ſeuered from our Fleete, they ſhould meete and ioyne at Flores, we, according to the inſtructions of Sir Edward Denny, proceeded to the finding of my Lord Thomas Howard, being in the heigth appointed and not able to holde the ſame by reaſon of extreme tempeſtes which forced vs to the Iſles of Flores and Coruo, which we made the 14 day in the morning, and there alſo ioyned againe with the Centurion, whoſe company before we had loſt: who declared vnto vs that the 12 day, being the ſame day they loſt vs, they met with fiue and fortie ſailes of the Indian Fleete. The ſame night vpon theſe newes we came to an anker betweene Flores and Coruo, and the morrow following at the breake of day, a flagge of Counſell being put out, the Captaines & Maſters came aboord me: where, for the deſire to vnderſtand ſome tidings of my Lord, as alſo the ſupplying of our want of water, it was thought good to ſend our boats furniſhed on ſhore, vnder the conduct of Captaine Brothus, and then it was alſo ordered after our departure thence to range along the South

Southſides of the Iſlands to the end we might either vnderſtand of my Lord, or elſe light on the Indian fleete; and in the miſſing of our purpoſe to direct our courſe for Cape Sant Vincente.

The boates, according to the foreſayd determination, being ſent on ſhoare, it chaunced that The Coſtely ryding vttermoſt in the roade, did weigh to bring her ſelfe more neere among vs for the ſuccour of the boates ſent off, and in opening the land diſcouered two ſayles, which we in the roade could not perceiue: whereupon ſhee gaue vs a warning piece, which cauſed vs to waue off our boates backe, and before they could recouer our ſhippes, the diſcryed ſhips appeared vnto vs, towardes the which we made with all haſte, and in a very happie houre, as it pleaſed God. In that wee had not ſo ſoone cleared the lande, and ſpoken with one of them, which was a Barke of Briſtoll, who had alſo ſought my Lorde in the heigths appointed and could not finde him, but a violent ſtorme aroſe, in ſuch manner, as if we had remained in the roade, we had beene in daunger of periſhing: and the ſame extremely continued during the ſpace of threeſcore houres. In which ſtorme I was ſeparated from our Fleete, except the Cherubin and the Coſtely, which kept company with mee. And ſo ſayling among the Ilands, I viewed the roade of Fayal, and finding no Roaders there, went directly for the Iſle Tercera.

A violent ſtorme.

The nineteenth day in the morning comming vnto ẏ ſame with intent to edge into the Road, a tempeſt aroſe and ſcanted the winde, that we could not ſeaze it: from the which being driuen we fell among certaine of the Indian Fleete, which the ſayde ſtorme diſperſed, and put them from the road: whereupon my ſelfe with the other two ſhips in companie gaue ſeuerall chaſes, and thereby loſt the company each of other.

In following our chaſe aboue noone we made her to ſtrike and yeelde, being a Portugall, laden with hides, ſalſa-perilla and Anile. At this very inſtant we eſpied another, and taking our Prize with vs followed her, and ſomewhat before night obtayned her, named the Conception, Franciſco Spinola being Captaine, which was laden with hides, Cochonillio, and certaine raw ſilke. And for that the ſeas were ſo growen, as neither with boate nor ſhippe they were to bee boorded, we kept them till fit opportunitie. The ſame night a litle before day there happened another into our company, ſuppoſing vs by our two prizes to be of their Fleete, which we vntill the morning diſſembled.

A Portugall Prize taken.

A rich Weſt India Prize taken.

The 20 day in the morning, the ſayle being ſhot ſomewhat a head of vs, hauing a ſpeciall care for the ſafe keeping of the two former, we purpoſed to cauſe our Prizes to put out more ſayle thereby to keepe them neere in giuing chaſe to the other: vnto the which the Maſter would not hearken nor be perſwaded, but that they would follow vs: by the which his wilfulneſſe by ſuch time as we had cauſed the other to yeelde, and ſent men aboord, the Conception, Franciſco Spinola Captaine being brought a ſterne, and hauing gotten the winde of vs, ſtood off with all her ſayles bearing, ſo as we were forced to make a new chaſe of her: and had not the winde enlarged vpon vs we had loſt her. In the purſute before we recouered her and brought our ſelues againe in company of our other Prizes, the whole day was ſpent, and by this meanes we loſt the opportunitie of that day, the weather fitly ſeruing to boord the Portugall Prize, which was in great diſtreſſe, and made requeſt to take them being readie to ſinke, and, as we well perceiued, they ceaſed not to pumpe day and night: the which ſhip to all our iudgements the ſame night periſhed in the ſea.

The one and twentie day the Conception, whereof Franciſco Spinola was Captaine, being alſo in a leake, and the ſame ſtill increaſing notwithſtanding the continuall pumping, in ſuch ſort as not to be kept long aboue water, I tooke and diſcharged out of her two and forty cheſtes of Cochonillio and ſilkes, and ſo left her with 11 foote water in holde, and her furniture and 4700 hides, vnto the ſeas.

The other Prize which we haue brought into the harborough is named Noſtra Sennora de los remedios, whereof Franciſco Aluarez is Captaine, laden with 16 cheſts of Cochonillio, certaine fardels of raw ſilke, and about 4000 hides. Vpon the diſcharge of the goods your worſhips ſhall be particularly aduertiſed thereof.

In the boording of the Prizes the diſorder of the company was ſuch, as that they letted not preſently beſides the rifling of the Spaniards to breake open the cheſts and to pillage ſuch money as was in them: notwithſtanding that it was ordered at conuenient leaſure to haue gone aboord my ſelfe, and there in the preſence of three or foure witneſſes to haue taken a iuſt account thereof, and the ſame to haue put in ſafe keeping, according to the effects of articles receiued in this behalfe.

And whereas there were alſo certaine ſummes of money taken from the company which they had thus purloyned and embeſeled, and the ſame with ſome other parcels brought aboord my ſhip, amounting vnto 2129 pezoes & a halfe, the company as pillage due vnto them demanded to haue the ſame ſhared, which I refuſed, & openly at the maine maſte read the articles firmed by my Lord Treaſurer and my lord Admirall, whereby we ought to be directed, and that it was not in mee any way to diſpoſe thereof vntill the ſame were finally determined at home. Hereupon they mutined and at laſt grew into ſuch furie, as that they would haue it or els breake downe the cabbine, which they were alſo readie to put in practiſe, whereby I was forced to yeeld, leaſt the Spaniards which we had aboord being many perceiuing the ſame, might haue had fit opportunitie to riſe againſt vs, which, after their brawles were appeaſed, they ſought to haue put in execution.

By the laſt aduiſe from Caſtile the Generall of the kings Armada which is lately come to ſea hath receiued commaundement to ioyne his Fleete with thoſe of the Indies, and for to ſtay altogether at Tercera vntill the 15 of October: for that 6 pataches with 7 or 8 millions of the kings treaſure will come by that time, or els they ſtay their comming from Hauana vntil Ianuary next, or the kings further pleaſure therein to be knowen. Theſe Pataches are ſaid to be of 300 tuns the piece, and to cary 30 pieces of braſſe, and alſo of ſaile reported to haue the aduantage of any ſhipping.

There periſhed of the Indies Fleete ſunke in the ſea before their comming to Flores 11 ſailes, whereof the General was one, and not one man ſaued. And it is by the Spaniards themſelues preſuppoſed that the ſtormes which we had at Flores & at Tercera haue deuoured many more of them, whereof in part we were eye witneſſes. And ſo what by the ſeas and our men of warre I preſume that of 75 ſailes that came from Hauana, halfe of them will neuer arriue in Spaine.

The 11 day of October at night we came to anker in the ſound of Plimouth, and the next morning with our Prize came into Cattewater: for which God be thanked: for that a vehement ſtorme aroſe, and with ſuch fury increaſed, as that the Prize was forced to cut ouer her maine maſte: otherwiſe with the violence of the ſtorme, her ground tackle being bad, ſhe had driuen on ſhore: which was the moſt cauſe that moued me to put in here; intending now here to diſcharge the goods without further aduenture, and haue certified thus much vnto my Lord Admirall, and therewith alſo deſired to vnderſtande the direction of the Lords of the Counſell together with yours, inſomuch as my Lord Thomas Howard is not returned. How the reſt of our conſorts which were ſeparated from vs by weather haue ſped, or what Prizes they haue taken, whereof there is much hope by reaſon of the ſcattering of the Weſt Indian Fleete, as yet we are able to ſay nothing. And thus expecting your anſwere, and for all other matters referring me vnto the bearer Captaine Furtho, I end. Plymouth the 24 of October. 1591.

Your worſhips louing friend
Robert Flicke.

A large teſtimony of Iohn Huighen van Linſchoten Hollander, concerning the worthy exploits atchieued by the right honourable the Earle of Cumberland, By Sir Martine Frobiſher, Sir Richard Greenuile, and diuers other Engliſh Captaines, about the Iſles of the Açores, and vpon the coaſts of Spaine and Portugall, in the yeeres 1589, 1590, 1591, &c. recorded in his excellent diſcourſe of voiages to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, cap. 96, 97. and 99.

The 22 of July 1589 about Euening, being by the Iſlands of Flores & Coruo, we perceiued 3 ſhips that made towards vs, which came from vnder the land, which put vs in great feare: for they came cloſe by our Admirall, and ſhot diuers times at him, and at another ſhip of our companie, whereby we perceiued them to be Engliſhmen, for they bare an Engliſh flagge vpon their maine tops, but none of them ſhewed to be aboue 60 tunnes in greatnes. About Euening they followed after vs, and all night bore lanternes with candles burning in them at their ſternes, although the Moone ſhined. The ſame night paſſing hard by the Iſland of Fayal, the next day being betweene the Iſland of S. George that lay on our right hand, and the ſmall Iſland called Graciosa on our left hand, we eſpied the 3 Engliſh ſhips ſtill following vs yͤ tooke counſell together, whereof one ſailed backwards, thinking that ſome other ſhip had come after vs without cõpany, & for a time was out of ſight, but it was not long before it came again to yͤ other two, wherwith they tooke coũſel & came all 3 together againſt our ſhip, becauſe we lay in the lee of al our ſhips, & had yͤ Iſland of S. George on the one ſide in ſtead of a ſconce, thinking to deale ſo with vs, that in yͤ end we ſhould be conſtrained to run vpon the ſhore, whereof we wanted not much, and in that manner with their flagges openly diſplayed, came luſtily towardes vs, ſounding their Trumpets, and ſayled at the leaſt three times about vs, beating vs with Musket and Caliuer, and ſome great pieces, and did vs no hurt in the body of our ſhippe, but ſpoyled all our ſayles and ropes, and to conclude, wee were ſo plagued by them, that no man durſt put foorth his head, and when wee ſhot off a peece, wee had at the leaſt an houres worke to lade it againe, whereby wee had ſo great a noiſe and crie in the ſhippe, as if we had all bene caſt away, whereat the English men themſelues beganne to mocke vs, and with a thouſand ieſting words called vnto vs. In the meane time the other ſhippes hoiſed all their ſayles, and did the beſt they could to ſaile to the Iſland of Tercera, not looking once behinde them to helpe vs, doubting they ſhould come too late thither, not caring for vs, but thinking themſelues to haue done ſufficiently ſo they ſaued their owne ſtakes, whereby it may eaſily be ſeene what company they keepe one with the other, and what order is among them. In the ende the English men perceiuing ſmall aduantage againſt vs, (little knowing in what caſe and feare we were, as alſo becauſe wee were not farre from Tercera) left vs, which made vs not a litle to reioyce, as thinking our ſelues to bee riſen from death to life, although wee were not well aſſured, neyther yet voyde of feare till we lay in the road before Tercera, and vnder the ſafetie of the Portingales fort, and that we might get thither in good time wee made all the ſailes we could: on the other ſide we were in great doubt, becauſe we knew not what they did in the Iſland, nor whether they were our friends or enemies, and we doubted ſo much the more, becauſe we found no men of warre nor any Caruels of aduiſe from Portingal, as wee made our accounts to doe, that might conuoy vs from thence, or giue vs aduiſe, as in that countrey ordinarily they vſe to do: and becauſe the English men had bene ſo victorious in thoſe parts, it made vs ſuſpect that it went not well with Spaine: they of the Iſland of Tercera were in no leſſe feare then we, for ſeeing our fleete, they thought vs to bee Engliſhmen, and that wee came to ouerrun the Iſland, becauſe the 3. Engliſhmen had bound vp their flags, and came in company with vs: for the which cauſe the Iſland ſent out two Caruels that lay there with aduiſe from the king, for the Indian ſhips that ſhould come thither. Thoſe Caruels came to view vs, and perceiuing what we were, made after vs, whereupon the English ſhips left vs, and made towardes them, becauſe the Caruels thought them to be friends, and ſhunned them not, as ſuppoſing them to bee of our company, but we ſhot foure or fiue times and made ſignes vnto them that they ſhould make towards the Iſland, which they preſently did. The Engliſhmen perceiuing that, did put forwards into the ſea, & ſo the Caruels borded vs telling vs that the men of the Iſland were all in armes, as hauing receiued aduiſe from Portugall, that Sir Francis Drake was in readineſſe, and woulde come vnto thoſe Iſlands. They likewiſe brought vs newes of the ouerthrow of the Spaniſh fleet before England, and that the English men had bene before the gates of Lisbon: whereupon the king gaue vs commandement that we ſhould put into the Iſland of Tercera, and there lie vnder the ſafety of the Caſtle vntil we receiued further aduiſe what we ſhould do, or whether we ſhould ſaile: for that they thought it too dangerous for vs to go to Lisbon. Thoſe newes put our fleet in great feare, and made vs looke vpon eche other not knowing what to ſay, as being dangerous for them to put into the road, becauſe it lieth open to the ſea: ſo that the Indian ſhips, although they had expreſſe commandement from the king, yet they durſt not anker there, but onely vſed to come thither, and to lie to and fro, ſending their boates on land to fetch ſuch neceſſaries as they wanted, without ankering: but being by neceſſitie compelled thereunto, as alſo by the kings commandement, and for that we vnderſtood the Erle of Cumberland not to bee farre from thoſe Iſlands with certaine ſhips of warre, we made neceſſitie a vertue, and entring the road, ankered cloſe vnder the Caſtle, ſtaying for aduiſe and order from the king, to performe our voyage, it being then the 24. of Iuly, and S. Iames day.

The day before the Erle of Cumberland with 6. or 7. ſhips of war, ſailed by the Iſland of Tercera, and to their great good fortune paſſed out of ſight, ſo that they diſpatched themſelues in all haſte, and for the more ſecuritie, tooke with them 4. hundred Spaniards, of thoſe that lay in Garriſon in the Iſland, and with them they ſayled towards Lisbon, hauing a good wind: ſo that within 11 daies after they arriued in the riuer of Lisbon with great gladnes & triumph: for if they had ſtayed but one day longer before they had entred the riuer, they had all beene taken by Captaine Drake, who with 40 ſhips came before Caſcais, at the ſame time that the Indian ſhips caſt anker in the riuer of Lisbon, being garded thither by diuers Gallies.

While I remained in Tercera, the Erle of Cumb. came to S. Marie, to take in freſh water, and ſome other victuals: but the inhabitants would not ſuffer him to haue it, but wounded both himſelfe & diuers of his men, whereby they were forced to depart without hauing any thing there.

The Erle of Cumberland while I lay in Tercera, came vnto the Iſle of Gracioſa, where himſelfe in perſon, with ſeuen or eight in his company went on land, aſking certaine beaſts, hens, and other victuals, with wine and freſh water, which they willingly gaue him, and therewith he departed from thence, without doing them any hurt: for the which the inhabitants thanked him, and commended him for his courteſie, and keeping of his promiſe.

The ſame time that the Erle of Cumberland was in the Iſland of Gracioſa, he came likewiſe to Fayall, where at the firſt time that he came, they beganne to reſiſt him, but by reaſon of ſome controuerſie among them, they let him land, where he razed the Caſtle to the ground, and ſunke all their Ordinance in the ſea, taking with him certaine Carauels and ſhips that lay in the road, with prouiſion of all things that he wanted: and therewith departed againe to ſea. Whereupon the king cauſed the principall actors therein to be puniſhed, and ſent a company of ſouldiers thither againe, which went out of Tercera, with all kinde of warlike munition, and great ſhot, making the fortreſſe vp againe, the better to defend the Iſland, truſting no more in the Portugales.

The 99 Chapter.

The ninth of October 1589. there arriued in Tercera fourteene ſhips that came from the Spaniſh Indies, laden with Cochenile, Hides, Golde, Siluer, Pearles, and other rich wares. They were fiftie in companie, when they departed out of the Hauen of Hauana, whereof, in their comming out of the Channell, eleuen ſunke in the ſame Channell by foule weather, the reſt by a ſtorme were ſcattered and ſeparated one from the other. The next day there came another ſhip of the ſame companie, that ſayled cloſe vnder the Iſland, ſo to get into the Roade: where ſhe met with an Engliſh ſhip that had not aboue three caſt peeces, and the Spaniards 12. They fought a long time together, which we being in the Iſland might ſtand and behold: whereupon the Gouernour of Tercera ſent two boates of Muſketiers to helpe the ſhippe: but before they could come at her, the Engliſh ſhip had ſhot her vnder water, and we ſaw her ſinke into the Sea with all her ſayles vp, and not any thing ſeene of her aboue the water. The Engliſhmen with their boate ſaued the Captaine and about thirtie others with him, but not one penie-worth of the goods, and yet in the ſhippe there was at the leaſt to the value of two hundred thouſand Duckats in Golde, Siluer, and Pearles, the reſt of the men were drowned which might be about fiftie perſons, among the which were ſome Fryers and women, which the Engliſhmen would not ſaue. Thoſe that they had ſaued they ſet on land: and then they ſayled away. The ſeuen and twentieth of the ſame moneth, the ſayd fourteene ſhips hauing refreſhed themſelues in the Iſland departed from Tercera toward Siuill, and comming vpon the coaſt of Spaine they were taken by the Engliſh ſhips that lay there to watch for them, two onely excepted which eſcaped away, and the reſt were wholly caried into England.

About the ſame time the Erle of Cumberland with one of the Queenes ſhips, and fiue or ſixe more, kept about thoſe Iſlands and came oftentimes ſo cloſe vnder the Iſland, and to the Road of Angra, that the people on land might eaſily tell all his men that he had aboord, and knew ſuch as walked on the Hatches: they of the Iſland not once ſhooting at them, although they might eaſily haue done it, for they were within Muſket ſhot both of the towne and fort. In theſe places he continued for the ſpace of two moneths, and ſayled round about the Iſlands, and landed in Gracioſa and Fayal, as in the deſcription of thoſe Iſlands I haue alreadie declared. Here he tooke diuers ſhips and Carauels, which he ſent into England: ſo that thoſe of the Iſland durſt not once put foorth their heads. At the ſame time about three or foure dayes after the Earle of Cumberland had beene in the Iſland of Fayal, and was departed from thence, there arriued in the ſaid Iſland of Fayal ſixe Indian ſhippes, whoſe Generall was one Iuan Doriues: and there they diſcharged in the Iland 4 millions of golde and ſiluer. And hauing with all ſpeede refreſhed their ſhips, fearing the comming of the Engliſhmen they ſet ſayle, and arriued ſafely in S. Lucar, not meeting with the enemie, to the great good lucke of the Spaniards and hard fortune of the Engliſhmen: for that within leſſe then two dayes after the gold and ſiluer was laden againe into the Spaniſh ſhips, the Erle of Cumberland ſayled againe by that Iſland: ſo that it appeared that God would not let them haue it, for if they had once had ſight thereof, without doubt it had bene theirs, as the Spaniards themſelues confeſſed.

In the moneth of Nouember there arriued in Tercera two great ſhippes, which were the Admirall and Viceadmirall of the Fleete laden with ſiluer, who with ſtormie weather were ſeparated from the Fleete, and had beene in great torment and diſtreſſe, and readie to ſinke: for they were forced to vſe all their Pumps: ſo that they wiſhed a thouſand times to haue met with the Engliſhmen to whom they would willingly haue giuen their ſiluer and all that euer they brought with them, onely to ſaue their liues. And although the Erle of Cumberland lay ſtill about thoſe Iſlands, yet they met not with him, ſo that after much paine and labour they got into the Road before Angra, where with all ſpeede they vnladed and diſcharged aboue fiue millions of ſiluer, all in pieces of 8 or 10 pound great: ſo that the whole Kay lay couered with plates and cheſts of ſiluer, full of Ryales of eight, moſt wonderfull to behold, (each million being ten hundred thouſand duckats,) beſides pearles, gold, and other ſtones, which were not regiſtred. The Admirall and chiefe commaunder of thoſe ſhips and Fleete called Aluaro Flores de Quiniones was ſicke of the Neapolitan diſeaſe, and was brought to land, whereof not long after he died in Siuillia. He brought with him the Kings broad ſeale and full authoritie to be Generall and chiefe commaunder vpon the Seas, and of all Fleetes or ſhips, and of all places and Iſlands, or lands whereſoeuer he came: whereupon the gouernour of Tercera did him great honour, and betweene them it was concluded, perceiuing the weakneſſe of their ſhips, and the danger of the Engliſhmen, that they would ſend the ſhippes emptie with ſouldiers to conuey them, either to Siuill or Liſbon, where they could firſt arriue, with aduiſe vnto his Maieſtie of all that had paſt, and that he would giue order to fetch the ſiluer with good and ſafe conuoy. Whereupon the ſaid Aluaro Flores ſtayed there, vnder colour of keeping the ſiluer, but ſpecially becauſe of his diſeaſe, and for that they were affraide of the Engliſhmen. This Aluaro Flores had alone for his owne part aboue 50000 Duckats in pearles, which he ſhewed vnto vs, & ſought to ſell them or barter them with vs for ſpices or bils of exchange. The ſaid two ſhips ſet ſayle with 3 or 4 hundred men, as well ſouldiers as others that came with them out of India, and being at ſea had a ſtorme, wherewith the Admiral burſt and ſunke in the ſea, & not one man ſaued. The Vice-Admirall cut downe her maſt, and ranne the ſhip on ground hard by Setuual, where it burſt in pieces, ſome of the men ſauing themſelues by ſwimming, that brought the newes, but the reſt were drowned.

In the ſame moneth there came two great ſhips out of the Spaniſh Indies, and being within half a mile of the Road of Tercera, they met with an Engliſh ſhip, which, after they had fought long together, tooke them both. About 7 or 8 moneths before, there had beene an Engliſh ſhippe in Tercera, that vnder the name of a Frenchman came to traffike in the Iſland, there to lade woad, and being diſcouered was both ſhip and goods confiſcated to the kings vſe, and all the men kept priſoners: yet went they vp and downe the ſtreetes to get their liuings, by labouring like ſlaues, being in deede as ſafe in that Iſland, as if they had beene in priſon. But in the ende vpon a Sunday, all the Saylers went downe behinde the hils called Breſil: where they found a Fiſher-boat, whereinto they got and rowed into the ſea to the Erle of Cumberlands ſhippes, which to their great fortune chanced at that time to come by the Iſland, and ankered with his ſhips about halfe a mile from the Road of Angra, hard by two ſmall Iſlands, which lie about a baſes ſhot from the Iſland and are full of Goats, Deere and Sheepe, belonging to the inhabitants of the Iſland of Tercera. Thoſe Saylers knew it well, and thereupon they rowed vnto them with their boates, and lying at anker that day, they fetched as many Goates and ſheepe as they had neede of: which thoſe of the towne and of the Iſland well ſaw and beheld, yet durſt not once goe foorth: ſo there remained no more on land but the Maſter and the Marchant of the ſaid Engliſh ſhip. This Maſter had a brother in lawe dwelling in England, who hauing newes of his brothers impriſonment in Tercera, got licence of the Queene of England to ſet forth a ſhip, therewith to ſee if he could recouer his loſſes of the Spaniards by taking ſome of them, and ſo to redeeme his brother that lay priſoner in Tercera, and he it was that tooke the two Spaniſh ſhips before the Towne, the Maſter of the ſhip aforeſaid ſtanding on the ſhore by me, and looking vpon them, for he was my great acquaintance. The ſhips being taken that were worth 300 thouſand duckats, he ſent al the men on land ſauing onely two of the principall Gentlemen, which he kept aboord thereby to ranſome his brother: and ſent the Pilot of one of the Indian ſhips that were taken, with a letter to the Gouernor of Tercera: wherein he wrote that he ſhould deliuer him his brother, & he would ſend the 2 Gentlemen on land: if not, he would ſaile with them into England, as indeed he did, becauſe the Gouernour would not doe it, ſaying that the Gentlemen might make that ſuite to the king of Spaine himſelfe. This Spaniſh Pilot we bid to ſupper with vs, and the Engliſhmen likewiſe, where he ſhewed vs all the manner of their fight, much commending the order and maner of the Engliſhmens fighting, as alſo their courteous vſing of him: but in the end the Engliſh Pilot likewiſe ſtole away in a French ſhip, without paying any ranſome as yet.

In the moneth of Ianuarie 1590 there arriued one ſhip alone in Tercera, that came from the Spaniſh Indies, and brought newes that there was a Fleete of a hundred ſhippes which put out from the Firme land of the Spaniſh Indies, and by a ſtorme were driuen vpon the coaſt called Florida, where they were all caſt away, ſhe hauing onely eſcaped, wherein there were great riches, & many men loſt, as it may well be thought: ſo that they made their account, that of 220 ſhips that for certaine were knowen to haue put out of Noua Spagna, S. Domingo, Hauana, Capo verde, Braſilia, Guinea, &c. in the yeere 1589, to ſaile for Spaine & Portugall, there were not aboue 14 or 15 of them arriued there in ſafetie, all the reſt being either drowned, burſt or taken.

In the ſame moneth of January there arriued in Tercera 15 or 16 ſhips that came from Siuil, which were moſt Flieboats of the Low countries, and ſome Britons that were arreſted in Spaine: theſe came full of ſouldiers, and wel appointed with munition, to lade the ſiluer that lay in Tercera, and to fetch Aluares de Flores by the kings cōmandement into Spaine. And becauſe that time of the yeere there are alwayes ſtormes about thoſe Ilands, therefore they durſt not enter into the road of Tercera, for that as then it blew ſo great a ſtorme that ſome of their ſhips that had ankred were forced to cut downe their maſtes, and were in danger to be loſt: and among the reſt a ſhip of Biſcaie ran againſt the land and was ſtriken in pieces, but all the men ſaued themſelues. The other ſhips were forced to keepe the ſea and ſeperate themſelues one from the other, where wind and weather would driue them vntill the 15 of March for that in all that time they could not haue one day of faire weather to anker in, whereby they endured much miſerie, curſing both the ſiluer and the Iland. This ſtorme being paſt, they chanced to meet with a ſmall Engliſh ſhip of about 40 tunnes in bigneſſe, which by reaſon of the great wind could not beare all her ſailes: ſo they ſet vpon her and tooke her, and with the Engliſh flag in their Admirals ſterne, they came as proudly into the hauen as if they had conquered all the realme of England: but as the Admirall that bare the Engliſh flag vpon her ſterne was entring into the road, there came by chance two Engliſh ſhips by the Iland that paied her ſo well for her paines, that they were forced to cry Miſericordia, and without all doubt had taken her, if ſhe had bene but a mile further in the ſea: but becauſe ſhe got vnder the Fortreſſe, which alſo began to ſhoot at the Engliſhmen, they were forced to leaue her, and to put further into the ſea, hauing ſlaine fiue or ſixe of the Spaniards. The Engliſhmen that were taken in the ſmall ſhippe were put vnder hatches, and coupled in bolts, and after they had bene priſoners 3 or 4 dayes, there was a Spaniſh Enſigne-bearer in the ſhip that had a brother ſlaine in the Fleet that came for England, who as then minding to reuenge his death, and withall to ſhew his manhood on the Engliſh captiues that were in the Engliſh ſhip, which they had taken, as is aforeſayd, tooke a poiniard in his hand and went downe vnder the hatches, where finding the poore Engliſhmen ſitting in boltes, with the ſame poiniard he ſtabbed ſixe of them to the heart: which two others of them perceiuing, claſped each other about the middle, becauſe they would not be murthered by him, & threw themſelues into the ſea and there were drowned. This acte was of all the Spaniards much diſliked and very ill taken, ſo that they caried the Spaniard priſoner vnto Lisbon, where being arriued, the king of Spaine willed he ſhould be ſent into England, that the Queene of England might vſe him as ſhe thought good: which ſentence his friends by intreatie got to be reuerſed, notwithſtanding he commanded he ſhould without all fauour be beheaded: but vpon a good Friday the Cardinall going to maſſe, all the captaines and Commanders made ſo great intreaty for him, that in the end they got his pardon. This I thought good to note, that men might vnderſtand the bloody & diſhoneſt minds of the Spaniards when they haue men vnder their ſubiection.

The ſame two Engliſh ſhips which folowed the Spaniſh Admirall till he had got the Fort of Tercera, as I ſayd before, put into the ſea, where they met with another Spaniſh ſhip being of the ſame Fleet, that had likewiſe bene ſcattred by the ſtorme and was onely miſſing, for the reſt lay in the road. This ſmall ſhip the Engliſhmen tooke, and ſent all the men on ſhore, not hurting any of them: but if they had knowen what had bene done vnto the foreſayd Engliſh captiues, I beleeue they would ſoone haue reuenged themſelues, as afterward many an innocent ſoule paied for it. This ſhip thus taken by the Engliſhmen, was the ſame that was taken and confiſcated in the Iland of Tercera by the Engliſhmen that got out of the Iland in a fiſher boat (as I ſaid before) and was ſold vnto the Spaniards that as then came from the Indies, wherewith they ſayled to S. Lucar, where it was alſo arreſted by the duke, and appointed to go in company to fetch the ſiluer in Tercera, becauſe it was a ſhip that ſailed well, but among the Spaniards Fleet it was the meaneſt of the company. By this means it was taken from the Spaniards and caried into England, and the owners had it againe when they leaſt thought of it.

The 19 of March the aforeſayd ſhips being 19 in number, ſet ſaile, hauing laden the kings ſiluer, and receiued in Aluaro Flores de Quiniones, with his company and good prouiſion of neceſſaries, munition and ſouldiers that were fully reſolued (as they made ſhew) to fight valiantly to the laſt man before they would yeeld or loſe their riches: and although they ſet their courſe for S. Lucar, the wind draue them vnto Lisbon, which (as it ſeemed) was willing by his force to helpe them, and to bring them thither in ſafetie, although Aluaro de Flores, both againſt the wind and weather would perforce haue ſailed to Saint Lucar, but being conſtrained by the wind and importunitie of the ſailers that proteſted they would require their loſſes and damages of him, he was content to ſaile to Lisbon: from whence the ſiluer was by land caried vnto Siuil. At Cape S. Vincent there lay a Fleet of 20 Engliſh ſhips to watch for the Armada, ſo that if they had put into S. Lucar, they had fallē right into their hands, which if the wind had ſerued they had done. And therefore they may ſay that the wind hath lent them a happy voiage: for if the Engliſhmen had met with them, they had ſurely bene in great danger, and poſſibly but few of them had eſcaped, by reaſon of the feare wherewith they were poſſeſſed, becauſe fortune or rather God was wholy againſt them: which is a ſufficiēt cauſe to make the Spaniards out of heart, & to the contrary to giue the Engliſhmen more courage, and to make them bolder for that they are victorious, ſtout and valiant: and ſeeing all their enterpriſes do take ſo good effect, that thereby they are become lords and maſters of the ſea, and need care for no man, as it wel appeareth by this briefe diſcourſe.

The 7 of Auguſt 1590. a nauie of Engliſh ſhips was ſeen before Tercera, being 20 in number, and 5 of them the Queenes ſhips: their Generall was one Martin Frobiſher, as we after had intelligence. They came purpoſely to watch for the Fleet of the Spaniſh Indies, and for the Indian ſhips, and the ſhips of the countreys in the Weſt: which put the Ilanders in great feare, ſpecially thoſe of Fayal, for that the Engliſhmen ſent a trumpet to the Gouernour to aſke certaine wine, fleſh, and other victuals for their money and good friendſhip. They of Fayal did not onely refuſe to giue eare vnto them, but with a ſhot killed their meſſenger or trumpeter: which the Engliſhmen tooke in euill part, ſending them word that they were beſt to looke to themſelues and ſtand vpon their guard, for they ment to come and viſite them whether they would or no. The Gouernour made them anſwere, that he was there in the behalfe of his maieſtie of Spaine, and that he would doe his beſt to keepe them out, as he was bound: but nothing was done, although they of Fayal were in no litle feare, ſending to Tercera for aide, from whence they had certaine barkes with pouder and munition for warre, with ſome biſket and other neceſſary prouiſion.

The 30 of Auguſt we receiued very certaine newes out of Portugal, that there were 80 ſhips put out of the Groine laden with victuals, munition, money and ſouldiours, to goe for Britaine to aide the Catholiques and Leaguers of France againſt the king of Nauarre. At the ſame time two Netherland hulkes comming out of Portugall to Tercera being halfe the Seas ouer, met with 4 of the Queenes ſhips, their Generall being ſir Iohn Hawkins, that ſtaied them, but let them go againe without doing them any harme. The Netherlanders reported, that each of the Queenes ſhips had 80 pieces of Ordinance, and that captaine Drake lay with 40 ſhips in the Engliſh chanell watching for the armie of the Groine: and likewiſe that there lay at the Cape S. Vincent ten other Engliſh ſhips, that if any ſhips eſcaped from the Ilands, they might take them. Theſe tidings put the Ilanders in great feare, leaſt if they failed of the Spaniſh fleete and got nothing by them, that then they would fall vpon the Ilands, becauſe they would not returne emptie home, whereupon they held ſtreit watch, ſending aduiſe vnto the king what newes they heard.

The firſt of September there came to the Iland of S. Michael a Portugall ſhip out of the hauen of Phernambuck in Braſile, which brought newes that the Admirall of the Portugall Fleet that came from India, heuing miſſed the Iland of S. Helena, was of neceſſitie conſtrained to put into Phernambuck, although the king had expreſly vnder a great penaltie forbidden him ſo to doe, becauſe of the wormes that there doe ſpoile the ſhips. The ſame ſhippe wherein Bernardin Ribero was Admirall the yeere before 1589. ſailed out of Lisbon into the Indies, with 5 ſhips in her company, whereof but 4 got into India, the 5 was neuer heard of, ſo that it was thought to be caſt away: the other foure returned ſafe againe into Portugall, though the Admiral was much ſpoiled, becauſe he met with two Engliſh ſhips that fought long with him, and ſlew many of his men, but yet he eſcaped from them.

The 5 of the ſame moneth there arriued in Tercera a carauel of the Iland of Coruo, & brought with her 50 men that had bin ſpoiled by the Engliſhmen who had ſet them on ſhore in the Iland of Coruo, being taken out of a ſhip that came from the Spaniſh Indies, they brought tidings that the Engliſhmen had taken 4 more of the Indian ſhips, & a carauel with the king of Spaines letters of aduiſe for the ſhips comming out of the Portugal Indies, & that with thoſe which they had takē, they were at the leaſt 40 Engliſh ſhips together, ſo ỹ not one bark eſcaped them, but fel into their hands, & that therefore the Portugall ſhips comming out of India durſt not put into the Ilands, but tooke their courſe vnder 40 & 42 degrees, and frō thence ſailed to Lisbon, ſhunning likewiſe the cape S. Vincent, otherwiſe they could not haue had a proſperous iourney of it, for that as then the ſea was ful of Engliſh ſhips. Whereupon the king aduiſed the fleet lying in Hauana in ỹ Spaniſh Indies ready to come for Spaine, that they ſhould ſtay there all that yeere till the next yeere, becauſe of the great danger they might fal into by ỹ Engliſhmen, which was no ſmal charge, & hinderance to the fleet, for that the ſhips that lie there do conſume themſelues, and in a maner eat vp one another, by reaſon of the great nūber of people, together with the ſcarcitie of al things, ſo that many ſhips choſe rather one by one to aduenture thẽſelues alone to get home, then to ſtay there: all which fell into the Engliſhmens hands, whereof diuers of the men were brought into Tercera, for that a whole day we could ſee nothing els, but ſpoiled men ſet on ſhore, ſome out of one ſhip, ſome out of another, that pitie it was to ſee all of them curſing the Engliſhmen & their owne fortunes, with thoſe that had bene the cauſes to prouoke the Engliſhmen to fight, and complaining of the ſmall remedie and order taken therein by the king of Spaines officers.

Great hauock of Spaniards.

The 19 of the ſame moneth there came to Tercera a Carauel of Lisbon, with one of the kings officers, to cauſe the goods that were ſaued out of the ſhip which came from Malacca (for ẏ which we ſtaied there) to be laden and ſent to Lisbon. And at the ſame time there put out of the Groine one Don Alonſo de Baçan, with 40 great ſhips of warre to come vnto the Ilands, there to watch for the fleet of the Spaniſh & Portugall Indies, and the goods of the Malacca ſhip being laden, they were to conuoy thẽ all together into the riuer of Lisbon: but being certaine daies at ſea, alwaies hauing a contrary wind, they could not get vnto the Ilands, onely two of them that were ſcattred from the fleet, arriued at Tercera, and not finding the fleet, they preſently returned to ſeeke them: in the meane time the king changed his mind, & cauſed the fleet to ſtay in India, as I ſaid before: and therefore hee ſent worde vnto Don Alonſo de Baſſan, that hee ſhould returne againe to the Groine, which he preſently did (without doing any thing, nor once approching neer the Ilands, ſauing onely the two foreſayd ſhips, for he well knew that the Engliſhmen lay by the Iland of Coruo, but he would not viſit them: and ſo he returned to the hauen the Groine, whereby our goods that came from Malacca were yet to ſhip, and truſſed vp againe, and forced to ſtay a more fortunate time with patience perforce.

The 23 of October there arriued in Tercera a Carauel with aduiſe out of Portugall, that of 5 ſhips which in the yere 1590 were laden in Lisbon for the Indies, 4 of them were turned againe to Portin. After they had bene 4 moneths abroad, & that the Admirall, wherein the Viceroy called Mathias d'Albukerk ſailed, had onely gotten to India, as afterward newes thereof was brought ouer-land, hauing bin at the leaſt 11 moneths at ſea & neuer ſaw land, and came in great miſery to Malacca. In this ſhip there died by the way 280 men, according to a note by himſelfe made, and ſent to the Cardinal at Lisbon, with the names & ſurnames of euery man, together with a deſcription of his voiage, & the miſery they had endured, which was onely done, becauſe he would not loſe the gouernment of India: and for that cauſe he had ſworne either to loſe his life, or to arriue in India, as in deed he did afterwards, but to the great danger, loſſe and hinderance of his companie, that were forced to buy it with their liues, & onely for want of prouiſion, as it may wel be thought: for he knew full well that if he had returned backe againe into Portugal as the other ſhips did, he ſhould haue bin caſſiered from his Indian regiment, becauſe the people began already to murmure at him for his proud & lofty mind. And amõg other things that ſhewed his pride the more, behind aboue the gallery of his ſhip, he cauſed Fortune to be painted, & his own picture wͭ a ſtaffe ſtanding by her, as it were threatning Fortune, with this poſie, Quero que vencas, that is, I wil haue thee to ouercome: which being read by the Cardinal & other gentlemen (that to honor him brought him aboord his ſhip) it was thought to be a point of exceeding folly: but it is no ſtrange matter among the Portugals: for they aboue all others muſt of force let the foole peepe out of their ſleeues, ſpecially when they are in authoritie, for that I knew the ſaid Mathias d'Albukerk in India, being a ſouldier and a captaine, where he was eſteemed and accounted for one of the beſt of them, & much honoured, and beloued of all men, as behauing himſelfe curteouſly to euery man, whereby they all deſired that he might be Viceroy. But when he once had receiued his patent with full power & authoritie from the king to be Viceroy, he changed ſo much from his former behauior, that by reaſon of his pride, they all began to feare and curſe him, and that before hee departed out of Lisbon, as it is often ſeene in many men that are aduanced vnto ſtate and dignitie.

The 20 of Ianuarie 1591, there was newes brought out of Portugall into Tercera, that the Engliſhmen had takẽ a ſhip that the king had ſent into the Portugal-Indies, wͭ aduiſe to the Viceroy for the returning againe of the 4 ſhips that ſhould haue gone to India, & becauſe the ſhips were come backe againe, that ſhip was ſtuffed and laden as full of goods as poſſible it might be, hauing likewiſe in ready money 500 thouſand duckets in roials of 8, beſides other wares. It departed from Lisbon in the moneth of Nouember 1590, & met with the Engliſhmen, with whõ for a time it fought, but in the end it was taken and caried into England with men & all, yet when they came there, the men were ſet at libertie, and returned into Lisbon, where the captaine was committed priſoner; but he excuſed himſelfe and was releaſed, with whom I ſpake my ſelfe, & he made this report vnto me. At the ſame time alſo they tooke a ſhip that came from the Mine ladẽ with gold, & 2 ſhips laden with pepper & ſpices that were to ſaile into Italy, the pepper onely that was in them, being worth 170 thouſand duckets: all theſe ſhips were caried into England, & made good priſe.

In the moneth of Iuly 1591. there hapned an earthquake in the Iland of S.Michael, which continued frõ the 26 of Iuly, to the 12 of Auguſt, in which time no man durſt ſtay within his houſe but fled into the fields, faſting & praying with great ſorow, for that many of their houſes fel down, and a towne called Villa Franca, was almoſt cleane razed to the ground, all the cloiſters & houſes ſhaken to the earth, and therein ſome people ſlaine. The land in ſome places roſe vp, and the cliffs remoued from one place to another, and ſome hils were defaced and made euen with the ground. The earthquake was ſo ſtrong, that the ſhips which lay in the road and on the ſea, ſhaked as if the world would haue turned round: there ſprang alſo a fountaine out of the earth, from whence for the ſpace of 4 daies, there flowed a moſt cleare water, & after that it ceaſed. At the ſame time they heard ſuch thunder & noiſe vnder the earth, as if all the deuils in hell had bin aſſembled together in that place, wherewith many died for feare. The Iland of Tercera ſhooke 4 times together, ſo that it ſeemed to turne about, but there hapned no miſfortune vnto it. Earthquakes are common in thoſe Ilands, for about 20 yeres paſt there hapned another earthquake, wherein a high hill that lieth by the ſame towne of Villa Franca, fell halfe downe, & couered all the towne with earth, and killed many men. The 25 of Auguſt the kings Armada comming out of Ferol arriued in Tercera being in all 30 ſhips, Biskaines, Portugals and Spaniards, and 10 dutch flieboats that were arreſted in Lisbon to ſerue the king, beſides other ſmall ſhips & pataros, that came to ſerue as meſſengers from place to place, and to diſcouer the ſeas. This nauie came to ſtay for, and conuoy the ſhips that ſhould come from the Spaniſh Indies, and the flieboats were appointed in their returne home, to take in the goods that were ſaued in the loſt ſhip that came from Malacca, and to conuoy them to Lisbon.

The 13 of September the ſaid Armada arriued at the Iland of Coruo, where the Engliſhmen with about 16 ſhips as then lay, ſtaying for the Spaniſh fleet, whereof ſome or the moſt part were come, and there the Engliſh were in good hope to haue taken them. But whẽ they perceiued the kings army to be ſtrong, the Admiral being the lord Thomas Howard, commanded his Fleet not to fal vpon them, nor any of them once to ſeparate their ſhips from him, vnleſſe he gaue commiſſion ſo to do: notwithſtanding the viceadmirall ſir Richard Greenuil being in the ſhip called the Reuenge, went into the Spaniſh fleet, and ſhot among them doing them great hurt, & thinking the reſt of the company would haue folowed, which they did not, but left him there, & ſailed away: the cauſe why could not be knowẽ. Which the Spaniards perceiuing, with 7 or 8 ſhips they boorded her, but ſhe withſtood them all, fighting with them at the leaſt 12 houres together and ſunke two of them, one being a new double Flieboat of 600 tunnes, and Admiral of the Flieboats, the other a Biſcain: but in the end by reaſon of the number that came vpon her, ſhe was taken, but to their great loſſe: for they had loſt in fighting and by drowning aboue 400 men, and of the Engliſh were ſlaine about 100, Sir Richard Greenuil himſelfe being wounded in his braine, whereof afterwards he died. He was caried into the ſhip called S.Paul, wherein was the Admirall of the fleet Don Alonſo de Baçan: there his wounds were dreſt by the Spaniſh ſurgeons, but Don Alonſo himſelfe would neither ſee him nor ſpeake with him: all the reſt of the captaines and gentlemen went to viſite him, and to comfort him in his hard fortune, wondering at his courage and ſtout heart, for ẏ he ſhewed not any ſigne of faintnes nor changing of colour; but feeling the houre of death to approch, he ſpake theſe words in Spaniſh, and ſaid: Here die I Richard Greenuil with a ioyful & quiet mind, for that I haue ended my life as a true ſouldier ought to do, that hath fought for his countrey, Queene, religion and honor, whereby my ſoule moſt ioyfull departeth out of this body, & ſhal alwayes leaue behind it an euerlaſting fame of a valiant & true ſouldier that hath done his dutie as he was bound to doe. When he had finiſhed theſe or ſuch other like words, he gaue vp the Ghoſt, with great & ſtout courage, & no man could perceiue any true ſigne of heauines in him.

This ſir Rich. Greenuil was a great and a rich gentleman in England, & had great yeerely reuenues of his owne inheritance, but he was a man very vnquiet in his mind, and greatly affected to war; inſomuch as of his owne priuate motion he offred his ſeruice to the Queene: he had performed many valiant acts, and was greatly feared in theſe Ilands, and knowen of euery man, but of nature very ſeuere, ſo that his owne people hated him for his fierceneſſe, & ſpake very hardly of him: for when they firſt entred into the fleet or Armada, they had their great ſaile in a readineſſe, and might poſſibly enough haue ſailed away, for it was one of the beſt ſhips for ſaile in England, and the maſter perceiuing that the other ſhips had left them, & folowed not after, commanded the great ſaile to be cut that they might make away: but ſir Rich. Greenuil threatned both him & al the reſt that were in the ſhip, ẏ if any mã laid hand vpon it, he would cauſe him to be hanged, and ſo by that occaſion they were compelled to fight & in the end were taken. He was of ſo hard a cõplexion, that as he continued among the Spaniſh captains while they were at dinner or ſupper with him, he would carouſe 3 or 4 glaſſes of wine, and in a brauerie take the glaſſes betweene his teeth and craſh them in pieces & ſwalow them downe, ſo that oftentimes the blood ran out of his mouth without any harme at all vnto him: & this was told me by diuers credible perſons that many times ſtood and beheld him. The Engliſhmen that were left in the ſhip, as the captaine of the ſouldiers, the maſter and others were diſperſed into diuers of the Spaniſh ſhips that had taken them, where there had almoſt a new fight ariſen between the Biſcains and the Portugals: while each of them would haue the honour to haue firſt boorded her, ſo that there grew a great noiſe and quarel among them, one taking the chiefe enſigne, and the other the flag, and the captaine and euery one held his owne. The ſhips that had boorded her were altogether out of order, and broken, and many of their men hurt, whereby they were compelled to come into the Iſland of Tercera, there to repaire themſelues: where being arriued, I and my chamber-fellow, to heare ſome newes, went aboord one of the ſhips being a great Biſcain, and one of the 12 Apoſtles, whoſe captaine was called Bartandono, that had bin General of the Biſcains in the fleet that went for England. He ſeeing vs called vs vp into the gallery, where with great curteſie he receiued vs, being as then ſet at dinner with the Engliſh captaine that ſate by him, and had on a ſute of blacke veluet, but he could not tell vs any thing, for that he could ſpeake no other language but Engliſh and Latine, which Bartandono alſo could a litle ſpeake. The Engliſh captaine got licence of the gouernour that he might come on land with his weapon by his ſide, and was in our lodging with the Engliſhman that was kept priſoner in the Iland, being of that ſhip whereof the ſailers got away, as I ſaid before. The gouernour of Tercera bade him to dinner, and ſhewed him great curteſie. The maſter likewiſe with licence of Bartandono came on land and was in our lodging, and had at the leaſt 10 or 12 wounds, as well in his head as on his body, whereof after that being at ſea between Lisbon & the Ilands he died. The captaine wrote a letter, wherein he declared all the maner of the fight, and left it with the Engliſh marchant that lay in our lodging, to ſend it to the lord Admiral of England. This Engliſh captaine comming vnto Lisbon, was there wel receiued and not any hurt done vnto him, but with good conuoy ſent to Seuual, and from thence ſailed into England with all the reſt of the Engliſhmen that were taken priſoners.

The wracke of the Reuenge.

The Spaniſh armie ſtaied at the Iland of Coruo til the laſt of September, to aſſemble the reſt of the fleet together, which in the ende were to the number of 140 ſailes of ſhips partly comming from India, and partly of the army, and being altogether ready to ſaile to Tercera in good company, there ſuddenly roſe ſo hard & cruell a ſtorme, that thoſe of the Ilands did affirme, that in mans memorie there was neuer any ſuch ſeen or heard off before: for it ſeemed the ſea would haue ſwalowed vp the Ilands, the water mounting higher then the cliffs, which are ſo high that it amaſeth a man to behold them: but the ſea reached aboue them, and liuing fiſhes were throwen vpon the land. This ſtorme continued not only a day or two with one wind, but 7 or 8 dayes continually, the wind turning round about in al places of the compaſſe, at the leſt twiſe or thriſe during that time, and all alike, with a continuall ſtorme and tempeſt moſt terrible to behold, euen to vs that were on ſhore, much more then to ſuch as were at ſea: ſo that onely on the coaſts and cliffes of the Iland of Tercera, there were aboue 12 ſhips caſt away, and not onely vpon the one ſide, but round about it in euery corner, wherby nothing els was heard but complaining, crying, lamenting & telling, here is a ſhip broken in pieces againſt the cliffes, and there another, and all the men drowned: ſo that for the ſpace of 20 dayes after the ſtorme, they did nothing els but fiſh for dead men that continually came driuing on the ſhore. Among the reſt was the Engliſh ſhip called the Reuenge, that was caſt away vpon a cliffe neere to the Iland of Tercera, where it brake in an hundred pieces & ſunke to the ground, hauing in her 70 men Galegos, Biſcains, and others, with ſome of the captiue Engliſhmen, whereof but one was ſaued that got vp vpon the cliffes aliue, and had his body and head all wounded, and he being on ſhore brought vs the newes deſiring to be ſhriuen, & thereupon preſently died. The Reuenge had in her diuers faire braſſe pieces that were all ſunke in yͤ ſea, which they of the Iland were in good hope to waigh vp againe the next Sommer after. Among theſe ſhips that were caſt away about Tercera, was likewiſe a Flie-boat, one of thoſe that had bin arreſted in Portugall to ſerue the king, called the white Doue, the maſter of her was one Cornelius Martenſon of Schiedam in Holland, and there were in her 100 ſouldiers, as in euery one of the reſt there were. He being ouer-ruled by the captaine that he could not be maſter of his owne, ſayling here and there at the mercy of God, as the ſtorme droue him, in the end came within the ſight of the Iland of Tercera, which the Spaniards perceiuing thought all their ſafetie onely to conſiſt in putting into the road, compelling the Maſter and the Pilot to make towards the Iland, although the maſter refuſed to doe it, ſaying, that they were moſt ſure there to be caſt away and vtterly ſpoyled: but the captaine called him drunkard and Heretique, and ſtriking him with a ſtaffe, commaunded him to doe as hee would haue him. The Maſter ſeeing this and being compelled to doe it, ſayd: well then my Maſters, ſeeing it is the deſire of you all to bee caſt away,

I

I can but loſe one life, and therewith deſperately he ſailed towards the ſhore, and was on that ſide of the Iland, where there was nothing els but hard ſtones and rocks, as high as mountaines, moſt terrible to beholde; where ſome of the inhabitants ſtood with long ropes and corke bound at the end thereof, to throw them downe vnto the men, that they might lay holde vpon them, and ſaue their liues: but few of them got ſo neere, moſt of them being caſt away, and ſmitten in pieces before they could get to the wall. The ſhip ſailing in this maner (as I ſayd before) towards the Iland, and approching to the ſhore, the maſter being an olde man, and full of yeeres, called his ſonne that was in the ſhip with him, and hauing imbraced one another, and taken their laſt farewell, the good olde father willed his ſonne not to take care for him, but ſeeke to ſaue himſelfe; for (ſayd he) ſonne thou art yong, & mayeſt haue ſome hope to ſaue thy life, but as for me it is no great matter (I am olde) what become of me, and therewith ech of theſe ſhedding many teares, as euery louing father and kinde childe may well conſider, the ſhip fell vpon the cliffes, and brake in pieces, the father on the one ſide, the ſonne on the other ſide falling into the ſea, ech laying holde vpon that which came next to hand, but to no purpoſe; for the ſea was ſo high and furious, that they were all drowned, and onely fourteene or fifteene ſaued themſelues by ſwimming, with their legs and armes halfe broken and out of ioynt, among which was the Maſters ſonne, and foure other Dutch boyes: the reſt of the Spaniards and Sailers, with the Captaine and Maſter, were drowned. Whoſe heart would not melt with teares to beholde ſo grieuous a ſight, ſpecially conſidering with himſelfe that the greateſt cauſe thereof was the beaſtlines and inſolency of the Spaniards, as in this onely example may well be ſeene: Whereby may be conſidered how the other ſhippes ſped, as we our ſelues did in part beholde, and by the men that were ſaued did heare more at large, as alſo ſome others of our countreymen that as then were in the like danger can well witneſſe.

On the other Ilands the loſſe was no leſſe then in Tercera: for on the Iland of Saint George there were two ſhips caſt away: on the Iland of Pico two ſhips: on the Iland of Gratioſa three ſhips: and beſides thoſe there came euery where round about diuers pieces of broken ſhips, and other things fleeting towards the Ilands, wherewith the ſea was all couered moſt pitifull to beholde. On the Iland of S. Michael there were foure ſhips caſt away, and betweene Tercera and S. Michael three more were ſunke, which were ſeene and heard to cry out; whereof not one man was ſaued. The reſt put into the ſea without maſts, all torne and rent: ſo that of the whole fleet and armada, being 140 ſhips in all, there were but 32 or 33 arriued in Spaine and Portugall, yea, and thoſe few with ſo great miſery, paine and labour, that not two of them arriued there together, but this day one, and to morrow another, next day the third, and ſo one after the other to the number aforeſayd. All the reſt were caſt away vpon the Ilands, and ouerwhelmed in the Sea, whereby may be conſidered what great loſſe and hindrance they receiued at that time: for by many mens iudgements it was eſteemed to be much more then was loſt by their army that came for England; and it may well be thought, and preſumed, that it was no other but a iuſt plague purpoſely ſent by God vpon the Spaniards, and that it might truely be ſayd, the taking of the Reuenge was iuſtly reuenged vpon them, and not by the might or force of man, but by the power of God, as ſome of them openly ſayd in the Ile of Tercera, that they beleeued verily God would conſume them, and that he tooke part with the Lutherans and heretikes: ſaying further that ſo ſoone as they had throwen the dead body of the Viceadmirall Sir Richard Greenfield ouer-boord, they verily thought that as he had a diuelliſh faith and religion, and therefore the diuels loued him, ſo he preſently ſunke into the bottome of the ſea, and downe into hell, where he raiſed vp all the diuels to the reuenge of his death: and that they brought ſo great ſtormes and torments vpon the Spaniards, becauſe they onely maintained the Catholike & Romiſh religion. Such and the like blaſphemies againſt God, they ceaſed not openly to vtter, without being reprooued of any man therein, nor for their falſe opinions: but the moſt part of them rather ſayd and affirmed, that of trueth it muſt needs be ſo.

About 100 Spaniſh and Portugall ſhips drowned.

As one of thoſe Indian fleets put out of Noua Spagna, there were 35 of them by ſtorme and tempeſt caſt away and drowned in the Sea, being 50 in all; ſo that but 15 eſcaped. Of the fleet that came from Santo Domingo there were 14 caſt away, comming out of the chanell of Hauana, whereof the Admirall and Viceadmirall were two of them: and from Terra Firma in India there came two ſhips laden with golde and ſiluer, that were taken by the Engliſhmen: and before the Spaniſh army came to Coruo, the Engliſhmen at times had taken at the leaſt 20 ſhips, that came from S. Domingo, India, Braſilia, &c. and were all ſent into England.

A relation ſent by Melchior Petoney to Nigil de Moura at Lisbon, from the Iland and Caſtle of Arguin, ſtanding a little to the Southward of Cape Blanco, in the Northerly latitude of 19 degrees, concerning the rich and ſecret trade from the inland of Africa thither: Anno 1591.

Commodities fit for Arguin.

Wedges of golde giuen for ſmall trifles.

Scarlet & fine Purple cloth greatly accepted.

A good harbor before the Caſtle of Arguin.

Concerning this kingdome reade Leo Africanus a little after the beginning of his 6 booke.

AS concerning the trade to this Caſtle and Iland of Arguin, your worſhip is to vnderſtand, that if it would pleaſe the kings maieſty to ſend hither two or three carauels once in a yeere with Flanders and Spaniſh commodities, as Bracelets of glaſſe, Kniues, Belles, Linnen-cloth, Looking-glaſſes, with other kinds of ſmall wares, his highneſſe might do great good here. For 50 leagues vp into the land the Moores haue many exceeding rich golde mines; inſomuch that they bring downe their golde to this Caſtle to traffique with vs: and for a ſmall trifle they will giue vs a great wedge of golde. And becauſe here is no trade, the ſayd Moores cary their golde to Fez being 250 leagues diſtant from hence, and there doe exchange the ſame for the foreſayd kindes of commodities. By this meanes alſo his maieſty might ſtop that paſſage, and keepe the king of Fez from ſo huge a maſſe of golde. Scarlet-clothes, and fine Purples are greatly accepted of in theſe parts. It is a moſt fertile countrey within the land, and yeeldeth great ſtore of Wheat, fleſh of all kindes, and abundance of fruits. Therefore, if it were poſſible, you ſhould do well to deale with his maieſty, either himſelfe to ſend a couple of carauels, or to giue your worſhip leaue to traffique here: for here is a very good harbour where ſhips may ride at ancre hard by the Caſtle. The countrey where all the golde-mines are is called The kingdome of Darba. In this kingdome are great ſtore of cities and townes; and in euery city and towne a Captaine with certaine ſouldiers; which Captaines are lords and owners of the ſayd townes. One city there is called Couton, another Xanigeton, as alſo the cities of Tubguer, Azegue, Amader, Quaherque, and the towne of Faroo. The which townes and cities are very great and fairely built, being inhabited by rich Moores, and abounding with all kinde of cattell, Barley, and Dates. And here is ſuch plenty of golde found vpon the ſands by the riuers ſide, that the ſayd Moores vſually carry the ſame Northward to Marocco, and Southward to the city of Tombuto in the land of Negros, which city ſtandeth about 300 leagues from the kingdome of Darba; and this kingdome is but 60 leagues from this Iland and Caſtle of Arguin. Wherefore I beſeech your worſhip to put his maieſty in remembrance hereof; for the ſayd cities and townes are but ten dayes iourney from hence. I heartily wiſh that his maieſty would ſend two or three marchants to ſee the ſtate of the Countrey, who might trauell to the aforeſayd cities, to vnderſtand of their rich trade. For any man may go ſafe and come ſafe from thoſe places. And thus without troubling of your worſhip any further, I humbly take my leaue. From the Iland and Caſtle of Arguin the 20 of January 1591.

Your worſhips ſeruant,
Melchior Petoney.

The voyage of Richard Rainolds and Thomas Daſſel to the riuers of Senega and Gambra adioyning vpon Guinea, 1591, with a diſcourſe of the treaſons of certain of Don Antonio his ſeruants and followers.

BY vertue of her Maieſties moſt gracious charter giuen in the yeere 1588, and in the thirtieth yeere of her Highneſſe reigne, certaine Engliſh marchants are granted to trade, in and from the riuer of Senega to and in the riuer of Gambra, on the Weſterne coaſt of Africa. The chiefeſt places of traffique on that coaſt betweene theſe riuers, are theſe:

The names of the chiefe places of traffike betweene Senega & Gambra.

1 Senega riuer: The commodities be hides, gumme, elephants teeth, a few graines, ostrich feathers, amber-griece, and ſome golde.

2 Beſeguiache, a towne by Capo Verde * leagues from Senega riuer: The commodities be ſmall hides, and a fe[w] teeth.

3 Refiſca Vieio, a towne 4 leagues from Beſeguiache: The commodities be ſmall hides, and a few teeth now and then.

4 Palmerin, a towne 2 leagues from Refiſca: The commodities be ſmall hides, and a few elephants teeth now and then.

5 Porto d'Ally, a towne 5 leagues from Palmerin: The commodities be ſmall hides, teeth, amber-griece, and a little golde: and many Portugals are there.

6 Candimal, a towne halfe a league from Porto d' Ally: The commodities be ſmall hides, and a few teeth now and then.

7 Palmerin, a towne 3 leagues from Candimal: The commodities be ſmall hides, and a few teeth now and then.

8 Ioala, a towne 6 leagues from Palmerin: The commodities be hides, waxe, elephants teeth, rice, and ſome golde: and many Spaniards and Portugals are there.

9 Gambra riuer: The commodities are rice, waxe, hides, elephants teeth, and golde.

The Frenchmen of Diepe and New-hauen haue traded thither aboue thirty yeres: and commonly with foure or fiue ſhips a yere, whereof two ſmall barks go into the riuer of Senega. The other were woont (untill within theſe foure yeres, that our ſhips came thither) to ride with their ſhips in the road of Porto d' Ally and ſo ſent their ſmall ſhaloups of ſixe or eight tunnes to ſome of theſe places on the Sea coaſt before repeated. Where in all places generally they were well beloued and as courteouſly entertained of the Negros, as if they had bene naturally borne in the countrey. And very often the Negros come into France and returne againe, which is a further increaſing of mutuall loue and amity. Since our comming to that coaſt the Frenchmen ride with their ſhippes at Refiſca Vieio, and ſuffer vs to ancre with our ſhippes at Porto d' Ally. The Frenchmen neuer vſe to go into the riuer of Gambra: which is a riuer of ſecret trade and riches concealed by the Portugals. For long ſince one Frenchman entred the riuer with a ſmall barke which was betrayed, ſurpriſed, and taken by two gallies of the Portugals.

Our trade hither beganne 1587.

Gambra a riuer of ſecret & rich trade concealed.

In our ſecond voyage and ſecond yeere there were by vile trecherous meanes of the Portugals and the king of the Negros conſent in Porto d' Ally and Ioala about forty Engliſhmen cruelly ſlaine and captiued, and moſt or all of their goods confiſcated: whereof there returned onely two, which were the marchants. And alſo by procurement of Pedro Gonſalues, one of Don Antonio the kings ſeruants, Thomas Daſſel and others had bene betrayed, if it had not pleaſed almighty God to reueale the ſame, whereby it was preuented.

The ſecond voyage. Forty Engliſhmen traiterouſly ſlaine and captiued.

From the South ſide of Senega riuer on the Sea coaſt vnto about Palmerin is all one kingdome of Negros. The kings name is Melick Zamba, who dwelleth two dayes iourney within the land from Refiſca.

The 12 of Nouember 1591, I Richard Rainolds & Thomas Daſſel factors in a ſhip called the Nightingale of London of 125 tunnes, and a pinneſſe called the Meſſenger of 40 tunnes arriued neere vnto Capo Verde at a litle Iland called The Iland of liberty. At this Iland we ſet vp a ſmall pinneſſe, with which we cary our marchandiſe on land when wee traffique. And in the meane time Thomas Daſſel went with the great pinneſſe to traffike with Spaniards or Portugals in Porto d' Ally or Ioala. Ouer againſt the ſayd Iland on the maine is an habitation of the Negros called Beſegueache. The alcaide or gouernor thereof with a great traine came aboord in their canoas to receiue the kings dueties for ankerage and permitting the quiet ſetting vp of our pinneſſe: who liked paſſing well that no Portugall came in the ſhippe, ſaying, we ſhould be better thought of by the king and people, if we neuer did bring Portugall, but come of our ſelues as the Frenchmen euer did and doe. And to purchaſe the more loue, I Richard Rainolds gaue him and all his company courteous entertainment. Alſo vpon his intreaty, hauing ſufficient pledge aboord, I and others went on land with him. At this inſtant there was great warre betweene this alcaide and another gouernor of the next prouince. Neuertheleſſe vpon our arriuall truce was taken for a ſpace; and I with our company conducted among both enemies to the gouernors houſe in Beſegueache, and were gently and friendly feaſted after their maner, and with ſome preſents returned ſafe aboord againe. The next day the alcaide came aboord againe, to will me to ſend ſome yron and other commodities in the boat to traffike with the Negros, and alſo requeſted me that I would go to Refiſca with the ſhip; which I did. And one thing I noted, that a number of Negros attended the alcaides landing in warlike maner with bowes and poiſoned arrowes, darts poiſoned, and ſwords, (becauſe that the enemies by reaſon of the truce taken were there alſo to view the ſhip) who for the moſt part approched to him kneeling downe and kiſſed the backe of his hand.

The 17 of Nouember we weyed anker; and by reaſon no French ſhip was yet come, I went to the road of Refiſca: where I ſent for the alcaides interpretors, who came thither aboord, and receiued of me the kings duties for to haue free traffike with the Negros, with whom dayly I exchanged my yron & other wares for hides and ſome elephants teeth, finding the people very friendly and tractable. And the next day after our arriuall I went vp into the land about three miles to the towne of Refiſca, where I was friendly vſed and well entertained of the alcaide, and eſpecially of a yoong nobleman called Conde Amar Pattay, who preſented me with an oxe for my company, goats and ſome yoong kids, aſſuring me that the king would be glad to heare of the arriuall of a Chriſtians ſhip, whom they called Blancos, that is, white men: eſpecially of an Engliſh ſhip. And ſo dayly the yong Conde came with a ſmall company of horſemen to the ſea ſide, feaſting me very kindly and courteouſly. And the fift of December he with his traine came aboord to ſee the ſhip; which to them ſeemed woonderfull, as people that ſeldome had ſeene the like: who tolde me that his meſſenger from the king was returned; and the king reioyced much to heare that Engliſh men were come with a ſhip to trade in his ports; and being the firſt Engliſhman that euer came with a ſhip, I was the better welcome; promiſing that I or any Engliſhman hereafter ſhould be wel intreated & find good dealing at their hands. And further the Conde on the kings behalfe and his owne, earneſtly requeſted, that before my departure off the coaſt I would returne againe to his road to conferre with him for the better continuance and confirming of amity betweene them and Engliſhmen: which I agreed vnto. And ſo ſhewing him and his company the beſt friendſhip and courteſie I could, he went on ſhore, and ſhould haue had the honor of our ordinance but that he deſired the contrary, being amazed at the ſight of the ſhip and noiſe of the gunnes, which they did greatly admire.

Porto Dally.

The 13 of December at night we weighed anker, and arriued the 14 day at the road of Porto d' Ally, which is another kingdome: the king thereof is called Amar Meleck, & ſonne to Meleck Zamba the other king, and dwelleth a dayes iourney and an halfe from Porto d' Ally. When we had ankered, the kings kinſmen being gouernors, with all the officers of that towne came aboord to receiue all duties for the ſhip & licence to traffike due to the king; who there generally ſeemed to be very glad that no Portugall was come in our ſhip out of England; ſaying it was the kings pleaſure we ſhould bring none hereafter; for that the king did eſteeme them as people of no truth; and complained of one Franciſco de Coſta ſeruant to Don Antonio, how he had often and the laſt yere alſo abuſed and deluded their king Amar Meleck in promiſing to bring him certaine things out of England, which he neuer performed, and deemed that to be the cauſe of his ſtaying behinde this voyage, and that neither Spaniard nor Portugall could abide vs, but reported very badly and gaue out hard ſpeeches tending to the defamation & great diſhonor of England: and alſo affirmed that at the arriuall of an Engliſh ſhip called The Command, of Richard Kelley of Dartmouth, one Pedro Gonſalues a Portugall that came in the ſayd ſhip from Don Antonio reported vnto them, that we were fled out of England and come away vpon intent to rob and do great ſpoile vpon this coaſt to the Negros and Portugals, and that Thomas Daſſel had murdered Franciſco de Acoſta ſince our comming from England, who was comming to their king in our ſhip with great preſents from Don Antonio, and deſired that at our arriuall ſtay might be made of our goods and our ſelues in ſecret maner; which they denied, not giuing credit to his report, hauing bene often abuſed by ſuch friuolous and ſlanderous ſpeeches by that nation; telling me their king was ſory for the former murder and captiuity of our nation, and would neuer yeeld to the like, hauing the Portugals and Spaniards in generall hatred euer ſince, and conceiueth much better of our countrey and vs, then theſe our enemies report of. For which I yeelded them hearty thanks, aſſuring them they ſhould finde great difference betweene the loyalty of the one and diſloyalty of the other: and ſo payed their duties: and for that it was the chiefe place of trade, I ſhewed them how I was reſolued to goe to their king with certaine preſents which we had brought out of England; which we determined for the more honor and credit of our countrey, and augmenting of their better affection toward vs.

Ioala.

The Cherubin of Lime at Ioala.

All this while Thomas Daſſel was with our great pinneſſe at the towne of Ioala, being in the kingdome of king Iocoel Lamiocketic, traffiking with the Spaniards & Portugals there. And the forenamed Pedro Gonſalues, which came out of England, was there alſo with other Engliſh marchants about the buſines of Rich. Kelley; and as it ſhould ſeeme, for that he could not obtaine his miſchieuous pretended purpoſe againſt Thomas Daſſel and others at the towne of Porto d' Ally, where I Richard Rainolds remained, he attempted with conſent of other Portugals which were made priuy to his intent to betray the ſayd Thomas Daſſel at this towne, & had with bribes ſeduced the chiefe commanders and Negros to effect his wicked & moſt villanous practiſe: which as God would, was reuealed to the ſayd Thomas Daſſel by Rich. Cape an Engliſhman and ſeruant to the forenamed Rich. Kelley; to whom this ſayd Pedro Gonſalues had diſcloſed his ſecret treachery, willing him with all expedition to ſtand vpon his guard. Whereupon Thomas Daſſel went aboord a ſmall Engliſh barke called The Cherubin of Lime, and there one Iohn Payua a Portugall and ſeruant of Don Antonio declared, that if he & one Garcia a Portugall of the ſayd towne would haue conſented with Pedro Gonſalues, the ſayd Thomas Daſſel had bene betrayed long before. And vpon this warning Thomas Daſſel the next day hauing gotten three Portugals aboord, aduiſed for our better ſecurities to ſend two on land, & detained one with him called Villa noua, telling them that if the next day by eight of the clocke, they would bring Pedro Gonſalues aboord to him, he would releaſe the ſayd Villa noua, which they did not. And Thomas Daſſel hauing intelligence that certaine Negros and Portugals were ridden poſt ouer-land to Porto d' Ally with intent to haue Richard Rainolds and his company ſtayd on land, being doubtfull what friendſhip ſoeuer the vnconſtant Negros profeſſed (by reaſon they be often wauering being ouercome with drinking wine) how they would deale, to preuent the dangerous wiles that might be effected in the road by Portugals, and for better ſtrength, the 24 of December he came with his pinneſſe & Portugall to ride in the road of Porto d' Ally, where our great ſhippe the Nightingall was: who was no ſooner arriued but he had newes alſo from the ſhore from Iohn Baily Anthony Daſſels ſeruant, who was there with our goods detained by the Portugals means, that aboue 20 Portugals and Spaniards were come from Ioala by land, and Pedro Gonſalues in their company, to take order for the releaſing of Villa noua. So hauing had conference two or three dayes with the Commanders, the Negros, ſome Spaniards, and ſome Portugals, in the end by due examination of the matter the Negros ſeeing how vilely Pedro Gonſalues had delt, he being in their power, ſayd he ſhould ſuffer death or be tortured, for an example to others. But we in recompenſe of his cruelty pitied him and ſhewed mercy, deſiring the Negros to intreat him well though vndeſerued: and thereupon the Commanders brought him aboord the pinneſſe to Thomas Daſſel to do with him what he would: where at his comming from the ſhore, for lauiſh ſpeeches which he vſed of Princes, he was well buffetted by a Spaniard, and might haue bene ſlaine, if for our ſakes he had not bene reſcued.

While I went on ſhore with Villa noua, the ſayd Pedro Gonſalues confeſſed vnto Thomas Daſſel that he did enquire of ſome Negros and Portugals if he might not ſtay him and his goods in the land, and that he did nothing but by commiſſion from his king by his letters which he receiued from London in Dartmouth after we were departed from London, for that we preſumed to come to Guinea to traffike without a ſeruant of his; and further, that he had power or procuration from Franciſco de Coſta the Portugall that ſtayed behinde in England to detaine the goods of Anthony Daſſel in Guinea.

Note.

By conſent of M. Francis Tucker, Iohn Browbeare, and the reſt of the factours of Richard Kelley, with whom this Pedro Gonſalues came, for auoiding further miſchiefe that might be practiſed, we agreed that the ſay Pedro Gonſalues ſhould ſtay aboord our ſhippe, and not goe any more on land vntill they departed. So the ninth of Ianuary he was deliuered aboord to goe for England in the ſame ſhip wherein he came; who was all the time of his abode in our ſhippe both courteouſly and friendly vſed at my hands, much againſt the mariners willes, who could not abide ſuch a wicked creature and caitiue, that is nouriſhed and relieued in our countrey, and yet by villanous meanes ſought the deſtruction of vs all.

The Spaniards and Portugals though they be diſſemblers and not to be truſted, when they perceiued how king Amar Melicks Negros befriended and fauored vs, and that it would be preiudiciall to their trade for diuers reſpects, if we ſhould any way be iniuried, renounced the ſayd practiſes, deteſting the author, and proteſted to defend vs in ſuch caſes with all faithfulneſſe; deſiring we would, as the king of Negros had commanded vs, neuer bring Portugal with vs more: vſing this phraſe in diſdaine of ſuch as came out of England, let your Portugals be barres of yron: for in trueth in regard of the rich trade maintained by Frenchmen and by vs of late, they eſteeme more of one barre of yron then of twenty Portugals which we ſhould bring out of England: who at their comming thither very ſubtilly diſaduantage vs, and doe great hurt to euery party.

At the beginning of theſe broiles the king Amar Melick had ſent his chiefe ſecretary and three horſes for me Richard Rainolds: but I denied to goe by reaſon of the hurley burley, though I might haue had Negros of account for pledges aboord: yet we ſent the preſents vnto the king; who ſo ſoone as he vnderſtood the cauſe why I came not to him, being ſory and offended thereat, commanded preſently by proclamation, that no iniury ſhould be offered vs in his dominions by his owne people, or ſuffered to be done by Spaniards or Portugals. And if the Negros ioyning to his kingdome ſhould confederate with the Spaniards and Portugals to moleſt or trouble vs; that his ſubiects the Negros ſhould be ready to ayde, ſuccor and defend vs. In which people appeared more confident loue and good will towards vs, then euer we ſhall finde either of Spaniards or Portugals, though we ſhould relieue them of the greateſt miſery that can be imagined.

In the riuer of Senega no Spaniard or Portugall vſe to trade: and onely one Portugall called Ganigoga dwelleth farre within the riuer, who was maried to a kings daughter.

In the townes of Porto d' Ally and Ioala, being townes of chiefeſt trade, and in the townes of Canton and Caſſan in the riuer of Gambra are many Spaniards and Portugals reſident by permiſſion of the Negros; who haue rich trades there along the coaſt, eſpecially to San Domingo and Rio grande, not far diſtant from Gambra riuer; whither they tranſport the yron which they buy of Frenchmen and vs, and exchange it for Negros; which be caried continually to the Weſt Indies in ſuch ſhips as came from Spaine. Alſo by the gouernors order and Renters of Caſtel de Mina and other places, where golde is, vpon the coaſt of Guinea, they haue a place limited how farre they muſt go to trade within the riuer of Gambra; and further they may not go vpon paine of confiſcation of their goods, and loſſe of life: for that the Renters themſelues ſend at certaine times their owne barks within the riuer to ſuch places, where as they haue great ſtore of golde. And in all theſe places hereabouts, where we vſe to trade, they haue no Fort, Caſtle, or place of ſtrength, but onely trading by the Negros ſafeconduct and permiſſion. And the moſt part of the Spaniards and Portugals that be reſident in theſe places be baniſhed men or fugitiues, for committing moſt hainous crimes and inceſtuous acts, their life & conuerſation being agreeable; and they are of the baſeſt behauiour that we haue euer ſeene of theſe nations in any other countrey.

A briefe relation concerning the eſtate of the cities and prouinces of Tombuto and Gago written in Marocco the firſt of Auguſt 1594, and ſent to M. Anthony Daſſel marchant of London.

My hearty commendations premiſed: your letter of late I receiued, and found that you would haue me diſcouer vnto you the eſtate & quality of the countreyes of Tombuto and Gago. And that you may not thinke me to ſlumber in this action, wherein you would be truely and perfectly reſolued, you ſhall vnderſtand, that not ten dayes paſt here came a Cahaia of the Andoluzes home from Gago, and another principall Moore, whom the king ſent thither at the firſt with Alcaide Hamode, and they brought with them thirty mules laden with gold. I ſaw the ſame come into the Alcaſaua with mine owne eies: and theſe men themſelues came not poore, but with ſuch wealth, that they came away without the kings commandement; and for that cauſe the king will pay them no wages for the time they haue beene there. On the other ſide they dare not aſke the king for any wages. And when Alcaide Hamode ſaw that the Cahaia of the Andoluzes would not ſtay in Gago with him, he thought good to ſend theſe thirty mules laden with golde by him, with letters of commendations, by which the king ſmelled their riches that they brought with them: and this was the cauſe of the kings diſpleaſure towards them. So now there remaineth in Gago Alcaide Hamode, and Alcaide Iawdara, and Alcaide Buckhare. And here are in a readineſſe to depart in the end of this next September Alcaide Monſor, Ben Abdrahaman Allies, Monſor Rico with fiue thouſand men, moſt of the fettilaſe, that is to ſay, of fier-mach, & muſkets. There is gone good ſtore of reds & yellowes: and this yere here was want of the ſame commodity; but I truſt the next yere wil be no want. But in fine the king doth proſper wel in thoſe parts, and here are many pledges come hither, and namely three of the kings ſonnes of Gago and the Iuſtice; I ſaw them come in with the treaſure. Now when Alcaide Monſor commeth to Gago, the which will be in Ianuary next, then returneth hither Alcaide Hamode with all the treaſure, and Alcaide Monſor is to keepe Gago vntill the king take further order. And thus much for Gago. Thus not hauing any other thing to write at this preſent, I commend you to the mercifull tuition of the almighty. From Marocco the firſt of Auguſt 1594.

Commodities for Gago.

Your aſſured friend Laurence Madoc.

Another briefe relation concerning the late conqueſt and the exceeding great riches of the cities and prouinces of Tombuto and Gago, written from Marocco the 30 Auguſt 1594, to M. Anthony Daſſel marchant of London aforeſayd.

Louing friend M. Daſſel, two of your letters I haue receiued, one by the ſhippe called The Amity, the other by The Concord: the chiefeſt matter therein was to be ſatiſfied of the king of Marocco his proceedings in Guinea. Therefore theſe are to let you vnderſtand that there went with Alcaide Hamode for thoſe parts ſeuenteene hundred men: who paſſing ouer the ſands, for want of water periſhed one third part of them: and at their comming to the city of Tombuto, the Negros made ſome reſiſtance; but to ſmall purpoſe, for that they had no defence but with their aſagaies or iauelings poiſoned. So they tooke it, and proceeded to the city of Gago, where the Negros were in number infinite, and meant to ſtand to the vttermoſt for their countrey: but the Moores ſlew them ſo faſt, that they were faine to yeeld, and do pay tribute by the yere. The rent of Tombuto is 60 quintals of golde by the yeere; the goodneſſe whereof you know. What rent Gago will yeeld, you ſhall know at the Spring, for then Alcaide Hamode commeth home, The rent of Tombuto is come by the caſelow or carouan, which is, as aboue is mentioned, 60 quintals. The report is, that Mahomed bringeth with him ſuch an infinite treaſure as I neuer heard of: it doth appeare that they haue more golde then any other part of the world beſide. The Alcaide winneth all the countrey where he goeth without fighting, and is going downe towards the ſea coaſt. This king of Marocco is like to be the greateſt prince in the world for money, if he keepe this countrey. But I make account aſſoone as the king of Spaine hath quietneſſe in Chriſtendome, he wil thruſt him out: for that the kings force is not great as yet; but he meaneth to be ſtronger. There is a campe ready to go now with a viceroy: the ſpeech is with 3000 men: but I thinke they will be hardly 2000; for by report, 3000 men are enough to conquer all the countrey: for they haue no defence of importance againſt an enemy. I thinke Hamode will be returned home in Ianuary or thereabout: for he ſtayeth but for the comming of the viceroy. Mulley Balaſen the kings ſonne of Marocco was ſlaine in Guinea by his owne men, and they were preſently killed, becauſe they ſhould tell no tales. And thus leauing to trouble you, I commit you to God, who proſper you in all your proceedings. From Marocco the firſt of Auguſt 1594.

Yours to command for euer Laurence Madoc.

Of theſe two rich cities and kingdomes of Tombuto and Gago Leo Africanus writeth at large in the beginning of his ſeuenth booke of the deſcription of Africa, which worthy worke is to be annexed vnto the end of this ſecond volume.

A briefe extract of a patent granted to M. Thomas Gregory of Tanton, and others, for traffique betweene the riuer of Nonnia and the riuers of Madrabumba and Sierra Leona on the coaſt of Guinea, in the yeere 1592.

IN May the 34 yeere of our gracious ſoueraigne Queene Elizabeth, a patent of ſpeciall licence was granted to Thomas Gregory of Tanton in the county of Somerſet, and to Thomas Pope, and certaine other marchants to traffique into Guinea from the Northermoſt part of the riuer of Nonnia to the Southermoſt parts of the riuers of Madrabumba and Sierra Leona, and to other parts aſwell to the Southeaſt as to the Northweſt, for a certaine number of leagues therein ſpecified which amount to an hundred or thereabout. Which patent was granted for the terme of ten yeres: as appeareth at large in the ſayd patent recorded in the Rolles in her Maieſties Chancery.

The maner of the taking of two Spaniſh ſhips laden with quickſiluer & the Popes bulles, bound for the Weſt Indies, by M. Thomas White in the Amity of London. 1592.

THe 26 of Iuly 1592, in my returning out of Barbary in the ſhip called the Amity of London, being in the height of 36 degrees or thereabout, at foure of the clocke in the morning we had ſight of two ſhippes, being diſtant from vs about three or foure leagues: by ſeuen of the clocke we fetched them vp, and were within gunſhot: whoſe boldneſſe, hauing the king of Spaines armes diſplayed, did make vs iudge them rather ſhips of warre, then laden with marchandiſe. And as it appeared by their owne ſpeeches, they made full account to haue taken vs: it being a queſtion among them, whether it were beſt to cary vs to S. Lucar, or to Lisbon. We waued ech other a maine. They hauing placed themſelues in warlike order one a cables length before another, we began the fight. In the which we continued, ſo faſt as we were able to charge and diſcharge, the ſpace of fiue houres, being neuer a cables length diſtant either of vs from other. In which time we receiued diuers ſhot both in the hull of our ſhip, maſts, and ſailes, to the number of 32 great, beſides 500 muſket ſhot and harquebuzes a crocke at the leaſt, which we tolde after the fight. And becauſe we perceiued them to be ſtout, we thought good to boord the Biſcaine, which was on head the other: where lying aboord about an houre, and plying our ordinance and ſmall ſhot; in the end we ſtowed all his men. Now the other in the flieboat, thinking we had entred our men in their fellow, bare roome with vs, meaning to haue layed vs aboord, and ſo to haue incrapped vs betwixt them both: which we perceiuing, fitted our ordinance ſo for him, as we quitted our ſelues of him, and he boorded his fellow: by which meanes they both fell from vs. Then preſently we kept our looſe, hoiſed our top-ſailes, and weathered them, and came hard aboord the flieboat with our ordinance prepared, and gaue her our whole broad ſide, with the which we ſlew diuers of their men; ſo as we might ſee the blood run out at the ſcupper holes. After that we caſt about, and new charged all our ordinance, and came vpon them againe, willing them to yeeld, or els we would ſinke them: whereupon the one would haue yeelded, which was ſhot betweene winde and water; but the other called him traitor. Vnto whom we made anſwere, that if he would not yeeld preſently alſo, we would ſinke him firſt. And thereupon he vnderſtanding our determination, preſently put out a white flag, and yeelded, and yet refuſed to ſtrike their owne ſailes, for that they were ſworne neuer to ſtrike to any Engliſhman. We then commanded their captaines and maſters to come aboord vs; which they did. And after examination & ſtowing them, we ſent certaine of our owne men aboord them, and ſtrook their ſailes, and manned their ſhips: finding in them both 126 perſons liuing, & 8 dead, beſides thoſe which they themſelues had caſt ouerboord. So it pleaſed God to giue vs the victory being but 42 men and a boy, whereof 2 were killed and 3 wounded: for the which good ſucceſſe we giue God the only praiſe. Theſe two rich prizes laden with 1400 cheſts of quickſiluer with the armes of Caſtile and Leon faſtened vpon them, and with a great quantity of bulles or indulgences, and guilded Miſſals or Seruice books, with an hundred tunnes of excellent wines, we brought ſhortly after into the riuer of Thames vp to Blacke-wall.

Marke this othe.

By the taking of this quickſiluer, about 1400 cheſts, the king of Spaine loſeth for euery quintall of the ſame a quintall of ſiluer, that ſhould haue beene deliuered him by the maſters of the mines there, which amounteth to 600000 pounds.

More by taking of his bulles, to wit, two millions and 72 thouſand for liuing and dead perſons for the prouinces of Noua Hiſpania, Iucatan, Guatimala, the Honduras, and the Philippinas, taxed at two reals the piece. And more for eighteene thouſand bulles taxed at foure reals, amounteth all to 107700 pounds. Summa totalis 707700 li.

More there were taken ten fardels of gilt miſſals and breuiaries ſent for the kings account.

So the hinderance that the king receiueth by the loſſe of his bulles and quickſiluer amounteth as is aboueſaid: beſides the lacking of his wines, about 100 tunnes, whereby his fleet is diſappointed of a great part of their prouiſion.

A true report of the honourable ſeruice at Sea perfourmed by Sir Iohn Burrough Knight, Lieutenant generall of the fleet prepared by the honor. Sir Walter Ralegh Knight, Lord warden of the Stanneries of Cornwall and Deuon. Wherin chiefly the Santa Clara of Biſcay, a ſhip of 600 tunnes was taken, and the two East Indian caraks, the Santa Cruz and the Madre de Dios were forced, the one burnt, and the other taken and brought into Dartmouth the ſeuenth of September, 1592.

SIr Walter Ralegh vpon cõmiſſion receiued from her Maieſty for an expedition to be made to the Weſt Indies, ſlacked not his vttermoſt diligence to make full prouiſion of all things neceſſary, as both in his choiſe of good ſhips, and ſufficient men to performe the action euidently appeared. For his ſhippes which were in number 14 or 15, thoſe two of her Maieſties, the Garland & the Foreſight were the chiefeſt; the reſt either his owne or his good friends or aduenturers of London. For the gentlemen his conſorts and officers, to giue them their right, they were ſo well qualited in courage, experience, & diſcretion, as the greateſt prince might repute himſelfe happy to be ſerued with their like. The honor of Lieutenant generall was impoſed vpon ſir Iohn Burrough, a gentleman, for his manifold good and heroicall parts, thought euery way worthy of that commandement: with whom after ſir W.R. returned was ioyned in commiſſion ſir Martin Frobiſher, who for his ſpeciall ſkill & knowledge in marine cauſes had formerly caried imploiments of like or greater place. The reſt of the captaines, ſouldiers, and ſailers were men of notable reſolution, and for the moſt part ſuch as heretofore had giuen to the world ſufficient proofe of their valour in diuers ſeruices of the like nature. With theſe ſhips thus manned ſir Walter Ralegh departed towards the Weſt countrey, there to ſtore himſelfe with ſuch further neceſſaries as the ſtate of his voyage did needfully require: where the Weſterly windes blowing for a long time contrary to his courſe, bound and conſtrained him to keepe harborough ſo many weeks, that the fitteſt ſeaſon for his purpoſe was gone, the mindes of his people much altered, his victuals conſumed; and withall, her Maieſty vnderſtanding how croſly all this ſorted, began to call the proceeding of this preparation into queſtion: inſomuch that, whereas the firſt of May was firſt come before ſir Walter could put to ſea, the very next day ſir Martin Frobiſher in a pinneſſe of my lord Admirals called The Diſdaine, met him, and brought to him from her Maieſty letters of reuocation, with commandement to relinquiſh (for his owne part) the intended attempt, and to leaue the charge and conduct of all things in the hands of ſir Iohn Burrough and ſir Martin Frobiſher. But ſir Walter finding his honor ſo farre engaged in the vndertaking of this voyage, as without proceeding he ſaw no remedy either to ſalue his reputation, or to content thoſe his friends which had put in aduentures of great ſummes with him; and making conſtruction of the Queenes letters in ſuch ſort as if her commandement had bene propounded in indifferent termes, either to aduance forward or to retire, at his owne diſcretion; would in no caſe yeeld to leaue his fleet now vnder ſaile. Wherefore continuing his courſe into the ſea, he met within a day or two, with certaine ſailes lately come from Spaine: among which was a ſhip appertaining to Monſieur Gourdon gouernor of Caleis, and found aboord her one M. Neuel Dauies an Engliſhman, who hauing indured a long and miſerable captiuity for the ſpace of twelue yeeres, partly in the inquiſition in Spaine, was now by good fortune eſcaped, and vpon returne to his countrey. This man, among other things, reported for certaine, that there was little hope of any good this yeere to be done in the Weſt India; conſidering that the king of Spaine had ſent expreſſe order to all the ports both of the Ilands and of Terra firma, that no ſhip ſhould ſtirre that yeere, nor any treaſure be layed aboord for Spaine. But neither this vnpleaſant relation nor ought els could ſtay his proceedings, vntill a tempeſt of ſtrange and vncouth violence ariſing vpon Thurſday the 11 of May, when he was athwart the Cape Finiſter, had ſo ſcattered the greater part of the fleet, and ſunke his boats and pinneſſes, that as the reſt were driuen and ſeuered, ſome this way and ſome that, ſir Walter himſelfe being in the Garland of her Mateſty was in danger to be ſwallowed vp of the Sea. Whereupon ſir W. Ralegh finding that the ſeaſon of the yere was too farre gone to proceed with the enterpriſe which he had vpon Panama, hauing bene held on the Engliſh coaſt from February till May, and thereby ſpent three moneths victuals; and conſidering withall, that to lie vpon the Spaniſh coaſt or at the Ilands to attend the returne of the Eaſt or Weſt Indian fleets was rather a worke of patience then ought els: he gaue directions to ſir Iohn Burgh and ſir M. Frobiſher to diuide the fleet in two parts; ſir M. with the Garland, cap. George Gifford, cap. Henry Thin, cap. Grenuile and others to lie off the South cape, thereby to amaze the Spaniſh fleet, and to holde them on their owne coaſt; while ſir I. Burgh, capt. Robert Croſſe, capt. Tomſon, & others ſhould attend at the Ilands for the caraks or any other Spaniſh ſhips comming from Mexico or other parts of the Weſt Indies. Which direction tooke effect accordingly; for the king of Spaines Admirall receiuing intelligence that the Engliſh fleet was come on the coaſt, attended to defend the South parts of Spaine, & to keepe himſelfe as nere ſir Mart. Frobiſher as he could, to impeach him in all things which he might vndertake; and thereby neglected the ſafeconduct of the caraks; with whom it fared as hereafter ſhall appeare. Before the fleet ſeuered themſelues they mette with a great Biſcain on the Spaniſh coaſt called Santa Clara a ſhip of 600 tunnes.

The Santa Clara a Biſcain ſhip of 600 tunnes taken.

The noiſe of the artillery on both ſides being heard, immediatly they drew to their fleet; where after a reaſonable hot fight, the ſhip was entred and maſtered, which they found fraighted with all ſorts of ſmall yron-worke, as horſe-ſhoes, nailes, plough-ſhares, yron barres, ſpikes, boults, locks, gimbols, & ſuch like, valued by vs at 6000 or 7000 li. but worth to them treble the value. This Biſcain was ſailing towards S. Lucar, there to take in ſome further prouiſion for the Weſt India. This ſhip being firſt roomaged, and after ſent for England, our fleet coaſted along towards the South cape of S. Vincent, and by the way, about the Rocke nere Lisbon, ſir Iohn Burrough in the Robucke ſpying a ſaile afarre off, gaue her preſent chaſe; which being a flieboat and of good ſaile, drew him farre Southwards before he could fetch her; but at laſt ſhe came vnder his lee and ſtrooke ſaile. The maſter of which flieboat comming aboord him, confeſſed that the king indeed had prepared a great fleet in S. Lucar and Cadiz, and (as the report in Spaine was currant) for the Weſt Indies. But in deed the Spaniſh king had prouided this fleet vpon this counſell. He receiued intelligence, that ſir Walter Ralegh was to put out ſtrong for the Weſt India: to impeach him, and to rancounter his force he appointed this fleet; although looking for the arriuall of his Eaſt Indian caraks, he firſt ordained thoſe ſhips to waft them from the Açores. But perſwading himſelfe, that if the fleet of ſir Walter Ralegh did go for the Weſt India, then the Ilands ſhould haue none to infeſt them but ſome ſmall men of warre, which the caraks of themſelues would be well able to match; his order was to Don Alonſo de Baçan brother to the Marques of Santa Cruz, and Generall of his armada, to purſue ſir Walters fleet, and to confront him, what courſe ſoeuer he held. And that this was true, our men in ſhort time by proofe vnderſtood: for ſir Iohn Burrough, not long after the taking of his laſt prize the flieboat, as he ſailed backe againe towards the reſt of his company, diſcouered the Spaniſh fleet to ſea-ward of him: which hauing likewiſe eſpied him betwixt them and the ſhore, made full account to bring him ſafe into Spaniſh harbour; and therefore ſpred themſelues in ſuch ſort before him, that indeed his danger was very great: for both the liberty of the ſea was brought into a narrow ſtraight, and the ſhore being enemy could giue him no comfort of reliefe : ſo that truſting to Gods helpe onely and his good ſaile, he thruſt out from among them in ſpight of all their force, and to the notable illuſion of all their cunning, which they ſhewed to the vttermoſt, in laying the way for his apprehenſion. But now ſir Iohn Burrough hauing happily eſcaped their clouches, finding the coaſt guarded by this fleet, and knowing it was but folly to expect a meeting there with ſir Martin Frobiſher (who vnderſtanding of this armada aſwell as himſelfe, would be ſure not to come that way) beganne to ſhape his courſe to the Açores according to ſir W. Raleghs direction, and came in ſight of S. Michael, running ſo neere by Villa Franca, that he might eaſily diſcerne the ſhippes lying there at anker. Diuers ſmall carauels both here and betweene S. Georges and the Pike in his courſe toward Flores he intercepted; of which no great intelligence for his affaires could be vnderſtood. Arriuing before Flores vpon Thurſday the 21 of Iune, towards euening, accompanied onely with captaine Caufield and the Maſter of his ſhippe, the reſt not being yet arriued, he made towards the ſhore with his boat, finding all the people of of Santa Cruz, a village of that Iland, in armes, fearing their landing, and ready marſhalled to defend their towne from ſpoile. Sir Iohn contrariwiſe made ſignes of amity vnto them by aduancing a white flagge, a common token of peace, which was anſwered againe of them with the like : whereupon enſued intercourſes of good friendſhip; and pledges were taken on both ſides, the captaine of the towne for them, and captaine Caufield for ours : ſo that whatſoeuer our men wanted, which that place could ſupply either in freſh water, victuals, or the like, was very willingly granted by the inhabitants : and good leaue had they to refreſh themſelues on ſhore as much and as oft as they would without reſtraint. At this Santa Cruz ſir Iohn Burrough was informed, that indeed there was among them no expectation of any fleet to come from the Weſt, but from the Eaſt, that no longer ſince then three dayes before his arriuall a carak was paſſed by for Lisbon, and that there were foure caraks more behinde, of one conſort. Sir Iohn being very glad of this newes, ſtayed no longer on ſhore, but preſently imbarqued himſelfe, hauing onely in company a ſmall barke of threeſcore tunnes belonging to one M. Hopkins of Briſtoll. In the meane while that theſe things thus paſſed at Flores, part of the reſt of the Engliſh fleet, which ſir Iohn Burrough had left vpon the coaſt of Spaine, drew alſo towards the Açores : and whereas he quickly at ſea had diſcouered one of the caraks, the ſame euening he might deſcry two or three of the Earle of Cumberlands ſhips (whereof one M. Norton was captaine) which hauing in like ſort kenned the carak, purſued her by that courſe which they ſaw her to runne towards the Ilands. But on no ſide was there any way made by reaſon of a great calme which yeelded no breath to ſpread a ſaile. Inſomuch that fitly to diſcouer her what ſhe was, of what burthen, force, and countenance, ſir Iohn Burrough tooke his boat, and rowed the ſpace of three miles, to make her exactly : and being returned, he conſulted with the better ſort of the company then preſent, vpon the boording her in the morning. But a very mighty ſtorme ariſing in the night, the extremity thereof forced them all to wey ankers, yet their care was ſuch in wreſtling with the weather not to loſe the carak, that in the morning, the tempeſt being qualified, and our men bearing againe with the ſhore, they might perceiue the carak very neere the land, and the Portugals confuſedly carrying on ſhore ſuch things as they could any maner of way conuey out of her; and ſeeing the haſte our men made to come vpon them, forſooke her : but firſt, that nothing might be left commodious to our men, ſet fire to that which they could not cary with them, intending by that meanes wholly to conſume her; that neither glory of victory nor benefit of ſhippe might remaine to ours. And leaſt the approch and induſtry of the Engliſh ſhould bring meanes to extinguiſh the flame, thereby to preſerue the reſidue of that which the fire had not deſtroyed; being foure hundred of them in number and well armed, they intrenched themſelues on land ſo neere to the carak, that ſhe being by their forces protected, and our men kept alooſe off, the fire might continue to the conſumption of the whole. This being noted by ſir Iohn Burrough he ſoone prouided a preſent remedy for this miſchiefe. For landing one hundred of his men, whereof many did ſwim and wade more then breſt high to ſhore, and eaſily ſcattering thoſe that preſented themſelues to guard the coaſt, he no ſooner drew toward their new trenches, but they fled immediatly, leauing as much as the fire had ſpared to be the reward of our mens paines. Here was taken among others one Vincent Fonſeca a Portugall, Purſer of the carak, with two others, one an Almaine and the ſecond a Low-dutchman, canoniers : who refuſing to make any voluntary report of thoſe things which were demanded of them, had the torture threatened, the feare whereof at the laſt wreſted from them this intelligence, that within fifteene dayes three other greater caraks then that lately fired would arriue at the ſame Iland : and that being fiue caraks in the fleet at their departure from Goa, to wit, the Buen Ieſus admirall, the Madre de Dios, the S. Bernardo, the S. Chriſtophoro, and the S. Cruz, (whoſe fortune you haue already heard) they had receiued ſpeciall commandement from the king not to touch in any caſe at the Iland of S. Helena, where the Portugall caraks in their returne from the Eaſt India were alwayes till now woont to arriue to refreſh themſelues with water and victuals. And the kings reaſon was; becauſe of the Engliſh men of warre, who (as he was informed) lay there in wait to intercept them. If therefore their neceſſity of water ſhould driue them to ſeeke ſupply any where, he appointed them Angola in the maine of Africa, with order there to ſtay onely the taking in of water to auoid the inconuenience of infections, wherunto that hot latitude is dangerouſly ſubiect. The laſt rendeuous for them all was the Iland of Flores, where the king aſſured them not to miſſe of his armada thither ſent of purpoſe for their wafting to Lisbon. Upon this information ſir Iohn drew to counſel, meeting there captaine Norton, captaine Dounton, captaine Abraham Cocke, captaines of three ſhips of the Earle of Cumberland, M. Tomſon of Harwich cap. of the Dainty of ſir Iohn Haukins, one of ſir W. Raleghs fleet, and M. Chriſtopher Newport cap. of the Golden dragon newly returned from the Weſt India, and others. Theſe being aſſembled, he communicated with them what he had vnderſtood of the foreſaid examinates, and what great preſumptions of trueth their relation did cary: wiſhing that foraſmuch as God & good fortune had brought them together in ſo good a ſeaſon, they would ſhew the vttermoſt of their indeuors to bring theſe Eaſterlings vnder the lee of the Engliſh obedience. Hereupon a preſent accord on all ſides followed not to part company or leaue of thoſe ſeas till time ſhould preſent cauſe to put their conſultations in execution. The next day her Maieſties good ſhip the Foreſight commanded by ſir Rob. Croſſe came in to the reſt: and he likewiſe informed of the matter was ſoone drawen into this ſeruice. Thus ſir Iohn with al theſe ſhips departing thence 6 or 7 leagues to the Weſt of Flores, they ſpread themſelues abroad from the North to the South, ech ſhip two leagues at the leaſt diſtant from another. By which order of extenſion they were able to diſcouer the ſpace of two whole degrees at ſea. In this ſort they lay from the 29 of Iune to the third of Auguſt, what time cap. Thomſon in the Dainty had firſt ſight of the huge carak called the Madre de Dios, one of the greateſt receit belonging to the crowne of Portugall. The Dainty being of excellent ſaile got the ſtart of the reſt of our fleet, and began the conflict ſomewhat to her coſt, with the ſlaughter and hurt of diuers of her men. Within a while after, ſir Iohn Burrough in the Robucke of ſir W. Raleghs, was at hand to ſecond her, who ſaluted her with ſhot of great ordinance, and continued the fight within muſket ſhot aſſiſted by cap. Tomſon and cap. Newport till ſir R. Croſſe viceadmirall of the fleet came vp being to leeward, at whoſe arriual ſir I. Burgh demanded of him what was beſt to be done, who anſwered, that if the carak were not boorded ſhe would recouer the ſhore and fire herſelfe as the other had done. Whereupon ſir I. Burgh concluded to intangle her; and ſir R. Croſſe promiſed alſo to faſten himſelfe to her together at the inſtant; which was performed: but after a while ſir Iohn Burgh receiuing a ſhot with a canon perier vnder water, and ready to ſinke, deſired ſir R. C. to fall off, that he might alſo cleere himſelfe, and ſaue his ſhip from ſinking, which with difficulty he did: for both the Roebucke and the Foreſight were ſo intangled, as with much adoe could they cleere themſelues.

Angola a new watering place for the caraks.

The ſame euening ſir R. Croſſe finding the carak then ſure & drawing nere the Iland perſwaded his company to boord her againe, or els there was no hope to recouer her: who after many excuſes & feares, were by him incouraged, and ſo fell athwart her foreſhips all alone; and ſo hindered her ſailing that the reſt had time to come vp to his ſuccour, & to recouer the carak yer ſhe recouered the land: and ſo toward the euening after he had fought with her alone three houres ſingle, my lord of Cumberlands two ſhips came vp, & with very litle loſſe entred with ſir R. Croſſe, who had in that time broken their courages, and made the aſſault eaſie for the reſt.

The Madre de Dios taken.

The generall hauing diſarmed the Portugals, and ſtowed them for better ſecurity on all ſides, firſt had preſented to his eyes the true proportion of the vaſt body of this carak, which did then and may ſtill iuſtly prouoke the admiration of all men not formerly acquainted with ſuch a ſight. But albeit this firſt apparance of the hugeneſſe thereof yeelded ſights enough to entertaine our mens eyes; yet the pitifull obiect of ſo many bodies ſlaine and diſmembred could not but draw ech mans eye to ſee, and heart to lament, and hands to helpe thoſe miſerable people, whoſe limnes were ſo torne with the violence of ſhot, and paine made grieuous with the multitude of woundes. No man could almoſt ſteppe but vpon a dead carkaſe or a bloody floore, but ſpecially about the helme, where very many of them fell ſuddenly from ſtirring to dying. For the greatneſſe of the ſtirrage requiring the labour of twelue or foureteene men at once, and ſome of our ſhippes beating her in at the ſterne with their ordinance often times with one ſhot ſlew foure or fiue labouring on either ſide of the helme; whoſe roomes being ſtill furniſhed with freſh ſupplies, and our artillery ſtill playing vpon them with continuall volleys, it could not be but that much bloud ſhould be ſhed in that place. Whereupon our Generall moued with ſingular commiſeration of their miſery, ſent them his owne chyrurgions, denying them no poſſible helpe or reliefe that he or any of his company could afford them. Among the reſt of thoſe, whoſe ſtate this chance had made very deplorable, was Don Fernando de Mendoça Grand captaine and Commander of this Carake: who indeed was deſcended of the houſe of Mendoça in Spaine; but being married into Portugall, liued there as one of that nation; a gentleman well ſtricken in yeeres, well ſpoken, of comely perſonage, of good ſtature, but of hard fortune. In his ſeuerall ſeruices againſt the Moores he was twiſe taken priſoner, and both times ranſomed by the king. In a former voyage of returne from the Eaſt India he was driuen vpon the Baxos or ſands of Iuda nere the coaſt of Cephala; being then alſo captaine of a caracke which was there loſt, and himſelfe, though eſcaping the ſea-danger, yet fell into the hands of infidels on land; who kept him vnder long and grieuous ſeruitude. Once more the king carying a louing reſpect to the man, and deſirous to better his condition, was content to let him try his fortune in this Eaſterly nauigation, and committed vnto him the conduct of this caracke, wherein he went from Lisbon Generall of the whole fleet, and in that degree had returned, if the Vice-rey of Goa embarked for Portugall in the Bon Ieſus had not, by reaſon of his late office, bene preferred. Sir Iohn intending not to adde too much affliction to the afflicted, mooued with pity and compaſſion of humane miſery, in the end reſolued freely to diſmiſſe this captaine & the moſt part of his followers to their owne countrey, and for the ſame purpoſe beſtowed them in certaine veſſels furniſhed with all kindes of neceſſary prouiſion. This buſineſſe thus diſpatched, good leaſure had he to take ſuch view of the goods as conueniency might afford. And hauing very prudently (to cut off the vnprofitable ſpoile & pillage whereunto he ſaw the mindes of many inclined) ſeiſed vpon the whole to her Maieſties vſe, after a ſhort & ſlender romaging & ſearching of ſuch things as firſt came to hand, he perceiued that ẏ wealth would ariſe nothing diſanſwerable to expectation; but that the variety and grandure of all rich commodities would be more then ſufficient to content both the aduenturers deſire & the ſouldiers trauell. And here I cannot but enter into the conſideration and acknowledgement of Gods great fauor towards our nation, who by putting this purchaſe into our hands hath manifeſtly diſcouered thoſe ſecret trades & Indian riches, which hitherto lay ſtrangely hidden, and cunningly concealed from vs; whereof there was among ſome few of vs ſome ſmall and vnperfect glimſe onely, which now is turned into the broad light of full and perfect knowledge. Whereby it ſhould ſeeme that the will of God for our good is (if our weakneſſe could apprehend it) to haue vs communicate with them in thoſe Eaſt Indian treaſures, & by the erection of a lawfull traffike to better our meanes to aduance true religion and his holy ſeruice. The caracke being in burden by the eſtimation of the wiſe and experienced no leſſe then 1600 tunnes had full 900 of thoſe ſtowed with the groſſe bulke of marchandiſe, the reſt of the tunnage being allowed, partly to the ordinance which were 32 pieces of braſſe of all ſizes, partly to the paſſengers and the victuals, which could not be any ſmall quantity, conſidering the number of the perſons betwixt 600 and 700, and the length of the nauigation. To giue you a taſte (as it were) of the commodities, it ſhall ſuffice to deliuer you a generall particularity of them, according to the catalogue taken at Leaden hall the 15 of September 1592. Where vpon good view it was found, that the principall wares after the iewels (which were no doubt of great value, though they neuer came to light) conſiſted of ſpices, drugges, ſilks, calicos, quilts, carpets and colours, &c. The ſpices were pepper, cloues, maces, nutmegs, cinamom, greene ginger: the drugs were beniamin, frankincenſe, galingale, mirabolans, aloes zocotrina, camphire: the ſilks, damaſks, taffatas, ſarcenets, altobaſſos, that is, counterfeit cloth of gold, vnwrought China ſilke, ſleaued ſilke, white twiſted ſilke, curled cypreſſe. The calicos were book-calicos, calico-launes, broad white calicos, fine ſtarched calicos, courſe white calicos, browne broad calicos, browne courſe calicos. There were alſo canopies, and courſe diaper-towels, quilts of courſe ſarcenet and of calico, carpets like thoſe of Turky; whereunto are to be added the pearle, muſke, ciuet, and amber-griece. The reſt of the wares were many in number, but leſſe in value; as elephants teeth, porcellan veſſels of China, coco-nuts, hides, eben-wood as blacke as iet, bedſteds of the ſame, cloth of the rindes of trees very ſtrange for the matter, and artificiall in workemanſhip. All which piles of commodities being by men of approued iudgement rated but in reaſonable ſort amounted to no leſſe then 150000 li. ſterling, which being diuided among the aduenturers (whereof her Maieſty was the chiefe) was ſufficient to yeeld contentment to all parties. The cargazon being taken out, and the goods fraighted in tenne of our ſhips ſent for London, to the end that the bigneſſe, heigth, length, bredth, and other dimenſions of ſo huge a veſſell might by the exact rules of Geometricall obſeruations be truly taken, both for preſent knowledge, and deriuation alſo of the ſame vnto poſterity, one M. Robert Adams, a man in his faculty of excellent ſkill, omitted nothing in the deſcription, which either his arte could demonſtrate, or any mans iudgement thinke worthy the memory. After an exquiſite ſuruey of the whole frame he found the length from the beak-head to the ſterne (whereupon was erected a lanterne) to containe 165 foote. The bredth in the ſecond cloſe decke whereof ſhe had three, this being the place where there was moſt extenſion of bredth, was 46 foote and 10 inches. She drew in water 31 foot at her departure from Cochin in India, but not aboue 26 at her arriuall in Dartmouth, being lightened in her voyage by diuers meanes, ſome 5 foote. She caried in height 7 ſeuerall ſtories, one maine Orlop, three cloſe decks, one fore-caſtle, and a ſpar-decke of two floores a piece. The length of the keele was 100 foote, of the maine-maſt 121 foot, and the circuite about at the partners 10 foote 7 inches, the maine-yard was 106 foote long. By which perfect commenſuration of the parts appeareth the hugeneſſe of the whole, farre beyond the mould of the biggeſt ſhipping vſed among vs either for warre or receit.

Don Alonſo de Baçan hauing a great Fleet and ſuffering theſe two caracks, the Santa Cruz to be burnt, and the Madre de Dios to be taken, was diſgraced by his prince for this negligence.

The firing and ſinking of the ſtout and warrelike Carack called Las Cinque Llaguas, or, The fiue Wounds, by three tall Ships ſet foorth at the charges of the right honorable the Erle of Cumberland and his friends: Written by the diſcreet and valiant captaine M. Nicholas Downton.

IN the latter ende of the yeere 1593. the right honourable Erle of Cumberland, at his owne charges and his friends, prepared 3 ſhips all at equall rate, and either of them had like quantitie of victuals, and like numbers of men, there being embarked in all 3 ſhips 420 men of al ſorts. The Roial Exchange went as Admirall, wherein M. George Caue was captaine. The May-flower Uiceadmirall vnder the conduct of William Anthonie: and the Sampſon, the charge whereof it pleaſed his honour to commit vnto me Nicholas Dounton. Our directions were ſent vs to Plimmouth, and we were to open them at ſea.

Beſides theſe 3 ſhips there was a pinnas called the Violet, or the Why not I.

The ſixt of Aprill 1594 we ſet ſayle in the ſound of Plimmouth, directing our courſe toward the coaſt of Spaine.

The 24 of the ſayd moneth at the Admirals direction wee diuided our ſelues Eaſt and Weſt from ech other, being then in the heigth of 43 degrees, with commaundement at night to come together againe.

The 27 day in the morning we deſcried the May-flower and the litle Pinnaſſe with a Prize that they had taken, being of Viana in Portugall, and bound for Angola in Africa. This Barke was of 28 tunnes, hauing ſome 17 perſons in the ſame. There were in her ſome 12 Buts of Galicia wine, whereof we tooke into euery ſhippe a like part, with ſome Ruske in cheſts and barrels, with 5 buts of blew courſe cloth, and certaine courſe linnen-cloth for Negros ſhirts, which goods were diuided among our fleet.

Commodities fit for Angola.

The 4 of May we had ſight of our Pinnaſſe, and the Admirals Shallop which had taken three Portugall Carauels, whereof they had ſent two away and kept the third.

The ſecond of Iune we had ſight of S. Michael. The third day in the morning wee ſent our ſmall pinnaſſe, which was of ſome 24 tunnes, with the ſmall Carauell which we had taken at the Burlings to range the road of all the Ilands, to ſee if they could get any thing in the ſame: appointing them to meet vs W.S.W. 12 leagues from Faiall. Their going from vs was to no purpoſe. They miſſed comming to vs whē we appointed, as alſo we miſſed them, when we had great cauſe to haue vſed them.

The 13 of Iune we met with a mightie Carack of the Eaſt Indies, called Las cinque Llagas, or The fiue wounds. The May-flower was in fight with her before night. I, in the Sampſon, fetched her vp in the euening, and as I commanded to giue her the broad ſide, as we terme it, while I ſtood very heedfully prying to diſcouer her ſtrength: and where I might giue counſel to boord her in the night when the Admirall came vp to vs, and as I remember at the very firſt ſhot ſhe diſcharged at vs, I was ſhot in a litle aboue the belly, whereby I was made vnſeruiceable for a good while after, without touching any other for that night. Yet by meanes of an honeſt truehearted man which I had with me, one captaine Grant, nothing was neglected: vntill midnight when the Admirall came vp, the May-flower, and the Sampſon neuer left by turnes to ply her with their great ordinance; but then captaine Caue wiſhed vs to ſtay till morning, at what time each one of vs ſhould giue her three bouts with our great ordinance, & ſo ſhould clap her a boord: but in deed it was long lingered in the morning vntill 10 of the clocke before wee attempted to boord her. The Admirall laid her a boord in the mid ſhip: the May-flower comming vp in the quarter, as it ſhould ſeeme, to lie at the ſterne of the Admirall on the larboord ſide. The captaine of the ſayd May-flower was ſlaine at the firſt comming vp: whereby the ſhip fell to the ſterne of the out-licar of the Carack, which (being a piece of timber) ſo wounded her foreſaile, that they ſayd they could come no more to fight, I am ſure they did not, but kept aloofe from vs. The Sampſon went aboord on the bow, but hauing not roome enough, our quarter lay on the Exchãges bow, and our bowe on the Caracks bowe. The Exchange alſo at the firſt comming had her captaine M. Caue ſhot into both the legs, the one whereof he neuer recouered, ſo he for that preſent was not able to doe his office, and in his abſence he had not any that would vndertake to lead out his company to enter vpon the enemie. My friend captaine Grant did lead my men on the Caracks ſide, which being not manfully backed by the Exchanges men, his forces being ſmal, made the enemie bolder then he would haue bene, whereby I had ſixe men preſently ſlaine and many more hurt, which made them that remained vnhurt to returne aboord, and would neuer more giue the aſſault. I ſay not but ſome of the Exchanges men did very well, and many more (no doubt) would haue done the like, if there had bene any principall man to haue put them forward, and to haue brought all the company to the fight, and not to haue run into corners themſelues. But I muſt needs ſay, that their ſhip was as well prouided for defence, as any that I haue ſeene. And the Portugals peraduenture encouraged by our ſlacke working, plaied the men and had Barricados made, where they might ſtand without any danger of our ſhot. They plied vs alſo very much with fire, ſo that moſt of our men were burnt in ſome place or other: & while our men were putting out of the fire, they would euer be plying them with ſmall ſhot or darts. This vnuſuall caſting of fire did much diſmay many of our men and made them draw backe as they did. When we had not men to enter, we plied our great ordinance much at them as high vp as they might be mounted, for otherwiſe we did them litle harme, and by ſhooting a piece out of our forecaſtle being cloſe by her, we fired a mat on her beak-head, which more and more kindled, and ran from thence to the mat on the bowſprit, and from the mat vp to the wood of the bow-ſprit, and thence to the top-ſaile yard, which fire made the Portugals abaft in the ſhip to ſtagger, and to make ſhew of parle. But they that had the charge before encouraged them, making ſhew, that it might eaſily be put out, and that it was nothing. Whereupon againe they ſtood ſtifly to their defence. Anone the fire grew ſo ſtrong, that I ſaw it beyond all helpe, although ſhe had bene already yeelded to vs. Then we deſired to be off from her, but had litle hope to obtaine our deſire; neuertheleſſe we plied water very much to keep our ſhip well. In deed I made litle other reckoning for the ſhip, my ſelfe, and diuers hurt men, then to haue ended there with the Carack, but moſt of our people might haue ſaued themſelues in boats. And when my care was moſt, by Gods prouidence onely, by the burning aſunder of our ſpritſaile-yard with ropes and ſaile, and the ropes about the ſpritſaile-yard of the Carack, whereby we were faſt intangled, we fell apart, with burning of ſome of our ſailes which we had then on boord. The Exchange alſo being farther from the fire, afterward was more eaſily cleared, and fell off from abaft. And as ſoone as God had put vs out of danger, the fire got into the fore-caſtle, where, I thinke, was ſtore of Beniamin, and ſuch other like combuſtible matter, for it flamed and ran ouer all the Carack at an inſtant in a maner. The Portugals lept ouer-boord in great numbers. Then ſent I captaine Grant with the boat, with leaue to vſe his owne diſcretion in ſauing of them. So he brought me aboord two gentlemen, the one an old man called Nuno Velio Pereira, which (as appeareth by the 4 chapter in the firſt booke of the worthy hiſtory of Huighen de Linſchoten) was gouernour of Moçambique and Cefala, in the yeere 1582, and ſince that time had bene likewiſe a gouernour in a place of importance in the Eaſt Indies. And the ſhippe wherein he was comming home was caſt away a litle to the Eaſt of the Cape of Buona Speranza, and from thence he trauelled ouer-land to Moçambique, and came as a paſſenger in this Carack. The other was called Bras Carrero, and was captaine of a Carack which was caſt away neere Moçambique, and came likewiſe in this ſhip for a paſſenger. Alſo three men of the inferior ſort we ſaued in our boat, onely theſe two we clothed and brought into England. The reſt which were taken vp by the other ſhip boats, we ſet all on ſhore in the Ile of Flores, except ſome two or three Negros, whereof one was borne in Moçambique, and another in the Eaſt Indies. This fight was open off the Sound betweene Faial and Pico 6 leagues to the Southward. The people which we ſaued told vs that the cauſe why they would not yeeld, was, becauſe this Carack was for the king, and that ſhe had all the goods belonging to the king in the countrey for that yeere in her, and that the captaine of her was in fauour with the king, and at his returne into the Indies ſhould haue bene Viceroy there. And withall this ſhip was nothing at all peſtered neither within boord nor without, and was more like a ſhip of warre then otherwiſe: moreouer, ſhe had the ordinance of a Carak that was caſt away at Moçambique, and the company of her, together with the company of another Carack that was caſt away a litle to the Eaſtwards of the Cape of Buona Speranza. Yet through ſickneſſe which they caught at Angola, where they watered, they ſay, they had not now aboue 150 white men, but Negros a great many. They likewiſe affirmed that they had three noblemen and three ladies in her, but we found them to differ in moſt of their talke. All this day and all the night ſhe burned, but the next morning her powder which was loweſt being 60 barrels blew her abroad, ſo that moſt of the ſhip did ſwim in parts aboue the water. Some of them ſay, that ſhe was bigger then the Madre de Dios, and ſome, that ſhe was leſſe: but ſhe was much vndermaſted, and vnderſailed, yet ſhe went well for a ſhip that was ſo foule. The ſhot which wee made at her in great Ordinance before we layde her aboord might be at ſeuen bouts which we had, and ſixe or 7 ſhot at a bout, one with another, ſome 49 ſhot: the time we lay aboord might be two houres. The ſhot which we diſcharged aboord the Carack might be ſome twentie Sacars. And thus much may ſuffice concerning our daungerous conflict with that vnfortunate Carack.

The laſt of Iune after long trauerſing of the ſeas we had ſight of another mightie Carack, which diuerſe of our company at the firſt tooke to be the great S. Philip the Admirall of Spaine, but the next day being the firſt of Iuly fetching her vp we perceiued her indeede to be a Carack, which after ſome few ſhot beſtowed vpon her we ſummoned to yeeld; but they ſtanding ſtoutly to their defence vtterly refuſed the ſame. Wherefore ſeeing no good could be done without boording her I conſulted what courſe we ſhould take in the boording. But by reaſon that wee which were the chiefe Captaines were partly ſlaine and partly wounded in the former conflict, and becauſe of the murmuring of ſome diſordered and cowardly companions, our valiant and reſolute determinations were croſſed: and to conclude a long diſcourſe in few wordes, the Carack eſcaped our hands. After this attending about Coruo & Flores for ſome Weſt Indian purchaſe, and being diſappointed of our expectation, and victuals growing ſhort, we returned for England, where I arriued at Porteſmouth the 28 of Auguſt.

The caſting away of the Tobie neere Cape Eſpartel corruptly called Cape Sprat without the Straight of Gibraltar on the coaſt of Barbarie. 1593.

The Tobie of London a ſhip of 250 tunnes manned with fiftie men, the owner whereof was the worſhipfull M. Richard Staper, being bound for Liuorno, Zante and Patras in Morea, being laden with marchandize to the value of 11 or 12 thouſand pounds ſterling, ſet ſayle from Black-wall the 16 day of Auguſt 1593, and we went thence to Porteſmouth where we tooke in great quantitie of wheate, and ſet ſayle foorth of Stokes bay in the Iſle of Wight, the 6. day of October, the winde being faire: and the 16 of the ſame moneth we were in the heigth of Cape S. Vincent, where on the next morning we deſcried a ſayle which lay in try right a head off vs, to which we gaue chaſe with very much winde, the ſayle being a Spaniard, which wee found in fine ſo good of ſayle that we were faine to leaue her and giue her ouer. Two dayes after this we had ſight of mount Chiego, which is the firſt high-land which we deſcrie on the Spaniſh coaſt at the entrance of the Straight of Gibraltar, where we had very foule weather and the winde ſcant two dayes together. Here we lay off to the ſea. The Maſter, whoſe name was George Goodlay, being a young man, and one which neuer tooke charge before for thoſe parts, was very proud of that charge which he was litle able to diſcharge, neither would take any counſel of any of his company, but did as he thought beſt himſelfe, & in the end of the two dayes of foule weather caſt about, and the winde being faire, bare in with the ſtraights mouth. The 19 day at night he thinking that he was farther off the land then he was, bare ſayle all that night, & an houre and an halfe before day had ranne our ſhippe vpon the ground on the coaſt of Barbarie without the ſtraight foure leagues to the South of Cape Eſpartel. Whereupon being all not a litle aſtonied, the Maſter ſaid vnto vs, I pray you forgiue me; for this is my fault and no mans elſe. The company aſked him whether they ſhould cut off the maine maſte: no ſayd the Maſter we will hoyſe out our boate. But one of our men comming ſpeedily vp, ſayd, Sirs, the ſhip is full of water, well ſayd the Maſter, then cut the mayne-maſt ouer boord: which thing we did with all ſpeede. But the after part ſuddenly ſplit a ſunder in ſuch ſort that no man was able to ſtand vpon it, but all fled vpon the foremaſt vp into the ſhrouds thereof, and hung there for a time: but ſeeing nothing but preſent death approch (being ſo ſuddenly taken that we could not make a raft which we had determined) we committed our ſelues vnto the Lord and beganne with dolefull tune and heauy hearts to ſing the 12 Pſalme. Helpe Lord for good and godly men &c. Howbeit before we had finiſhed foure verſes the waues of the ſea had ſtopped the breaches of moſt of our men. For the foremaſt with the weight of our men & the force of the ſea fell downe into the water, and vpon the fall thereof there were 38 drowned, and onely 12 by Gods prouidence partly by ſwimming and other meanes of cheſts gote on ſhoare, which was about a quarter of a mile from the wracke of the ſhip. The maſter called George Goodley, and William Palmer his mate, both periſhed. M. Cæſar alſo being captaine and owner was likewiſe drowned: none of the officers were ſaued but the carpenter.

We twelue which the Lord had deliuered from extreme danger of the Sea, at our comming aſhore fell in a maner into as great diſtreſſe. At our firſt comming on ſhore we all fell downe on our knees, praying the Lord moſt humbly for his mercifull goodneſſe. Our prayers being done, we conſulted together what courſe to take, ſeeing we were fallen into a deſert place, & we trauelled all that day vntill night, ſometimes one way and ſometimes another, and could finde no kinde of inhabitants; onely we ſaw where wilde beaſts had bene, and places where there had bene houſes, which after we perceiued to haue bene burnt by the Portugals. So at night falling into certaine groues of oliue trees, we climed vp and ſate in them to auoid the danger of lions and other wilde beaſts, whereof we ſaw many the next morning. The next day we trauelled vntill three of the clocke in the afternoone without any food, but water and wilde date roots: then going ouer a mountaine, we had ſight of Cape Eſpartel; whereby we knew ſomewhat better which way to trauell, and then we went forward vntill we came to an hedgerow made with great long canes; we ſpied and looked ouer it, and beheld a number of men aſwell horſemen as footmen, to the number of ſome fiue thouſand in ſkirmiſh together with ſmall ſhot and other weapons. And after conſultation what we were beſt to do, we concluded to yeeld our ſelues vnto them, being deſtitute of all meanes of reſiſtance. So riſing vp we marched toward them, who eſpying vs, foorthwith ſome hundred of them with their iauelings in their hands came running towards vs as though they would haue run vs thorow: howbeit they onely ſtrooke vs flatling with their weapons, and ſaid that we were Spaniards: and we tolde them that we were Engliſhmen; which they would not beleeue yet. By and by the conflict being ended, and night approching, the captaine of the Moores, a man of ſome 56 yeres olde, came himſelfe vnto vs, and by his interpretor which ſpake Italian, aſked what we were, and from whence we came. One Thomas Henmer of our company which could ſpeake Italian, declared vnto him that we were marchants, and how by great miſfortune our ſhip, marchandiſe, & the greateſt part of our company were pitifully caſt away vpon their coaſt. But he void of humainity & all manhood, for all this, cauſed his men to ſtrip vs out of our apparell euen to our ſhirts to ſee what money and iewels we had about vs: which when they had found to the value of ſome 200 pounds in golde and pearles they gaue vs ſome of our apparel againe, and bread and water onely to comfort vs. The next morning they carried vs downe to the ſhore where our ſhippe was caſt away, which was ſome ſixteene miles from that place. In which iourney they vſed vs like their ſlaues, making vs (being extreame weake) to carry their ſtuffe, and offering to beat vs if we went not ſo faſt as they. We aſked them why they vſed vs ſo: and they replied, that we were their captiues: we ſayd we were their friends, and that there was neuer Engliſhman captiue to the king of Marocco. So we came downe to the ſhip, and lay there with them ſeuen dayes, while they had gotten all the goods they could, and then they parted it amongſt them. After the end of theſe ſeuen dayes the captaine appointed twenty of his men wel armed, to bring vs vp into yͤ countrey: and the firſt night we came to the ſide of a riuer called Alarach, where we lay on the graſſe all that night: ſo the next day we went ouer the riuer in a frigate of nine oares on a ſide, the riuer being in that place aboue a quarter of a mile broad: and that day we went to a towne of thirty houſes, called Totteon: there we lay foure dayes hauing nothing to feed on but bread and water; and then we went to a towne called Caſſuri, and there we were deliuered by thoſe twenty ſouldiers vnto the Alcaide, which examined vs what we were: and we tolde him. He gaue vs a good anſwere, and ſent vs to the Iewes houſe, where we lay ſeuen dayes. In the meane while that we lay here, there were brought thither twenty Spaniards and twenty Frenchmen, which Spaniards were taken in a conflict on land, but the Frenchmen were by foule weather caſt on land within the Straights about Cape de Gate, and ſo made captiues. Thus at the ſeuen dayes end we twelue Engliſhmen, the twelue French, and the twenty Spaniards were all conducted toward Marocco with nine hundred ſouldiers horſemen and fotmen, and in two dayes iourney we came to the riuer of Fez, where we lodged all night, being prouided of tents. The next day we went to a towne called Salle, and lay without the towne in tents. From thence we trauelled almoſt an hundred miles without finding any towne, but euery night we came to freſh water, which was partly running water and ſometime raine water. So we came at laſt within three miles of the city of Marocco, where we pitched our tents: and there we mette with a carrier which did trauell in the countrey for the Engliſh marchants; and by him we ſent word vnto them of our eſtate: and they returned the next day vnto vs a Moore, which brought vs victuals, being at that inſtant very feeble and hungry; and withall ſent vs a letter with pen, inke, and paper, willing vs to write vnto them what ſhip it was that was caſt away, and how many and what men there were aliue. Foꝛ ſaid they we would knowe with ſpeed, foꝛ to moꝛow is the kings court: and therefoꝛe we would know, foꝛ that you ſhould come into the citie like captiues. But foꝛ all that we were carried in as captiues and with ropes about our neckes as well Engliſh as the French and Spaniards. And ſo we were carried befoꝛe the king: and when we came befoꝛe him he did commit vs all to ward, where wee lay 15 dayes in cloſe pꝛiſon: and in the end we were cleared by the Engliſh Marchants to their great charges: foꝛ our deliuerance coſt them 700 ounces, euery ounce in that country contayning two ſhillings. And when we came out of pꝛiſon we went to the Alfandica, where we continued eight weekes with the Engliſh marchants. At the end of which time being well apparelled by the bountie of our marchants we were conueyed downe by the ſpace of eight dayes iourney to S. Cruz, where the Engliſh ſhips road: where we tooke ſhipping about the 20 of March, two in the Anne Francis of London, and fiue moꝛe of vs fiue dayes after in the Expedition of London, and two moꝛe in a Flemiſh flie-boat, and one in the Mary Edward alſo of London, other two of our number died in the countrey of the bloodie-fluxe: the one at our firſt impꝛiſonment at Marocco, whoſe name was George Hancock, and the other at S. Cruz, whoſe name was Robert Swanton, whoſe death was haſtened by eating of rootes and other vnnaturall things to ſlake their raging hunger in our trauaile, and by our hard and cold lodging in the open fields without tents. Thus of fiftie perſons through the raſhneſſe of an vnſkilfull Maſter ten onely ſuruiued of vs, and after a thouſand miſeries returned home pooꝛe, ſicke, and feeble into our countrey.

The ſame in Engliſh.

To the moſt inuincible and puiſſant king of the Abaſſens, the mightie Emperour of Aethiopia the higher and the lower.

ELizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith &c. To the moſt high and mightie Emperour of Aethiopia greeting. Whereas it is a matter requiſite and well beſeeming all kings and princes of what lands or nations ſoeuer, be they neuer ſo much diſſeuered in place or differing in cuſtomes and lawes, to maintaine and preſerue the common ſocietie of mankinde, and, as occaſion ſhall be offered, to performe mutuall duties of charitie and beneuolence: we for that cauſe conceiuing moſt vndoubted hope of your princely fidelitie and courteſie, haue giuen vnto this our ſubiect Laurence Alderſey intending to trauell into your dominions, theſe our letters to be deliuered without faile vnto your Highneſſe, to the end they may be a teſtimony of our good will towards you and of our ſaide ſubiect his departure from England. Who, after his trauels in many forren countreys, being as yet enflamed with a deſire more throughly to ſuruey and contemplate the world, and now at length to vndertake a long and daungerous iourney into your territories and regions: both the ſayd Laurence thought, and our ſelues alſo deemed, that it would very much auaile him, as well for his owne ſafetie as for the attayning of your fauour, if, being protected with our broad ſeale, hee might tranſport vnto your Highneſſe a teſtimony of our louing affection & of his departure from hence. For ſithence almightie God the higheſt Creatour and gouernour of the world hath allotted vnto kings and princes his vicegerents ouer the face of the whole earth, their deſigned portions and limits to be ruled and adminiſtred by them; and by this his gift hath eſtabliſhed among them a certaine law of brotherly kindneſſe, and an eternall league by them to be obſerued: it will not (we hope) ſeeme vnpleaſant vnto your highneſſe, when you ſhall haue intelligence of our louing letters ſent ſo huge a diſtance ouer ſea and land, euen from the fartheſt realme of England vnto you in Aethiopia. On the other ſide our ſelues ſhall take great ſolace and delight, when as by the relation of our owne ſubiects, the renowme of your name ſhall be brought vnto vs from the fountains of Nilus, and from thoſe regions which are ſituate vnder the Southerne Tropike. May it pleaſe you therefore of your princely clemencie to vouchſafe ſo much fauour on this our ſubiect, that he may, vnder the ſafeguard and protection of your name, enter into your highneſſe dominions, and there remaine ſafe and free from danger. Which fauour and courteſie wee doe likewiſe moſt earneſtly requeſt at the hands of other princes, through whoſe Seigniories our ſaid ſubiect is to paſſe; and we ſhall eſteeme it as done vnto our ſelfe and for our honours ſake. Neither do we require any greater fauour in this behalfe, then we are vpon the like occaſion moſt ready to graunt vnto the ſubiects of all princes and the people of all Nations, trauelling into our dominions. Giuen at London the fift day of Nouember, in the thirtie and ninth yeere of our reigne: and in the yeare of our Lorde 1597.

To the right honourable ſir Robert Cecil knight, principall Secretary to her Maieſtie, maſter of the Court of Wards and Liueries, and one of her Maieſties moſt honourable priuie Councel.

RIght honourable, your fauourable acceptance of my ſecond volume of The Engliſh voyages offred vnto you the laſt yere, your peruſing of the ſame at your conuenient leaſure, your good teſtimony of my ſelfe and of my trauailes therein, together with the infallible ſignes of your earneſt deſire to doe mee good, which very lately, when I thought leaſt thereof, brake forth into moſt bountiful and acceptable effects: theſe conſiderations haue throughly animated and encouraged me to preſent vnto your prudent cenſure this my third and laſt volume alſo. The ſubiect and matter herein contained is the fourth part of the world, which more commonly then properly is called America: but by the chiefeſt authors The new world. New, in regard of the new and late diſcouery thereof made by Chriſtopher Colon, aliàs Columbus, a Genouois by nation, in the yere of grace 1492. And world, in reſpect of the huge extenſion thereof, which to this day is not throughly diſcouered, neither within the Inland nor on the coaſt, eſpecially toward the North and Northweſt, although on the hither ſide it be knowen vnto vs for the ſpace of fiue thouſand leagues at the leaſt, compting and conſidering the trending of the land, and for 3000. more on the backeſide in the South Sea from the Streight of Magellan to Cape Mendoçino and Noua Albion. So that it ſeemeth very fitly to be called A newe worlde. Howbeit it cannot be denied but that Antiquitie had ſome kinde of dimme glimſe, and vnperfect notice thereof. Which may appeare by the relation of Plato in his two worthy dialogues of Timæus and Critias vnder the diſcourſe of that mighty large yland called by him Atlantis, lying in the Ocean ſea without the Streight of Hercules, now called the Streight of Gibraltar, being (as he there reporteth) bigger then Africa & Aſia: And by that of Ariſtotle in his booke De admirandis auditionibus of the long nauigation of certaine Carthaginians, who ſayling forth of the aforeſaid Streight of Gibraltar into the maine Ocean for the ſpace of many dayes, in the ende found a mighty and fruitfull yland, which they would haue inhabited, but were forbidden by their Senate and chiefe gouernours. Moreouer, aboue 300. yeeres after theſe wee haue the teſtimony of Diodorus Siculus lib. 5. cap. 7. of the like mighty yland diſcouered in the Weſterne Ocean by the Tyrrheni, who were forbidden for certaine cauſes to inhabite the ſame by the foreſaid Carthaginians. And Seneca in his tragedie intituled Medea foretold aboue 1500. yeeres paſt, that in the later ages the Ocean would diſcouer new worlds, and that the yle of Thule would no more be the vttermoſt limite of the earth. For whereas Virgile had ſaid to Auguſtus Cæſar, Tibi ſeruiat vltima Thule, alluding thereunto he contradicteth the ſame, and ſaith, Nec ſit terris vltima Thule. Yea Tertullian one of our moſt ancient and learned diuines, in the beginning of his treatiſe de Pallio alludeth vnto Plato his Weſterne Atlantis, which there by another name he calleth Aeon, ſaying, Aeon in Atlantico nunc quæritur. And in his 40. chapter de Apologetico he reporteth the ſame to be bigger then all Africa and Aſia. Of this New world and euery ſpeciall part thereof in this my third volume I haue brought to light the beſt & moſt perfect relations of ſuch as were chiefe actours in the particular diſcoueries and ſerches of the ſame, giuing vnto euery man his right, and leauing euery one to mainteine his owne credit. The order obſerued in this worke is farre more exact, then heretofore I could attaine vnto: for whereas in my two former volumes I was enforced for lacke of ſufficient ſtore, in diuers places to vſe the methode of time onely (which many worthy authors on the like occaſion are enforced vnto) being now more plentifully furniſhed with matter, I alwayes follow the double order of time and place. Wherefore propoſing vnto my ſelfe the right ſituation of this New world, I begin at the extreme Northerne limite, and put downe ſucceſſiuely in one ranke or claſsis, according to the order aforeſaide, all ſuch voyages as haue bene made to the ſaid part: which comming all together, and following orderly one vpon another, doe much more lighten the readers vnderſtanding, and confirme his iudgement, then if they had bene ſcattered in ſundry corners of the worke. Which methode I obſerue from the higheſt North to the loweſt South. Now where any country hath bene but ſeldome hanted, or any extraordinary and chiefe action occurreth, if I finde one voyage well written by two ſeuerall perſons, ſometimes I make no difficultie to ſet downe both thoſe iournals, as finding diuers things of good moment obſerued in the one, which are quite omitted in the other. For commonly a ſouldier obſerueth one thing, and a mariner another, and as your honour knoweth, Plus vident oculi, quàm oculus. But this courſe I take very ſeldome and ſparingly. And albeit my worke do carry the title of The Engliſh voyages, aſwell in regard that the greateſt part are theirs, and that my trauaile was chiefly vndertaken for preſeruation of their memorable actions, yet where our owne mens experience is defectiue, there I haue bene careful to ſupply the ſame with the beſt and chiefeſt relations of ſtrangers. As in the diſcouery of the Grand Bay, of the mighty riuer of S. Laurence, of the countries of Canada, Hochelaga, and Saguenay, of Florida, and the Inland of Cibola, Tiguex, Cicuic, and Quiuira, of The gulfe of California, & the Northweſterne ſea-coaſt to Cabo Mendocino and Sierra Neuada: as alſo of the late & rich diſcouery of 15. prouinces on the backſide of Florida and Virginia, the chiefeſt wherof is called the kingdome of New Mexico, for the wealth, ciuil gouernment, and populouſneſſe of the ſame. Moreouer, becauſe ſince our warres with Spaine, by the taking of their ſhips, and ſacking of their townes and cities, moſt of all their ſecrets of the Weſt Indies, and euery part thereof are fallen into our peoples hands (which in former time were for the moſt part vnknowen vnto vs,) I haue vſed the vttermoſt of my beſt endeuour, to get, and hauing gotten, to tranſlate out of Spaniſh, and here in this preſent volume to publiſh ſuch ſecrets of theirs, as may any way auaile vs or annoy them, if they driue and vrge vs by their ſullen inſolencies, to cõtinue our courſes of hoſtilitie againſt them, and ſhall ceaſe to ſeeke a good and Chriſtian peace vpon indifferent and equal conditions. What theſe things be, and of how great importance your honour in part may vnderſtand, if it pleaſe you to vouchſafe to reade the Catalogues cõteyning the 14. principal heads of this worke. Whereby your honor may farther perceiue that there is no chiefe riuer,no port,no towne, no citie,no prouince of any reckoning in the Weſt Indies,that hath not here ſome good deſcription thereof, aſwell for the inland as the ſeaſt.coaſt. And for the knowledge of the true breadth of the Sea betweene Noua Albion on the Northweſt part of America,and the yle of Iapan lying ouer againſt the kingdomes of Coray and China, which vntil theſe foure yeeres was neuer reueiled vnto vs,being a point of exceeding great conſequence, I haue here inſerted the voyage of one Francis Gualle a Spaniard made from Acapulco an hauen on the South ſea on the coaſt of New Spaine, firſt to the Philippinas, and then to the citie of Macao in China,and homeward from Macao by the yles of Iapan, and thence to the back of the Weſt Indies in the Northerly latitude of 37 degrees ½. In which courſe betweene the ſaid ylands and the maine he found a wide and ſpacious open Ocean of 900. leagues broad, which a little more to the Northward hath bene ſet out as a Streight, and called in moſt mappes The Streight of Anian. In which relation to the viceroy hee conſtantly affirmeth three ſeuerall times, that there is a paſſage that way vnto the North parts of Aſia. Moreouer, becauſe I perceiue by a letter directed by her Maieſtie to the Emperour of China (and ſent in the laſt Fleet intended for thoſe parts by The South Sea vnder the charge of Beniamin Wood,chiefly ſet out at the charges of ſir Robert Duddeley, a gentleman of excellent parts) that ſhe vſeth her princely mediation for obtaining of freedome of traffique for her marchants in his dominions, for the better inſtruction of our people in the ſtate of thoſe countries, I haue brought to light certaine new aduertiſements of the late alteration of the mightie monarchie of the confronting yle of Iapan,and of the new conqueſt of the kingdome of Coray, not long ſince tributarie to the king of China, by Quabacondono the monarch of all the yles and princedomes of Iapan; as alſo of the Tartars called Iezi, adioyning on the Eaſt & Northeaſt parts of Coray,where I thinke the beſt vtterance of our natural and chiefe commoditie of cloth is like to be, if it pleaſe God hereafter to reueile vnto vs the paſſage thither by the Northweſt. The moſt exact and true information of the North parts of China I finde in an hiſtory of Tamerlan,which I haue in French,ſet out within theſe ſixe yeres by the abbat of Mortimer, dedicated to the French king that now reigneth, who confeſſeth that it was long ſince written in the Arabian tongue by one Alhacen a wiſe and valiant Captaine, employed by the ſaid mighty prince in all his conqueſts of the foreſaid kingdome. Which hiſtory I would not haue failed to haue tranſlated into Engliſh, if I had not found it learnedly done vnto my hand.

And for an appendix vnto the ende of my worke,I haue thought it not impertinent,to exhibite to the graue and diſcreet iudgements of thoſe which haue the chiefe places in the Admiraltie and marine cauſes of England, Certaine briefe extracts of the orders of the Contractation houſe of Siuil in Spaine,touching their gouernment in ſea-matters; together with The ſtreight and ſeuere examination of Pilots and Maſters before they be admitted to take charge of ſhips, aſwell by the Pilot mayor, and brotherhood of ancient Maſters, as by the Kings reader of The lecture of the art of Nauigation,with the time that they be enioyned to bee his auditors,and ſome part of the queſtions that they are to anſwere vnto. Which if they finde good and beneficial for our ſeamen,I hope they wil gladly imbrace and imitate, or finding out ſome fitter courſe of their owne, will ſeeke to bring ſuch as are of that calling vnto better gouernment and more perfection in that moſt laudable and needfull vocation. To leaue this point, I was once minded to haue added to the end of theſe my labours a ſhort treatiſe, which I haue lying by me in writing, touching The curing of hot diſeaſes incident to trauellers in long and Southerne voyages, which treatiſe was written in Engliſh, no doubt of a very honeſt mind, by one M. George Wateſon, and dedicated vnto her ſacred Maieſtie. But being carefull to do nothing herein raſhly, I ſhewed it to my worſhipfull friend M. doctour Gilbert, a gentleman no leſſe excellent in the chiefeſt ſecrets of the Mathematicks (as that rare iewel lately ſet foorth by him in Latine doeth euidently declare) then in his owne profeſſion of phyſicke: who aſſured me, after hee had peruſed the ſaid treatiſe, that it was very defectiue and vnperfect, and that if hee might haue leaſure, which that argument would require, he would either write ſomething thereof more aduiſedly himſelfe, or would conferre with the whole Colledge of the Phyſicions, and ſet downe ſome order by common conſent for the preſeruation of her Maieſties ſubiects. Now as the foreſaid treatiſe touched the cure of diſeaſes growing in hot regions, ſo being requeſted thereunto by ſome in authoritie they may adde their iudgements for the cure of diſeaſes incident vnto men employed in cold regions, which to good purpoſe may ſerue our peoples turnes, if they chance to proſecute the intermitted diſcouery by the Northweſt, whereunto I finde diuers worſhipfull citizens at this preſent much inclined. Now becauſe long ſince I did foreſee, that my profeſſion of diuinitie, the care of my family, and other occaſions might call and diuert me from theſe kinde of endeuours, I haue for theſe 3. yeeres laſt paſt encouraged and furthered in theſe ſtudies of Coſmographie and forren hiſtories, my very honeſt, induſtrious, and learned friend M. IOHN PORY, one of ſpeciall ſkill and extraordinary hope to performe great matters in the ſame, and beneficial for the common wealth.

Thus Sir I haue portrayed out in rude lineaments my Weſterne Atlantis or America: aſſuring you, that if I had bene able, I would haue limned her and ſet her out with farre more liuely and exquiſite colours: yet, as ſhe is, I humbly deſire you to receiue her with your wonted and accuſtomed fauour at my handes, who alwayes wil remaine moſt ready and deuoted to do your honour any poore ſeruice that I may; and in the meane ſeaſon will not faile vnfainedly to beſeech the Almighty to powre vpon you the beſt of his temporall bleſſings in this world, and after this life ended with true and much honour, to make you partaker of his ioyes eternall. From London the firſt of September, the yeere of our Lord God 1600.

Your Honours moſt humble to be commanded,

RICHARD HAKLVYT, Preacher.

THE THIRD AND LAST Volume of the principall Nauigations, Voyages, Traffiques and Diſcoueries of the Engliſh Nation made to the Northweſt, Weſt, and Southweſt parts of the World, with the Letters, Priuileges, Diſcourſes, Obſeruations, and other neceſſary things concerning the ſame.

The moſt ancient Diſcouery of the VVeſt Indies by Madoc the ſonne of Owen Guyneth Prince of North-wales, in the yeere 1170: taken out of the hiſtory of Wales, lately publiſhed by M. Dauid Powel Doctor of Diuinity.

AFter the death of Owen Guyneth, his ſonnes fell at debate who ſhould inherit after him: for the eldeſt ſonne borne in matrimony, Edward or Iorwerth Drwydion, was counted vnmeet to gouerne, becauſe of the maime vpon his face: and Howell that tooke vpon him all the rule was a baſe ſonne, begotten vpon an Iriſh woman. Therefore Dauid gathered all the power he could, and came againſt Howel, and fighting with him, ſlew him; and afterwards inioyed quietly the whole land of Northwales, vntill his brother Iorwerths ſonne came to age. Madoc another of Owen Guyneth his ſonnes left the land in contention betwixt his brethren, & prepared certaine ſhips, with men and munition, and ſought aduentures by Seas, ſailing Weſt, and leauing the coaſt of Ireland ſo farre North, that he came vnto a land vnknowen, where he ſaw many ſtrange things.

Madoc the ſon of Owen Guyneth.

This land muſt needs be ſome part of that Countrey of which the Spanyards affirme themſelues to be the firſt finders ſince Hannos time. Whereupon it is manifeſt that that countrey was by Britaines diſcouered, long before Columbus led any Spanyards thither.

Hum. Lloyd.

Of the voyage and returne of this Madoc there be many fables fained, as the common people doe vſe in diſtance of place and length of time rather to augment then to diminiſh: but ſure it is there he was. And after he had returned home, and declared the pleaſant and fruitfull countreys that he had ſeene without inhabitants, and vpon the contrary part, for what barren & wild ground his brethren and nephewes did murther one another, he prepared a number of ſhips, and got with him ſuch men and women as were deſirous to liue in quietneſſe: and taking leaue of his friends, tooke his iourney thitherward againe. Therefore it is to be ſuppoſed that he and his people inhabited part of thoſe countreys: for it appeareth by Francis Lopez de Gomara, that in Acuzamil and other places the people honored the croſſe. Wherby it may be gathered that Chriſtians had bene there before the comming of the Spanyards. But becauſe this people were not many, they followed the maners of the land which they came vnto, & vſed the language they found there.

The ſecond voyage of Madoc the ſonne of Owen Guyneth.

Gomara. lib. 2, cap. 16.

This Madoc arriuing in that Weſterne country, vnto the which he came in the yere 1170, left moſt of his people there, and returning backe for more of his owne nation, acquaintance & friends to inhabit that faire & large countrey, went thither againe with ten ſailes, as I find noted by Gutyn Owen. I am of opinion that the land whereunto he came was ſome part of the Weſt Indies.

The offer of the diſcouery of the VVeſt Indies by Chriſtopher Columbus to king Henry the ſeuenth in the yeere 1488 the 13 of February: with the kings acceptation of the offer, & the cauſe whereupon hee was depriued of the ſame: recorded in the thirteenth chapter of the hiſtory of Don Fernand Columbus of the life and deeds of his father Chriſtopher Columbus.

Christophero Colon temendo, ſe parimente i Re di Caſtiglia non aſſentiſſero alla ſua impreſa, non gli biſognaſſe proporla di nuouo à qualche altro principe, & coſi in cio paſſaſſe lungo tempo; mandò in Inghilterra vn ſuo fratello, che haueua appreſſo di ſe, chiamato Bartholomeo Colon: il qual, quantunque non haueſſe lettere Latine, erà però huomo prattico, & giudicioſo nelle coſe del mare, & ſapea molto bene far carte da nauigare, & ſphere, & altri inſtrumenti di quella profeſſione, come dal ſuo fratello era inſtrutto. Partito adunque Bartholomeo Colon per Inghilterra, volle la ſua ſorte, che deſſe in man di corſali, i quali lo ſpogliarono inſieme con gli altri della ſua naue. Per la qual coſa, & per la ſua pouertà & infirmità, che in coſi diuerſe terre lo aſſalirono crudelmente, prolungo per gran tempo la ſua ambaſciata, fin che, aquiſtata vn poco di faculta con le carte, ch' ei fabricaua, cominciò a far pratiche co' il Re Enrico ſettimo, padre di Enrico ottauo, che al preſente regna: a cui appreſentò vn mappamondo, nel quale erano ſcritti queſti verſi, che fra le ſue ſcriture Io trouai, & da me ſaranno qui poſti piu toſto per l' antichità, che per la loro eleganza.

Ma, tornando al Re d' Inghilterra, dico, che, da lui il mappamondo veduto, & cio che l' Ammiraglio gli offeriua, con allegro volto accettò la ſua offerta, & mandolo a chiamare. Ma, perciocbe Dio l' haueua per Caſtiglia ſerbata, gia l' Ammiraglio in quel tempo era andato, & tornato con la vittoria della ſua impreſa, ſecondo che per ordine ſi racconterà. Laſciarò hora di raccontar ciò, che Bartolomeo Colon haueua negociato in Inghilterra, & tornarò all' Ammiraglio, &c.

Christopher Columbus fearing leaſt if the king of Caſtile in like maner (as the king of Portugall had done) ſhould not condeſcend vnto his enterpriſe, he ſhould be inforced to offer the ſame againe to ſome other prince, & ſo much time ſhould be ſpent therein, ſent into England a certaine brother of his which he had with him, whoſe name was Bartholomew Columbus, who, albeit he had not the Latine tongue, yet neuertheleſſe was a man of experience and ſkilfull in Sea cauſes, and could very wel make ſea cards & globes, and other inſtruments belonging to that profeſſion, as he was inſtructed by his brother. Wherfore after that Bartholomew Columbus was departed for England, his lucke was to fall into the hands of pirats, which ſpoiled him with the reſt of them which were in the ſhip which he went in. Upon which occaſion, and by reaſon of his pouerty and ſickneſſe which cruelly aſſaulted him in a countrey ſo farre diſtant from his friends, he deferred his ambaſſage for a long while, vntill ſuch time as he had gotten ſomewhat handſome about him with making of Sea cards. At length he began to deale with king Henry the ſeuenth the father of Henry the eight, which reigneth at this preſent: vnto whom he preſented a mappe of the world, wherein theſe verſes were written, which I found among his papers: and I will here ſet them downe, rather for their antiquity then for their goodneſſe.

The occaſion why the Weſt Indies were not diſcouered for England.

Thou which deſireſt eaſily the coaſts of lands to know,
This comely mappe right learnedly the ſame to thee will ſhew:
Which Strabo, Plinie, Ptolomew and Iſodore maintaine:
Yet for all that they do not all in one accord remaine.
Here alſo is ſet downe the late diſcouered burning Zone
By Portingals, vnto the world which whilom was vnknowen,
Whereof the knowledge now at length thorow all the world is blowen.

And a little vnder he added:

For the Authour or the Drawer.

He, whoſe deare natiue ſoile hight ſtately Genua,
Euen he whoſe name is Bartholomew Colon de Terra Rubra,
The yeere of Grace a thouſand and foure hundred and foureſcore
And eight, and on the thirteenth day of February more,
In London publiſhed this worke. To Chriſt all laud therefore.

And becauſe ſome peraduenture may obſerue that he calleth himſelfe Columbus de Terra Rubra, I ſay, that in like maner I haue ſeene ſome ſubſcriptions of my father Chriſtopher Columbus, before he had the degree of Admirall, wherein he ſigned his name thus, Columbus de Terra Rubra. But to returne to the king of England, I ſay, that after he had ſeene the map, and that which my father Chriſtopher Columbus offered vnto him, he accepted the offer with ioyfull countenance, and ſent to call him into England. But becauſe God had reſerued the ſayd offer for Caſtile, Columbus was gone in the meane ſpace, and alſo returned with the performance of his enterpriſe, as hereafter in order ſhall be rehearſed. Now will I leaue off from making any farther mention of that which Bartholomew Colon had negotiated in England, and I will returne vnto the Admirall, &c.

King Henry the ſeuenth his acceptation of Columbus offer.

Another teſtimony taken out of the 60 chapter of the foreſayd hiſtory of Ferdinando Columbus, concerning the offer that Bartholomew Columbus made to king Henry the ſeuenth on the behalfe of his brother Chriſtopher.

TOrnato adunque l' Ammiraglio dallo ſcoprimento di Cuba & di Giamaica, trouò nella Spagnuola Bartolomeo Colon ſuo fratello, quello, che era già andato a trattare accordo col Re d' Inghilterra ſopra lo ſcoprimento delle Indie, come di ſopra habiam detto. Queſto poi, ritornandoſene verſo Caſtiglia con capitoli conceduti, haueua inteſo a Parigi dal re Carlo di Francia, l' Ammiraglio ſuo fratello hauer gia ſcoperte l' Indie: per che gli ſouenne per poter far il Viaggio di cento ſcudi. Et, Auenga che per cotal nuoua egli ſi foſſe molto affrettato, per arriuar l' Ammiraglio in Spagna, quando non dimeno giunſe a Siuiglia, egli era gia tornato alle Indie co' 17 nauigli. Perche, per eſſeguir quanto ei gli haueua laſciato, di ſubito al principio dell' anno del 1494 ſen' ando a i Re Catholici, menando ſeco Don Diego Colon, mio fratello, & me ancora, acciochè ſeruiſſimo di paggi al ſereniſſimo principe Don Giouanni, il qual viua in gloria, ſi come haueua commandato la Catholica Reina donna Iſabella, che alhora era in Vagliadolid. Toſto adunque che noi giungemmo, i Re chiamarono Don Bartolomeo, & mandaronlo alla Spagnuola con tre naui, &c.

CHriſtopher Columbus the Admirall being returned from the diſcouery of Cuba and Iamayca, found in Hiſpaniola his brother Bartholomew Columbus, who before had beene ſent to intreat of an agreement with the king of England for the diſcouery of the Indies, as we haue ſayd before. This Bartholomew therefore returning vnto Caſtile, with the capitulations granted by the king of England to his brother, vnderſtood at Paris by Charles the king of France, that the Admirall his brother had already performed that diſcouery: where upon the French king gaue vnto the ſayd Bartholomew an hundred French crownes to beare his charges into Spaine. And albeit he made great haſte vpon this good newes to meet with the Admirall in Spaine, yet at his comming to Siuil his brother was already returned to the Indies with ſeuenteene ſaile of ſhipps. Wherefore to fulfill that which he had left him in charge in the beginning of the yeere 1494 he repaired to the Catholike princes, taking with him Diego Colon my brother and me alſo, which were to be preferred as Pages to the moſt excellent Prince Don Iohn, who now is with God, according to the commandement of the Catholike Queene Lady Iſabell, which was then in Validolid. Aſſoone therefore as we came to the Court, the princes called for Don Bartholomew, and ſent him to Hiſpaniola with three ſhips, &c.

The ſame in Engliſh.

HEnry by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, to all to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, Greeting.

Be it knowen that we haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents do giue and grant for vs and our heires, to our welbeloued Iohn Cabot citizen of Venice, to Lewis, Sebaſtian, and Sancius, ſonnes of the ſayd Iohn, and to the heires of them, and euery of them, and their deputies, full and free authority, leaue, and power to ſaile to all parts, countreys, and ſeas of the Eaſt, of the Weſt, and of the North, vnder our banners and enſignes, with fiue ſhips of what burthen or quantity ſoeuer they be, and as many mariners or men as they will haue with them in the ſayd ſhips, vpon their owne proper coſts and charges, to ſeeke out, diſcouer, and finde whatſoeuer iſles, countreys, regions or prouinces of the heathen and infidels whatſoeuer they be, and in what part of the world ſoeuer they be, which before this time haue bene vnknowen to all Chriſtians: we haue granted to them, and alſo to euery of them, the heires of them, and euery of them, and their deputies, and haue giuen them licence to ſet vp our banners and enſignes in euery village, towne, caſtle, iſle, or maine land of them newly found. And that the aforeſayd Iohn and his ſonnes, or their heires and aſſignes may ſubdue, occupy and poſſeſſe all ſuch townes, cities, caſtles and iſles of them found, which they can ſubdue, occupy and poſſeſſe, as our vaſſals, and lieutenants, getting vnto vs the rule, title, and iuriſdiction of the ſame villages, townes, caſtles, & firme land ſo found. Yet ſo that the aforeſayd Iohn, and his ſonnes and heires, and their deputies, be holden and bounden of all the fruits, profits, gaines, and commodities growing of ſuch nauigation, for euery their voyage, as often as they ſhall arriue at our port of Briſtoll (at the which port they ſhall be bound and holden onely to arriue) all maner of neceſſary coſts and charges by them made, being deducted, to pay vnto vs in wares or money the fift part of the capitall gaine ſo gotten. We giuing and granting vnto them and to their heires and deputies, that they ſhall be free from all paying of cuſtomes of all and ſingular ſuch merchandize as they ſhall bring with them from thoſe places ſo newly found. And moreouer, we haue giuen and granted to them, their heires and deputies, that all the firme lands, iſles, villages, townes, caſtles and places whatſoeuer they be that they ſhall chance to finde, may not of any other of our ſubiects be frequented or viſited without the licence of the foreſayd Iohn and his ſonnes, and their deputies, vnder paine of forfeiture aſwell of their ſhippes as of all and ſinguler goods of all them that ſhall preſume to ſaile to thoſe places ſo found. Willing, and moſt ſtraightly commanding all and ſinguler our ſubiects aſwell on land as on ſea, to giue good aſſiſtance to the aforeſayd Iohn and his ſonnes and deputies, and that as well in arming and furniſhing their ſhips or veſſels, as in prouiſion of food, and in buying of victuals for their money, and all other things by them to be prouided neceſſary for the ſayd nauigation, they do giue them all their helpe and fauour. In witneſſe whereof we haue cauſed to be made theſe our Letters patents. Witneſſe our ſelfe at Weſtminſter the fift day of March, in the eleuenth yeere of our reigne.

A record of the rolls touching the voyage of Iohn Cabot and Sebaſtian his ſonne.

The ſame in Engliſh.

THe king vpon the third day of February, in the 13 yeere of his reigne, gaue licence to Iohn Cabot to take ſixe Engliſh ſhips in any hauen or hauens of the realme of England, being of the burden of 200 tunnes, or vnder, with all neceſſary furniture, and to take alſo into the ſaid ſhips all ſuch maſters, mariners, and ſubiects of the king as willingly will go with him, &c.

An extract taken out of the map of Sebaſtian Cabot, cut by Clement Adams, concerning his diſcouery of the West Indies, which is to be ſeene in her Maieſties priuie gallerie at Weſtminſter, and in many other ancient merchants houſes.

ANno Domini 1497 Ioannes Cabotus Venetus, & Sebaſtianus illius filius eam terram fecerunt peruiam, quam nullus priùs adire auſus fuit, die 24 Iunij, circiter horam quintam bene manè. Hanc autem appellauit Terram primùm viſam, credo quod ex mari in eam partem primùm oculos iniecerat. Nam quę ex aduerſo ſita eſt inſula, eam appellauit inſulam Diui Ioannis, hac opinor ratione, quòd aperta fuit eo die qui eſt ſacer Diuo Ioanni Baptiſtæ: Huius incolæ pelles animalium, exuuiáſque ferarum pro indumentis habent, eáſque tanti faciunt, quanti nos veſtes precioſiſſimas. Cùm bellum gerunt, vtuntur arcu, ſagittis, haſtis, ſpiculis, clauis ligneis & fundis. Tellus ſterilis eſt, neque vllos fructus affert, ex quo fit, vt vrſis albo colore, & ceruis inuſitatæ apud nos magnitudinis referta ſit: piſcibus abundat, iiſque ſane magnis, quales ſunt lupi marini, & quos ſalmones vulgus appellat; ſoleæ autem reperiuntur tam longæ, vt vlnæ menſuram excedant. Imprimis autem magna eſt copia eorum piſcium, quos vulgari ſermone vocant Bacallaos. Gignuntur in ea inſula accipitres ita nigri, vt coruorum ſimilitudinem mirum in modum exprimant, perdices autem & aquilæ ſunt nigri coloris.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IN the yere of our Lord 1497 Iohn Cabot a Venetian, and his ſonne Sebaſtian (with an Engliſh fleet ſet out from Briſtoll) diſcouered that land which no man before that time had attempted, on the 24 of Iune, about fiue of the clocke early in the morning. This land he called Prima viſta, that is to ſay, Firſt ſeene, becauſe as I ſuppoſe it was that part whereof they had the firſt ſight from ſea. That Iſland which lieth out before the land, he called the Iſland of S. Iohn vpon this occaſion, as I thinke, becauſe it was diſcouered vpon the day of Iohn the Baptiſt. The inhabitants of this Iſland vſe to weare beaſts ſkinnes, and haue them in as great eſtimation as we haue our fineſt garments. In their warres they vſe bowes, arrowes, pikes, darts, wooden clubs, and ſlings. The ſoile is barren in ſome places, & yeeldeth litle fruit, but it is full of white beares, and ſtagges farre greater then ours. It yeeldeth plenty of fiſh, and thoſe very great, as ſeales, and thoſe which commonly we call ſalmons: there are ſoles alſo aboue a yard in length: but eſpecially there is great abundance of that kinde of fiſh which the Sauages call baccalaos. In the ſame Iſland alſo there breed hauks, but they are ſo blacke that they are very like to rauens, as alſo their partridges, and egles, which are in like ſort blacke.

A diſcourſe of Sebaſtian Cabot touching his diſcouery of part of the West India out of England in the time of king Henry the ſeuenth, vſed to Galeacius Butrigarius the Popes Legate in Spaine, and reported by the ſayd Legate in this ſort.

This diſcourſe is taken out of the ſecond volume of ÿ voyages of Baptiſta Ramuſius.

Sebaſtian Cabota Pilot mayor of Spaine.

DOe you not vnderſtand ſayd he (ſpeaking to certaine Gentlemen of Venice) how to paſſe to India toward the Northweſt, as did of late a citizen of Venice, ſo valiant a man, and ſo well practiſed in all things pertaining to nauigations, and the ſcience of Coſmographie, that at this preſent he hath not his like in Spaine, inſomuch that for his vertues he is preferred aboue all other pilots that ſaile to the Weſt Indies, who may not paſſe thither without his licence, and is therefore called Piloto mayor, that is, the grand Pilot. And when we ſayd that we knew him not, he proceeded, ſaying, that being certaine yeres in the city of Siuil, and deſirous to haue ſome knowledge of the nauigations of the Spanyards, it was tolde him that there was in the city a valiant man, a Venetian borne named Sebaſtian Cabot, who had the charge of thoſe things, being an expert man in that ſcience, and one that coulde make Cardes for the Sea with his owne hand, and that by this report, ſeeking his acquaintance, hee found him a very gentle perſon, who intertained him friendly, and ſhewed him many things, and among other a large Mappe of the world, with certaine particuler Nauigations, as well of the Portugals, as of the Spaniards, and that he ſpake further vnto him to this effect.

When my father departed from Venice many yeeres ſince to dwell in England, to follow the trade of marchandiſes, hee tooke mee with him to the citie of London, while I was very yong, yet hauing neuertheleſſe ſome knowledge of letters of humanitie, and of the Sphere. And when my father died in that time when newes were brought that Don Chriſtopher Colonus Genueſe had diſcouered the coaſts of India, whereof was great talke in all the Court of king Henry the 7. who then raigned, inſomuch that all men with great admiration affirmed it to be a thing more diuine then humane, to ſaile by the Weſt into the Eaſt where ſpices growe, by a way that was neuer knowen before, by this fame and report there increaſed in my heart a great flame of deſire to attempt ſome notable thing. And vnderſtanding by reaſon of the Sphere, that if I ſhould ſaile by way of the Northweſt, I ſhould by a ſhorter tract come into India, I thereupon cauſed the King to be aduertiſed of my deuiſe, who immediatly commanded two Caruels to bee furniſhed with all things appertayning to the voyage, which was as farre as I remember in the yeere 1496. in the beginning of Sommer. I began therefore to ſaile toward the Northweſt, not thinking to finde any other land then that of Cathay, & from thence to turne toward India, but after certaine dayes I found that the land ranne towards the North, which was to mee a great diſpleaſure. Neuertheleſſe, ſayling along by the coaſt to ſee if I could finde any gulfe that turned, I found the lande ſtill continent to the 56. degree vnder our Pole. And ſeeing that there the coaſt turned toward the Eaſt, deſpairing to finde the paſſage, I turned backe againe, and ſailed downe by the coaſt of that land toward the Equinoctiall (euer with intent to finde the ſaide paſſage to India) and came to that part of this firme lande which is nowe called Florida, where my victuals failing, I departed from thence and returned into England, where I found great tumults among the people, and preparation for warres in Scotland: by reaſon whereof there was no more conſideration had to this voyage.

Whereupon I went into Spaine to the Catholique king, and Queene Elizabeth, which being aduertiſed what I had done, intertained me, and at their charges furniſhed certaine ſhips, wherewith they cauſed me to ſaile to diſcouer the coaſtes of Braſile, where I found an exceeding great and large riuer named at this preſent Rio de la plata, that is, the riuer of ſiluer, into the which I ſailed and followed it into the firme land, more then ſixe ſcore leagues, finding it euery where very faire, and inhabited with infinite people, which with admiration came running dayly to our ſhips. Into this Riuer runne ſo many other riuers, that it is in maner incredible.

The ſecond voyage of Cabot to the land of Braſil, and Rio de plata.

After this I made many other voyages, which I nowe pretermit, and waxing olde, I giue my ſelfe to reſt from ſuch trauels, becauſe there are nowe many yong and luſtie Pilots and Mariners of good experience, by whoſe forwardneſſe I doe reioyce in the fruit of my labours, and reſt with the charge of this office, as you ſee.

The office of Pilote maior.

The foreſaide Baptiſta Ramuſius in his preface to the thirde volume of the Nauigations, writeth thus of Sebaſtian Cabot.

IN the latter part of this volume are put certaine relations of Iohn de Vararzana, Florentine, and of a great captaine a Frenchman, and the two voyages of Iaques Cartier a Briton, who ſailed vnto the land ſituate in 50. degrees of Latitude to the North, which is called New France, which landes hitherto are not throughly knowen, whether they doe ioyne with the firme land of Florida and Noua Hiſpania, or whether they bee ſeparated and deuided all by the Sea as Ilands: and whether that by that way one may goe by Sea vnto the countrey of Cathaia. As many yeeres paſt it was written vnto mee by Sebaſtian Cabota our Countrey man a Venetian, a man of great experience, and very rare in the art of Nauigation, and the knowledge of Coſmographie, who ſailed along and beyond this lande of New France, at the charges of King Henry the ſeuenth king of England: and he aduertiſed mee, that hauing ſailed a long time Weſt and by North, beyond thoſe Ilands vnto the Latitude of 67. degrees and an halfe, vnder the North pole, and at the 11. day of Iune finding ſtill the open Sea without any maner of impediment, he thought verily by that way to haue paſſed on ſtill the way to Cathaia, which is in the Eaſt, and would haue done it, if the mu-tinie of the ſhipmaſter and Mariners had not hindered him and made him to returne homewards from that place. But it ſeemeth that God doeth yet ſtill reſerue this great enterpriſe for ſome great prince to diſcouer this voyage of Cathaia by this way, which for the bringing of the Spiceries from India into Europe, were the moſt eaſie and ſhorteſt of all other wayes hitherto found out. And ſurely this enterpriſe would be the moſt glorious, and of moſt importance of all other that can be imagined to make his name great, and fame immortall, to all ages to come, farre more then can be done by any of all theſe great troubles and warres which dayly are vſed in Europe among the miſerable Chriſtian people.

Another teſtimonie of the voyage of Sebaſtian Cabot to the Weſt and Northweſt, taken out of the ſixt Chapter of the third Decade of Peter Martyr of Angleria.

The ſame in Engliſh.

THeſe North Seas haue bene ſearched by one Sebaſtian Cabot, a Venetian borne, whom being yet but in maner an infant, his parents caried with them into England, hauing occaſion to reſort thither for trade of marchandiſe, as is the maner of the Venetians to leaue no part of the world vnſearched to obtaine riches. Hee therefore furniſhed two ſhips in England at his owne charges, and firſt with 300 men directed his courſe ſo farre towards the North pole, that euen in the moneth of Iuly he found monſtrous heapes of ice ſwimming on the ſea, and in maner continuall day light, yet ſaw he the land in that tract free from ice, which had bene molten by the heat of the Sunne. Thus ſeeing ſuch heapes of yce before him, hee was enforced to turne his ſailes and follow the Weſt, ſo coaſting ſtill by the ſhore, that he was thereby brought ſo farre into the South, by reaſon of the land bending ſo much Southwards, that it was there almoſt equall in latitude, with the ſea Fretum Herculeum, hauing the Northpole eleuate in maner in the ſame degree. He ſailed likewiſe in this tract ſo farre towards the Weſt, that hee had the Iſland of Cuba on his left hand, in maner in the ſame degree of longitude. As hee trauiled by the coaſtes of this great land, (which he named Baccalaos) he ſaith that hee found the like courſe of the waters toward the Weſt, but the ſame to runne more ſoftly and gently then the ſwift waters which the Spaniards found in their Nauigations Southward. Wherfore it is not onely more like to be true, but ought alſo alſo of neceſſitie to be concluded that betweene both the lands hitherto vnknowen, there ſhould be certaine great open places whereby the waters ſhould thus continually paſſe from the Eaſt vnto the Weſt: which waters I ſuppoſe to be driuen about the globe of the earth by the vnceſſant mouing and impulſion of the heauens, and not to bee ſwallowed vp and caſt vp againe by the breathing of Demogorgon, as ſome haue imagined, becauſe they ſee the ſeas by increaſe and decreaſe to ebbe and flowe. Sebaſtian Cabot himſelfe named thoſe lands Baccalaos, becauſe that in the Seas thereabout hee found ſo great multitudes of certaine bigge fiſhes much like vnto Tunies, (which the inhabitants call Baccalaos) that they ſometime ſtayed his ſhippes. He found alſo the people of thoſe regions couered with beaſtes ſkinnes, yet not without the vſe of reaſon. He alſo ſaith there is great plentie of Beares in thoſe regions which vſe to eate fiſh: for plunging themſelues into ẏ water, where they perceiue a multitude of theſe fiſhes to lie, they faſten their clawes in their ſcales, and ſo draw them to land and eate them, ſo (as he ſaith) the Beares being thus ſatiſfied with fiſh, are not noiſome to men. Hee declareth further, that in many places of theſe Regions he ſaw great plentie of Copper among the inhabitants. Cabot is my very friend, whom I vſe familiarly, and delight to haue him ſometimes keepe mee company in mine owne houſe. For being called out of England by the commandement of the Catholique King of Caſtile, after the death of King Henry the ſeuenth of that name King of England, he was made one of our councill and Aſſiſtants, as touching the affaires of the new Indies, looking for ſhips dayly to be furniſhed for him to diſcouer this hid ſecret of Nature.

The people of Iſland ſay the Sea and yce ſetteth alſo Weſt. Ionas Arngrimus.

Copper found in many places by Cabote.

The teſtimonie of Francis Lopez de Gomara a Spaniard, in the fourth Chapter of the ſecond Booke of his generall hiſtory of the Weſt Indies concerning the firſt diſcouerie of a great part of the Weſt Indies, to wit, from 58. to 38. degrees of latitude, by Sebaſtian Cabota out of England.

HE which brought moſt certaine newes of the countrey & people of Baccalaos, ſaith Gomara, was Sebaſtian Cabote a Venetian, which rigged vp two ſhips at the coſt of K. Henry the 7. of England, hauing great deſire to traffique for the ſpices as the Portingals did. He caried with him 300. men, and tooke the way towards Iſland from beyond the Cape of Labrador, vntill he found himſelfe in 58. degrees and better. He made relation that in the moneth of Iuly it was ſo cold, and the ice ſo great, that hee durſt not paſſe any further: that the dayes were very long, in a maner without any night, and for that ſhort night that they had, it was very cleare. Cabot feeling the cold, turned towards the Weſt, refreſhing himſelfe at Baccalaos: and afterwards he ſailed along the coaſt vnto 38. degrees, and from thence he ſhaped his courſe to returne into England.

A note of Sebaſtian Cabots firſt diſcouerie of part of the Indies taken out of the latter part of Robert Fabians Chronicle not hitherto printed, which is in the cuſtodie of M. Iohn Stow a diligent preſeruer of Antiquities.

IN the 13. yeere of K. Henry the 7. (by meanes of one Iohn Cabot a Venetian which made himſelfe very expert and cunning in knowledge of the circuit of the world and Ilands of the ſame, as by a Sea card and other demonſtrations reaſonable he ſhewed) the king cauſed to man and victuall a ſhip at Briſtow, to ſearch for an Iland, which he ſaid hee knew well was rich, and repleniſhed with great commodities: Which ſhippe thus manned and victualled at the kings coſt, diuers Marchants of London ventured in her ſmall ſtocks, being in her as chiefe patron the ſaid Venetian. And in the company of the ſaid ſhip, ſailed alſo out of Briſtow three or foure ſmall ſhips fraught with ſleight and groſſe marchandizes, as courſe cloth, caps, laces, points & other trifles. And ſo departed from Briſtow in the beginning of May, of whom in this Maiors time returned no tidings.

Cabots voyage from Briſtol wherein he diſcouered Newfound land, & the Northerne parts of that land, and from thence as farre almoſt as Florida.

Of three Sauages which Cabot brought home and preſented vnto the King in the foureteenth yere of his raigne, mentioned by the foreſaid Robert Fabian.

THis yeere alſo were brought vnto the king three men taken in the Newfound Iland that before I ſpake of, in William Purchas time being Maior: Theſe were clothed in beaſts ſkins, & did eate raw fleſh, and ſpake ſuch ſpeach that no man could vnderſtand them, and in their demeanour like to bruite beaſtes, whom the King kept a time after. Of the which vpon two yeeres after, I ſaw two apparelled after the maner of Engliſhmen in Weſtminſter pallace, which that time I could not diſcerne from Engliſhmen, til I was learned what they were, but as for ſpeach, I heard none of them vtter one word.

A briefe extract concerning the diſcouerie of Newfound-land, taken out of the booke of M. Robert Thorne, to doctor Leigh, &c.

I Reaſon, that as ſome ſickeneſſes are hereditarie, ſo this inclination or deſire of this diſcouery I inherited from my father, which with another marchant of Briſtol named Hugh Eliot, were the diſcouerers of the Newfound-lands; of the which there is no doubt (as nowe plainely appeareth) if the Mariners would then haue bene ruled, and followed their Pilots minde, but the lands of the Weſt Indies, from whence all the golde commeth, had bene ours; for all is one coaſt as by the Card appeareth, and is aforeſaid.

The large penſion granted by K. Edward the 6. to Sebaſtian Cabota, conſtituting him grand Pilot of England.

The ſame in Engliſh.

EDward the ſixt by the grace of God, King of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, to all Chriſtian people to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, ſendeth greeting. Know yee that we, in conſideration of the good and acceptable ſeruice done, and to be done, vnto vs by our beloued ſeruant Sebaſtian Cabota, of our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, meere motion, and by the aduiſe and counſel of our moſt honourable vncle Edward duke of Somerſet gouernour of our perſon, and Protector of our kingdomes, dominions, and ſubiects, and of the reſt of our Counſaile, haue giuen & granted, and by theſe preſents do giue and graunt to the ſaid Sebaſtian Cabota, a certaine annuitie, or yerely reuenue of one hundreth, threeſcore & ſixe pounds, thirteene ſhillings foure pence ſterling, to haue, enioy, and yerely receiue the foreſaid annuitie, or yerely reuenue, to the foreſaid Sebaſtian Cabota during his natural life, out of our Treaſurie at the receit of our Exchequer at Weſtminſter, at the hands of our Treaſurers & paymaſters, there remayning for the time being, at the feaſts of the Annunciation of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, the Natiuitie of S. Iohn Baptiſt, S. Michael yͤ Archangel, & the Natiuitie of our Lord, to be paid by equal portions.

And further, of our more ſpeciall grace, and by the aduiſe and conſent aforeſaide wee doe giue, and by theſe preſents doe graunt vnto the aforeſaide Sebaſtian Cabota, ſo many, and ſo great ſummes of money as the ſaide annuitie or yeerely reuenue of an hundreth, threeſcore and ſixe pounds, thirteene ſhillings 4. pence, doeth amount and riſe vnto from the feaſt of S. Michael the Archangel laſt paſt vnto this preſent time, to be had and receiued by the aforeſaid Sebaſtian Cabota, and his aſſignes out of our aforeſaid Treaſurie, at the handes of our aforeſaide Treaſurers, and officers of our Exchequer of our free gift without accompt, or any thing elſe therefore to be yeelded, payed, or made, to vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, foraſmuch as herein expreſſe mention is made to the contrary.

In witneſſe whereof we haue cauſed theſe our Letters to be made patents: Witneſſe the King at Weſtminſter the ſixt day of Ianuarie, in the ſecond yeere of his raigne. The yeere of our Lord 1548.

A diſcourſe written by Sir Humfrey Gilbert Knight, to proue a paſſage by the Northweſt to Cathaia, and the Eaſt Indies.

¶ The Table of the matters in euery Chapter of this diſcourſe.

Capitulo 1.

To proue by authoritie a paſſage to be on the North ſide of America, to goe to Cataia, China, and to the Eaſt India.

Capitulo 2.

To proue by reaſon a paſſage to be on the North ſide of America, to go to Cataia, Moluccæ, &c.

Capitulo 3.

To proue by experience of ſundry mens trauailes the opening of this Northweſt paſſage, whereby good hope remaineth of the reſt.

Capitulo 4.

To proue by circumſtance, that the Northweſt paſſage hath bene ſailed throughout.

Capitulo 5.

To prooue that ſuch Indians as haue bene driuen vpon the coaſtes of Germanie came not thither by the Southeaſt, and Southweſt, nor from any part of Afrike or America.

Capitulo 6.

To prooue that the Indians aforenamed came not by the Northeaſt, and that there is no thorow paſſage nauigable that way.

Capitulo 7.

To proue that theſe Indians came by the Northweſt, which induceth a certaintie of this paſſage by experience.

Capitulo 8.

What ſeueral reaſons were alleaged before the Queenes Maieſtie, and certaine Lords of her Highneſſe priuie Council, by M. Anth. Ienkinſon a Gentleman of great trauaile and experience, to proue this paſſage by the Northeaſt, with my ſeuerall anſweres then alleaged to the ſame.

Capitulo 9.

How that this paſſage by the Northweſt is more commodious for our traffike, then the other by the Northeaſt, if there were any ſuch.

Capitulo 10.

What commodities would enſue, this paſſage being once diſcouered.

To proue by authoritie a paſſage to be on the Northſide of America, to goe to Cathaia, and the Eaſt India.

Chapter 1.

WHen I gaue my ſelfe to the ſtudie of Geographie, after I had peruſed and diligently ſcanned the deſcriptions of Europe, Aſia & Afrike, and conferred them with the Mappes and Globes both Antique and Moderne: I came in fine to the fourth part of the world, commonly called America, which by all deſcriptions I found to bee an Iland enuironed round about with Sea, hauing on the Southſide of it the frete or ſtraight of Magellan, on the Weſt ſide Mar del Sur, which Sea runneth towards the North, ſeparating it from the Eaſt parts of Aſia, where the Dominions of the Cathaians are: On the Eaſt part our Weſt Ocean, and on the North ſide the ſea that ſeuereth it from Groneland, thorow which Northren Seas the Paſſage lyeth, which I take now in hand to diſcouer.

Plato in Timæo, and in the Dialogue called Critias, diſcourſeth of an incomparable great Iſland then called Atlantis, being greater then all Affrike and Aſia, which lay Weſtward from the Straightes of Gibraltar, nauigable round about: affirming alſo that the Princes of Atlantis did aſwell enioy the gouernance of all Affrike, and the moſt part of Europe, as of Atlantis it ſelfe.

Alſo to proue Platos opinion of this Iland, and the inhabiting of it in ancient time by them of Europe, to be of the more credite; Marinæus Siculus in his Chronicle of Spaine, reporteth that there haue bene found by the Spaniards in the gold Mines of America, certaine pieces of Money ingraued with the Image of Auguſtus Cæſar: which pieces were ſent to the Pope for a teſtimonie of the matter, by Iohn Ruſus Archbiſhop of Conſentinum.

Proclus pag. 24.

Iuſtine Lib. 4.

Moreouer, this was not only thought of Plato, but by Marſilius Ficinus, an excellent Florentine Philoſopher, Crantor the Græcian, and Proclus, and Philo the famous Iew (as appeareth in his booke De Mundo, and in the Commentaries vpon Plato) to be ouerflowen and ſwallowed vp with water, by reaſon of a mightie earthquake, and ſtreaming downe of the heauenly Fludgates. The like whereof happened vnto ſome part of Italy, when by the forciblenes of the Sea, called Superum, it cut off Sicilia from the Continent of Calabria, as appeareth in Iuſtine, in the beginning of his fourth booke. Alſo there chanced the like in Zeland a part of Flanders.

Plinie,

And alſo the Cities of Pyrrha and Antiſſa, about Meotis palus: and alſo the Citie Burys, in the Corynthian boſome, commonly called Sinus Corinthiacus, haue bene ſwallowed vp with the Sea, and are not at this day to be diſcerned: By which accident America grew to be vnknowen of long time, vnto vs of the later ages, and was lately diſcouered againe, by Americus Veſpucius, in the yeere of our Lord 1497. which ſome ſay to haue bene firſt diſcouered by Chriſtophorus Columbus a Genuois, Anno 1492.

The ſame calamitie happened vnto this Iſle of Atlantis 600. and odde yeres before Plato his time, which ſome of the people of the Southeaſt parts of the world accompted as 9000. yeeres: for the maner then was to reckon the Moone her Period of the Zodiak for a yeere, which is our vſuall moneth, depending à Luminari minori.

So that in theſe our dayes there can no other mayne or Iſlande be found or iudged to bee parcell of this Atlantis, then thoſe Weſterne Iſlands, which beare now the name of America: counteruailing thereby the name of Atlantis, in the knowledge of our age.

A minore ad maius.

Then, if when no part of the ſayd Atlantis was oppreſſed by water, and earthquake, the coaſts round about the ſame were nauigable: a farre greater hope now remaineth of the ſame by the Northweſt, ſeeing the moſt part of it was (ſince that time) ſwallowed vp with water, which could not vtterly take away the olde deeps and chanels, but rather, be an occaſion of the inlarging of the olde, and alſo an inforcing of a great many new: why then ſhould we now doubt of our Northweſt paſſage and nauigation from England to India? &c. ſeeing that Atlantis now called America, was euer knowen to be an Iland, and in thoſe dayes nauigable round about, which by acceſſe of more water could not be diminiſhed.

Alſo Ariſtotle in his booke De mundo, and the learned Germaine Simon Gryneus in his annotations vpon the ſame, ſaith that the whole earth (meaning thereby, as manifeſtly doth appeare, Aſia, Africk, and Europe, being all the countreys then knowen) is but one Iland, compaſſed about with the reach of the ſea Atlantine: which likewiſe prooueth America to be an Iland, and in no part adioyning to Aſia, or the reſt.

Strabo lib. 15.

Alſo many ancient writers, as Strabo and others, called both the Ocean ſea (which lieth Eaſt of India) Atlanticum pelagus, and that ſea alſo on the Weſt coaſts of Spaine and Africk, Mare Atlanticum: the diſtance betweene the two coaſts is almoſt halfe the compaſſe of the earth.

Valerius Anſelmus in Catalogo annorum & principum. fol. 6, Gen. 9. 10.

So that it is incredible, as by Plato appeareth manifeſtly, that the Eaſt Indian Sea had the name Atlanticum pelagus of the mountaine Atlas in Africk, or yet the ſea adioyning to Africk, had the name Oceanus Atlanticus of the ſame mountaine: but that thoſe ſeas and the mountaine Atlas were ſo called of this great Iland Atlantis, and that the one and the other had their names for a memoriall of the mighty prince Atlas, ſometime king thereof, who was Iaphet yongeſt ſonne to Noah, in whoſe time the whole earth was diuided betweene the three brethren, Sem, Cam, and Iaphet.

Wherefore I am of opinion that America by the Northweſt will be found fauourable to this our enterpriſe, and am the rather imboldened to beleeue the ſame, for that I finde it not onely confirmed by Plato, Ariſtotle, and other ancient Phyloſophers: but alſo by all the beſt moderne

Geographers, as Gemma Friſius, Munſterus, Appianus, Hunterus, Gaſtaldus, Guyccardinus, Michael Tramaſinus, Franciſcus Demongenitus, Bernardus Puteanus, Andreas Vauaſor, Tramontanus, Petrus Martyr, and alſo Ortelius, who doth coaſt out in his generall Mappe ſet out Anno 1569, all the countreys and Capes, on the Northweſt ſide of America, from Hochelaga to Cape de Paramantia: deſcribing likewiſe the ſea coaſtes of Cataia and Gronland, towards any part of America, making both Gronland and America, Iſlands diſioyned by a great ſea, from any part of Aſia.

All which learned men and painefull trauellers haue affirmed with one conſent and voice, that America was an Iſland: and that there lyeth a great Sea betweene it, Cataia, and Grondland, by the which any man of our countrey, that will giue the attempt, may with ſmall danger paſſe to Cataia, the Moluccæ, India, and all other places in the Eaſt, in much ſhorter time, then either the Spaniard, or Portugal doeth, or may doe, from the neereſt parte of any of their countreys within Europe.

What moued theſe learned men to affirme thus much, I know not, or to what ende ſo many and ſundry trauellers of both ages haue allowed the ſame: But I coniecture that they would neuer haue ſo conſtantly affirmed, or notified their opinions therein to the world, if they had not had great good cauſe, and many probable reaſons, to haue lead them thereunto.

We ought by reaſon right to haue a reuerent opinion of worthy men.

Now leaſt you ſhould make ſmall accompt of ancient writers or of their experiences which trauelled long before our times, reckoning their authority amongſt fables of no importance: I haue for the better aſſurance of thoſe prooſes, ſet downe ſome part of a diſcourſe, written in the Saxon tongue, and tranſlated into Engliſh by M. Nowel ſeruant to Sir William Cecil, lord Burleigh, and lord high treaſurer of England, wherein there is deſcribed a Nauigation, which one Ochther made, in the time of king Alfred, King of Weſtſaxe Anno 871, the wordes of which diſcourſe were theſe: Hee ſailed right North, hauing alwaies the deſert land on the Starborde, and on the Larbord the maine ſea, continuing his courſe, vntill hee perceiued that the coaſt bowed directly towards the Eaſt, or elſe the Sea opened into the land he could not tell how farre, where he was compelled to ſtay vntil he had a weſterne winde, or ſomewhat vpon the North, and ſayled thence directly Eaſt alongſt the coaſt, ſo farre as hee was able in foure dayes, where he was againe inforced to tary vntill hee had a North winde, becauſe the coaſt there bowed directly towards the South, or at leaſt opened he knew not howe farre into the land, ſo that he ſayled thence along the coaſt continually full South, ſo farre as he could trauell in the ſpace of fiue dayes, where hee diſcouered a mighty riuer, which opened farre into the land, and in the entrie of this riuer he turned backe againe.

A Nauigation of one Octher made in king Alfreds time.

A perfect deſcription of our Moſcouia voyage.

Whereby it appeareth that he went the very ſame way, that we now doe yeerely trade by S. Nicholas into Moſcouia, which way no man in our age knew for certaintie to be by ſea, vntil it was ſince diſcouered by our Engliſh men, in the time of King Edward the ſixt: but thought before that time that Groneland had ioyned to Normoria, Byarmia, &c. and therefore was accompted a new diſcouery, being nothing ſo indeede, as by this diſcourſe of Ochther it appeareth.

By Sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, Chancellor and Borough.

Neuertheleſſe if any man ſhould haue taken this voyage in hand by the encouragement of this onely author, he ſhould haue bene thought but ſimple: conſidering that this Nauigation was written ſo many yeres paſt, in ſo barbarous a tongue by one onely obſcure author, and yet we in theſe our dayes finde by our owne experiences his former reports to be true.

How much more then ought we to beleeue this paſſage to Cataia to bee, being verified by the opinions of all the beſt, both Antique, and Moderne Geographers, and plainely ſet out in the beſt and moſt allowed Mappes, Charts, Globes, Coſmographical tables & diſcourſes of this our age, and by the reſt not denied, but left as a matter doubtfull.

To prooue by reaſon, a paſſage to be on the Northſide of America, to goe to Cataia, &c.

Chap. 3.

First, all ſeas are maintained by the abundance of water, ſo that the neerer the end any Riuer, Bay or Hauen is, the ſhallower it waxeth, (although by ſome accidentall barre, it is ſometime found otherwiſe) But the farther you ſayle Weſt from Iſland towards the place, where this fret is thought to be, the more deepe are the ſeas: which giueth vs good hope of continuance of the ſame Sea with Mar del Sur, by ſome fret that lyeth betweene America, Groneland and Cataia.

Experimented by our Engliſh fiſhers.

2 Alſo if that America were not an Iſland, but a part of ẏ continent adioyning to Aſia, either the people which inhabite Mangia, Anian, & Quinzay, &c. being borderers vpon it, would before this time haue made ſome road into it, hoping to haue found ſome like cõmodities to their owne.

Neede makes the old wife to trotte.

3 Or els the Scythians and Tartarians (which often times heretofore haue ſought farre and neere for new ſeats, driuen thereunto through the neceſſitie of their cold and miſerable countreys) would in all this time haue found the way to America, and entred the ſame, had the paſſages bene neuer ſo ſtraite or difficult; the countrey being ſo temperate, pleaſant and fruitfull, in compariſon of their owne. But there was neuer any ſuch people found there by any of the Spaniards, Portugals, or Frenchmen, who firſt diſcouered the Inland of that countrey: which Spaniards, or Frenchmen muſt then of neceſſitie haue ſeene ſome one ciuil man in America, conſidering how full of ciuill people Aſia is: But they neuer ſaw ſo much as one token or ſigne, that euer any man of the knowen part of the world had bene there.

4 Furthermore it is to be thought, that if by reaſon of mountaines, or other craggy places, the people neither of Cataia or Tartarie could enter the countrey of America, or they of America haue entred Aſia if it were ſo ioyned: yet ſome one ſauage or wandring beaſt would in ſo many yeres haue paſſed into it: but there hath not any time bene found any of the beaſts proper to Cataia, or Tartarie &c, in America: nor of thoſe proper to America, in Tartarie, Cataia, &c. or any part of Aſia. Which thing proueth America, not onely to be one Iſland, and in no part adioyning to Aſia: But alſo that the people of thoſe Countreys, haue not had any traffique with each other.

5 Moreouer at the leaſt ſome one of thoſe painefull trauellers, which of purpoſe haue paſſed the confines of both countreys, with intent only to diſcouer, would as it is moſt likely haue gone from the one to the other: if there had bene any piece of land, or Iſthmos, to haue ioyned them together, or els haue declared ſome cauſe to the contrary.

6 But neither Paulus Venetus, who liued and dwelt a long time in Cataia, euer came into America, and yet was at the ſea coaſtes of Mangia, ouer againſt it where he was embarked, and perfourmed a great Nauigation along thoſe ſeas: Neither yet Verarzanus, or Franciſcus Vaſques de Coronado, who trauelled the North part of America by land, euer found entry from thence by land to Cataia, or any part of Aſia.

The Sea hath three motions.
1 Motum ab oriente in occidentem.
2 Motum fluxus & refluxus.
3 Motum circularem.
Ad cœli motum elementa omnia (excepta terra) mouentur.

7 Alſo it appeareth to be an Iſland, inſomuch as the Sea runneth by nature circularly from the Eaſt to the Weſt, following the diurnal motion of Primum Mobile, which carieth with it all inferiour bodies moueable, aſwel celeſtiall as elemental: which motion of the waters is moſt euidently ſeene in the Sea, which lieth on the Southſide of Afrike, where the current that runneth from the Eaſt to the Weſt is ſo ſtrong (by reaſon of ſuch motiõ) that the Portugals in their voyages Eaſtward to Calicut, in paſſing by Cap. de buona Sperança are inforced to make diuers courſes, the current there being ſo ſwift as it ſtriketh from thence all along Weſtward vpon the fret of Magellan, being diſtant from thence, neere the fourth part of the longitude of the earth: and not hauing free paſſage and entrance thorow the fret towards the Weſt, by reaſon of the narrowneſſe of the ſayd Straite of Magellan, it runneth to ſalue this wrong (Nature not yeelding to accidentall reſtraints) all along the Eaſterne coaſtes of America, Northwards ſo far as Cape Fredo, being the fartheſt knowne place of the ſame continent towards the North: which is about 4800 leagues, reckoning therewithal the trending of the land.

8 So that this current being continually maintained with ſuch force, as Iaques Cartier affirmeth it to be, who met with the ſame being at Baccalaos, as he ſayled along the coaſtes of America, then either it muſt of neceſſitie haue way to paſſe from Cape Fredo, thorow this fret, Weſtward towards Cataia, being knowen to come ſo farre, onely to ſalue his former wrongs, by the authoritie before named: or els it muſt needes ſtrike ouer, vpon the coaſt of Iſland, Norway, Finmarke, and Lappia, (which are Eaſt from the ſayd place about 360 leagues) with greater force then it did from Cape de buona Sperança, vpon the fret of Magellan, or from the fret of Magellan to Cape Fredo, vpon which coaſtes Iaques Cartier met with the ſame, conſidering the ſhortneſſe of the Cut from the ſayd Cape Fredo, to Iſland, Lappia, &c. And ſo the cauſe Efficient remaining, it would haue continually followed along our coaſts, through the narrow ſeas, which it doth not, but is diſgeſted about the North of Labrador, by ſome through paſſage there thorow this fret.

Poſita cauſa, ponitur effectus.

Contarenus.

The like courſe of the water in ſome reſpect happeneth in the Mediterrane ſea (as affirmeth Conterenus) wheras the current which commeth from Tanais, & Pontus Euxinus, running along all the coaſts of Greece, Italy, France, and Spaine, and not finding ſufficient way out through Gibraltar, by meanes of the ſtraitneſſe of the fret it runneth backe againe along the coaſtes of Barbary, by Alexandria, Natolia, &c.

It may (peraduenture) bee thought that this courſe of the ſea doth ſometime ſurceaſe, and thereby impugne this principle, becauſe it is not diſcerned all along the coaſt of America, in ſuch ſort as Iaques Cartier found it: Whereunto I anſwere this: that albeit, in euery part of the Coaſt of America, or elſwhere this current is not ſenſibly perceiued, yet it hath euermore ſuch like motion, either in the vppermoſt or nethermoſt part of the ſea: as it may be proued true, if ye ſinke a ſayle by a couple of ropes, neere the ground, faſtening to the nethermoſt corners two gunne chambers or other weights: by the driuing whereof you ſhall plainely perceiue, the courſe of the water, and current, running with ſuch courſe in the bottome.

An obiection anſwered.

The ſea doth euermore performe this circular motion, either in Suprema, or concaua ſuperficie aquæ.

By the like experiment, you may finde the ordinary motion of the ſea, in the Ocean: howe farre ſoeuer you be off the land.

9 Alſo there commeth another current from out the Northeaſt from the Scythian Sea (as M. Ienkinſon a man of rare vertue, great trauaile and experience, told me) which runneth Weſtward towardes Labrador, as the other did, which commeth from the South: ſo that both theſe currents, muſt haue way thorow this out fret, or elſe encounter together and runne contrarie courſes, in one line, but no ſuch conflicts of ſtreames, or contrary courſes are found about any part of Labrodor, or Terra noua, as witneſſe our yeerely fiſhers, and other ſaylers that way, but is there diſgeſted, as aforeſayd, and found by experience of Barnard de la Torre, to fall into Mar del Sur.

The yce ſet weſtward euery yeere from Iſland. Auth. Iona Angrimo.

10 Furthermore, the current in the great Ocean, could not haue beene maintained to runne continually one way, from the beginning of the world vnto this day, had there not beene ſome thorow paſſage by the fret aforeſayd, and ſo by circular motion bee brought againe to maintaine it ſelfe: For the Tides and courſes of the ſea are maintayned by their interchangeable motions: as freſh riuers are by ſprings, by ebbing and flowing, by rarefaction and condenſation.

So that it reſteth not poſſible (ſo farre as my ſimple reaſon can comprehend) that this perpetuall current can by any meanes be maintained, but onely by continuall reacceſſe of the ſame water, which paſſeth thorow the fret, and is brought about thither againe, by ſuch circular motion as aforeſayd. And the certaine falling thereof by this fret into Mar del Sur is prooued by the teſtimonie and experience, of Bernard de la Torre, who was ſent from P. de la Natiuidad to the Moluccæ, Anno domini 1542. by commandement of Anthony Mendoza, then Viceroy of Noua Hiſpania, which Bernard ſayled 750. Leagues, on the Northſide of the Aequator, and there met with a current, which came from the Northeaſt the which droue him backe againe to Tidore.

The flowing is occaſioned by reaſon that the heate of the moone boyleth, and maketh the water thinne by way of rarefaction.

An experience to prooue the falling of this current into Mar del Sur.

Wherfore, this current being proued to come from C. de buona Sperança to the fret of Magellan, and wanting ſufficient entrance there, by narrownes of the ſtraite, is by the neceſſitie of natures force, brought to Terra de Labrador, where Iaques Cartier met the ſame, and thence certainly knowen, not to ſtrike ouer vpon Iſland, Lappia, &c. and found by Bernard de la Torre in Mar del Sur, on the backeſide of America: therefore this current (hauing none other paſſage) muſt of neceſſity, fall out thorow this our fret into Mar del Sur, and ſo trending by the Moluccæ, China, and C. de buona Sperança, maintaineth it ſelfe by circular motion, which is all one in nature, with Motus ab Oriente in Occidenteem.

So that it ſeemeth, we haue now more occaſion to doubt of our returne, then whether there be a paſſage that way, yea or no: which doubt, hereafter ſhall be ſufficiently remooued. Wherefore, in mine opinion, reaſon it ſelf, grounded vpon experience, aſſureth vs of this paſſage, if there were nothing els to put vs in hope thereof. But leaſt theſe might not ſuffice, I haue added in this chapter following, ſome further proofe hereof, by the experience of ſuch as haue paſſed ſome part of this diſcouerie: and in the next adioining to that the authority of thoſe, which haue ſailed wholy, thorow euery part thereof.

To proue by experience of ſundry mens trauels, the opening of ſome part of this Northweſt paſſage: wherby good hope remaineth of the reſt.

Chap. 3.

PAulus Venetus, who dwelt many yeres in Cataia, affirmed that hee ſayled 1500 miles vpon the coaſtes of Mangia, and Anian, towards the Northeaſt: alwayes finding the Seas open before him, not onely as farre as he went, but alſo as farre as he could diſcerne.

2 Alſo Franciſcus Vaſques de Coronado paſſing from Mexico by Ceuola, through the countrey of Quinira, to Siera Neuada, found there a great ſea, where were certaine ſhips laden with Merchandiſe, carrying on their prowes the pictures of certaine birds called Alcatrarzi, part whereof were made of golde, and part of ſiluer, who ſignified by ſignes, that they were thirty dayes comming thither: which likewiſe proueth America by experience to be diſioyned from Cataia, on that part by a great Sea, becauſe they could not come from any part of America, as Natiues thereof: for that, ſo farre as is diſcouered, there hath not bene found there any one Shippe of that countrey.

Baros lib. 9. Of his firſt Decas cap. 1.

3 In like maner, Iohn Baros teſtifieth that the Coſmographers of China (where he himſelfe had bene) affirme that the Sea coaſt trendeth from thence Northeaſt, to 50 degrees of Septentrional latitude, being the furtheſt part that way which the Portugals had then knowledge of: And that the ſaid Coſmographers knew no cauſe to the contrary, but that it might continue further.

By whoſe experiences America is prooued to be ſeparate from thoſe parts of Aſia, directly againſt the ſame. And not contented with the iudgements of theſe learned men only, I haue ſearched what might be further ſayd for the confirmation hereof.

4 And I found that Franciſcus Lopez de Gomara affirmeth America to be an Iſland, and likewiſe Gronland: and that Gronland is diſtant from Lappia 40 leagues, and from Terra de Labrador, 50.

5 Moreouer, Aluarus Nunnius a Spaniard, and learned Coſmographer, and Iacobus Cartier, who made two voyages into thoſe parts, and ſayled 900 miles vpon the Northeaſt coaſtes of America doe in part confirme the ſame.

6 Likewiſe Hieronymus Fracaſtorius, a learned Italian, and trauailer in the North parts of the ſame land.

7 Alſo Iaques Cartier hauing done the like, heard ſay at Hochelaga in Noua Francia, how that there was a great Sea at Saguinay, whereof the end was not knowen: which they preſuppoſed to be the paſſage to Cataia,

Written in the diſcourſes of Nauigation.

Furthermore, Sebaſtian Cabota by his perſonal experience and trauel hath ſet foorth, and deſcribed this paſſage in his Charts, which are yet to be ſeene in the Queens Maieſties priuie Gallerie at Whitehall, who was ſent to make this diſcouery by king Henrie the ſeuenth, and entred the ſame fret: affirming that he ſayled very farre Weſtward, with a quarter of the North, on the Northſide of Terra de Labrador the eleuenth of Iune, vntill he came to the Septentrionall latitude of 67 degrees and a halfe, and finding the Seas ſtill open, ſayd, that he might, & would haue gone to Cataia, if the mutinie of the Maſter and Mariners had not bene.

Now as theſe mens experience hath proued ſome part of this paſſage: ſo the chapter following ſhal put you in full aſſurance of the reſt, by their experiences which haue paſſed through euery part thereof.

To prooue by circumſtance that the Northweſt paſſage hath bene ſayled throughout.

Singularia ſenſu, vniuerſalia verò mente percipiuntur.

The diuerſitie betweene bruite beaſtes and men, or betweene the wiſe and the ſimple is, that the one iudgeth by ſenſe onely, and gathereth no ſurety of any thing that he hath not ſeene, felt, heard, taſted, or ſmelled: And the other not ſo onely, but alſo findeth the certaintie of things by reaſon, before they happen to be tryed. Wherefore I haue added prooſes of both ſorts, that the one and the other might thereby be ſatiſfied.

1 Firſt, as Gemma Friſius reciteth, there went from Europe three brethren through this paſſage: whereof it tooke the name of Fretum trium fratrum.

2 Alſo Plinie affirmeth out of Cornelius Nepos, (who wrote 57 yeeres before Chriſt) that there were certaine Indians driuen by tempeſt, vpon the coaſt of Germanie which were preſented by the king of Sueuia, vnto Quintus Metellus Celer, the Proconſull of France.

Lib. 2. cap. 66.

3 And Plinie vpon the ſame ſayth, that it is no maruell though there be Sea by the North, where there is ſuch abundance of moiſture: which argueth that hee doubted not of a nauigable paſſage that way, through which thoſe Indians came.

Pag. 590.

4 And for the better proofe that the ſame authoritie of Cornelius Nepos is not by me wreſted, to proue my opinion of the Northweſt paſſage: you ſhall finde the ſame affirmed more plainly in that behalfe, by the excellent Geographer Dominicus Marius Niger, who ſheweth how many wayes the Indian ſea ſtretcheth it ſelfe, making in that place recital of certaine Indians, that were likewiſe driuen through the North Seas from India, vpon the coaſtes of Germany, by great tempeſt, as they were ſayling in trade of marchandize.

5 Alſo while Frederic Barbaroſſa reigned Emperour, Anno Do. 1160. there came certaine other Indians vpon the coaſt of Germanie.

6 Likewiſe Othon in the ſtorie of the Gothes affirmeth, that in the time of the Germane Emperours, there were alſo certaine Indians caſt by force of weather, vpon the coaſt of the ſayd countrey, which foreſaid Indians could not poſſibly haue come by the Southeaſt, Southweſt, nor from any part of Afrike or America, nor yet by the Northeaſt: therefore they came of neceſſitie by this our Northweſt paſſage.

Auouched by Franciſcus Lopes de Gomara in his hiſtorie of India, lib. 1. cap. 10.

To prooue that theſe Indians aforenamed came not by the Southeaſt, Southweſt, nor from any other part of Afrike, or America.

Cap. 5.

First, they could not come from the Southeaſt by the Cape de bona Sperança, becauſe the roughnes of the Seas there is ſuch (occaſioned by the currents and great winds in that part) that the greateſt Armadas the king of Portugal hath, cannot without great difficulty paſſe that way, much leſſe then a Canoa of India could liue in thoſe outragious ſeas without ſhipwracke (being a veſſell of very ſmall burden) and haue conducted themſelues to the place aforeſayd, being men vnexpert in the Arte of nauigation.

2 Alſo, it appeareth plainely that they were not able to come from alongſt the coaſt of Afrike aforeſayd, to thoſe parts of Europe, becauſe the winds doe (for the moſt part) blow there Eaſterly off from the ſhore, and the current running that way in like ſort, ſhould haue driuen them Weſtward vpon ſome part of America: for ſuch winds and tides could neuer haue led them from thẽce to the ſaid place where they were found, nor yet could they haue come from any of the countries aforeſayd, keeping the ſeas alwayes, without ſkilful mariners to haue conducted them ſuch like courſes as were neceſſary to performe ſuch a voiage.

3 Preſuppoſing alſo, if they had bene driuen to the Weſt (as they muſt haue bene, comming that way) then they ſhould haue periſhed, wanting ſupplie of victuals, not hauing any place (once leauing the coaſt of Afrike) vntill they came to America, nor from America vntill they arriued vpon ſome part of Europe, or the Iſlands adioyning to it, to haue refreſhed themſelues.

4 Alſo, if (notwithſtanding ſuch impoſſibilities) they might haue recouered Germanie by comming from India by the Southeaſt, yet muſt they without all doubt haue ſtriken vpon ſome other part of Europe before their arriuall there, as the Iſles of the Açores, Portugal, Spaine, France, England, Ireland, &c. which if they had done, it is not credible that they ſhould or would haue departed vndiſcouered of the inhabitants: but there was neuer found in thoſe dayes any ſuch ſhip or men but only vpon the coaſts of Germanie, where they haue bene ſundry times and in ſundry ages caſt aland: neither is it like that they would haue committed themſelues againe to ſea, if they had ſo arriued, not knowing where they were, nor whither to haue gone.

5 And by the Southweſt it is vnpoſſible, becauſe the current aforeſayd which cõmeth from the Eaſt, ſtriketh with ſuch force vpon the fret of Magellan, and falleth with ſuch ſwiftneſſe and furie into Mar del Zur, that hardly any ſhip (but not poſſibly a Canoa, with ſuch vnſkilfull mariners) can come into our Weſterne Ocean through that fret, from the Weſt ſeas of America, as Magellans experience hath partly taught vs.

This firſt reaſon by later experiẽce is proued vtterly vntrue.

6 And further, to prooue that theſe people ſo arriuing vpon the coaſt of Germany, were Indians, & not inhabiters of any part either of Africa or America, it is manifeſt, becauſe the natiues both of Africa and America neither had, or haue at this day (as is reported) other kind of boates then ſuch as do beare neither maſtes nor ſailes, (except onely vpon the coaſts of Barbarie and the Turkes ſhips) but do carie themſelues from place to place neere the ſhore by the ore onely.

That the Indians could not be natiues either of Africa, or of America.

To prooue that thoſe Indians came not by the Northeaſt, and that there is no thorow nauigable paſſage that way.

Cap. 6.

It is likely that there ſhould be no thorow paſſage by the Northeaſt, whereby to goe round about the world, becauſe all Seas (as aforeſayd) are maintained by the abundance of water, waxing more ſhallow and ſhelffie towards the ende, as we find it doeth by experience in Mare Glaciali, towards the Eaſt, which breedeth ſmall hope of any great continuance of that ſea, to be nauigable towards the Eaſt, ſufficient to ſaile thereby round about the world.

Quicquid naturali loco priuatur, quam citiſſimè corrumpitur.

Qualis cauſa talis effectus.

2 Alſo, it ſtandeth ſcarcely with reaſon, that the Indians dwelling vnder Torrida Zona, could endure the iniurie of the cold ayre, about the Septentrional latitude of 80. degrees, vnder which eleuation the paſſage by the Northeaſt cannot bee (as the often experience had of all the South parts of it ſheweth) ſeeing that ſome of the inhabitants of this cold climate (whoſe Summer is to them an extreme Winter) haue bene ſtroken to death with the cold damps of the aire about 72 degrees, by an accidental miſhap, and yet the aire in ſuch like Eleuation is alwaies cold, and too cold for ſuch as the Indians are.

3 Furthermore, the piercing cold of the groſſe thicke aire ſo neere the Pole wil ſo ſtiffen and furre the ſailes and ſhip tackling, that no mariner can either hoiſe or ſtrike them (as our experience farre neerer the South, then this paſſage is preſuppoſed to be, hath taught vs) without the vſe whereof no voiage can be performed.

4 Alſo, the aire is ſo darkened with continuall miſts and fogs ſo neere the Pole, that no man can well ſee, either to guide his ſhip, or direct his courſe.

5 Alſo the compaſſe at ſuch eleuation doth very ſuddenly vary, which things muſt of force haue bene their deſtructions, although they had bene men of much more ſkill then the Indians are.

Similium ſimilis eſt ratio.

6 Moreouer, all baies, gulfes, and riuers doe receiue their increaſe vpon the flood, ſenſibly to be diſcerned on the one ſide of the ſhore or the other, as many waies as they be open to any main ſea, as Mare Mediterraneum, Mare Rubrum, Sinus Perſicus, Sinus Bodicus, Thameſis, and all other knowen hauens or riuers in any part of the world, and each of them opening but on one part to the meine ſea, doe likewiſe receiue their increaſe vpon the flood the ſame way, and none other, which Mare Glaciale doeth, onely by the Weſt; as M. Ienkinſon affirmed vnto me: and therfore it followeth that this Northeaſt ſea, receiuing increaſe but onely from the Weſt, cannot poſſibly open to the maine Ocean by the Eaſt.

7 Moreouer, the farther you paſſe into any ſea towards the end of it, on that part which is ſhut vp from the maine ſea (as in all thoſe aboue mentioned) the leſſe and leſſe the tides riſe and fall. The like whereof alſo happeneth in Mare Glaciale, which prooueth but ſmall continuance of that Sea toward the Eaſt.

8 Alſo, the further yee goe toward the Eaſt in Mare Glaciale, the leſſe ſalt the water is: which could not happen, if it were open to the ſalt Sea towards the Eaſt, as it is to the Weſt onely, ſeeing Euery thing naturally ingendreth his like: and then muſt it be like ſalt throughout, as all the ſeas are, in ſuch like climate and eleuation.

Quicquid corrumpitur à contrario corrumpitur.

Omne ſimile gignit ſui ſimile.

And therefore it ſeemeth that this Northeaſt ſea is maintained by the riuer Ob, and ſuch like freſſhets, as Mare Goticum, and Mare Mediterraneum, in the vppermoſt parts thereof by the riuers Nilus, Danubius Neper, Tanais, &c.

9 Furthermore, if there were any ſuch ſea at that eleuation, of like it ſhould be alwaies frozen throughout (there being no tides to hinder it) becauſe the extreme coldnes of the aire being in the vppermoſt part, and the extreme coldneſſe of the earth in the bottome, the ſea there being but of ſmall depth, whereby the one accidentall coldneſſe doth meet with the other, and the Sunne not hauing his reflection ſo neere the Pole, but at very blunt angles, it can neuer be diſſolued after it is frozen, notwithſtanding the great length of their day: for that the ſunne hath no heate at all in his light or beames, but proceeding onely by an accidentall reflection, which there wanteth in effect.

10 And yet if the Sunne were of ſufficient force in that eleuation, to preuaile againſt this ice, yet muſt it be broken before it can be diſſolued, which cannot be but through the long continuance of the ſunne aboue their Horizon, and by that time the Sommer would be ſo farre ſpent, and ſo great darkenes and cold enſue, that no man could be able to endure ſo cold, darke, and diſcomfortable a nauigation, if it were poſſible for him then, and there to liue.

11 Further, the ice being once broken, it muſt of force ſo driue with the windes and tides, that no ſhip can ſaile in thoſe ſeas, ſeeing our Fiſhers of Iſland, and the New found land, are ſubiect to danger through the great Iſlands of Ice which fleete in the Seas (to the ſailers great danger) farre to the South of that preſuppoſed paſſage.

12 And it cannot be that this Northeaſt paſſage ſhould be any neerer the South, then before recited, for then it ſhould cut off Ciremiſſi, & Turbi Tartari, with Vzeſucani, Chiſani, and others from the Continent of Aſia, which are knowen to be adioyning to Scythia, Tartaria, &c. with the other part of the ſame Continent.

And if there were any thorowe paſſage by the Northeaſt, yet were it to ſmall ende and purpoſe for our traffique, becauſe no ſhippe of great burden can Nauigate in ſo ſhallow a Sea:

and ſhips of ſmall burden are very vnfit & vnprofitable, eſpecially towards the bluſtering North, to performe ſuch a voyage.

To prooue that the Indians aforenamed, came only by the Northweſt, which induceth a certaintie of our paſſage by experience.

Cap. 7.

IT is as likely that they came by the Northweſt, as it is vnlikely that they ſhould come either by the Southeaſt, Southweſt, Northeaſt, or from any other part of Africa or America, and therefore this Northweſt paſſage hauing bene alreadie ſo many wayes prooued, by diſproouing of the others, &c. I ſhall the leſſe neede in this place, to vſe many words otherwiſe then to conclude in this ſort, That they came onely by the Northweſt from England, hauing theſe many reaſons to leade me thereunto.

1 Firſt, the one halfe of the windes of the compaſſe might bring them by the Northweſt, bearing alwayes betweene two ſheats, with which kind of ſayling the Indians are onely acquainted, not hauing any vſe of a bow line, or quarter winde, without the which no ſhip can poſſibly come either by the Southeaſt, Southweſt or Northeaſt, hauing ſo many ſundry Capes to double, whereunto are required ſuch change and ſhift of windes.

2 And it ſeemeth likely that they ſhould come by the Northweſt, becauſe the coaſt whereon they were driuen, lay Eaſt from this our paſſage, And all windes doe naturally driue a ſhip to an oppoſite point from whence it bloweth, not being otherwiſe guided by Arte, which the Indians do vtterly want, & therefore it ſeemeth that they came directly through this our fret, which they might doe with one wind.

True, both in ventis obliquè flantibus, as alſo in ventis ex diametro ſpirantibus.

3 For if they had come by the Cape de buona Sperança, then muſt they (as aforeſaid) haue fallen vpon the South parts of America.

4 And if by the fret of Magellan, then vpon the coaſts of Afrike, Spaine, Portugall, France, Ireland or England.

5 And if by the Northeaſt, then vpon the coaſts of Ceremiſſi, Tartarij, Lappia, Iſland, Terra de Labrador, &c. and vpon theſe coaſts (as aforeſaid) they haue neuer bene found.

So that by all likelihood they could neuer haue come without ſhipwracke vpon the coaſtes of Germanie, if they had firſt ſtriken vpon the coaſtes of ſo many countries, wanting both Arte and ſhipping to make orderly diſcouery, and altogether ignorant both in the Arte of Nauigation, and alſo of the Rockes, Flats, Sands or Hauens of thoſe parts of the world, which in moſt of theſe places are plentifull.

6 And further it ſeemeth very likely, that the inhabitants of the moſt part of thoſe countries, by which they muſt haue come any other way beſides by the Northweſt, being for the moſt part Anthropophagi, or men eaters, would haue deuoured them, ſlaine them, or (at the leaſt wiſe) kept them as wonders for the gaze.

So that it plainely appeareth that thoſe Indians (which as you haue heard in ſundry ages were driuen by tempeſt vpon the ſhore of Germanie) came onely through our Northweſt paſſage.

7 Moreouer, the paſſage is certainely prooued by a Nauigation that a Portugall made, who paſſed through this fret, giuing name to a Promontorie farre within the ſame, calling it after his owne name, Promontorium Corterialis, neere adioyning vnto Poliſacus fluuius.

8 Alſo one Scolmus a Dane entred and paſſed a great part thereof.

9 Alſo there was one Saluaterra, a Gentleman of Victoria in Spaine, that came by chance out of the Weſt Indias into Ireland, Anno 1568. who affirmed the Northweſt paſſage from vs to Cataia, conſtantly to be beleeued in America nauigable. And further ſaid in the preſence of ſir Henry Sidney (then lord Deputie of Ireland) in my hearing, that a Frier of Mexico, called Andrew Vrdaneta, more then eight yeeres before his then comming into Ireland, told him there, that he came from Mar del Sur into Germany through this Northweſt paſſage, & ſhewed Saluaterra (at that time being then with him in Mexico) a Sea Card made by his owne experience and trauell in that voyage, wherein was plainly ſet downe and deſcribed this Northweſt paſſage, agreeing in all points with Ortelius mappe.

And further, this Frier tolde the king of Portugall (as he returned by that countrey homeward) that there was (of certainty) ſuch a paſſage Northweſt from England, and that he meant to publiſh the ſame: which done, the king moſt earneſtly deſired him not in any wiſe to diſcloſe or make the paſſage knowen to any nation: For that (ſaid the king) if England had knowledge and experience thereof, it would greatly hinder both the king of Spaine and me. This Frier (as Saluaterra reported) was the greateſt Diſcouerer by ſea, that hath bene in our age. Alſo Saluaterra being perſwaded of this paſſage by the frier Vrdaneta, and by the common opinion of the Spaniards inhabiting America, offered moſt willingly to accompanie me in this Diſcouery, which of like he would not haue done if he had ſtood in doubt thereof.

The words of the king of Portugall, to Andro Vrdaneta a Frier, touching the concealing of this Northweſt paſſage from England to Cataia.

An obiection.

Ariſtotle lib. de mundo, cap. 2. Beroſus lib. 5.

And now as theſe moderne experiences cannot be impugned, ſo, leaſt it might be obiected that theſe things (gathered out of ancient writers, which wrote ſo many yeeres paſt) might ſerue litle to prooue this paſſage by the North of America, becauſe both America and India were to them then vtterly vnknowen: to remooue this doubt, let this ſuffiſe: That Ariſtotle (who was 300. yeeres before Chriſt) named Mare Indicum. Alſo Beroſus (who liued 330 yeres before Chriſt) hath theſe words, Ganges in India. Alſo in the firſt chapter of Heſter be theſe wordes, In the dayes of Aſſuerus which ruled from India to Aethiopia, which Aſſuerus liued 580 yeeres before Chriſt. Alſo Quintus Curtius (where he ſpeaketh of the conqueſts of Alexander) mentioneth India. Alſo, Arianus, Philoſtratus, and Sidrach in his diſcourſes of the warres of the king of Bactria, and of Garaab, who had the moſt part of India vnder his gouernment. All which aſſureth vs, that both India and Indians were knowen in thoſe dayes.

Theſe things conſidered, we may (in my opinion) not only aſſure our ſelues of this paſſage by the Northweſt, but alſo that it is nauigable both to come and go, as hath bene prooued in part and in all, by the experience of diuers, as Sebaſtian Cabota, Corterialis, the three brethren aboue named, the Indians, and Vrdaneta the Frier of Mexico, &c.

And yet notwithſtanding all this, there be ſome that haue a better hope of this paſſage to Cataia by the Northeaſt then by the Weſt, whoſe reaſons with my ſeuerall anſweres enſue in the chapter following.

Certaine reaſons alleaged for the proouing of a paſſage by the Northeaſt, before the Queenes Maieſtie, and certaine Lords of the Counſell, by Master Anthonie Ienkinſon, with my ſeuerall anſweres then vſed to the ſame.

Cap. 8.

BEcauſe you may vnderſtand as well thoſe things alleaged againſt me, as what doth ſerue for my purpoſe, I haue here added the reaſons of Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon a worthy gentleman, and a great traueller, who conceiued a better hope of the paſſage to Cataia from vs, to be by the Northeaſt, then by the Northweſt.

The Northweſt paſſage aſſented vnto.

He firſt ſaid that he thought not to the contrary, but that there was a paſſage by the Northweſt, according to mine opinion: but aſſured he was, that there might be found a nauigable paſſage by the Northeaſt from England, to goe to all the Eaſt parts of the world, which he endeuoured to prooue three wayes.

The firſt reaſon.

The firſt was that he heard a Fiſherman of Tartaria ſay in hunting the Morce, that he ſayled very farre towards the Southeaſt, finding no end of the Sea: whereby he hoped a thorow paſſage to be that way.

The anſwer or reſolution.

Whereunto I anſwered, that the Tartarians were a barbarous people, and vtterly ignorant in the Arte of Nauigation, not knowing the vſe of the Sea Card, Compaſſe or Starre, which he confeſſed to be true: and therfore they could not (ſaid I) certainly know the Southeaſt from the Northeaſt, in a wide ſea, and a place vnknowen from the ſight of the land.

Or if he ſailed any thing neere the ſhore, yet he (being ignorant) might be deceiued by the doubling of many points and Capes, and by the trending of the land, albeit he kept continually alongſt the ſhore.

Viſus nonnunquam fallitur in ſuo obiecto.

And further, it might be that the poore Fiſherman through ſimplicitie thought that there was nothing that way but ſea, becauſe he ſaw no land: which proofe (vnder correction) giueth ſmall aſſurance of a Nauigable ſea by the Northeaſt, to goe round about the world, For that he iudged by the eye onely, ſeeing we in this our cleare aire doe account twentie miles a ken at Sea.

The ſecond reaſon or allegation.

His ſecond reaſon is, that there was an Vnicornes horne found vpon the coaſt of Tartaria, which could not come (ſaid he) thither by any other meanes then with the tides, through ſome fret in the Northeaſt of Mare Glaciale, there being no Vnicorne in any part of Aſia, ſauing in India and Cataia: which reaſon (in my ſimple iudgement) forceth as litle.

The anſwer or reſolution.

Firſt, it is doubtfull whether thoſe barbarous Tartarians do know an Vnicornes horne, yea, or no: and if it were one, yet it is not credible that the Sea could haue driuen it ſo farre, being of ſuch nature that it will not ſwimme.

Alſo the tides running too and fro, would haue driuen it as farre backe with the ebbe, as it brought it forward with the flood.

There is alſo a beaſt called Aſinus Indicus (whoſe horne moſt like it was) which hath but one horne like an Unicorne in his forehead, whereof there is great plenty in all the North parts thereunto adioyning, as in Lappia, Noruegia, Finmarke, &c. as Iacobus Zieglerus writeth in his hiſtorie of Scondia.

And as Albertus ſaieth, there is a fiſh which hath but one horne in his forehead like to an Unicorne, and therefore it ſeemeth very doubtfull both from whence it came, and whether it were an Unicornes horne, yea, or no.

His third and laſt reaſon was, that there came a continuall ſtreame or current through Mare Glaciale, of ſuch ſwiftneſſe (as a Colmax told him) that if you caſt any thing therein, it would preſently be carried out of ſight towards the Weſt.

The third and laſt reaſon or aſſertion.

Whereunto I anſwered, that there doth the like from Mæotis Palus, by Pontus Euxinus, Sinus Boſphorus, and along the coaſt of Græcia, &c. As it is affirmed by Contarenus, and diuers others that haue had experience of the ſame: and yet that Sea lieth not open to any maine Sea that way, but is maintained by freſhets as by Tanais, Danubius, &c.

The anſwer or reſolution.

In like maner is this current in Mare Glaciale increaſed and maintained by the Dwina, the riuer Ob, &c.

Now as I haue here briefly recited the reaſons alleaged, to prooue a paſſage to Cataia by the Northeaſt, with my ſeuerall anſweres thereunto: ſo will I leaue it to your iudgement, to hope or diſpaire of either at your pleaſure.

How that the paſſage by the Northweſt is more commodious for our traffique, then the other by the Eaſt, if there were any ſuch.

Cap. 9.

FIrſt, by the Northeaſt (if your windes doe not giue you a maruelous ſpeedie & luckie paſſage) you are in danger (being ſo neere the Pole) to be benighted almoſt the one halfe of the yeere, and what danger that were, to liue ſo long comfortleſſe, voide of light, (if the cold killed you not) each man of reaſon or vnderſtanding may iudge.

2 Alſo Mangia, Quinzai, and the Moluccæ are neerer vnto vs by the Northweſt, then by the Northeaſt, more then two fiue parts, which is almoſt by the halfe.

Some doubt of this.

3 Alſo we may haue by the Weſt a yeerely returne, it being at all times nauigable, whereas you haue but 4. moneths in the whole yeere to goe by the Northeaſt: the paſſage being at ſuch eleuation as it is formerly expreſſed, for it cannot be any neerer the South.

4 Furthermore, it cannot be finiſhed without diuers wintrings by the way, hauing no hauens in any temperate climate to harbour in there: for it is as much as we can well ſaile from hence to S. Nicholas, in the trade of Moſcouia, and returne in the nauigable ſeaſon of the yeere, & from S. Nicholas to Cerimiſſi Tartari, which ſtande at 80 degrees of the Septentrionall latitude, it is at the leaſt 400 leagues, which amounteth ſcarce to the third part of the way, to the end of your voyage by the Northeaſt.

5 And yet after you haue doubled this Cape, if then there might be found a nauigable Sea to carie you Southeaſt according to your deſire, yet can you not winter conueniently, vntil you come to 60 degrees, and to take vp one degree running Southeaſt, you muſt ſaile 24 leagues and three foure parts, which amounteth to 495 leagues.

6 Furthermore, you may by the Northweſt ſaile thither with all Eaſterly windes, and returne with any Weſterly windes, whereas you muſt haue by the Northeaſt ſundry windes, and thoſe proper, according to the lying of the coaſt and Capes, you ſhalbe inforced to double, which windes are not alwaies to be had, when they are looked for: wherby your iourney ſhould be greatly prolonged, and hardly endured ſo neere the Pole. As we are taught by ſir Hugh Willoughbie, who was frozen to death farre neerer the South.

7 Moreouer, it is very doubtfull, whether we ſhould long inioy that trade by the Northeaſt, if there were any ſuch paſſage that way, the commodities thereof once knowen to the Moſcouite, what priuilege ſoeuer hee hath granted, ſeeing pollicy with the maſſe of exceſſiue gaine, to the inriching (ſo greatly) of himſelfe and all his dominions would perſwade him to preſume the ſame, hauing ſo great opportunitie to vtter the commodities of thoſe countries by the Narue.

But by the Northweſt, we may ſafely trade without danger or annoyance of any prince liuing, Chriſtian or Heathen, it being out of all their trades.

8 Alſo the Queenes Maieſties dominions are neerer the Northweſt paſſage then any other great princes that might paſſe that way, and both in their going and returne, they muſt of neceſſitie ſuccour themſelues and their ſhips vpon ſome part of the ſame, if any tempeſtuous weather ſhould happen.

Further, no princes nauie of the world is able to incounter the Queenes Maieſties nauie, as it is at this preſent: and yet it ſhould be greatly increaſed by the traffike inſuing vpon this diſcouerie, for it is the long voyages that increaſe and maintaine great ſhipping.

Now it ſeemeth neceſſarie to declare what commodities would growe thereby, if all theſe things were, as we haue heretofore preſuppoſed, and thought them to be: which next adioyning are briefly declared.

What commodities would enſue, this paſſage once diſcouered.

Cap. 10.

FIrſt, it were the onely way for our princes, to poſſeſſe the wealth of all the Eaſt parts (as they terme them) of the world, which is infinite: as appeareth by the experience of Alexander the great, in the time of his conqueſt of India, and other the Eaſt parts of the world, alleaged by Quintus Curtius, which would be a great aduancement to our countrey, a wonderfull inriching to our prince, and an vnſpeakable commoditie to all the inhabitants of Europe.

2 For through the ſhortneſſe of the voyage, we ſhould be able to ſell all maner of merchandize, brought from thence, farre better cheape then either the Portugall or Spaniard doth or may do. And further, we ſhould ſhare with the Portugall in the Eaſt, & the Spaniard in the Weſt, by trading to any part of America, thorow Mar del Sur, where they can no maner of way offend vs.

3 Alſo we might ſayle to diuers very rich countreys, both ciuill and others, out of both their iuriſdictions, trades and traffikes, where there is to be found great abundance of golde, ſiluer, precious ſtones, cloth of gold, ſilkes, all maner of ſpices, grocery wares, and other kinds of merchandize of an ineſtimable price, which both the Spaniard and Portugall, through the length of their iournies, cannot well attaine vnto.

4 Alſo we might inhabite ſome part of thoſe countreyes, and ſettle there ſuch needy people of our countrey, which now trouble the common wealth, and through want here at home are inforced to commit outragious offences, whereby they are dayly conſumed with the gallowes.

5 Moreouer, we might from all the aforeſaid places haue a yeerely returne, inhabiting for our ſtaple ſome conuenient place of America, about Sierra Neuada, or ſome other part, wheras it ſhal ſeeme beſt for the ſhortning of the voyage.

6 Beſide vttering of our countrey commodities, which the Indians, &c. much eſteeme: as appeareth in Heſter, where the pompe is expreſſed of the great king of India, Aſſuerus, who matched the coloured clothes, wherewith his houſes and tents were apparelled, with gold and ſiluer, as part of his greateſt treaſure: not mentioning either veluets, ſilkes, cloth of gold, cloth of ſiluer, or ſuch like, being in thoſe countreyes moſt plentifull: whereby it plainly appeareth in what great eſtimation they would haue the clothes of this our countrey, ſo that there would be found a farre better vent for them by this meanes, then yet this realme euer had: and that without depending either vpon France, Spaine, Flanders, Portugall, Hamborow, Emden, or any other part of Europe.

7 Alſo, here we ſhall increaſe both our ſhips and mariners, without burthening of the ſtate.

8 And alſo haue occaſion to ſet poore mens children to learne handie craftes, and thereby to make trifles and ſuch like, which the Indians and thoſe people do much eſteeme: by reaſon whereof, there ſhould be none occaſion to haue our countrey combred with loiterers, vagabonds, and ſuch like idle perſons.

All theſe commodities would grow by following this our diſcouery, without iniury done to any Chriſtian prince, by croſſing them in any of their vſed trades, whereby they might take any iuſt occaſion of offence.

Thus haue I briefly ſhewed you ſome part of the grounds of mine opinion, truſting that you will no longer iudge me fantaſticke in this matter: ſeeing I haue conceiued no vaine hope of this voyage, but am perſwaded thereunto by the beſt Coſmographers of our age, the ſame being confirmed both by reaſon and certaine experiences.

Alſo this diſcouery hath bene diuers times heretofore by others both offered, attempted, and performed.

It hath bene offered by Stephan Gomes vnto Carolus the fift Emperour, in the yeere of our Lord God 1527. as Alphonſo Vllua teſtifieth in the ſtory of Carolus life: who would haue ſet him forth in it (as the ſtory mentioneth) if the great want of money, by reaſon of his long warres had not cauſed him to ſurceaſe the ſame.

And the king of Portugall fearing leaſt the Emperour would haue perſeuered in this his enterpriſe, gaue him, to leaue the matter vnattempted, the ſumme of 350000 crownes: and it is to be thought that the king of Portugall would not haue giuen to the Emperour ſuch ſummes of money for egges in mooneſhine.

This diſcouery offered.

It hath bene attempted by Sebaſtian Cabota in the time of king Henry the ſeuenth, by Corterialis the Portugall, and Scolmus the Dane.

This diſcouery attempted.

And it hath bene performed by three brethren, the Indians aforeſaid, and by Vrdaneta the Frier of Mexico.

This diſcouery performed.

Alſo diuers haue offered the like vnto the French king, who hath ſent two or three times to haue diſcouered the ſame: The diſcouerers ſpending and conſuming their victuals in ſearching the gulfes and bayes betweene Florida and Terra de Labrador, whereby the yce is broken to the after commers.

So that the right way may now eaſily be found out in ſhort time: and that with litle ieoperdie and leſſe expences.

For America is diſcouered ſo farre towardes the North as Cape Frio, which is at 62 degrees, and that part of Grondland next adioyning is knowen to ſtand but at 72 degrees. So that wee haue but 10 degrees to ſaile North & South, to put the world out of doubt hereof: and it is likely that the king of Spaine, and the king of Portugall would not haue ſit out all this while, but that they are ſure to poſſeſſe to themſelues all that trade they now vſe, and feare to deale in this diſcouery, leaſt the Queenes Maieſtie hauing ſo good opportunitie, and finding the commoditie which thereby might enſue to the common wealth, would cut them off, and enioy the whole traffique to her ſelfe, and thereby the Spaniards and Portugals, with their great charges, ſhould beate the buſh, and other men catch the birds: which thing they foreſeeing, haue commanded that no pilot of theirs vpon paine of death, ſhould ſeeke to diſcouer to the Northweſt, or plat out in any Sea card any thorow paſſage that way by the Northweſt.

The labour of this diſcouerie ſhortned by other mens trauell.

Why ÿ kings of Spaine and Portugal would not perſeuer in this diſcouery.

Now, and if you will indifferently compare the hope that remaineth, to animate me to this enterpriſe, with thoſe likelihoods which Columbus alleaged before Ferdinando the king of Caſtilia, to proue that there were ſuch Ilands in the Weſt Ocean, as were after by him and others diſcouered to the great commodity of Spaine and all the world: you will thinke then this Northweſt paſſage to be moſt worthy trauell therein.

For Columbus had none of the Weſt Ilands ſet foorth vnto him, either in globe or card, neither yet once mentioned of any writer (Plato excepted, and the commentaries vpon the ſame) from 942 yeeres before Chriſt, vntill that day.

Moreouer, Columbus himſelfe had neither ſeene America nor any other of the Ilands about it, neither vnderſtood he of them by the report of any other that had ſeene them, but only comforted himſelfe with this hope, that the land had a beginning where the Sea had an ending: for as touching that which the Spaniards doe write of a Biſcaine, which ſhould haue taught him the way thither, it is thought to be imagined of them, to depriue Columbus of his honour, being none of their countrey man, but a ſtranger borne.

And if it were true of the Biſcaine, yet did he but roue at the matter, or (at the leaſt) gathered the knowledge of it, by coniectures onely.

And albeit my ſelfe haue not ſeene this paſſage or any part thereof, but am ignorant of it as touching experience (as Columbus was before his attempt made) yet haue I both the report, relation, and authoritie of diuers moſt credible men, which haue both ſeene and paſſed through ſome and euery part of this diſcouery, beſides ſundry reaſons for my aſſurance thereof: all which Columbus wanted.

Theſe things conſidered, & indifferently weighed togither, with the wonderfull commodities which this diſcouery may bring, eſpecially to this realme of England: I muſt needes conclude with learned Baptiſta Ramuſius, and diuers other learned men, who ſaid, that this diſcouery hath bene reſerued for ſome noble prince or woorthie man, thereby to make himſelfe rich, and the world happie: deſiring you to accept in good part this briefe and ſimple diſcourſe, written in haſte, which if I may perceiue that it ſhall not ſufficiently ſatiſfie you in this behalfe, I will then impart vnto you a large diſcourſe, which I haue written onely of this diſcouery.

And further, becauſe it ſufficeth not only to know that ſuch a thing there is, without abilitie to performe the ſame, I wil at leaſure make you partaker of another ſimple diſcourſe of nauigation, wherein I haue not a litle trauelled, to make my ſelfe as ſufficient to bring theſe things to effect, as I haue bene readie to offer my ſelfe therein.

And therein I haue deuiſed to amend the errors of vſuall ſea cards, whoſe common fault is, to make the degrees of longitude in euery latitude of one like bigneſſe.

And haue alſo deuiſed therein a Sphericall inſtrument, with a compaſſe of variation for the perfect knowing of the longitude.

And a preciſe order to pricke the ſea card, together with certaine infallible rules for the ſhortning of any diſcouery, to know at the firſt entring of any fret, whether it lie open to the Ocean more wayes then one, how farre ſoeuer the ſea ſtretcheth it ſelfe into the land.

Deſiring you hereafter neuer to miſlike with me, for the taking in hande of any laudable and honeſt enterpriſe: for if through pleaſure or idleneſſe we purchaſe ſhame, the pleaſure vaniſheth, but the ſhame remaineth for euer.

Pereas qui vmbras times.

And therefore to giue me leaue without offence, alwayes to liue and die in this mind, That he is not worthy to liue at all, that for feare, or danger of death, ſhunneth his countries ſeruice, and his owne honour: ſeeing death is ineuitable, and the fame of vertue immortall. Wherefore in this behalfe, Mutare vel timere ſperno.

Certaine other reaſons, or arguments to prooue a paſſage by the Northweſt, learnedly written by M. Richard Willes Gentleman.

FOure famous wayes there be ſpoken of to thoſe fruitfull and wealthie Iſlands, which wee doe vſually call Moluccaes, continually haunted for gaine, and dayly trauelled for riches therein growing. Theſe Iſlands, although they ſtand Eaſt from the Meridian, diſtant almoſt halfe the length of the world, in extreame heate, vnder the Equinoctiall line, poſſeſſed of Infidels and Barbarians: yet by our neighbours great abundance of wealth there is painefully ſought in reſpect of the voyage deerely bought, and from thence dangerouſly brought home vnto vs. Our neighbours I call the Portugals in compariſon of the Molucchians for neereneſſe vnto vs, for like ſituation Weſtward as we haue, for their vſuall trade with vs, for that the farre Southeaſterlings doe knowe this part of Europe by no other name then Portugall, not greatly acquainted as yet with the other Nations thereof. Their voyage is very well vnderſtood of all men, and the Southeaſterne way round about Afrike by the Cape of Good hope more ſpoken of, better knowen and trauelled, then that it may ſeeme needfull to diſcourſe thereof any further.

1 By the Southeaſt.

2 By the Southweſt.

The ſecond way lyeth Southweſt, betweene the Weſt India or South America, and the South continent, through that narrow ſtraight where Magellan firſt of all men that euer we doe read of, paſſed theſe latter yeeres, leauing thereunto therefore his name. This way no doubt the Spaniardes would commodiouſly take, for that it lyeth neere vnto their dominions there, could the Eaſterne current and leuant windes as eaſily ſuffer them to returne, as ſpeedily therwith they may be carried thither: for the which difficultie, or rather impoſſibility of ſtriuing againſt the force both of winde and ſtreame, this paſſage is litle or nothing vſed, although it be very well knowen.

This is an errour.

3 By the Northeaſt.

The third way by the Northeaſt, beyond all Europe and Aſia, that worthy and renowmed knight ſir Hugh Willoughbie ſought to his perill, enforced there to ende his life for colde, congealed and frozen to death. And truely this way conſiſteth rather in the imagination of Geographers, then allowable either in reaſon, or approoued by experience, as well it may appeare by the dangerous trending of the Scythiſh Cape ſet by Ortelius vnder the 80 degree North, by the vnlikely ſailing in that Northerne ſea alwayes clad with yce and ſnow, or at the leaſt continually peſtred therewith, if happily it be at any time diſſolued: beſides bayes and ſhelfes, the water waxing more ſhallow toward the Eaſt, that we ſay nothing of the foule miſts and darke fogs in the cold clime, of the litle power of the Sunne to cleare the aire, of the vncomfortable nights, ſo neere the Pole, fiue moneths long.

Ortel. tab. Aſiæ, 3.

4 By the Northeaſt.

A fourth way to go vnto theſe aforeſaid happy Iſlands Moluccæ ſir Humfrey Gilbert a learned and valiant knight diſcourſeth of at large in his new paſſage to Cathayo. The enterpriſe of it ſelfe being vertuous, the fact muſt doubtleſſe deſerue high praiſe, and whenſoeuer it ſhal be finiſhed, the fruits thereof cannot be ſmal: where vertue is guide, there is fame a follower, & fortune a companion. But the way is dangerous, the paſſage doubtfull, the voiage not throughly knowen, and therefore gaineſaid by many, after this maner.

Ob. 1.

Firſt, who can aſſure vs of any paſſage rather by the Northweſt then by the Northeaſt? doe not both wayes lye in equall diſtance from the North Pole? Stand not the North Capes of eyther continent vnder like eleuation? Is not the Ocean ſea beyond America farther diſtant from our Meridian by 30. or 40. degrees Weſt, then the extreame poyntes of Cathayo Eaſtward, if Ortelius generall Carde of the world be true? In the Northeaſt that noble Knight Syr Hugh Willoughbie periſhed for colde: and can you then promiſe a paſſenger any better happe by the Northweſt? Who hath gone for triall ſake at any time this way out of Europe to Cathayo? In Theatro.

Ob.2. If you ſeeke the aduiſe herein of ſuch as make profeſſion in Coſmographie, Ptolome the father of Geographie, and his eldeſt children, will anſwere by their mappes with a negatiue, concluding moſt of the Sea within the land, and making an ende of the world Northward, neere the 63. degree. The ſame opinion, when learning chiefly floriſhed, was receiued in the Romanes time, as by their Poets writings it may appeare: tibi ſeruiat vltima Thyle, ſaid Virgil, being of opinion, that Iſland was the extreme part of the world habitable toward the North. Ioſeph Moletius an Italian, and Mercator a Germaine, for knowledge men able to be compared with the beſt Geographers of our time, the one in his halfe Spheres of the whole world, the other in ſome of his great globes, haue continued the Weſt Indies land, euen to the North Pole, and conſequently, cut off all paſſage by ſea that way.

The ſame doctors, Mercator in other of his globes and mappes, Moletius in his ſea Carde, neuertheleſſe doubting of ſo great continuance of the former continent, haue opened a gulfe betwixt the Weſt Indies and the extreame Northerne land: but ſuch a one, that either is not to be trauelled for the cauſes in the firſt obiection alledged, or cleane ſhut vp from vs in Europe by Groenland: the South ende whereof Moletius maketh firme land with America, the North part continent with Lappeland and Norway.

Ob.3. Thirdly, the greateſt fauourers of this voyage can not denie, but that if any ſuch paſſage be, it lieth ſubiect vnto yce and ſnow for the moſt part of the yeere, whereas it ſtandeth in the edge of the froſtie Zone. Before the Sunne hath warmed the ayre, and diſſolued the yce, eche one well knoweth that there can be no ſayling: the yce once broken through the continuall abode the ſunne maketh a certaine ſeaſon in thoſe partes, how ſhall it be poſſible for ſo weake a veſſel as a ſhippe is, to holde out amid whole Iſlands, as it were of yce continually beating on eche ſide, and at the mouth of that gulfe, iſſuing downe furiouſly from the north, and ſafely to paſſe, when whole mountaines of yce and ſnow ſhall be tumbled downe vpon her?

Ob.4. Well, graunt the Weſt Indies not to continue continent vnto the Pole, graunt there be a paſſage betweene theſe two lands, let the gulfe lie neerer vs then commonly in cardes we finde it ſet, namely, betweene the 61. and 64. degrees north, as Gemma Friſius in his mappes and globes imagineth it, and ſo left by our countreyman Sebaſtian Cabot in his table which the Earle of Bedford hath at Cheinies: Let the way be voyde of all difficulties, yet doeth it not follow that wee haue free paſſage to Cathayo. For examples ſake: You may trend all Norway, Finmarke, and Lappeland, and then bowe Southward to Saint Nicholas in Moſcouia: you may likewiſe in the Mediterranean Sea fetch Conſtantinople, and the mouth of Tanais: yet is there no paſſage by Sea through Moſcouia into Pont Euxine, now called Mare Maggiore. Againe, in the aforeſaid Mediterranean ſea, we ſaile to Alexandria in Egypt, the Barbarians bring their pearle and ſpices from the Moluccaes vp the Red ſea or Arabian gulph to Sues, ſcarcely three dayes iourney from the aforeſayd hauen: yet haue wee no way by ſea from Alexandria to the Moluccaes, for that Iſthmos or litle ſtraight of land betweene the two ſeas. In like maner although the Northerne paſſage be free at 61 degrees of latitude, and the Weſt Ocean beyond America, vſually called Mar del Zur, knowen to be open at 40. degrees eleuation from the Iſland Iapan, yea three hundred leagues Northerly aboue Iapan: yet may there be land to hinder the thorow paſſage that way by Sea, as in the examples aforeſaid it falleth out, Aſia and America there being ioyned together in one continent. Ne can this opinion ſeeme altogether friuolous vnto any one that diligently peruſeth our Coſmographers doings. Ioſephus Moletius is of that minde, not onely in his plaine Hemiſpheres of the world, but alſo in his Sea card. The French Geographers in like maner be of the ſame opinion, as by their Mappe cut out in forme of a Hart you may perceiue: as though the Weſt Indies were part of Aſia. Which ſentence well agreeth with that olde concluſion in the Schooles: Quicquid præter Africam & Europam eſt, Aſia eſt, Whatſoeuer land doeth neither apperteine vnto Afrike nor to Europe, is part of Aſia.

Ob.5. Furthermore it were to ſmall purpoſe to make ſo long, ſo painefull, ſo doubtfull a voyage by ſuch a new found way, if in Cathayo you ſhould neither bee ſuffered to land for ſilkes and ſiluer, nor able to fetch the Molucca ſpices and pearle for piracie in thoſe Seas. Of a law denying all Aliens to enter into China, and forbidding all the inhabitants vnder a great penaltie to let in any ſtranger into thoſe countreys, ſhall you reade in the report of Galeotro Perera there impriſoned with other Portugals: as alſo in the Iaponiſh letters, how for that cauſe the worthy traueller Xauierus bargained with a Barbarian Merchant for a great ſumme of pepper to be brought into Canton, a port in China. The great and dangerous piracie vſed in thoſe Seas no man can be ignorant of, that liſteth to reade the Iaponiſh and Eaſt Indian hiſtorie.

Ob.6.

Finally, all this great labour would be loſt, all theſe charges ſpent in vaine, if in the ende our trauellers might not be able to returne againe, and bring ſafely home into their owne natiue countrey that wealth & riches, which they in forrein regions with aduenture of goods, & danger of their liues haue ſought for. By the Northeaſt there is no way, the Southeaſt paſſage the Portugals doe hold as the Lords of thoſe Seas. At yͤ Southweſt Magellans experience hath partly taught vs, and partly we are perſuaded by reaſon, how the Eaſterne current ſtriketh ſo furiouſly on that ſtraight, and falleth with ſuch force into that narrow gulph, that hardly any ſhip can returne that way into our Weſt Ocean out of Mar del Zur. The which if it be true, as truely it is, then wee may ſay that the aforeſayd Eaſterne current or leuant courſe of waters continually following after the heauenly motions, looſeth not altogether his force, but is doubled rather by an other current from out the Northeaſt, in the paſſage betweene America and the North land, whither it is of neceſſity caryed: hauing none other way to maintaine it ſelfe in circular motion, & conſequently the force and fury thereof to be no leſſe in the ſtraight of Anian, where it ſtriketh South into Mar del Zur, beyond America (if any ſuch ſtraight of Sea there be) then in Magellans fret, both ſtraights being of like bredth: as in Belognine Zalterius table of new France, and in Don Diego Hermano de Toledo his Card for nauigation in that region we doe finde preciſely ſet downe.

Neuertheleſſe to approoue that there lyeth a way to Cathayo at the Northweſt from out of Europe, we haue experience, namely of three brethren that went that iourney, as Gemma Friſius recordeth, and left a name vnto that ſtraight, whereby now it is called Fretum trium fratrum. We doe reade againe of a Portugall that paſſed this ſtraight, of whom Maſter Frobiſher ſpeaketh, that was impriſoned therefore many yeeres in Liſbone, to verifie the olde Spaniſh prouerbe, I ſuffer for doing well. Likewiſe Andrew Vrdaneta a Fryer of Mexico came out of Mar del Zur this way into Germanie, his Carde (for he was a great Diſcouerer) made by his owne experience and trauell in that voyage, hath bene ſeene by Gentlemen of good credite.

Cic. 1. de orat, Ariſt. pri. Metaph.

Now if the obſeruation and remembrance of things breedeth experience, and of experience proceedeth arte, and the certaine knowledge we haue in all faculties, as the beſt Philoſophers that euer were doe affirme: truely the voyage of theſe aforeſayd trauellers that haue gone out of Europe into Mar del Zur, and returned thence at the Northweſt, do moſt euidently conclude that way to be nauigable, and that paſſage free. So much the more we are ſo to thinke, for that the firſt principle and chiefe ground in all Geographie, as Ptolome ſaith, is the hiſtory of trauell, that is, reports made by trauellers ſkilful in Geometrie and Aſtronomie, of all ſuch things in their iourney as to Geographie doe belong. It onely then remaineth, that we now anſwere to thoſe arguments that ſeemed to make againſt this former concluſion.

Lib. 1. Geog. Cap. 2.

Sol.1.

The firſt obiection is of no force, that generall table of the world ſet forth by Ortelius or Mercator, for it greatly ſkilleth not, being vnſkilfully drawen for that point: as manifeſtly it may appeare vnto any one that conferreth the ſame with Gemma Friſius his vniuerſall Mappe, with his round quartered carde, with his globe, with Sebaſtian Cabota his table, and Ortelius his generall mappe alone, worthily preferred in this caſe before all Mercator & Ortelius other doings: for that Cabota was not onely a ſkilful Sea man, but a long traueller, and ſuch a one as entred perſonally that ſtraight, ſent by king Henry the ſeuenth to make this aforeſayd Diſcouerie, as in his owne diſcourſe of nauigation you may reade in his carde drawen with his owne hand, that the mouth of the Northweſterne ſtraight lyeth neere the 318. Meridian, betweene 61. and 64. degrees in the eleuation, continuing the ſame bredth about 10. degrees Weſt, where it openeth Southerly more and more, vntill it come vnder the tropicke of Cancer, and ſo runneth into Mar del Zur, at the leaſt 18. degrees more in bredth there, then it was where it firſt began: otherwiſe I could as well imagine this paſſage to be more vnlikely then the voyage to Moſcouia, and more impoſſible then it for the farre ſituation and continuance thereof in the froſtie clime: as now I can affirme it to be very poſſible and moſt likely in compariſon thereof, for that it neither coaſteth ſo farre North as the Moſcouian paſſage doeth, neither is this ſtraight ſo long as that, before it bow downe Southerly towardes the Sunne againe.

Sol.2.

The ſecond argument concludeth nothing. Ptolome knew not what was aboue ſixteene degrees South beyond the Equinoctiall line, he was ignorant of all paſſages Northward from the eleuation of 63. degrees: he knewe no Ocean ſea beyond Aſia, yet haue the Portugals trended the cape of Good hope at the South point of Afrike, and trauelled to Iapan an Iſland in the Eaſt Ocean, betweene Aſia & America: our merchants in the time of king Edward the ſixt diſcouered the Moſcouian paſſage farther North then Thyle, & ſhewed Groenland not to be continent with Lappeland & Norway: the like our Northweſterne trauellers haue done, declaring by their nauigation that way, the ignorance of all Coſmographers that either doe ioyne Groenland with America, or continue the Weſt Indies with that froſty region vnder the north pole. As for Virgil he ſang according to the knowledge of men in his time, as an other Poet did of the hot Zone.

Quarum quæ media eſt, non eſt habitabilis æſtu. Imagining, as moſt men then did, Zonam torridam, the hot Zone to be altogether diſhabited for heat, though preſently wee know many famous and worthy kingdomes and cities in that part of the earth, and the Iſland of S. Thomas neere Æthiopia, & the wealthy Iſlands for the which chiefly all theſe voyages are taken in hand, to be inhabited euen vnder the equinoctiall line.

Ouid. 1. Meta.

To anſwere the third obiection, beſides Cabota and all other trauellers nauigations, the onely credit of M. Frobiſher may ſuffice, who lately through all theſe Iſlands of ice, and mountaines of ſnow, paſſed that way, euen beyond the gulfe that tumbleth downe from the North, and in ſome places though he drewe one inch thicke ice, as he returning in Auguſt did, yet came he home ſafely againe.

Sol. 3.

The fourth argument is altogether friuolous & vaine, for neither is there any iſthmos or ſtrait of land betweene America and Aſia, ne can theſe two landes ioyntly be one continent. The firſt part of my anſwere is manifeſtly allowed of by Homer, whom that excellent Geographer Strabo followeth, yeelding him in this facultie the price. The authour of that booke likewiſe περὶ κόσμου to Alexander, attributed vnto Ariſtotle, is of the ſame opinion that Homer and Strabo be of, in two or three places. Dioniſius in οἰκουμένης περιηγήσει hath this verſe οὕτως ὠκεανὸς περιδέδρομε γαῖαν ἅπασαν. So doth the Ocean Sea runne round about the worlde: ſpeaking onely of Europe, Afrike and Aſia, as then Aſia was trauelled and knowen. With theſe Doctours may you ioyne Pomponius Mela. cap. 2. lib. 1. Plinius lib. 2. cap. 67. and Pius 2. cap. 2. in his deſcription of Aſia. All the which writers doe no leſſe confirme the whole Eaſterne ſide of Aſia to be compaſſed about with the ſea, then Plato doeth affirme in Timæo, vnder the name Atlantis, the Weſt Indies to be an Iſland, as in a ſpecial diſcourſe thereof R. Eden writeth, agreeable vnto the ſentence of Proclus, Marſilius Ficinus, and others. Out of Plato it is gathered that America is an Iſland. Homer, Strabo, Ariſtotle, Dionyſius, Mela, Plinie, Pius 2. affirme the continent of Aſia, Afrike, & Europe, to be enuironed with the Ocean. I may therfore boldly ſay (though later intelligences thereof had we none at all) that Aſia & the Weſt Indies be not tied together by any Iſthmos or ſtraight of land, contrary to the opinion of ſome new Coſmographers, by whom doubtfully this matter hath bin brought in controuerſie. And thus much for the firſt part of my anſwere vnto the fourth obiection.

Note.

Richard Eden.

The ſecond part, namely that America and Aſia cannot be one continent, may thus be proued, καὶ τῆς γῆς κοιλοτέρας μᾶλλον ῥεῖ τῶν ποταμῶν τὸ πλῆθος. The moſt Riuers take downe that way their courſe, where the earth is moſt hollow and deepe, writeth Ariſtotle: and the Sea (ſayth he in the ſame place) as it goeth further, ſo is it found deeper. Into what gulfe doe the Moſcouian riuers Onega, Duina, Ob, powre out their ſtreames Northward out of Moſcouia into the ſea? Which way doeth that ſea ſtrike? The South is maine land, the Eaſterne coaſt wareth more and more ſhalow: from the North, either naturally, becauſe that part of the earth is higher Ariſtot. 2. Met. cap. 1. or of neceſſitie, for that the forcible influence of ſome Northerne ſtarres cauſeth the earth there to ſhake off the Sea, as ſome Philoſophers doe thinke: or finally for the great ſtore of waters engendred in that froſtie and colde climate, that the bankes are not able to holde them. Alber. in 2. Meteor. cap. 6. From the North, I ſay, continually falleth downe great abundance of water. So that this Northeaſterne currant muſt at the length abruptly bow toward vs South on the Weſt ſide of Finmarke and Norway: or elſe ſtrike downe Southweſt aboue Groneland, or betwixt Groneland and Iſeland, into the Northweſt ſtraight we ſpeake of, as of congruence it doeth, if you marke the ſituation of that Region, and by the report of M. Frobiſher experience teacheth vs. And M. Frobiſher the further he trauailed in the former paſſage, as he tolde me, the deeper alwayes he found the Sea. Lay you now the ſumme hereof together. The riuers runne where the chanels are moſt hollow, the ſea in taking his courſe wareth deeper, the Sea waters fall continually from the North Southward, the Northeaſterne current ſtriketh downe into the ſtraight we ſpeake of, and is there augmented with whole mountaines of yce and ſnowe falling downe furiouſly out from the land vnder the North pole. Where ſtore of water is, there is it a thing impoſſible to want Sea, where Sea not onely doeth not want, but wareth deeper, there can be diſcouered no land. Finally, whence I pray you came the contrary tide, that M. Frobiſher mette withall after that he had ſailed no ſmall way in that paſſage, if there bee any Iſthmos or ſtraight of land betwixt the aforeſayd Northweſterne gulfe, and Mar del Zur, to ioyne Aſia and America together? That concluſion frequented in ſcholes Quicquid præter, &c. was meant of the partes of the world then knowen, and ſo is it of right to be vnderſtood.

Sol.5.

The fift obiection requireth for anſwere wiſedome and policie in the trauailer, to winne the Barbarians fauour by ſome good meanes: and ſo to arme and ſtrengthen himſelfe, that when he ſhal haue the repulſe in one coaſt, he may ſafely trauaile to an other, commodiouſly taking his conuenient times, and diſcreetely making choiſe of them with whom hee will throughly deale. To force a violent entry, would for vs Engliſhmen be very hard, conſidering the ſtrength and valour of ſo great a Nation, farre diſtant from vs, and the attempt thereof might be moſt perillous vnto the doers, vnleſſe their part were very good.

Touching their lawes againſt ſtrangers, you ſhall reade neuertheleſſe in the ſame relations of Galeotto Perera, that the Cathaian king is woont to graunt free acceſſe vnto all foreiners that trade into his Countrey for Marchandiſe, and a place of libertie for them to remaine in: as the Moores had, vntill ſuch time as they had brought the Loutea or Lieutenant of that coaſt to bee a circumciſed Saracene: wherefore ſome of them were put to the ſword, the reſt were ſcattered abroad: at Fuquien a great citie in China, certaine of them are yet this day to be ſeene. As for the Iapans they be moſt deſirous to be acquainted with ſtrangers. The Portingals though they were ſtraitly handled there at the firſt, yet in the ende they found great fauour at the Prince his hands, inſomuch that the Loutea or preſident that miſuſed them was therefore put to death. The rude Indian Canoa halleth thoſe ſeas, the Portingals, the Saracenes, and Moores trauaile continually vp and downe that reach from Iapan to China, from China to Malacca, from Malacca to the Moluccaes: and ſhall an Engliſhman, better appointed then any of them all (that I ſay no more of our Nauie) feare to ſaile in that Ocean? What ſeas at all doe want piracie? what Nauigation is there voyde of perill?

Sol.6.

To the laſt argument. Our trauailers neede not to ſeeke their returne by the Northeaſt, neither ſhall they be conſtrained, except they liſt, either to attempt Magellans ſtraight at the Southweſt, or to be in danger of the Portingals for the Southeaſt: they may returne by the Northweſt, that ſame way they doe goe foorth, as experience hath ſhewed.

Luc.lib.1. Pharſal.

What the Eaſterne current is.

The reaſon alleadged for proofe of the contrary may be diſproued after this maner. And firſt it may be called in controuerſie, whether any current continually be forced by the motion of Primum mobile, round about the world, or no? For learned men doe diuerſly handle that queſtion. The naturall courſe of all waters is downeward, wherefore of congruence they fall that way where they finde the earth moſt lowe and deepe: in reſpect whereof, it was erſt ſayd, the ſeas doe ſtrike from the Northren landes Southerly. Violently the ſeas are toſſed and troubled diuers wayes with the windes, encreaſed and diminiſhed by the courſe of the Moone, hoiſed vp & downe through the ſundry operations of the Sunne and the ſtarres: finally, ſome be of opinion, that the ſeas be caried in part violently about the world, after the dayly motion of the higheſt moueable heauen, in like maner as the elements of ayre and fire, with the reſt of the heauenly ſpheres, are from the Eaſt vnto the Weſt. And this they doe call their Eaſterne current, or leuant ſtreame. Some ſuch current may not be denied to be of great force in the hot Zone, for the neereneſſe thereof vnto the centre of the Sunne, and bluſtring Eaſterne windes violently driuing the ſeas Weſtward: howbeit, in the temperate climes, the Sunne being further off, & the windes more diuers, blowing as much from the North, the Weſt and South, as from the Eaſt, this rule doeth not effectually withholde vs from trauailing Eaſtward, neither be we kept euer backe by the aforeſaid Leuant windes and ſtreame. But in Magellans ſtreight wee are violently driuen backe Weſtward: Ergo, through the Northweſterne ſtraight or Anian frette ſhall we not be able to returne Eaſtward? It followeth not. The firſt, for that the northweſterne ſtraight hath more ſea roome at the leaſt by one hundreth Engliſh myles, then Magellans frette hath, the onely want whereof cauſeth all narrow paſſages generally to be moſt violent. So would I ſay in the Anian gulfe, if it were ſo narrow as Don Diego and Zalterius haue painted it out, any returne that way to bee full of difficulties, in reſpect of ſuch ſtreightneſſe thereof, not for the neereneſſe of the Sunne, or Eaſterne windes, violently forcing that way any leuant ſtreame: But in that place there is more ſea roome by many degrees, if the Cardes of Cabota, and Gemma Friſius, and that which Tramezine imprinted, be true.

Lib.1.Geog. Cap 2.

And hitherto reaſon ſee I none at all, but that I may as well giue credite vnto their doings, as to any of the reſt. It muſt be Peregrinationis hiſtoria, that is, true reportes of ſkilfull trauailers, as Ptolome writeth, that in ſuch controuerſies of Geographie muſt put vs out of doubt.

Ortelius in his vniuerſall tables, in his particular Mappes of the Weſt Indies, of all Aſia, of the Northren kingdomes, of the Eaſt Indies, Mercator in ſome of his globes, and generall Mappes of the world, Moletius in his vniuerſall table of the Globe diuided, in his ſea Carde, and particuler tables of the Eaſt Indies, Zalterius, and Don Diego, with Ferdinando Bertely, and others, doe ſo much differ from Gemma Friſius and Cabota, among themſelues, and in diuers places from themſelues, concerning the diuers ſituation and ſundry limits of America, that one may not ſo raſhly, as truely ſurmiſe, theſe men either to be ignorant in thoſe points touching the aforeſaid region, or that the Mappes they haue giuen out vnto the world, were collected onely by them, and neuer of their owne drawing.

The firſt Voyage of M. Martine Frobiſher, to the Northweſt, for the ſearch of the ſtraight or paſſage to China, written by Christopher Hall, Maſter in the Gabriel, and made in the yeere of our Lord 1576.

The 7. of Iune being Thurſday, the two Barks, viz. the Gabriel, and the ‖ Michael & our Pinneſſe ſet ſaile at Ratcliffe, and bare down to Detford, and there we ancred: the cauſe was, that our Pinneſſe burſt her boultſprit, and foremaſt aboard of a ſhip that rode at Detford, elſe wee meant to haue paſt that day by the Court then at Grenewich. Iune.

‖ M. Matthew Kinderſlye was Captaine of the Michael.

The 8. day being Friday, about 12 of the clocke we wayed at Detford, and ſet ſaile all three of vs, and bare downe by the Court, where we ſhotte off our ordinance and made the beſt ſhew we could: Her Maieſtie beholding the ſame, commended it, and bade vs farewell, with ſhaking her hand at vs out of the window. Afterward ſhee ſent a Gentleman aboord of vs, who declared that her Maieſtie had good liking of our doings, and thanked vs for it, and alſo willed our Captaine to come the next day to the Court to take his leaue of her.

The ſame day towards night M. Secretarie Woolly came aboorde of vs, and declared to the company, that her Maieſtie had appointed him to giue them charge to be obedient, and diligent to their Captaine, and gouernours in all things, and wiſhed vs happie ſucceſſe.

The 12. day being ouer againſt Graueſend, by the caſtle or blockehouſe, we obſerued the latitude, which was 51. degrees 33. min. And in that place the variation of the Compaſſe is 11. degrees and a halfe.

The 24. day at 2. of the clocke after noone, I had ſight of Faire yle, being from vs 6. leagues North and by Eaſt, and when I brought it Northweſt and by North, it did riſe at the Southermoſt ende with a litle hommocke, and ſwampe in the middes. Faire Iſland.

The 25. day from 4. to 8. a clocke in the forenoone, the winde at Northweſt and by North a freſh gale, I caſt about to the Weſtward, the Southermoſt head of Shotland called Swinborne head Northnorthweſt from me, and the land of Faire yle, Weſt Southweſt from me. I ſailed directly to the North head of that ſaid land, ſounding as I ranne in, hauing 60. 50. and 40. fathoms, and gray redde ſhels: and within halfe a mile of that Iſland, there are 36. fathoms, for I ſailed to that Iſland to ſee whether there were any roadeſteede for a Northweſt winde, and I found by my ſounding hard rockes, and foule ground, and deepe water, within two cables length of the ſhoare, 28. fathome, and ſo did not ancre but plied to and fro with my foreſaile, and mizen till it was a high water vnder the Iſland. The tide ſetteth there Northweſt and Southeaſt: the flood ſetteth Southeaſt, and the ebbe Northweſt. Shotland.

The 26. day hauing the winde at South a faire gale, ſayling from Faire yle to Swinborne head, I did obſerue the latitude, the Iſland of Fowlay being Weſt Northweſt frõ me 6. leagues, and Swinborne head Eaſt ſoutheaſt from me, I found my *eleuation to be 37. degr. and my declination 22. degr. 46. min. So that my latitude was 59. degr. 46. min. At that preſent being neere to Swinborne head, hauing a leake which did trouble vs, as alſo to take in freſh water, I plyed roome with a ſound, which is called S. Tronions, and there did ancre in ſeuen fathoms water, and faire ſande. You haue comming in the ſounds mouth in the entring 17. 15. 12. 10. 9. 8. and 7. fathoms, and the ſound lyeth in North northweſt, and there we roade to a Weſt ſunne, & ſtopped our leake, and hauing refreſhed our ſelues with water, at a North northweſt ſunne, I ſet ſaile from S. Tronions the winde at South Southeſt, and turned out till wee were cleare of the ſound, and ſo ſailed Weſt to go cleare of the Iſland of Fowlay. And running off toward Fowlay, I ſounded, hauing fiftie fathome, and ſtreamie ground, and alſo I ſounded Fowlay being North from mee one league off that Iſlande, hauing fiftie fathome at the South head, and ſtreame ground, like broken otmell, and one ſhell being redde and white like mackerell.

Latitude 59. deg. 59. min. Here they begin to ſaile Weſt and by North.

The 27. day at a South ſunne I did obſerue the latitude, the Iſland of Fowlay being from me two leagues Eaſt Northeaſt: I found my ſelfe to be in latitude 59. degrees, 59. min. truly obſerued, the winde at South Southweſt: I ſailed Weſt and by North.

From 12. to foure a clocke afternoone, the wind at South, a faire gale the ſhippe ſailed Weſt and by North 6. leagues, and at the ende of this watch, I ſounded hauing 60. fathome, with little ſtones and ſhels, the Iſland from vs 8. leagues Eaſt.

July the firſt. The firſt of July, from 4. to 8. a clocke, wee ſailed Weſt 4. glaſſes 4. leagues, and at that preſent we had ſo much winde that we ſpooned afore the ſea Southweſt 2. leagues.

3. The 3. day we found our Compaſſe to bee varied one point to the Weſtwards: this day from 4. to 8. a clocke we ſailed Weſt and by North 6. leagues.

The Compaſſe varying Weſtwards one point.

From 8. to 12. a clocke at noone Weſt and by North 4. leagues. At that preſent I found our Compaſſe to be varied 11. deg. and one 4. part to the Weſtwards, which is one point.

11. The Iſland of Friſeland.

The 11 day at a Southeaſt ſunne we had ſight of the land of Friſeland bearing from vs Weſt northweſt 16. leagues, and riſing like pinacles of ſteeples, and all couered with ſnowe. I found my ſelfe in 61. degr. of latitude. Wee ſailed to the ſhoare and could finde no ground at 150. fathoms, we hoiſed out our boate, and the Captaine with 4. men rowed to the ſhoare to get on land, but the land lying full of yce, they could not get on land, and ſo they came aboord againe: We had much adoe to get cleare of the yce by reaſon of the fogge. Yet from Thurſday 8. a clocke in the morning to Friday at noone we ſailed Southweſt 20. leagues.

18. The 18. day at a Southeaſt ſunne I found the ſunne to be eleuated 33. deg. And at a Southſoutheaſt ſunne 40. deg. So I obſerued it till I found it at the higheſt, and then it was eleuated 52. deg. I iudged the variation of the Compaſſe to be 2. points and a halfe to the Weſtward.

The variation of the needle, two points and a halfe to the Weſt.

A great drift of yce.

The 21. day we had ſight of a great drift of yce, ſeeming a firme lande, and we caſt Weſtward to be cleare of it.

The latitude of 62. degrees 2. min.

The 26. we had ſight of a land of yce: the latitude was 62. degrees, and two minutes.

Sight of land ſuppoſed to haue bene Labrador.
